The reason for the rule announced by practically all the cases in which the question has arisen was stated in Mahon v. Justice (1888) 127 U. S. 700, 32 L. ed. 283, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1204, as follows: "They all proceed upon the obvious ground that the offender against the law of the state is not relieved from liability because of personal injuries received from private parties, or because of indignities committed against another state. It would indeed be a strange conclusion, if a party charged with a criminal offense could be excused from answering to the government whose laws he had violated, because other parties had done violence to him, and also committed an offense against the laws of another state."

The trial of a person brought into a state by forcible abduction is not a violation of that provision of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Ker v. Illinois (1886) 119 U. S. 436, 30 L. ed. 421, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225, wherein the court said, in answer to such a contention: "The 'due process of law' here guaranteed is complied with when the party is regularly indicted by the proper grand jury in the state court, has a trial according to the forms and modes prescribed for such trials, and when, in that trial and proceedings, he is deprived of no rights to which he is lawfully entitled. We do not intend to say that there may not be proceedings previous to the trial, in regard to which the prisoner could invoke in some manner the provisions of this clause of the Constitution, but, for mere irregularities in the manner in which he may be brought into the custody of the law, we do not think he is entitled to say that he should not be tried at all for the crime with which he is charged in a regular indictment. He may be arrested for a very heinous offense by persons without any warrant, or without any previous complaint, and brought before a proper officer, and this may be, in some sense, said to be 'without due process of law.' But it would hardly be claimed that after the case had been investigated, and the defendant held by the proper authorities to answer for the crime, he could plead that he was first arrested 'without due process of law.' So here, when found within the jurisdiction of the state of Illinois and liable to answer for a crime against the laws of that state, unless there was some positive provision of the Constitution or of the laws of this country violated in bringing him into court, it is not easy to see how he can say that he is there 'without due process of law,' within the meaning of the constitutional provision."

Similarly, a person forcibly brought into the United States from a foreign country cannot attack the jurisdiction of the court to try him on the ground that such a forcible abduction is a violation of the right of asylum guaranteed to him by treaty between the United States and the foreign country. Ker v. Illinois (U. S.) supra, wherein it was said: "The right of the government of Peru voluntarily to give a party in Ker's condition an asylum in that country is quite a different thing from the right in him to demand and insist upon security in such an asylum. The treaty, so far as it regulates the right of asylum at all, is intended to limit this right in the case of one who is proved to be a criminal fleeing from justice, so that, on proper demand and proceedings had therein, the government of the country of the asylum shall deliver him up to the country where the crime was committed. And to this extent, and to this alone, the treaty does regulate or impose a restriction upon the right of the government of the country of the asylum to protect the criminal from removal therefrom. In the case before us, the plea shows that, although Julian went to Peru with the necessary papers to procure the extradition of Ker under the treaty, those papers remained in his pocket and were never brought to light in Peru; that no steps were taken under them; and that Julian, in seizing upon the person of Ker and carrying him out of the territory of Peru into the United States, did not act or profess to act under the treaty. In fact, that treaty was not called into operation, was not relied upon, was not made the pretext of arrest, and the facts show that it was a clear case of kidnapping within the dominions of Peru, without any pretense of authority under the treaty or from the government of the United States."

In Ex parte Lamar (1921) — A.L.R.

—, 274 Fed. 160, it was held that petitioner was not entitled to release on habeas corpus from imprisonment under conviction in the Federal court for the southern district of New York, although he had been unlawfully brought into that district from the penitentiary in Atlanta, Georgia, where he was serving a sentence under a conviction for another offense, upon instructions by the Attorney General and without resort to the removal proceeding upon notice contemplated by statute in such case, and had been produced for trial pursuant to a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum served upon the officer who had him in charge when he arrived in New York.

The contrary doctrine to that stated in the general rule, however, has been announced in a few jurisdictions. Thus, in State v. Simmons (1888) 39 Kan. 262, 18 Pac. 177, wherein it appeared that officers of the state of Kansas went into Missouri, and there arrested a person accused of violating the laws of Kansas, and forcibly brought him back to Kansas, the court, holding that in such a case the trial court was without jurisdiction to try the accused, said: "It would not be proper for the courts of this state to favor, or even to tolerate, breaches of the peace committed by their own officers in a sister state, by sustaining a service of judicial process procured only by such a breach of the peace. Indeed, it would not be proper for any court in any state to sustain a service of any judicial process, either civil or criminal, where the service of such process was obtained only by the infraction of some law, or in violation of some well-recognized rule of honesty or fair dealing, as by force or fraud. Such a service would not only be a special wrong against the individual upon whom the service was made, but it would also be a general wrong against society itself—a violation of those fundamental principles of mutual trust and confidence which lie at the very foundation of all organized society, and which are necessary, in the very nature of things, to hold society together." The doctrine laid down in State v. Simmons (Kan.) supra, was later approved in State v. Garrett (1896) 57 Kan. 132, 45 Pac. 93, wherein the effect of a voluntary waiver of extradition papers was involved. And in the still later case of State v. Wellman (1918) 102 Kan. 503, L.R.A.1918D, 949, 170 Pac. 1052, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1006, wherein the effect of irregularities in extradition proceedings was at issue, the court took occasion to say that the conclusions reached were not in conflict with the rule announced in the Simmons Case.

The rule laid down in State v. Simmons (Kan.) supra, however, has been held not to extend to the case of a person charged with a crime in one county who was arrested without a warrant in another county of the same state, and illegally brought within the county where the crime was committed. State v. May (1896) 57 Kan. 428, 46 Pac. 709, wherein it was said: "The district court of Harvey county had jurisdiction to try the defendant notwithstanding the irregularity or the illegality of his original arrest in Sumner county. No other sovereignty was invaded. A warrant might have been properly served upon the defendant in any county of the state whose sovereignty is coextensive with its external boundaries, and the jurisdiction of whose courts for the apprehension of alleged offenders upon proper process is not affected by county lines. His original arrest was irregular, but this does not affect the jurisdiction of the court into which he was afterward brought by regular process of law."

In the case of Re Robinson (1890) 29 Neb. 135, 8 L.R.A. 398, 26 Am. St. Rep. 378, 45 N. W. 267, the court announced a rule similar to that laid down in the Simmons Case (Kan.) supra. In that case it appeared that a person accused of committing a crime in Nebraska was arrested in Kansas by the order of a Kansas justice of the peace and delivered to a Nebraska constable, who forcibly, and against the will of the accused, and without any warrant, requisition, or other legal process, conveyed the accused out of the state of Kansas into Nebraska. Holding that the Nebraska court was without jurisdiction, the court said: "In principle there is no difference between the case at bar and where a person is held for an offense other than the one he was extradited for. In either case it is an abuse of judicial process, which the law does not allow. Ample provisions are made for the arrest and return of a person accused of crime, who has fled to a sister state, by extradition warrants issued by the executives of the states. There is no excuse for a citizen or officer arresting, without authority of law, a fugitive, and taking him forcibly and against his will into the jurisdiction of the state for the purpose of prosecution. We cannot sanction the method adopted to bring the petitioner into the jurisdiction of this state. He did not come into the state voluntarily, but because he could not avoid it. The district court, therefore, did not acquire jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner, and his detention is unlawful."

It has been held that, on the request of the state wherein the unlawful capture was made that the person so taken be returned, it was proper for the court to waive its jurisdiction and return the prisoner. Norton's Case (1885) 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 395, wherein it appeared that a citizen of New York, accused of committing a crime in Pennsylvania, and who had escaped to Canada, was lured back to New York by a false telegram, and there arrested and taken, against his will and without lawful authority, into Pennsylvania. On the request of the governor of New York that he be released, the court held that as the seizure of the accused in New York was an indignity to the sovereignty of that state, it would, in its discretion, order his release.

And in Dow's Case (1851) 18 Pa. 37, wherein it appeared that a person charged with committing a crime in Pennsylvania was arrested without lawful authority in the state of Michigan and brought back to Pennsylvania, the court held that the jurisdiction of the court to try him for the crime charged was in no way impaired by the manner of his apprehension, and stated that, in the absence of a request from the governor of Michigan, he would not be released.

III. Application of rule.

a. Unlawful arrest.

The courts uniformly apply the rule that the unlawful manner of bringing a person accused of crime into the jurisdiction of a court does not impair the jurisdiction of the court to try him, to cases of the arrest by officers in another state and the bringing of an accused into the state wherein he is charged with a criminal offense, without the formality of extradition proceedings.

Thus, in Dow's Case (1851) 18 Pa. 37, wherein the relator, after indictment, fled to Michigan, and was there arrested without legal authority and taken to Pennsylvania, it was held that his illegal arrest in another state was no ground for discharging him in habeas corpus proceedings. To the same effect, see State v. Day (1882) 58 Iowa, 678, 12 N. W. 783; Mathews v. State (1921) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 198 Pac. 112; Brookin v. State (1888) 26 Tex. App. 121, 9 S. W. 735; Baker v. State (1894) 88 Wis. 140, 59 N. W. 570; Kingen v. Kelley (1891) 8 Wyo. 566, 15 L.R.A. 177, 28 Pac. 36.

The same rule is applied where the unlawful arrest is made in a foreign country. Thus, in Rex v. Walton (1905) 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 905, wherein it appeared that the accused was arrested in Buffalo in pursuance of a telegram from the police authorities of Toronto, and delivered to the Toronto police without any extradition proceedings, it was held that the illegality of his arrest in no way impaired the jurisdiction of the court.

Similarly, in the case of State v. Brewster (1835) 7 Vt. 118, the same doctrine was announced. It appeared that a person charged with crime had escaped to Canada, and was brought back against his will and without the consent of the authorities of that country, and he sought to plead his illegal capture and forcible return in bar of the indictment. The court, refusing his application, observed that the escape of the prisoner into Canada did not purge the offense, or oust the jurisdiction of the court, and, he being within its jurisdiction, it was not for it to inquire by what means or in what manner he was brought within reach of justice. It was further said: "If there were anything improper in the transaction, it was not that the prisoner was entitled to protection on his own account. The illegality, if any, consists in a violation of the sovereignty of an independent nation. If that nation complain, it is a matter which concerns the political relations of the two countries, and in that aspect is a subject not within the constitutional powers of this court."

And in People v. Rowe (1858) 4 Park. Crim. Rep. (N. Y.) 253, a warrant was issued before indictment, and the defendant, who was then in Canada, was forcibly taken to the line, and delivered to the New York officer, who held the warrant. It was held that the illegality of the arrest was no ground for a motion to quash the indictment or to discharge the prisoner, the court saying: "We see no analogy between this case and the cases of arrest in civil actions procured by the trick or fraud of the plaintiff. Where the defendant is so induced by the plaintiff to come within the jurisdiction, the court may discharge him without bail. Here is no wrong chargeable to the people. On the other hand, the indictment is, on such a motion as this, conclusive evidence of the prisoner's guilt, and the court would be guilty of a gross injury to the people if it should discharge him untried."

In Ex parte Scott (1829) 9 Barn. & C. 446, 109 Eng. Reprint, 166, 2 Mann. & R. 361, the rule was applied to the case of a woman arrested in Belgium and brought back to England without extradition papers.

Similarly, it has been held that although the action of the governor of a state, on the refusal of the Federal government to request a foreign government to deliver up an accused person because of the absence of an extradition treaty, in making the request himself and thereby causing the unlawful arrest of the accused, amounted in a sense to a kidnapping, the jurisdiction of the state court over the person of the accused was not impaired by the unlawful act of the governor. People v. Pratt (1889) 78 Cal. 345, 20 Pac. 731, wherein it was said: "The governor of the state cannot oust the courts of the commonwealth of their right to try an individual charged with an offense over which they have jurisdiction, because of the fact that he has been instrumental in having the defendant there, by violation of his personal rights. It will not do to say that a fugitive from justice can escape the punishment for his crime because the governor of a state may have violated some law. The people of a state are not bound by any illegal act of their governor, nor should they be."

In an Illinois case it appeared that extradition papers, under an extradition treaty, had been secured from the United States government, directed to the government of Peru, but that before the extradition papers were presented the government agents despatched to Peru to bring back the accused, seized and brought him to Illinois. Claiming that he had been kidnapped in Peru, and transferred to this country, he set up a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that he had been deprived without due process of law of a right of asylum secured to him by the treaty. The court refused to inquire into the mode of his capture. Ker v. People (1884) 110 Ill. 627, 51 Am. Rep. 706, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 211. That decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the question was within the province of the state court in (1886) 119 U. S. 436, 30 L. ed. 421, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225.

In Mahon v. Justice (1888) 127 U. S. 700, 32 L. ed. 283, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1204, the Supreme Court applied the rule to the case of a man indicted in Kentucky who escaped to West Virginia, and who, while extradition proceedings were pending, was recaptured by certain persons from Kentucky acting without legal authority, and brought back to Kentucky. The court refused to discharge him from custody on account of the illegality of the means of his apprehension, saying that the jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment was found was in no way impaired by the manner in which the accused was brought before it.

Similarly, it appeared in State v. Ross (1866) 21 Iowa, 467, that the accused, who were arrested in Missouri, were brought by force and against their will, by persons acting without authority either of a requisition from the governor or otherwise, to Iowa, where an indictment against them had been found. In Iowa they were rearrested, and turned over to the police authorities for detention and trial. It was contended that their arrest was in violation of law; that they were brought within the jurisdiction of the state by fraud and violence; that the comity of states, a just appreciation of the rights of citizens, and a due regard to the integrity of the law, demanded that the court should, under such circumstances, refuse its aid; and that there could be no rightful exercise of jurisdiction over the persons thus arrested. The court, holding that the defendants were not entitled to be discharged, said: "The liability of the parties arresting them without legal warrant, for false imprisonment or otherwise, and their violation of the penal statutes of Missouri, may be ever so clear, and yet the prisoners not be entitled to their discharge. The offense being committed in Iowa, it was punishable here, and an indictment could have been found without reference to the arrest. There is no fair analogy between civil and criminal cases in this respect. In the one (civil) the party invoking the aid of the court is guilty of fraud or violence in bringing the defendant or his property within the jurisdiction of the court. In the other (criminal) the people, the state, is guilty of no wrong. The officers of the law take the requisite process, find the persons charged within the jurisdiction, and this, too, without force, wrong, fraud, or violence on the part of any agent of the state, or officer thereof. And it can make no difference whether the illegal arrest was made in another state or another government. The violation of the law of the other sovereignty, so far as entitled to weight, would be the same in principle in the one case as the other. That our own laws have been violated is sufficiently shown by the indictment. For this the state had a right to detain the prisoners, and it is of no importance how or where their capture was effected."

Likewise, in State v. Smith (1829) 17 S. C. L. (1 Bail.) 283, 19 Am. Dec. 679, Smith, who had been convicted of a criminal offense, was pardoned on condition that he should leave the state forever. He accepted the pardon, and went to North Carolina. Subsequently he returned, whereupon the governor of South Carolina issued a proclamation offering a reward for his arrest, he having violated the condition of his pardon. Smith, however, returned to North Carolina, where he was forcibly seized by persons from South Carolina, without warrant or authority from any officer or tribunal of either state, except the proclamation of the governor of South Carolina, and was brought into the latter state and lodged in jail. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that his arrest in North Carolina was illegal, and that his detention was likewise illegal. The motion for a discharge was refused and the prisoner was remanded.

In the case of Re Ezeta (1894) 62 Fed. 964, wherein it appeared that the accused, citizens of a foreign country, who had taken refuge on an American war vessel, had been brought into a port of the United States although they had applied to be allowed to leave the vessel at a foreign port and before coming to the United States port, it was held that this fact did not affect the jurisdiction of the United States court over the accused after they were found within the territory of the United States.

b. Fraud or trickery.

In Ex parte Brown (1886) 28 Fed. 653, it appeared that the accused, who was in Canada, was induced to go to a town in the United States by the false statement that it was in Canada, and while there he was taken into custody. The court, refusing to discharge him on his plea that he was brought into the jurisdiction of the United States court through fraud and trickery, stated that the manner of the apprehension of one accused of crime could not affect the jurisdiction of the court into whose custody he was delivered.

IV. Mistake as to identity.

In the reported case (DOMINGUEZ v. STATE, ante, 503), wherein it appears that a citizen of Mexico had been arrested under a mistake of fact as to his identity, by American soldiers when in pursuit of bandits, and brought into the state of Texas, it is held that on his release from the charge on which he had been arrested, the courts of Texas had no power to try him on another charge. The court distinguishes the case from Ker v. Illinois (1886) 119 U. S. 436, 30 L. ed. 421, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225, set out supra, II., on the ground that his arrest was not unlawful, and, while not a case of extradition, applies the rule adopted in cases of foreign extradition whereby the courts are forbidden to try an extradited person on a charge other than that for which he was extradited. Apparently there are no other cases involving a similar set of facts. There are numerous cases involving the right to try a person extradited from a foreign country on a charge other than that for which he was extradited, but such cases are not deemed to be within the scope of this annotation.

M. B.

WALTER STALLARD, by Next Friend, Appt.,

v.

G. B. SUTHERLAND et al.

Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — September 22, 1921.

(— Va. —, 108 S. E. 568.)

Infant — equitable aid to avoid contract — estoppel.

Equity will not aid an infant to avoid a deed of trust given to induce a creditor of his brother to forego collection of his debt by legal process, where the infant falsely represented himself to have attained his majority, and his appearance and conduct confirmed the representation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 520.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wise County, dismissing a bill filed to annul and vacate a deed of trust and a conveyance of certain property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. A. M. Vicars and J. M. Quillin, Jr., for appellant.

Messrs. Bond & Bruce for appellees.

Prentiss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Walter Stallard, claiming to be an infant, suing by his next friend, instituted his suit, alleging, in substance, that on the 24th day of August, 1914, while still an infant, he was induced to convey a tract of land in Wise county to M. M. Long, trustee, to secure a debt to one J. F. Ford; that no part of the debt was for necessities, and the most of said debt he did not owe, but that it was for goods bought by his brother, one E. T. Stallard, and that none of such goods or proceeds were then owned by or in the possession of the infant; that the trustee on the 26th day of June, by authority of the deed of trust, sold the property for $265, and conveyed it to G. B. Sutherland and J. F. Holbrook, two of appellees. The bill prayed for an annulment and vacation both of the deed of trust and of the conveyance made by the trustee to his vendees, and for general relief. Before the case was heard the infant became twenty-one years of age, and upon his petition was substituted as complainant.

The defendants answered the bill, denying that Walter Stallard was an infant at the time of executing the deed of trust, and alleging, in addition, that he had for a long time theretofore been engaged in business for himself in his own name, without the aid of either parent or guardian; that he was fully matured and developed mentally, and entirely competent and able to transact business for himself; that he was more than twenty-one years of age at the time of the execution of the deed of trust; that he made oath to that effect before the notary who took his acknowledgment thereto; and that, relying upon these representations of the said Stallard, the creditor was induced to dismiss his action for the recovery of the debt, and to accept the joint note of the alleged infant and the debtor, secured by the deed of trust given as security therefor, and omitted any further effort or proceedings to collect or secure the said debt.

Depositions were taken, and upon the hearing the trial court entered a decree dismissing the bill, from which this appeal was taken.

The pertinent facts shown by the evidence are that the appellant was an infant at the time of the execution of the deed of trust, having been born February 5, 1895. He was therefore about nineteen and one-half years of age at the date of the deed of trust in August, 1914. His father and mother had moved from that community to Georgia, but he had returned, was working for himself as a laborer, collecting his wages, depositing his money in bank, writing his own checks, paying his own board bill, and that he appeared to be twenty-one years of age. The complainant in his testimony does not deny the allegation that he represented himself to be twenty-one years before and at the time he executed the deed, but contents himself with saying that he does not remember whether or not he did so. The evidence to the contrary is convincing, so that the determining question is whether or not, under these circumstances, he can secure the aid of a court of equity in his effort to repudiate the deed of trust. Much has been written upon this subject, and the authorities are not in accord upon the precise question which this record presents. In cases like this, it is proper to remember the oft-quoted language of Lord Mansfield in Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1802, 97 Eng. Reprint, 1107: "A third rule deducible from the nature of the privilege, which is given as a shield, and not as a sword, is that it never shall be turned into an offensive weapon of fraud or injustice."

Confining the discussion to the question at issue here,—that is, whether an infant thus guilty of fraud and deceit is estopped in equity to reassert his title,—the English cases all appear to hold that an infant is thereby estopped. The cases are collected in a note to Lowery v. Cate, 108 Tenn. 54, 57 L.R.A. 685, 91 Am. St. Rep. 744, 64 S. W. 1068. The American cases are not all consistent, but the weight of authority is in accord with the English rule.

Among the American cases are the following:

Hayes v. Parker, 41 N. J. Eq. 630, 7 Atl. 511, where an infant, by representing himself of age, secured a settlement with the guardian, and executed a discharge. He was not permitted to compel his guardian to account further. This is said there: "At law . . . he [an infant] is incapable of fraudulent acts which will estop him from interposing the shield of infancy. . . . In equity, however, this rigid rule has its exceptions. Equity will regard the circumstances surrounding the transaction—the appearance of the minor, his intelligence, the character of his representations, the advantage he has gained by the fraudulent representations, and the disadvantage to which the person deceived has been put by them—in determining whether he should be permitted to invoke successfully the plea of infancy.”

So, in New York, where in Blakeslee v. Sincepau, 71 Hun, 412, 24 N. Y. Supp. 947, the implication in Spencer v. Carr, 45 N. Y. 406, 6 Am. Rep. 112, is followed. The infant having stated to the purchaser of the land, of which he was actually the owner, that he had no title to it, it was held that he was estopped to sue in ejectment, because he was “an infant of sufficient age to appreciate his rights and duties.”

In Schmitheimer v. Eiseman, 7 Bush, 298, it is held that an infant who conveyed land, falsely representing himself to be of age, cannot have his deed set aside on the ground of infancy.

In Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121, an infant with knowledge of her rights conveyed her land to her father to enable him to borrow money, and her father later conveyed to a mortgagee. She was held estopped to set up her legal title.

In Goodman v. Winter, 64 Ala. 440, 437, 38 Am. Rep. 13, an infant remainderman was held estopped from repudiation of a sale of land by the life tenant; the infant having received his share of the compensation.

In Ontario, in Bennetto v. Holden, 21 Grant, Ch. U. C. 222, it was held that, where an infant conveyed land representing herself to be of age, and after majority conveyed to others who had knowledge of the earlier grant, she was bound by her misrepresentations.

It appears that in Louisiana an infant is precluded as effectually as an adult, for in Guidry v. Davis, 6 La. Ann. 90, it is said: “It is an error to suppose that the law can sanction the perpetration of frauds by minors; the truth and reality of bona fide transactions are as binding upon them as upon majors.”

In Rundle v. Spencer, 67 Mich. 189, 34 N. W. 548, the court avoided putting the decision upon the ground for equitable estoppel, but awarded an injunction to stay proceedings in an action of ejectment brought by one who had sold the land in question while an infant, putting the decision on the equities of that particular case.

In Harmon v. Smith (C. C.) 38 Fed. 482, it is said that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply to minors “unless such conduct is intentional and fraudulent.”

In the case of Commander v. Brazile, 88 Miss. 668, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1117, 41 So. 497, it is held that, where a minor, by false representations that he is of age, aided by his mature appearance, induces another to enter into a contract with him under the belief that he is of full age, of which he accepts the benefit, he cannot set up his minority in defense of an action upon the contract.

A modern case in which there is quite a discussion of the whole question is International Land Co. v. Marshall, 22 Okla. 693, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1056, 98 Pac. 951, where it is held that equity will refuse to lend its aid in any manner to one seeking its active interposition, who has been guilty of an unlawful or inequitable conduct in the matter with relation to which he seeks relief, and applies the doctrine to an infant who fraudulently represented himself to be over twenty-one years of age, when in fact he was only nineteen years of age, and refused to cancel a deed, in the absence of an offer to refund the amount of money so fraudulently obtained.

There are cases to the contrary, and this statement is deduced from the American cases in 14 R. C. L. 241, 242: “But where the contract has been executed, and the infant seeks to avoid the title conferred thereby, in order to maintain either an action or a defense, the decisions are more conflicting. According to the apparent weight of authority, his right of avoidance is not lost to him by estoppel based on his false assertions as to his age, but there are well-considered cases to the contrary. If the infant is obliged to bring an action in equity to obtain a cancelation of the deed in question, or like equitable relief, the distinctive rule of the equity courts that he who seeks equity must do equity has often been held to prevent his recovery; but even on this point the cases are not entirely uniform. Of course, to create the estoppel it must be proved that the infant in fact misrepresented his age, but the other party was deceived by the misrepresentations, and that he would not otherwise have made the contract."

The distinction seems to be that, in order to charge the infant with equitable estoppel, he must be guilty of something more than a mere failure to disclose his infancy at the time he enters into the contract. If, however, he fraudulently represents that he is of full age, or actively conceals his minority, and the other party is thereby induced to execute the contract, then it is held that the infant will be estopped in equity, by his own fraud, to avoid the contract on the ground of infancy, to the prejudice of the other contracting party. It may be stated as a well-supported general proposition that, where one who, though an infant, has arrived at years of discretion, and by direct fraud or deception has entrapped another who was ignorant of the facts into waiving valuable property rights, such an infant will be estopped thereafter from relying upon his infancy to avoid such a contract. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 563, 38 L.R.A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 411, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 19; note to Craig v. Van Bebber, 18 Am. St. Rep. 635; 22 Cyc. 512, 548.

The Virginia case of Mustard v. Wohlford, 15 Gratt. 329, 76 Am. Dec. 209, is relied upon by the appellant. While there are expressions in that opinion which can be quoted in opposition to the doctrine which we have indicated as here applicable, in that case no element of fraud or falsehood was involved. There the purchaser of the interest of the infant knew that he had no legal right to convey, and accepted the title upon condition that he was to make the purchaser a good deed with general warranty, thereafter, upon the day when he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and the infant's repudiation of his contract was upheld. The instant case presents an entirely different question. Here the infant falsely represented himself to have attained his majority, his appearance confirmed it, and he was in fact holding himself out to the community, by his conduct in attending to all his business transactions just as an adult would; and in the transaction in question the false statements of his brother and himself were made to induce the creditor to believe that he was of age, and forego the collection of his debt by legal process.

It was in Watts v. Creswell, 9 Vin. Abr. 415, that Cowper, Ch., said: "If an infant is old and cunning enough to contrive and carry on a fraud, . . . in a court of equity he ought to make satisfaction for it." 4 Ann. Cas. 536, note.

In the states of Iowa, Kansas, Utah, and Washington, the doctrine to which we give our approval is enforced by statutes, each of which provides that an infant cannot disaffirm his contract "in cases, where, on account of the minor's own misrepresentations as to his majority, or from his having engaged in business as an adult, the other party had good reason to believe him (the minor) capable of contracting."

Mr. Pomeroy appears to give his full adherence to this rule, saying: "Since an infant is not directly bound by his ordinary contracts,

Infant—equitable aid to avoid contract—
estoppel.

unless ratified after he becomes of age, so obligations in the nature of contract will not be indirectly enforced against him by means of an estoppel created by his conduct while still a minor. On the other hand, an equitable estoppel arising from his conduct may be interposed, with the same effect as though he were adult, to prevent him from affirmatively asserting a right of property or of contract in contravention of his conduct upon which the other party has relied and been induced to act."

And he says this also: "The incapacity of infants to enter into binding contracts is the same in equity as in law; but such contracts are generally voidable only, and may therefore be ratified after the infant attains his majority. Fraud, however, will prevent the disability of infancy from being made available in equity. If an infant procures an agreement to be made through false and fraudulent representations that he is of age, a court of equity will enforce his liability as though he were adult, and may cancel a conveyance or executed contract obtained by fraud." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 4th ed. §§ 815, 945.

In Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 58 Am. Rep. 61, 9 N. E. 420, it is held that under the Code of Civil Procedure of Indiana the distinction made in the English cases between suits in equity and actions at law is immaterial, and in an action for deceit against an infant applied the equitable rule, saying that the courts there would not inquire as to the form of the proceeding.

Without prolonging the discussion, it is sufficient to say that we prefer to follow, in this conflict in the American cases, that line which tends to discourage and prevent fraud, and which is in accord with equitable doctrines. This infant, who was managing his own business just like an adult, whose appearance indicated that he had attained his majority, who falsely misrepresented his age, who was intelligent enough to appreciate the fraudulent scheme, and in conjunction with his brother to attempt its execution, should not be aided by a court of equity to consummate such fraud.

Affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Misrepresentation as to age as estoppel to plead infancy.

This annotation is supplemental to the annotation to Le Rosa v. Nichols, 6 A.L.R. 416.

It may be noted that the first two cases cited below are among the few cases sustaining the estoppel in actions at law, in the absence of special statutes.

When sued at law on the contract.

(Supplementing annotation in 6 A.L.R. 418.)

In Klinck v. Reeder (1921) — Neb. —, 185 N. W. 1000, an action on promissory notes given by an infant for the purchase price of a tractor, it was held as follows: "While generally the doctrine of estoppel in pais is not applicable to infants, yet, where an infant of so mature an age and appearance as makes his statement of being of age plausible, while actually transacting business for himself, makes fraudulent and false representations that he is of age to another, for the purpose of transacting business with him, and such other person believes such statements to be true, and relies and acts thereon, and parts with his property because thereof, the doctrine of estoppel in pais will apply, and such infant will not be permitted to set up his minority as a defense to an action to enforce the performance of the contract so entered into."

When suing at law.

(Supplementing annotation in 6 A.L.R. 420.)

In Falk v. MacMasters (1921) 197 App. Div. 357, 188 N. Y. Supp. 795, an action by an infant to recover moneys deposited by him with the defendants to margin certain stock transactions conducted by them as brokers for the plaintiff, it was held on the pleadings that it would, if established, be a good defense that the plaintiff falsely represented himself to be of age, and that, acting on his instructions, they had expended and paid out the money.

When suing in equity.

(Supplementing annotation in 6 A.L.R. 423.)

In Adkins v. Adkins (1919) 183 Ky. 662, 210 S. W. 462, where it was held that if an infant, deceiving his brother as to his age, induced him to pay for and take a deed for the infant's share of certain land, the court would refuse the infant's suit to cancel the deed, though this holding was not necessary, as the court below had found that the infant was of age when he executed the deed, and such finding was not disturbed. It was there said: "This court has uniformly adhered to the rule that the doctrine of estoppel operates against infants the same as against adults; that they are no more privileged to practise fraud upon innocent persons, and reap the reward of their misrepresentations, than is an adult; and where one deals with them under the bona fide belief that they are twenty-one years of age, and the infant so represents himself to be, he will be bound by his representations."

In the reported case (STALLARD v. SUTHERLAND, ante, 516) it will be seen that an infant nineteen and one-half years of age, of the appearance of twenty-one years of age, and (says the court) "working for himself as a laborer, collecting his own wages, depositing his money in bank, writing his own checks, paying his own board bill," gave a deed of trust to secure a debt, most of which he did not owe, but it was for goods bought by his brother; that he made oath that he was more than twenty-one years of age before the notary who took his acknowledgment of the deed, and that, relying on this, the creditor dismissed an action for the recovery of the debt, and accepted the joint note of the alleged infant and the debtor, secured by the deed of trust; that the trustees had sold the land under the deed of trust; and that the infant brought the action praying for the annulment and vacation both of the deed of trust and of the deed of the trustee thereunder. And the court refuses to grant him any relief.

In New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. McKinney (1920) 188 Ky. 183, 221 S. W. 245, in holding that there was no estoppel, the court said: "This court has, perhaps, gone as far as any other in applying the doctrine of estoppel to infants, and . . . it was held that any acts of the infant in the way of misrepresentations as to his age, whereby he was permitted to practise fraud upon an innocent party, would estop him from afterward asserting his true age to the detriment of the party so fraudulently deceived. But even this rule has been applied by this court only to cases where the conditions, appearances, and surroundings of the infant were such as to deceive one dealing with him, as to his age. It would not apply to a representation, although fraudulently made, by an infant of such tender years as that no one could be deceived thereby. . . . It would be illogical to hold that an infant by his silence (which is nonaction) could indirectly validate his deed, when he could not directly do so by his active conduct in executing it."

In Carmen v. Fox Film Corp. (1920) 15 A.L.R. 1209, 269 Fed. 928, the appellate court reversed the judgment of the trial court (258 Fed. 703) which awarded an injunction and heavy damages to the plaintiff, a motion picture actress, who, having while twenty years of age disposed of her services for several years largely by means of options, some months later, on being asked by another motion picture producer whether she was open to an engagement, replied that she was free to accept employment, and thereupon, while still an infant, she entered into a contract with it to appear only for it, beginning shortly after her majority, at greatly increased pay. The new employer, having been indemnified by the old employers (or one of them), refused to carry out its contract with the actress, who brought this suit against the old employers. The appellate court considered the plaintiff unworthy of the assistance of a court of equity, saying, inter alia: "The court below, in view of the allegation in the complaint and the failure in the answer to deny it, has held that the contracts between the plaintiff and the defendants were New York contracts, and governed by the New York law, and therefore voidable, as under New York law the plaintiff was not of age when she signed them. It is contended that this was error, and that the capacity of parties to contract is to be determined by the law of the domicile, or, according to some authorities, by the law of the place of performance. In the view we take of this case, it is not material whether the contract was binding and breached, or voidable and avoided. In either case the conduct of the plaintiff has been such as entitled her to no relief in this court. According to her own allegations in her complaint, she was a minor when she entered into the contract with Keeney, and she misled him into making the contract by representing that she was free to make it, when in fact she was morally not free to make the contract, and there was doubt whether she was legally free to make it. If the contracts were voidable because of her infancy, then, while she was under no legal obligation to recognize them, she was under a moral obligation to abide by them, and good faith required her to continue to render the services she had agreed to give. In either case her action in repudiating her pledged word was misconduct of which no person of honor and conscience would have been guilty. That no action could be brought against her at law because of what she did does not alter the moral character of her act. And when she comes into a court of conscience, and asks its affirmative aid to assist her in carrying into effect the inequitable arrangement into which she unfaithfully entered, the appeal falls on deaf ears. One who comes into equity must come with clean hands, and her hands are not clean. The testimony discloses that reliance cannot be placed upon her agreements which the law does not oblige her to keep, and that for a money gain to herself she unscrupulously disregarded her express contracts." This decision and opinion would seem to judge the business conduct of a girl of twenty with greater severity than that of several corporations combined against her, and it will be observed that what the court in particular cannot forgive is that she was legally right when she said that she was open to employment, when it was claimed that legally she was not.

Statutes.

(Supplementing annotation in 6 A.L.R. 425.)

Under the California statute providing that "a minor cannot, . . . under the age of eighteen, make a contract relating to real property, or any interest therein," a deed of trust of real property, executed by a minor under eighteen years of age, is void, and its ratification by the minor, still under eighteen years, but representing herself otherwise, is likewise void, and the court will so declare at the suit of the minor. Lee v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. (1918) 177 Cal. 656, 171 Pac. 677.

Where a minor purchasing an automobile requests permission to take it out at once, and to pay for it the following day, saying that his money is in the bank, this statement is not a representation that he is of age, under the Iowa statute preventing disaffirmance of contracts "in cases where, on account of the minor's own misrepresentations as to his majority, or from his having engaged in business as an adult, the other party had good reason to believe him capable of contracting." Friar v. Rae-Chandler Co. (1921) — Iowa, —, 185 N. W. 32. In the same case it was also held that one engaged as a chauffeur, or as a stock salesman who, during the time he was selling stock, was also attending a commercial college, but spending his week-ends at the home of his parents in another place, was not engaged in business as an adult within the statute. The court referred with approval to Seeley v. Seeley-Howe-LeVan Co. (1905) 128 Iowa, 294, 103 N. W. 961, and also said: "Testimony was offered showing that plaintiff had the appearance of an adult. This fact may have, to some extent, deceived defendants, but it was in no sense a misrepresentation. It was material and to be considered only in this case on the question of his having engaged in business as an adult." B. B. B.

FRANK PEARCE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION et al.

Illinois Supreme Court — October 22, 1921.

(299 Ill. 161, 132 N. E. 440.)

Workmen's compensation — injury arising out of employment — fall on sidewalk when getting supplies for lunch.

An injury from a fall upon the sidewalk of a public highway to an employee in a building, who had gone for supplies for the noonday lunch, in accordance with an agreement among certain of the employees to purchase such supplies, and prepare and eat them upon the premises of the employer, in preference to carrying cold lunches, does not arise out of his employment, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[See note on this question beginning on page 525.]

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cook County (Torrison, J.) to review a judgment affirming an award by the Industrial Commission in favor of claimant in a proceeding by him under the Workmen's Compensation Act to recover compensation for an injury alleged to have arisen out of his employment with defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. John A. Bloomington for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Morris Kompel, for defendants in error:

Where the facts and circumstances justify the conclusion of the board that the injuries arose out of and in the course of the employment, the supreme court will not reverse.

Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Bd. 276 Ill. 556, 114 N. E. 1009. Ann. Cas. 1918B, 645; Ohio Bldg. Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Bd. 277 Ill. 96, 115 N. E. 149, 14 N. C. C. A. 224; Paul v. Industrial Commission, 288 Ill. 532, 123 N. E. 541, 18 N. C. C. A. 292.

An injury is accidental, within the meaning of the act, which occurs in the course of the employment, unexpectedly, and without the affirmative act or design of the employee.

Matthiessen & H. Zinc Co. v. Industrial Bd. 284 Ill. 378, 120 N. E. 249; Pekin Cooperage Co. v. Industrial Commission, 285 Ill. 31, 120 N. E. 530; Bryant v. Fiesel, 84 N. J. L. 72, 86 Atl. 458, 3 N. C. C. A. 585; Honnold, Workmen's Comp. 281; Bradbury, Workmen's Comp. 325.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Peter Peterson filed a claim for compensation, alleging that he received an injury arising out of his employment with plaintiff in error June 12, 1918. His claim was allowed by the arbitrator, and on review the arbitrator's finding was approved by the Industrial Commission. The circuit court of Cook county affirmed the finding of the commission, and this writ of error has been sued out to review the proceedings.

Peterson was a janitor and all-round handy man in the Ewart Building, at 118 North Jefferson street, Chicago, and had been so employed for about a year previous to the occurrence in question. It is agreed by both parties that they were under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1913, p. 335) on the day of the injury, but plaintiff in error denies that the said injury arose out of defendant in error's employment. The record shows without contradiction that a special arrangement was made by the defendant in error, the chief engineer of the building and his assistant, whereby, instead of bringing cold lunches, they each contributed to the expense of a warm lunch, and one of the three would go out and purchase groceries, meat, and whatever else they wished for lunch, and it would be cooked in the building. The testimony of the assistant engineer, Mannik, was to the effect that before he was employed at the Ewart Building he had worked in another manufacturing building, where a similar arrangement had been made by some of the employees, and that after he came to work in the Ewart Building he suggested this plan to the chief engineer, and they talked it over together, and also discussed it with the defendant in error, whose employment began about a month after Mannik was hired, and the three decided to follow the plan. Mannik himself did the cooking, and Peterson usually was the one to go after the groceries and meat, after getting suggestions from the chief engineer or Mannik as to what food should be obtained for that certain day. Sometimes the chief engineer or Mannik went out after the food, but usually Peterson was sent. On the day of the injury, Peterson, under this arrangement, went to the meat market and other places to obtain supplies for the noon meal, and on his way back fell down, but is unable to tell what caused the fall. His left leg or hip was seriously injured, and he was taken, at the suggestion of the chief engineer, to the Cook County Hospital, and later, when his recovery was found to be somewhat slow, he was taken to the Oak Forest Hospital (another county institution), where he remained for three months.

Defendant in error testified that, on the day he was injured, the chief engineer, Wall, told him about 11 o'clock to go and get meat and other supplies for dinner, stating that he (Wall) would attend to the elevator while defendant in error was gone. It would appear that the regular elevator man usually took his lunch at 11:30 A. M., and that while he was gone defendant in error ran the elevator. The chief engineer attended to the hiring of his assistant and of defendant in error, and had charge of the building and the employees during the most of the time. Plaintiff in error, Pearce, agent of the building, was in general charge of its management, but allowed the chief engineer to attend to the details, including the hiring and discharge of most employees. Pearce testified that he did not know of the special arrangement of these men for eating their lunch on the premises, or about one going out to buy the food to cook; that the power in the building was shut off from the use of the tenants from 12 to 12:30, and that was usually the employees' lunch time. The testimony tends to show that Pearce had seen the three men eating their lunch in the building, but there is no evidence that he had affirmatively acquiesced in their practice in any way.

There can be no question from the record that the injury to defendant in error was a serious one, but it is not clearly shown that the fall was due to what is commonly termed an accident, or whether it was due to some physical condition or disease. The chief question in controversy here is whether the defendant in error's fall on the street, in returning with material for lunch, under the circumstances shown in this record, arose out of his employment. The evidence shows that, prior to the time this special arrangement was made by these three employees, in which they were joined at one time by another employee for a brief period, defendant in error and Mannik brought their lunches to the building, and ate them there during the lunch period, and that Wall usually went out to some nearby restaurant for his lunch. There appears to have been no definite rule as to how or where the employees in the Ewart Building should eat their lunch. Ordinarily, where the lunch period is not subject to the employer's control, or restricted in any way, and the employee is free to go where he will at that time, if he is injured on the public street, off the premises of the employer, the authorities hold that the injury does not arise out of the employment. McKrell v. Howard & Jones, 2 B. W. C. C. 460; Harper, Workmen's Comp. 2d ed. § 55; Bradbury, Workmen's Comp. Law, 3d ed. 526; 1 Honnold, Workmen's Comp. 361; Hills v. Blair, 182 Mich. 20, 148 N. W. 243, 7 N. C. C. A. 409; Draper v. University of Michigan, 195 Mich. 449, 161 N. W. 956; Bylow v. St. Regis Paper Co. 179 App. Div. 555, 166 N. Y. Supp. 874. So far as the record shows, the place where defendant in error fell had no relation to, nor was any part of the surroundings of, his place of work, but was a block or more away, on a public street.

(399 Ill. 161, 188 N. W. 440.)

Counsel for defendant in error argues that the special arrangement as to lunch was made by Wall, the chief engineer, in furtherance of the business of the employer, with a view to economizing in hiring additional help during the lunch hour. We do not think the evidence justifies this conclusion. We think the record shows that the arrangement for lunch was made by the chief engineer and his coemployees, mainly for the purpose of furnishing warm lunches for themselves, which would be more enjoyable, and perhaps more healthful, than if cold. The fact that they sent out for the material and chose to eat the meal on the premises is not material, in view of the fact that the injury took place on a public street some distance from the place of employment. We think it is clear from this record that the arrangement for lunch was a special, voluntary one among the employees, and without the direction or sanction of the employer, and that the injury did not arise in the scope or area of defendant in error's employment, and that therefore the accident did not arise out of the employment. This being so, it is unnecessary to consider and discuss other questions raised in the briefs.

The judgment of the Circuit Court will be reversed, and the award of the Industrial Commission set aside.

Workmen's compensation—injury arising out of employment—fall on sidewalk when getting supplies for lunch.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation: injury to employee while away from plant, primarily to serve a purpose of his own or of another employee, but which may incidentally benefit employer.

As to compensation for injuries during lunch hour, on employer's premises, see annotation in 6 A.L.R. 1151.

As to compensation for injury received while doing prohibited act, see annotation to Fournier v. Androscoggin Mills, — A.L.R. —.

The determination of the question here considered depends largely upon the facts and circumstances in the several cases.

It will be noted from the title that the scope of the annotation lies within narrow compass; and to bring a case therein it must not only appear that the employee, in leaving the plant, was serving primarily a purpose of his own or that of another employee, but also that there was, or at least there was claimed to be, some incidental benefit, or possibility of benefit, to the employer; hence cases that turn upon the question as to when an employee has returned to the employer's service, so as to come within the protection of the act, after having temporarily left the same for a purpose in which the employer had no concern, direct or incidental, are not within its scope.

It will be observed that in the reported case (PEARCE v. INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION, ante, 523) it was held that an injury from a fall upon the sidewalk in a public highway, to one employed in a building, who had gone for supplies for the noonday lunch, in accordance with an agreement among certain of the employees to purchase such supplies, and prepare and eat them upon the employer's premises, in preference to carrying cold lunches, did not arise out of his employment, within the meaning of the Compensation Act, the court holding that the evidence did not justify the conclusion, which was argued, that the special arrangement was made by the chief engineer, who hired the other employees, in furtherance of the business of the employer, with a view to economizing in hiring additional help during the lunch hour.

And in Spizzirri v. Krouse (1919) 73 Pa. Super. Ct. 476, it was held that the workman was not injured by an accident in the course of his employment, where it appeared that he had been employed with others for several days to remove certain property, and that the employer gave the men a quantity of junk, and permitted them to use a truck to remove it, and that, while they were going from one dealer to another, to sell to the best advantage, the truck collided with another vehicle, and the workman was injured. The court said: "Now, it is clear the employer had a right to make a gift of this personal property. With the gift made and the property turned over to the possession of the donee, his interest in it, as it seems to us, had entirely disappeared. It was of no consequence to him where the defendants took the junk, to what dealer they sold it, what price they received for it. These matters were entirely within the control of the plaintiff and his fellows, and were of interest only to them. But, if we stretch the proposition that the employer was interested in having the junk removed from the garage, to the length of saying such interest continued until the truck reached the place of business of the first dealer, upon what possible consideration can it be said to have existed any longer? That dealer was willing to take the junk and pay a price for it. Had the plaintiff and his fellows accepted that price, every possible interest of the employer in their mission would have been extinguished. Indeed, his interest, if any he had, would have been subverted had the offer of the first dealer been accepted; because the plaintiff would have returned to his work that much sooner, in accordance with the request made by defendant's manager when he gave permission to use the truck. Wholly for their own benefit, however, as we view it, and without any further possible interest of the employer in the expedition, the plaintiff and his fellows determined to try their fortune in another part of the city; and, in traveling there, by a route selected by themselves, prosecuting a journey wholly for their own profit, the accident occurred. In our opinion this determination worked a suspension of the relation, and broke the continuity of the course of employment. We are unable to say that the plaintiff, thus injured, has furnished any legal basis for the conclusion that the accident occurred during the course of his employment."

And in Lee v. The St. George

(1914) 7 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 85, it was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment, where a steward on a ship, whose duty it was to go ashore and order stores for the ship, and who was permitted to go to his home, left the ship early in the morning, and went to his home, and remained several hours, and, after he had entered the dock gates on his way back, and was going toward the stores to get the supplies, was knocked down by an engine and injured. The court stated that the place where he was injured was between his home and the stores, and not between the ship and the stores, and that, at the time, he was on his own, and not the ship's business.

And a motorman who had closed his day's work, and had signed his name to the register, denoting that fact, and, while going to have his watch tested, after he had reached the public highway, was run down by an automobile, over which the employer had no control, was held not to have sustained an injury which arose out of or in the course of his employment. De Voe v. New York State R. Co. (1915) 169 App. Div. 472, 155 N. Y. Supp. 12, affirmed in (1916) 218 N. Y. 318, L.R.A.1917A, 250, 113 N. E. 256.

And in Whitfield v. Lambert (1915) 8 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 91, it was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment where a farm laborer, who had just commenced work, was allowed, according to custom, the use of a horse and cart to go to the station for his box, and, while on the way, he was injured when the horse was frightened by a motor. The court said: "The employer had only promised to let the workman have a horse and cart. This was the usual practice in the neighborhood. The workman said that, in all his previous places, he had the use of the farmer's horse and cart to convey his box. His father gave evidence that he had lived in that part of the country all his life, and that farm servants were always allowed a horse and cart to go for their boxes. It cannot, therefore, be said that the workman, in going with the horse and cart for his box, was fulfilling any contract by the employer to carry his box from Warcop station to the farm. He was merely using the employer's horse and cart with leave and license, as it was agreed he should be at liberty to do. He was going on his own business, not on the farmer's business."

And in Wilson v. H. C. Frick Coke Co. (1920) 268 Pa. 256, 110 Atl. 723, it was held that the death of a workman was not due to an injury by accident while in the course of his employment, where it appeared that he was a day laborer who had been ordered by his foreman to appear before a physician for examination on a certain night, but that he did not go until the following night, and was drowned while returning, the court holding that he was not injured while performing any duty which he was employed to perform, nor while actually engaged in the furtherance of the employer's business.

And a messenger boy who, in performing his duties, traverses the streets of a city, departs from the scope of his employment when he climbs upon a passenger vehicle not owned or controlled by his employer, for the purpose of expediting his work, so that an accident which befalls him when upon such vehicle cannot be said to arise out of and in the course of the employment the court holding that, since he was provided with carfare when the messages were to go beyond a certain distance, he was to walk on other occasions. State ex rel. Miller v. District Ct. (1917) 138 Minn. 326, L.R.A.1918F, 881, 164 N. W. 1012.

And one engaged by the proprietor of a cycle repair shop to look after the shop and do small repairs to cars and bicycles on the premises, and who was expressly told not to leave the shop, or to take bicycles out of the shop, cannot properly be found to have sustained an injury arising out of his employment, where he left the shop for the purpose of returning a motorcycle which had been brought in for repair and, while he was riding it, was run into and killed, there being no emergency justifying him in taking the course which he took. Leggett v. Gibbons (1916) 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. (Eng.) 980, 114 L. T. N. S. 830, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 154, 9 B. W. C. C. 354.

And where a moving picture company's plant occupied the four corners of intersecting streets in a city, and the two thoroughfares were constantly being used by officers and employees of the company in passing between portions of the plant, and an employee whose services were not immediately needed, but who was required by the rules to remain at the plant, was standing on the street, talking with other employees on matters purely personal, it was held that he was not entitled to compensation for injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile of one of the directors, since the accident did not arise out of the employment. Balboa Amusement Producing Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission (1918) 85 Cal. App. 793, 171 Pac. 108.

But in Rainford v. Chicago City R. Co. (1919) 289 Ill. 427, 124 N. E. 643, there was held to be evidence that an injury to a conductor of a street car arose out of his employment, where there was testimony that he had stopped his car, and was on his way to his house near by, to have some lunch prepared for him, and was struck by another car as he was crossing the track.

And in Punches v. American Box Board Co. (1921) — Mich. —, 185 N. W. 758, it was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment, where it appeared that the employer hired a team for use in its business, which was originally kept on its premises, but that the injured employee, who usually drove the team, subsequently, with the foreman's knowledge, kept it in his barn and drove it back and forth to his work, and, while driving to work in the morning, an accident occurred which resulted in his death.

So, a seaman engaged in coaling his vessel, who, during a time when coaling could not be done, because the vessel had grounded, attempted to go on shore for some money due him for the sale of old ropes,—which was allowed the seaman, but out of which there was to be paid any renewal of small breakages in the ship's crockery which the skipper might direct,—and fell and injured himself, was held to have suffered an injury by accident arising out of the employment, although, at the time of the accident, no breakages had occurred requiring the application of any part of the funds for renewal, and the skipper had given no directions that any part should be so applied. Duck v. North Sea Steam Trawling Co. (1916) 9 B. W. C. A. (Eng.) 83.

And a workman who was instructed to get a barge at a wharf, but, upon going there, found that he would not be able to get it for some time, because of the condition of the tide, did not go outside of the ambit of his employment in attempting to get into a small boat near by, in which he could sit down and watch the tide until the time was favorable for him to perform his work. May v. Ison (1914) 110 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 525, 7 B. W. C. C. 148.

And injuries caused by being drenched with water and saturated with smoke, received by an employee in charge of his employer's volunteer fire brigade, while assisting in extinguishing a fire in a garage, situated about 40 feet from his employer's premises, may be found to have arisen out of the employment, where the workman entered the burning garage with the employer's chemical engine before the arrival of the town apparatus, although he subsequently worked in connection with the fire apparatus of the town. McPhee's Case (1915) 222 Mass. 1, 109 N. E. 633, 10 N. C. C. A. 257.

And the death of a compositor on a newspaper may be found to have arisen out of and in the course of his employment, although it occurred while he was upon the roof of an adjoining building, where he had gone for air on a hot night. Von Ette's

Case (1916) 223 Mass. 56, L.R.A. 1916A, 641, 111 N. E. 696, 12 N. C. C. A. 551.

And in Messer v. Manufacturers' Light & Heat Co. (1919) 263 Pa. 5, 106 Atl. 85, where an engineer, while on his vacation with pay, and subject to call, received a telephone message from the superintendent of the company for which he worked, to inspect a certain pumping station, to increase the engineer's efficiency, it was held that he sustained an injury by accident in the course of his employment, upon its appearing that he was injured while driving his automobile in carrying out the superintendent's request, although, at the time of the injury, he might have turned the car toward home.

J. T. W.

BLASSIUS GRASSER, Appt.,

v.

J. C. JONES et al., Respts.

Oregon Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1)—November 22, 1921.

(— Or. —, 201 Pac. 1069.)

Mortgage — redemption — convict — termination of sentence.

A statute suspending the civil rights of one imprisoned for crime for a period less than that of his natural life does not give him a right, after termination of his imprisonment, to redeem from a mortgage foreclosure which occurred during his imprisonment, the period of redemption from which has otherwise expired.

[See note on this question beginning on page 531.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County (Bingham, J.), sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to compel the defendant sheriff to permit plaintiff to redeem from a mortgage foreclosure, and to require an accounting for the rents and profits of the land, and for the personal property of plaintiff, alleged to have been wrongfully appropriated by defendants. Affirmed.

Statement by Burnett, Ch. J.:

Prior to January 16, 1915, the plaintiff gave a note, and secured the same by mortgage on his real estate. On that date he was convicted of a felony, and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary of this state for a term of from one to fifteen years. Default having been made in the payment of the note, suit to foreclose the mortgage was commenced March 11, 1916. This proceeded to decree, sale, confirmation, and sheriff's deed; the date of this latter document being August 3, 1917. The plaintiff was pardoned July 15, 1919. On November 22 following, he offered to redeem in pursuance of formal notice given within thirty days prior thereto. The sheriff, to whom the application was made, refused to allow him to redeem, and he has brought this suit against the officer, with the purchaser at the sale and others, who, he says, claim some interest in the property, the object being to compel the allowance of redemption, for an accounting of the rents and profits of the property, and for damages for the conversion of certain personal property alleged to have been left by the plaintiff on the premises when he was incarcerated in the penitentiary. The circuit court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Ronald C. Glover and A. O. Condit for appellant.

Mr. W. C. Winslow for respondents.

Burnett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The mortgagor or judgment debtor whose rights and title were sold has a right to redeem real property within one year after the confirmation of the sale. Or. Laws, § 248. The sale was confirmed July 17, 1916, but the offer to redeem was not made until more than three years later, namely, November 22, 1919. If nothing else were shown, it is plain that the offer was too late. Says the plaintiff, however, quoting § 17, Or. Laws: "If any person entitled to bring an action mentioned in this chapter or to recover real property, or for a penalty or forfeiture, or against a sheriff or other officer for an escape, be at the time the cause of action accrued, either . . . imprisoned on a criminal charge, or in execution under the sentence of a court for a term less than his natural life, the time of such disability shall not be a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, but the period within which the action shall be brought shall not be extended more than five years by any such disability, nor shall it be extended in any case longer than one year after such disability ceases."

The section is taken from chapter 2 of title 1, Or. Laws, and relates to the time for commencing actions or suits.

It is also said in the language of § 2380, Or. Laws, that "a judgment of imprisonment in the penitentiary for any term less than for life suspends all the civil rights of the person so sentenced, and forfeits all public offices and all private trusts, authority, or power during the term or duration of such imprisonment."

The contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that his civil rights, among them the right of redemption, were suspended while he was a convict, and that § 17, Or. Laws, allows him to redeem within one year after his disability as a convict ceased. In other words, he contends that his restoration to citizenship by pardon included the revival of his right to redeem, which hitherto had been suspended.

Section 17, as stated, relates to the time within which a suit or action may be commenced. The plaintiff had no cause of suit or action, in any event, until the sheriff refused to allow him to redeem. An offer to redeem and a refusal to allow redemption are conditions necessarily precedent to the right to sue. Hence, his cause of suit accrued, if at all, after his disability was removed. What the result would have been if the plaintiff had made his offer to redeem before the expiration of the year, and while he was still in prison, is not before us, because no such offer was made. The question turns upon the effect to be given § 2380, supra, suspending the civil rights of the convicted plaintiff.

The right to redeem is manifestly a civil right. 2 Words & Phrases, 1199. The effect of the suspension of the civil rights of a convict under a statute identically like ours had the consideration of the supreme court of California in Re Nerac, 35 Cal. 392, 95 Am. Dec. 111. The essence of the case is stated thus in the syllabus: "One sentenced to the state prison for a felony, for a term less than his natural life, is not dead in law. His civil rights in some matters are suspended, but the rights of his creditors are not suspended."

In Gray v. Stewart, 70 Kan. 429, 109 Am. St. Rep. 461, 78 Pac. 852, the sale of a convict's land, and the consequent deed were held valid. In Byers v. Sun Sav. Bank, 41 Okla. 728, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 320, 139 Pac. 948, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 222, the court sustained the right of a convict to contract to encumber the land to pay his attorney to procure for him a parole, and this under a statute precisely like ours. The court in Re Deming, 10 Johns. 232, said: "The limitation to the operation of a pardon on this antecedent right is that it cannot divest any person of any right or interest which the law had permitted to be acquired and vested in consequence of the judgment."

This language is used in the syllabus of Coffee v. Haynes, 124 Cal. 561, 71 Am. St. Rep. 99, 57 Pac. 482: "A court has jurisdiction to enforce an execution against the property of a defendant in an action, who has been sentenced to the state prison for life, on a charge of murder, though the judgment, in the civil action, was not entered against him until after his civil death."

The subject is extensively treated in Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 1 L.R.A. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368, 18 N. E. 148. The substance of the doctrine taught in that case is that civil death does not of itself divest the offender of his lands as a general rule; he can be sued, but cannot sue; he can contract, but cannot compel the courts to aid him in the enforcement of his contract. This was the declaration of the court concerning the situation of a convict at common law. In Gray v. Gray, 104 Mo. App. 520, 79 S. W. 505, it is said that the civil death which attaches to a person as an incident of his conviction of an infamous crime destroys his right to sue, but not the right of courts to entertain suits against him. The court quotes with approval this language from Chitty's Criminal Law, 725: "This situation of civilitur mortuus is never allowed to protect him (an attainted or convicted person) from the claims of private individuals or the necessities of public justice; so that though he can bring no action against another, he may be sued, and an execution may be taken out against him."

If, as some of these precedents indicate, anyone convicted of a crime can contract, he certainly could give notice and make his offer to redeem, thus fixing the genesis of his right to sue if refused, with the privilege of waiting under the terms of the statute until his disability was removed, before prosecuting the suit. On the other hand, if his civil rights are suspended, as the statute says, they form no obstacle to the proceedings on behalf of his creditors. To hold otherwise would be to punish them, or, at least, to impair the validity of their contracts. Under the statute, the mortgage creditor has a right to foreclose upon default being made. He may pursue that remedy to its full fruition, ending in the sheriff's deed to the property sold at foreclosure. If it is to be understood that one who otherwise would have a right of redemption for a year after the sale could, by committing a crime, extend that period for five years, or while he is incarcerated as a punishment for his offense, it would impair the value of the mortgagee's remedy, and allow the debtor to take advantage of his own wrong. The suspension of his civil rights is one of the consequences of the crime of which he is convicted, and should have engaged his attention before he committed the offense.

In brief, it is not the rights of the mortgagee which are suspended, but those of the mortgagor convicted of the crime, and it cannot be that his conviction will work out for him a more favorable situation than if he had not been proved guilty of the offense, especially where the result would be to impair the obligation of his contract with the mortgagee. The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

McBride, Harris, and Brown, JJ., concur.

Mortgage—redemption—convict—termination of sentence.

ANNOTATION.

Effect of imprisonment to extend time for redemption from judicial, execution, or tax sale.

No case, other than the reported case (GRASSER v. JONES, ante, 529), appears to have considered the precise question of the effect of the imprisonment of the person entitled to redeem from a judicial, execution, or tax sale, to extend the time allowed by law for redemption. It is held in that case that the imprisonment of the mortgagor did not operate to extend the time for redemption of mortgaged premises which had been sold under foreclosure proceedings, and to which a sheriff's deed had been delivered, although it was provided by statutes that the time to bring action by one imprisoned on a criminal charge should be extended for a certain period, and that the civil rights of a person imprisoned should be suspended. The decision appears to rest on the inequity of permitting one, who ordinarily would have a right of redemption for a certain period, to extend that period by committing a crime, and also on the ground that, the suspension of the civil rights of a person imprisoned being a consequence of the crime of which he is convicted, it is inequitable that his conviction should work out for him a more favorable situation than if he had not been proven guilty of the offense.

Attention may be called, however, to Gray v. Stewart (1904) 70 Kan. 429, 109 Am. St. Rep. 461, 78 Pac. 852. In that case it appeared that, prior to the imprisonment of a mortgagor, judgment of foreclosure was rendered against him. Thereafter, during imprisonment, the mortgaged premises were sold, the sale confirmed, and a sheriff's deed delivered. The mortgagor contended that, by reason of his imprisonment, the sale and sheriff's deed were insufficient to transfer title. The court refused to uphold this contention, saying: "We hold that the confinement of Gray in the penitentiary under the sentence imposed did not cause the judgment of foreclosure against him to become dormant, . . . and, hence, that the proceedings under such judgment, which ripened into a sheriff's deed, were valid and vested an indefeasible title to the land in the purchaser."

L. F. C.

SANITARY CAN COMPANY

v.

NATIONAL PICKLE & CANNING COMPANY, Appt.

Iowa Supreme Court — September 28, 1921.

(— Iowa, —, 184 N. W. 354.)

Payment — by check on insolvent bank.

The tender to a bank to which a draft with bill of lading attached has been sent for collection, of a check on itself, does not amount to payment, although the maker of the check had sufficient funds on deposit to meet the check, and the check is marked "Paid," if the draft requires payment in cash or its equivalent, and the bank is insolvent, so that the check is never paid.

[See note on this question beginning on page 537.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Lee County (Craig, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a money judgment and interest upon an account for a carload of cans. Affirmed.

Statement by Preston, J.:

Action brought at law to recover a money judgment for $844.92, and interest on account, for a car of cans. Defendant pleaded payment. The case was transferred to equity. The court found there was due plaintiff from defendant $1,137.92, but that there should be credited thereon, as conceded and offered by plaintiff, the net sum of $502.73, which last amount was the dividend from proceedings in bankruptcy of D. H. Sage, or his estate, doing business as Sage Banking Company. This left a balance of $634.48, for which judgment was rendered. The defendant appeals.

(— Iowa, —, 184 N. W. 854.)

Mr. W. B. Collins, for appellant:

While it is a well-established rule that an agent having money demands for collection is authorized to receive nothing but money in payment unless specially authorized by its principal so to do, yet where the agent is a bank of deposit it may receive its own certificate of deposit as money, and its principal will be bound by such payment, and the debtor discharged thereby, even though the bank soon afterwards becomes insolvent and never remits to its principal.

British & A. Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468, 19 N. W. 319; Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 109 N. W. 13, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193; 7 C. J. Banks & Bkg. § 3020; Smith v. Essex County Bank, 22 Barb. 627; Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160; Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 208; Pratt v. Foote, 9 N. Y. 463; Baldwin's Bank v. Smith, 215 N. Y. 78, L.R.A.1918F, 1089, 109 N. E. 188, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 500; Nineteenth Ward Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 184 Mass. 49, 67 N. E. 670; Belk v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 102 Neb. 702, 169 N. W. 262; Rohrbach v. Hammill, 162 Iowa, 131, 143 N. W. 872.

The system by which nearly all banks in this country transact monetary affairs, by the use of checks, drafts, and certificates of deposit, must be presumed to be known by men of business, and the courts take judicial notice of such customs, and they will not permit one who must be presumed to be familiar with them to profit by pleading ignorance of them.

British & A. Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468, 19 N. W. 319; Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 109 N. W. 13, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193.

The one who made the wrong possible must suffer the loss.

State ex rel. Carroll v. Corning Sav. Bank, 129 Iowa, 838, 115 N. W. 937; Benton County Sav. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 161 Iowa, 712, 140 N. W. 811.

Messrs. L. J. Montgomery and Hollingsworth & Blood, for appellee:

The usual rule is that a check operates as payment only when the check is itself paid.

Bellevue Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 168 Iowa, 707, 150 N. W. 1076; Griffen v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 109 N. W. 13, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193; Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 109 N. W. 909; McFarland v. Howell, 162 Iowa, 110, 143 N. W. 860; 2 Bolles, Bkg. 600.

Before acceptance of a check will be considered payment, it must have been so expressly agreed.

Gower v. Halloway, 18 Iowa, 154; Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 109 N. W. 909.

The retention of worthless paper and an attempt to collect thereon do not establish payment.

Huse v. McDaniel, 33 Iowa, 406.

Instituting suit on worthless paper is not an acceptance as payment, but operates for the benefit of the original debtor, who can still be sued on the original debt.

Ibid.

A collecting bank has no authority to accept checks or credits on itself in payment of collection.

Bank of Montreal v. Ingerson, 105 Iowa, 349, 75 N. W. 351; 2 Michie, Banks & Bkg. p. 1397; Bellevue Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 168 Iowa, 707, 150 N. W. 1076; McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Greene, 360; Aultman & Co. v. Lee, 43 Iowa, 404; National Loan & Invest. Co. v. Bleasdale, 140 Iowa, 695, 119 N. W. 77.

Defendant cannot impose its worthless check on plaintiff. Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 109 N. W. 909.

Nonpayment of a check given in payment of a debt entitles the holder to sue upon the original debt.

2 Bolles, Bkg. 600; Huse v. McDaniel, 33 Iowa, 406; Gray Bros. v. Otto, 178 Iowa, 855, 160 N. W. 293.

Preston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a manufacturer of cans in the East, shipped to the defendant a carload of cans at the agreed price of $844.92, and drew a sight draft on defendant, dated October 1, 1914, for the amount thereof, with bill of lading attached, through the National Newark Banking Company, of Newark, New Jersey. The draft was payable to said bank, signed by plaintiff, and addressed to National Pickle & Canning Company, St. Louis, Missouri. Upon the face of the draft, in red ink, was printed the notation: "This draft must be paid in cash or its equivalent, the bank named as payee acting only as agent to collect and remit to the drawer."

It also recited: "Bill of sale attached, deliverable only on payment hereof."

It is indorsed: "Pay to the order of any bank for collection for account of National Newark Banking Company, Newark, New Jersey."

The transaction was treated as if the draft had passed through the Newark bank, although by agreement between plaintiff and that bank, plaintiff sent out such drafts itself for collection, and accordingly the draft in question was forwarded for collection to the Sage Banking Company, at Alexandria, Missouri, at which point defendant had a factory. The defendant treats that transaction as having been done by the Newark bank. The Sage Banking Company, receiving the draft, called up defendant company's manager, who came down on the evening of October 13, 1914, between 7 and 8 o'clock, to pay the draft, and take up the bill of lading attached, and gave defendant's check on said Sage Banking Company for the full amount. Defendant, as drawee of the draft, had to its credit on the books of the Sage Banking Company about $1,100, yet at the time the check was given the bank was insolvent, and had no funds on hand sufficient to pay the draft. The Sage Banking Company did not advise defendant's manager that his check was worthless, or that the bank was in a failing condition. Upon drawing defendant's check, as before stated, and with such worthless check, it took up the draft, received the bill of lading from the bank, and defendant afterwards procured and used the cans covered by the bill of lading. The check was marked across the face:

"Paid. Sage Banking Co." But it appears that the bank clerk who received the check did nothing further with it, and did not charge it to the account of the defendant on the books of the bank. There was at no time after the check was received sufficient money in the bank to pay it, and the next day, between 1 and 2 o'clock, the bank closed its doors, and thereafter passed into bankruptcy.

Later, when the facts were made known to the Newark bank, it, for the purpose of protecting both plaintiff and defendant and all parties in interest, filed a claim in bankruptcy for the amount of the check; said claim setting out the facts and the existence of a dispute as to whether the draft was paid by the check and as to whether the bankrupt had exceeded his authority as a collecting agent, and expressly stating that the claim was filed without prejudice to any action against the defendant, either by the Newark bank or plaintiff. The claim in bankruptcy was allowed, and dividends paid to the Newark bank, and held by them for the plaintiff and the defendant herein, and for their protection, and after defendant had been requested to prove up for the entire amount of the account, and their refusal so to do. The net amount of the dividends, after deducting some $80 or $90 for expenses of filing and collecting, was credited on the claim sued on herein, as before stated.

During the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings, defendant claiming that the draft covering the purchase of the cans, as well as the account for the cans, was fully paid by the check transaction, this suit was instituted, claiming that defendant owed plaintiff for the cans and upon the account and the draft drawn therefor. As said, defendant answered, claiming that the draft had been paid by the giving of the check. The trial court found for plaintiff, and in addition directed plaintiff to assign, or cause to be assigned, to the defendant the balance of said claim in bankruptcy, or cause to be paid to the defendant all dividends that might thereafter be paid on the claim, and such assignment to be made on the demand of the defendant, and so on. The clerk of the Sage Banking Company, who transacted the business in question for the Sage bank, knew the financial condition of his bank, and that it was insolvent, but, as said, did not advise defendant's superintendent of that fact.

(— Iowa, —, 184 N. W. 354.)

Appellant's contention, as we gather from the errors assigned and brief point, is that plaintiff and the Newark bank selected the Sage Banking Company, at Alexandria as agent to collect the draft and bill of lading attached, rather than an agent at St. Louis, Missouri, and selected the Sage Banking Company as its agent to present and receive payment of the draft, thereby justifying defendant in acting as it did in payment of the draft by the check. But the draft was to be paid in cash, or its equivalent, whether it was sent to one bank or another. That is the question in the case,—whether, under the circumstances, the check transaction was a payment.

1. In appellant's argument and reply, and the two so-called additional arguments, all four of them refer to the two Iowa cases, British & A. Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468, 473, 19 N. W. 319, and Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 109 N. W. 13, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193. While other cases are cited, appellant seems to rely more especially upon these two. The appellee also relies on the Griffin Case and others. Appellee seeks to distinguish the British & A. Mortg. Co. Case from the instant case, in this, that in that case there were no instructions expressly requiring a cash payment, but, on the contrary, payment by draft was suggested, and that, under the facts, it was shown that they did not expect that the maker would collect the cash and present it at the counter of the bank for payment. They point out that in the instant case the Sage bank, by the plain indorsement on the face of the draft, was expressly required to receive nothing but cash. The case was distinguished in Griffith v. Merchants Life Asso. 141 Iowa, 414, 417, 133 Am. St. Rep. 177, 119 N. W. 694. It is no doubt true that the giving of the check of defendant by it to the Sage bank was conditional payment. But it was only a conditional payment.

Payment—by check on insolvent bank.

We said in Bellevue Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 168 Iowa, 707, 150 N. W. 1076, that the general rule is that, when the holder of a check presents it at the counter of the bank upon which it is drawn, and receives payment therefor, the transaction is closed. It was also said in that case that the bank as the collecting agent was within its duty in accepting from the maker of the note a check, if it had reason to believe the same to be good, but that the acceptance of such check operated presumptively only as a conditional payment of the note, and that, upon the dishonor of the check, the condition failed, and that the holder of the note was entitled to maintain his original cause of action. We said further in that case that, whatever difference there may be in the authorities on these propositions, they are sustained by a great weight of authority, and we are committed to them, citing the Griffin Case, and Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 510, 109 N. W. 909. The opinion quotes from the Griffin Case to the effect that checks, drafts, and so on, are extensively used in commercial transactions, and that, in authorizing an agent to make collections, it may be assumed, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, that the authority is to be executed in the manner usual and customary in the commercial world; that, while the agent may not accept anything but the actual cash in satisfaction of the claim, he may receive a check or draft, negotiable and payable on demand, which he has good reason to believe will be honored on presentation, as a ready and more convenient means of obtaining the money in conditional satisfaction of the debt, and that, if the instrument is honored by the drawee, payment relates back. The opinion also discusses the question of conditional credit obtained upon the books of the bank as a conditional credit, and that it is subject to the honor of the checks.

But in the instant case there were specific instructions that the draft drawn by the plaintiff upon the defendant should be paid in cash only, or its equivalent. Though it appears that the defendant had an amount on deposit with the Sage bank larger than the draft, still the bank was at that time insolvent, and this fact was known to the Sage bank and the party who took the defendant's check, so that the bank took a worthless check and sought thereby, as the agent of plaintiff, or the bank through whom plaintiff made the draft, to pay the draft, although authorized to accept only cash, or its equivalent. The Sage bank might as well have taken a carload of broken grindstones. Under the authorities before cited, the acceptance of the check would, at most, be a conditional payment. It appears, as before stated, that the check was not charged to the account of the defendant by the Sage bank or its employees. There was, then, no conditional credit on the books of the bank. We do not understand either party to claim anything in that regard, although appellant cites authority to the proposition that the giving of the check by the defendant was an appropriation of the funds in its hands to the payment of the draft. But there were no funds to be appropriated. There was a paper balance in favor of defendant on the bank's books. But the bank was insolvent. We understand appellee to concede that the bank was, in a sense, plaintiff's agent; that is, for the purpose of collecting the money on the draft. The draft on its face so provides. But they contend, and cite authority, that by accepting a worthless check the bank exceeded its authority, and that, in regard to such excess of authority, the Sage bank was the agent of the defendant, and further, that in so doing it was a matter between the defendant and the Sage bank, which does not affect the rights of the plaintiff as drawer of the draft against the defendant.

Appellee cites Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 347, 348, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 510, 109 N. W. 909, to the proposition that the loss incident to the bank's insolvency had already been suffered by defendant as a depositor, and that it cannot shift this loss to the plaintiff by checking it over in payment of the draft, and thus recoup its loss by receiving the goods and keeping them. Other cases are cited by appellee to the effect that the insolvency of an agent revokes the agency, and that the acceptance of a draft for collection by an insolvent bank is a fraud. We shall not take time or space to discuss these later propositions. On the main proposition already discussed, we think there was no final or absolute payment of the draft in question by the check given by the defendant to the Sage bank. In addition to the cases already cited, and as having a bearing, see 2 Michie Banks & Bkg. pp. 1395, 1397, 1482; McFarland v. Howell, 162 Iowa, 110, 116, 143 N. W. 860; 2 Bolles, Bkg. 600; Gray Bros. v. Otto, 178 Iowa, 855, 160 N. W. 293; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11. Without further discussion, we are of the opinion that the trial court rightly decided the case, and the judgment is affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Weaver and De Graff, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Check on bank as payment of debts held by bank for collection.

It is a general rule that a bank which is acting as the collecting agent of the owner of a claim has no authority, unless specially conferred, to accept in payment anything but cash. 3 R. C. L. p. 616, § 245. It is a rule prevailing in all but a few jurisdictions, that a check given by a debtor to his creditor for the amount of the indebtedness does not amount to a payment, in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, that it shall amount to payment. 21 R. C. L. 60, § 59. Both of these rules militate against the receipt of a check operating as payment, generally. The latter rule has been applied in case of a check drawn upon the bank holding the claim. In Bellevue Bank v. Security Nat. Bank (1915) 168 Iowa, 707, 150 N. W. 1076, the acceptance by a bank holding a claim for collection, of a check drawn upon itself by the debtor, was held to operate as conditional payment only, and, upon the dishonor of the check, the condition was held to fail, and the holder of the note entitled to maintain his original cause of action. In this case the check was not paid, because the account of the drawer had, through a fraudulent scheme, been made to appear larger than it really was, and upon discovery the check was dishonored. In United States Nat. Bank v. Shupak (1918) 54 Mont. 542, 172 Pac. 324, the rule that a check is conditional payment only is applied in case of a check drawn on the bank which held the obligation. There were some other facts in this case, however, which militate against it as authority upon the general rule; the note had been sent to the bank for collection; an officer of the bank retained the genuine note and forged a renewal, sending the renewal to the owner; about nine months thereafter the genuine note was presented by the bank to the makers for payment, who gave the check in question.

The rule that the bank has no authority to accept anything but cash has been invoked, and it has been held there is no payment of a draft sent to a bank for collection, where, upon presenting the draft to the drawee, the latter gave the person so presenting it for the bank a check on the bank for the amount, the employee stamping the word "Paid" on the back of the draft, and turning it over to the drawee, but when the employee arrived at the bank, there were no funds to meet the check, and the employee was instructed to return to the drawee's place of business to get the draft, but this was refused. Western Brass Mfg. Co. v. Maverick (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 535, 23 S. W. 728. The rule that a bank is not authorized to receive anything but cash is referred to in Pollak Bros. v. Niall-Herlin Co. (1911) 187 Ga. 23, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 13, 72 S. E. 415, and it is there said that the receipt of the check under the circumstances was equivalent to the actual receipt of the money by the bank. See infra for facts in this case.

An exception has been made to the rule that a check does not operate as payment where a bank which holds a claim for collection accepts a check drawn on itself. It is held that such a check does amount to payment if the drawer has sufficient funds to pay it. Scott v. Gilkey (1894) 153 Ill. 168, 39 N. E. 265. In this case a check given by the maker of a note held by the bank for the owner, for interest on the note, was held to amount to payment.

It is held in Baldwin's Bank v. Smith (1915) 215 N. Y. 76, L.R.A. 1918F, 1089, 109 N. E. 138, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 500, that the holder, and not the maker, of a note payable at a bank, must bear the loss caused by the failure of the bank without remitting or making any record of payment, where the maker had funds on deposit, and the note was sent to the bank for collection and remittance on the due date, while the statute makes such a note equivalent to a check, at least, where a bank accepts a verbal order to pay the note and charge it to the maker's account. The court said: "If the maker had actually gone to the bank and passed the necessary currency over its counter to pay the note, with a direction thus to apply it, that would plainly have constituted payment. Smith v. Essex County Bank (1856) 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 627. If they had sent a check drawn on the bank to pay the note the acceptance of it would have been per se an appropriation of the funds of the drawer, or, to be accurate, of the funds subject to the drawer's order to the payment of the note. Pratt v. Foote (1854) 9 N. Y. 463; Commercial Bank v. Union Bank (1854) 11 N. Y. 203; Oddie v. National City Bank (1871) 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160. The verbal order, with the statement of the president of the bank that it would be acted upon, was the equivalent, in legal effect, of a written order and its acceptance." The bank in this case failed seven days after the maturity of the note without having remitted, although during all the intervening time, the makers of the note had more than sufficient funds to their credit with which to meet the note, and the bank had sufficient funds to pay it.

There was held to be a payment of a note owned by a bank, where, a few days before the note was due, the maker called at the bank with a check on the bank drawn by the indorser of the note, and proposed to the bank that the check should be taken as payment of the note. This was declined, but it was agreed that the check should be left, and if the drawer's account was good on the day when the note would fall due, the check would pay the note. On the day the note fell due, the account was not good, but shortly thereafter the account was made good; whereupon the check was charged to the account and the note was credited to discount notes as paid, and also posted in the bill book and marked upon the tickler as paid, and the charge of the check to the drawer was posted from the cash book into the ledger. Pratt v. Foote (1854) 9 N. Y. 463, approved on rehearing in (1854) 10 N. Y. 599. According to the court, upon rehearing, the payment was as complete as if the maker of the note had presented the indorser's check, and had received the money for it, and had then with the money paid the note. Upon the authority of Pratt v. Foote it is held in Commercial Bank v. Union Bank (1854) 11 N. Y. 203, that the giving of a check by the drawee of a draft in payment of a draft held by the bank, for collection, together with the delivery of the draft as paid to the drawee, amounts to payment, although at the time the drawer of the check had not sufficient funds to meet it. But if not paid by that transaction, according to the court, after the account of the drawer of the check was made good, there was a payment.

Where, in accordance with a course of dealing, it must be assumed that a bank was directed by the maker to pay a note which was sent to it for collection out of the deposit then standing therein to the maker's credit, and, on the day of the maturity of the note, the bank draws its draft for the purpose of transmitting the proceeds to the owner, stamps upon the face of the note "Paid," and perforates the note in three places, and puts the note thus stamped and mutilated in the file with checks so that a proper record of the transaction may be entered at the end of the day upon the permanent books, there is a payment of the note which is good as against an assignee for the benefit of creditors of the maker who, at this point, notifies the bank of the assignment and requests the bank to hold the account. Nineteenth Ward Bank v. First Nat. Bank (1903) 184 Mass. 49, 67 N. E. 670.

In Bartley v. State (1897) 53 Neb. 310, 73 N. W. 744, approved on rehearing in (1898) 55 Neb. 294, 75 N. W. 832, a prosecution for embezzlement in which it appeared that the state treasurer had, upon presentation of a warrant through a bank, drawn his check upon the bank for the amount of the warrant, and received the warrant as paid, the court says that these facts "constituted a segregation or separation of the amount of dollars expressed in the check from the general mass of money in the bank as the portion belonging to the state, and passed the title to the latter." Continuing, the court says: "In contemplation of the parties, and in the eye of the law, the segregation was as full and complete as though Mr. Millard, the president of the bank, upon the delivery of the check to him, had stepped into the vault and counted out [the amount involved], placed it upon the counter, charged the state with that amount on the bank books, credited the Chemical National Bank [the holder of the warrant] with a like sum, delivered the warrant to the defendant, and then returned the money to the vault from whence it came; or as if the check had been made payable to the defendant's own order, by himself presented to the paying teller at the bank for payment, who selected from the mass of money in the bank the sum represented by the check, placed the same in the pile on the counter, and then, by direction of the defendant, applied the same in payment of the warrant."

There is payment of a draft drawn upon the customer of a bank, where the customer directed the officers of the bank to pay the draft and charge it to his account, which the bank agreed to do, and did charge the amount to the account of the customer, and drew a draft in favor of the owner of the draft collected, for the amount of the collection. Welge v. Batty (1882) 11 Ill. App. 461. The fact that the bank failed two days afterwards, and that the draft drawn by it in payment of the collection was dishonored, cannot reinstate the liability of the debtor to the creditor. According to this court the law did not require the giving back the first counting of the money out of the bank, to the debtors, and then paying back to the bank for the draft.

The agreement of a bank which holds a note for collection, with the maker, to pay the note out of a special deposit of the maker, and the cancellation and surrender of the note to the maker pursuant to such an agreement, are held to amount to payment in Belk v. Capital F. Ins. Co. (1918) 102 Neb. 702, 169 N. W. 262.

In Sayles v. Cox (1895) 95 Tenn. 579, 32 L.R.A. 715, 49 Am. St. Rep. 940, 32 S. W. 626, where a note sent to a bank for collection was paid by the maker by delivering the check of a third person upon the bank, the court says: "The fact that George paid his note to the bank in a check upon itself can make no difference, as it was equivalent to a payment in money, even if the bank had failed the same day."

There was held to have been a payment of a note in Bierce v. State Nat. Bank (1912) 33 Okla. 776, 127 Pac. 856, where an indorser of the note sent to the bank owning it the check of a third person upon the bank for the amount of the note, which the bank accepted and charged to the drawer's account, marking the note "Paid." No question of loss through insolvency arose in this case, the question being one of ownership of the note. Although there is some language used in the opinion indicating that the check did not amount to payment until the check was itself paid, the general tenor of the opinion seems to be that the acceptance of the check by the drawee bank, where the drawer had funds to meet it, constituted payment.

A case bearing some resemblance in facts to the facts involved in the question under annotation is Daniel v. St. Louis Nat. Bank (1899) 67 Ark. 223, 54 S. W. 214. In that case the maker of a note which had been sent to the bank for collection deposited money in the bank, which gave him a receipt for it, acknowledging a receipt of the sum deposited as part payment on the note. The instructions in this case treat the fact more as if the bank had the amount thus deposited in its custody, and it is held that if the owner of the note and the bank in question were correspondents, and, after the bank received the note for collection, it had money belonging to the maker which the maker directed to be paid on this note, and at the same time the bank charged up to the maker the amount of the money thus on deposit, and credited the owner of the note with the amount in the usual course of business, that the transaction would amount to payment, and this was held although the bank making the collection failed on the next day, and returned the notes to its correspondent bank without credit of the sum thus paid.

Where the maker of notes which had been left by the owner with the bank executed new notes payable directly to the bank, but where he was not credited by the bank with any money, there was held to be no payment of the notes, although the owner of a note, in one instance, was credited on the ledger of the bank with the proceeds of the note. Scott v. Gilkey (1894) 153 Ill. 168, 89 N. E. 265.

There was held to be a payment of a draft in Howard v. Walker (1898) 92 Tenn. 452, 21 S. W. 897, where it was sent by the owner through his bank to a bank in the city of the drawee's residence, and upon presentation to the drawee he directed that it be taken to his bank for payment, whereupon it was included with other paper in making the usual daily settlement according to the custom of the banks, and was, by the drawee's bank, charged to the account of the drawee, canceled and delivered up to the drawee, upon making up his pass book, leaving still a balance to the credit of the drawee in the bank. At the date of the settlement both banks were insolvent, but their officers did not know it until afterwards. There was no remittance of the amount thus collected.

Among the cases which have expressly considered the effect of the insolvency of the bank, there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not the check operates as payment. That it does not, see the reported case (SANITARY CAN CO. v. NATIONAL PICKLE & CANNING CO. ante, 532).

A check upon an insolvent bank in payment of a claim held by it for collection was held not to be payment in United States Nat. Bank v. Shupak (1918) 54 Mont. 542, 172 Pac. 324.

The court here said that the note could not be paid by giving the worthless check, since the maker did not part with anything of value, or alter his situation to his prejudice. See supra for facts.

But other cases hold that the transaction amounts to payment even in case the bank is insolvent. Pollak Bros. v. Niall-Herin Co. (1911) 137 Ga. 23, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 13, 72 S. E. 415; State ex rel. North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Merchants & Farmers Bank (1905) 137 N. C. 697, 50 S. E. 308, 2 Ann. Cas. 537 (obiter). And see Howard v. Walker (1898) 92 Tenn. 452, 21 S. W. 897, supra.

In Pollak Bros. v. Niall-Herin Co. (Ga.) supra, although the bank at the time of the transaction was insolvent, it was not known to be so, either by the debtor or by the officers of the bank. In holding that the giving of the check amounted to payment, the court says: "We dare say that no depositor who paid a note or draft payable at his own bank ever went through the senseless ceremony of first taking out his money at one window and immediately paying it in at another window. He pays the note or demand which his bank holds against him with his check; and if he has the money to his credit, and the bank is a going concern, with money on hand sufficient to cash the check, the payment is equivalent, in law and in fact, to a payment in money. What sound reason can be advanced to require, as essential to the validity of the payment, the useless formality of the depositor taking his money from the bank officer and immediately restoring it to him? The draft was in the possession of the bank, which had a legal right to receive the money in payment, which was also in its custody, and when the bank accepted its depositor's check in payment of the draft, canceling and delivering it to him, and entered the transaction on its books, thenceforward the draft was paid, and the bank held the money as the agent of the drawer. The bank's failure after the remittance of the collection by check, and the consequent inability of the drawer to realize on the check, did not and could not affect the past transaction."

The delivery of a certificate of deposit payable upon demand to a bank in discharge of a note held by it for collection, at a time when the bank was paying all claims and transacting a banking business, amounts to a payment of the note. British & A. Mortg. Co. v. Tibballs (1884) 63 Iowa, 468, 19 N. W. 319. Some doubt is thrown upon the decision in this case by the decision in the reported case. It seems difficult, at least, to reconcile them. In the Tibballs Case, the court says: "There can be no doubt that if Massey had presented his certificates he would have been paid. If he had done this and immediately returned the money to the cashier, it is conceded that this would have been payment. . . . The law does not require any such vain and unnecessary formality in the transaction of business." It was shown in evidence that it was customary for this particular bank, and indeed for all other banks, to receive their certificates of deposit in payment of claims in the hands of the bank for collection, but it was not shown that the owner of this particular claim had notice of such custom. The court says, however, that it is not necessary, either to prove the custom or bring notice of it home to the plaintiff, but courts take judicial notice of the general customs and usages of merchants and of whatever ought to be generally known within the limits of their jurisdiction; and the court concludes: "We think that the system by which nearly all the banks in this country transact monetary affairs by the use of checks, drafts, and certificates of deposit, and without the actual handling of bank notes or coin, is so well known and understood that no business man, much less a company whose sole occupation is loaning money, should be allowed to profit by pleading ignorance of it." When the interest coupon which was involved in this case was transmitted to the bank, it was accompanied with a letter from the owner to the bank, in which it was stated that, although the same was payable in gold coin, yet the bank might receive currency in payment. And the letter accompanying the note involved directed that the note, mortgage, and release should be delivered in exchange for a New York draft, free of exchange, for the amount represented by the note and the interest coupon. This direction of the plaintiff is held to show very plainly that it was not expected that the debtor should collect together bank notes or coin and present himself at the counter of the bank and count it down in payment. It was claimed that the bank was insolvent on the day of the transaction. As to the effect of this the court says: "If it were shown that Massey [the debtor] knew this at the time of the transaction, there might be ground for the claim that he ought not to have intrusted the bank with making the application of the certificates of deposit. But the evidence does not show that Massey knew that the bank was then insolvent. On the other hand, the court was fully warranted in finding from the evidence (which we need not set out) that Massey supposed and had reason to believe that the bank was solvent and responsible. He knew that the plaintiff had intrusted its collections in Monroe county to the bank, and he had paid the previous interest coupons to the bank, and most of them in certificates of deposit."

W. A. E.

KINNEY-ROME COMPANY
v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit — September 8, 1921.

(275 Fed. 665.)

Unfair trade — giving premiums to salesmen of retailers who purchase products.

The giving through arrangement with the retailers, of premiums, by a manufacturer, to salesmen of retailers, through whom he markets his products, as an inducement to push his product in preference to that of competitors, is not a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, making unlawful unfair methods of competition in commerce.

[See note on this question beginning on page 549.]

PETITION to review an order of the respondent Trade Commission that petitioner cease and desist from giving premiums to salesmen of retailers through whom it markets its products, in alleged violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, making unlawful unfair methods of competition. Order annulled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Evans and Page, Circuit Judges, and Carpenter, District Judge.

Mr. Colvin C. H. Fyfe for petitioner.

Mr. Marshall B. Clarke for respondent.

Page, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original petition filed by petitioner to review an order made by the Federal Trade Commission, respondent, in a proceeding wherein respondent had filed its complaint, charging that petitioner was engaged in manufacturing and selling bed springs in interstate commerce in direct competition with other corporations similarly engaged, and that "respondent [petitioner] for more than one year last past, with the intent, purpose, and effect of stifling and suppressing competition in the manufacture and sale of bed springs and kindred products, in interstate commerce, has given and offered to give premiums, consisting of necktie sets, . . . to the salesmen of merchants handling the products of the respondent [petitioner] and those of its competitors, as an inducement to influence them to push the sales of respondent's [petitioner's] products, to the exclusion of the products of its competitors."

The matter was submitted to the respondent upon an agreed state of facts, in substance as follows: "That the respondent, the Kinney-Rome Company, in the course of its business of manufacturing and selling 'de luxe' bed springs, has . . . given and offered to give premiums, such as necktie sets, etc., . . . to the salesmen of merchants handling the products of the respondent and those of its competitors, when such salesmen have been instrumental in making a sale of respondent's 'de luxe' bed springs; these premiums being given with the knowledge and consent and through arrangements with the merchants who are the employers of said salesmen. . . . Salesmen of respondent's said customers do not explain the above-described system of premiums to persons to whom they sell the said 'de luxe' bed springs, so far as is known to respondent."

(275 Fed. 665.)

The findings of fact followed the stipulation of facts, and stated this conclusion: "That the methods of competition set forth in the foregoing findings, as to the facts under the circumstances set forth, are unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce in violation of the provisions of § 5" of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 26, 1914. 38 Stat. at L. 717, chap. 311, Comp. Stat. § 8836e, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 577.

Thereupon respondent entered the order here complained of, which is in part: "It is ordered that the respondent . . . cease and desist from directly or indirectly giving . . . premiums, such as necktie sets, . . . to salesmen or employees of merchants handling the products of the respondent and those of one or more of its competitors, where such salesmen or employees have been instrumental in making a sale of the respondent's products."

Section 5 provides that:

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful" and "the commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

"Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any such person, partnership, or corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, and if it shall appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public, it shall issue and serve upon such person, partnership, or corporation a complaint stating its charges in that respect."

1. In Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421, 64 L. ed. 993, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572, it is said: "The words 'unfair methods of competition' are not defined by the statute and their exact meaning is in dispute. It is for the courts not the commission, ultimately to determine as matter of law what they include."

While the exact words "unfair methods of competition" have not been frequently, if at all, used in the decisions, yet "unfair competition" and "unfair trade" have been repeatedly the subject of consideration and discussion by Federal and state courts, and several times in this circuit. In Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. 12 C. C. A. 432, 436, 24 U. S. App. 395, 64 Fed. 845, this court said: "The right of appellees to relief is . . . rested upon principles applied by courts of equity in cases analogous to cases of trademarks, where the relief is afforded upon the ground of fraud."

In G. W. Cole Co. v. American Cement & Oil Co. 65 C. C. A. 105, 130 Fed. 703, it was stated by this court: "The doctrine of unfair competition is possibly lodged upon the theory of the protection of the public whose rights are infringed or jeopardized by the confusion of goods produced by unfair methods of trade, as well as upon the right of a complainant to enjoy the good will of a trade built up by his efforts, and sought to be taken from him by unfair methods."

In Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, at page 604, 32 L. ed. 535, 537, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168, it was said: "The case at bar cannot be sustained as one to restrain unfair trade. Relief in such cases is granted only where the defendant, by his marks, signs, labels, or in other ways, represents to the public that the goods sold by him are those manufactured or produced by the plaintiff."

In Howe Scale Co. v. Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict, 198 U. S. 118, 49 L. ed. 972, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609, the court stated: "The essence of the wrong in unfair competition consists in the sale of the goods of one manufacturer or vendor for those of another, and, if defendant so conducts its business as not to palm off its goods as those of complainant, the action fails."

In International News Service v. Associated Press, 248 U. S. 215, at page 241, 63 L. ed. 211, 2 A.L.R. 293, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 73, it was said: It is said that the elements of unfair competition are lacking because there is no attempt by defendant to palm off its goods as those of complainant, characteristic of the most familiar if not the most typical, cases of unfair competition [citing Howe Case, supra]. But we cannot concede that the right to equitable relief is confined to that class of cases. In the present case the fraud upon complainant's rights is more direct and obvious. Regarding news matter as the mere material from which these two competing parties are endeavoring to make money, and treating it, therefore, as quasi property for the purposes of their business, because they are both selling it as such, defendant's conduct differs from the ordinary case of unfair competition in trade principally in this that, instead of selling its own goods as those of complainant, it substitutes misappropriation in the place of misrepresentation, and sells complainant's goods as its own."

See also Keystone Type Foundry v. Portland Pub. Co. 108 C. C. A. 508, 186 Fed. 690; Sterling Remedy Co. v. Eureka Chemical & Mfg. Co. 25 C. C. A. 314, 46 U. S. App. 709, 80 Fed. 105; Rathbone S. & Co. v. Champion Steel Range Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 258, 110 C. C. A. 596, 189 Fed. 30; Bates Mfg. Co. v. Bates Numbering Mach. Co. (C. C.) 172 Fed. 892; West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co. (C. C.) 169 Fed. 833; Manitowoc Malting Co. v. Milwaukee Malting Co. 119 Wis. 543, 97 N. W. 389; Sartor v. Schaden, 125 Iowa, 696, 101 N. W. 511; Regent Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Haaker, 75 Neb. 426, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 447, 106 N. W. 595; Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. v. Utah Independent Teleph. Co. 31 Utah, 377, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1153, 88 Pac. 26; Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co. (C. C.) 121 Fed. 357;

American Brewing Co. v. Bienville Brewery (C. C.) 153 Fed. 615.

There are many other cases in the Federal courts which cite the Howe and Goodyear Cases.

2. It is not conceived that Congress, which laid down no definition whatever, intended to either limit or extend the matters which constituted unfair methods of competition prior to the passage of the Clayton Act (Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, — C. C. A. —, 270 Fed. 881, 908), but that its object was the creation of a board of commissioners, who, as stated in Sears, R. & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 6 A.L.R. 358, 169 C. C. A. 323, 327, 258 Fed. 311, "are to exercise their common sense, as informed by their knowledge of the general idea of unfair trade at common law, and stop all those trade practices that have a capacity or a tendency to injure competitors directly or through deception of purchasers, quite irrespective of whether the specific practices in question have yet been denounced in common-law cases."

We conclude, from the discussion of the term "unfair competition" by the courts, and we are of opinion, that there must be some fraud in trade that injures a competitor, or lessens competition, before it can be said that there has been used an "unfair method of competition."

Unfair trade—giving premiums to salesmen of retailers who purchase products.

3. Without, perhaps, admitting petitioner's conclusions, even if its premises are true, respondent vigorously assails those premises, saying: "Petitioner's whole brief is based on this false assumption,—that the manufacturer is justified in doing whatever the dealer may do."

We are of opinion that the assumption is not false, but is fully justified. The stipulated facts show: "These premiums being given with the knowledge and consent and through arrangements with the merchants who are employers of said salesmen."

It cannot be that a merchant may personally do a thing touching his business that is legal, but that it becomes illegal when done by another through his procurement. When petitioner did the things complained of through arrangement with the merchants, the merchants became parties to the act. As it effected sales of their property, presumably they profited by the arrangement. If it was lawful as to one, it was lawful as to the other.

4. In determining whether there was used "an unfair method of competition," it must always be kept in mind that the thing complained of was done in the merchant's business through an arrangement with him. What, then, may the merchant do? In United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, at page 320, 41 L. ed. 1007, 1020, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 551, the Supreme Court said: "The trader or manufacturer . . . carries on an entirely private business, and can sell to whom he pleases; he may charge different prices for the same article to different individuals; he may charge as much as he can get for the article in which he deals, whether the price be reasonable or unreasonable; he may make such discrimination in his business as he chooses, and he may cease to do any business whenever his choice lies in that direction."

That case has been repeatedly approved, and a portion of that language was used in United States v. Colgate & Co. 250 U. S. at page 307, 63 L. ed. 996, 7 A.L.R. 443, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468. In respondent's brief is asserted a self-evident truth, viz.: "The manufacturer has no such relation to the goods after he has sold them as entitles him to control their resale by the dealer."

This means that not only petitioner, but every manufacturer, is excluded from all right to control the merchant in his resale of his goods. No one, then, having any right to interfere in his business, or to control in any way the resale of his goods, the merchant may do and permit to be done anything in connection with his business that he may see fit, and those he permits to participate in his business may do anything in that business permitted by him, and no one has any right to complain, unless that which is done amounts to a fraud upon his rights. If such right did not belong to the merchant, then he would not have the ordinary rights of contract that belong to every man, and he would be compelled to carry the burdens, risks, and hazards of a business, subject, without his consent, to the control of every manufacturer who might have sold him a bill of goods.

5. The rights which it is urged have been affected are the rights of other manufacturers and also the rights of the public. Unless that which petitioner did fraudulently affected some competition in which either or both were interested, then the order to cease and desist was improvidently entered. It is conceded that no manufacturer had any right to interfere in the merchant's business. It is equally true that, when any manufacturer sold to the merchant, he met, overcame, and ended any competition in which he had any interest. His interest in those goods was terminated, and when they again entered the channels of trade they entered as the goods of a new owner, along with the other goods owned by him. The new owner's problems were with other retail dealers, handling oftentimes goods identical in make and kind with his own, and competing for the favor of the buying public. It needs no discussion to show that that was wholly his competition, to be met in his own way, by his own methods, and in it the manufacturer had no part. Any plan or scheme to advance one kind of goods and to keep back another is a matter wholly and absolutely under the control of the merchant in meeting his problems in his competition, and does not constitute a fraud, nor is it unfair to anyone who does not own the goods.

Likewise the public, if it has an interest in competition, has such interest only in the competition between different merchants. It has no right to demand for itself that a merchant shall set up a competition in his own house and between his own goods. The channels of trade that must be kept open for the manufacturer are those that run between him and other manufacturers, and necessarily end when he has sold. The channels of trade that must be kept open for the buying public do not run through the retailer's store, but do run between the different stores seeking the favor of the buying public.

6. We are of opinion that there can be nothing in the contention that some special interest in a clerk which is undisclosed to the buying public represents an unfair method of competition, because of an incentive and opportunity of the clerk to deceive the public. Undoubtedly the clerk, with the master's consent, may discriminate between the master's goods. All of the buying public, with at least ordinary knowledge and intelligence, knows that a salesman is representing the merchant's interest, and that every merchant may and very frequently does have reason for pushing the sale of one kind of goods more than another; but, if that were not true, it would be little less than an absurdity to say that a salesman, who often is the merchant himself, in order to escape the charge of unfairness, must disclose to every would-be buyer his interest in the transaction in hand. That is just what the contention, if allowed, would lead to.

Nor is it conceived that there is any danger from falsehood or misrepresentation. A salesman, with the master's consent, may discriminate all he pleases between the goods he has to sell. Neither a salesman having a special interest in one article, where he has many to sell, nor a salesman with a single article to sell, has any right to indulge in falsehood and misrepresentation; but there is here no evidence of falsehood or misrepresentation.

The order to cease and desist is annulled and set aside.

NOTE.

The validity and construction of the statute creating the Federal Trade Commission is the subject of annotations in 6 A.L.R. 366, and 11 A.L.R. 797, which are supplemented by the annotation following NEW JERSEY ASBESTOS CO. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, post, 549.

NEW JERSEY ASBESTOS COMPANY

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit—February 26, 1920.

(264 Fed. 509.)

Trade commission — jurisdiction — presents to employees.

1. The giving of social entertainment to employees to induce them to influence their employers to make purchases does not so affect the public as to come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

[See note on this question beginning on page 549.]

Evidence — judicial notice — incidents of business.

2. The court takes judicial notice that the entertainment of customers' employees by persons having goods for sale has been an incident of business from time immemorial.

[See 15 R. C. L. 1122.]

Master and servant—discharge for taking bribes.

3. The payment of money or giving of valuable presents to an employee to induce him to influence his employer to make a contract of purchase is a fraud justifying the discharge of the employee within the contract term of service.

[See 18 R. C. L. 518.]

PETITION to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission finding the respondent company guilty of using unfair methods of competition. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Ward, Rogers, and Manton, Circuit Judges.

Mr. Robert W. Crawford for petitioner.

Messrs. Edward L. Smith, Claude R. Porter, and Charles S. Moore for respondent.

Ward, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

January 6, 1919, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint against the New Jersey Asbestos Company, under § 5 of the Act of September 26, 1914 (Comp. Stat. § 8836e, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 577), entitled, "An Act to Create a Federal Trade Commission, to Define its Powers and Duties, and for Other Purposes," alleging that the company had, during the year 1918, been giving to employees of its customers and prospective customers, liquors, cigars, meals, theater tickets, valuable presents, and sums of money and entertainments, to induce them to influence their employers to purchase the company's products, and that a proceeding by the commission in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

The company filed an answer, admitting that it is engaged in interstate as well as intrastate business, and that it had paid reasonable amounts in furnishing entertainment to employees of customers, and as incidental to such entertainment had supplied liquors, cigars, meals, and theater tickets, but denying that this was done for the purpose of inducing them to influence their employers to buy its goods, and especially denying that it ever gave them valuable presents or sums of money.

The charge of giving valuable presents and sums of money has been abandoned by the commission. May 27, 1919, the commission filed its report and two findings of fact, and its conclusion of law, as follows:

"First. That the respondent, the New Jersey Asbestos Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New Jersey, having its principal office and place of business at the city of New York, in the state of New York, and is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in manufacturing and selling engine packings composed of asbestos, metal and asbestos, flax, wood fiber, and kindred products, throughout the states and territories of the United States, and that, at all times hereinafter mentioned, the respondent has carried on and conducted such business in direct competition with other persons, firms, copartnerships, and corporations manufacturing and selling like products.

"Second. That said respondent, the New Jersey Asbestos Company, in the course of its business of manufacturing and selling engine packings composed of asbestos, metal and asbestos, flax, wood fiber, and kindred products, throughout the states and territories of the United States, for more than one year last past, has been lavishly giving gratuities, such as liquor, cigars, meals, theater tickets, and entertainment, to employees of customers as an inducement to influence their employers to purchase or to contract to purchase from the said respondent, the New Jersey Asbestos Company, engine packings composed of asbestos, metal and asbestos, flax, wood fiber, and kindred products, without other consideration therefor.

"Conclusion.

"That the methods set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, under all the circumstances therein set forth, are unfair methods of competition, in violation of the provisions of § 5 of the act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, 'An Act to Create a Federal Trade Commission, to Define Its Powers and Duties, and for Other Purposes.'"

The findings of fact being mere conclusions, it is necessary to examine the evidence to see whether they are supported by any testimony or not. It shows that the officers of the company in the year 1918 did entertain at the company's expense both customers and employees of customers, and that the salesmen down to May 1st were employed on a salary or on a salary and commission basis, and were allowed to charge in their monthly accounts reasonable lump sums for entertainment. After May 1st they were on a commission basis only, and any entertainment given by them was given at their own expense.

We have held in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 11 A.L.R. 793, 169 C. C. A. 330, 258 Fed. 314, that only unfair practices which affect the public, as distinguished from individuals, are within the jurisdiction of the commission. We take judicial notice—incidents of business.

Evidence—

judicial notice of the fact that the method of entertainment found to be unfair has been an incident of business from time immemorial. It is recognized by article 133 of the regulations covering the assessment of income tax promulgated January 2, 1918 as follows:

"Spending money. — So-called spending or treating money, if actually advanced by corporations to their traveling salesmen to be used by them as a part of the expenses incurred in selling the product of such corporations, is an allowable deduction in a return of income by such corporations. The deduction of such expenditures is conditioned upon a satisfactory showing that all the allowance claimed as a deduction was actually expended for and was an ordinary and usual expense incurred in selling the product or merchandise of the corporation."

The payment of money or the giving of valuable presents to an employee to induce him to influence his employer to make a contract of purchase is a fraud justifying the discharge of the employee within his

Master and servant—discharge for taking bribes.

contract term of service, and perhaps the recovery by the purchaser of the amount or value of such inducement from the seller, upon the theory that it must have been included in the price. But even in such a case we think it would be a matter between individuals, and not one so affecting the public commission—jurisdiction—presents to employees.

Trade

as to be within the jurisdiction of the commission, under our decision in the Gratz Case, supra. However, it stretches theory to the breaking point to suppose that the entertainment expenses found unfair in this case constitute fraud practised by the respondent and by the employees on the purchasers of the respondent's goods. It is difficult to conceive that the purchaser would have a right to recover the amount of such entertainment as a part of the price paid for the goods bought, or that he would have a right to discharge the employee within the term of his service on this ground. So broad a construction of the statute would bring within the disposition of the commission a vast number of subjects and controversies which in their nature belong to the legislative and judicial departments of the government. For instance, advertising is a method of selling goods which without increasing their merits, increases their cost; and so does securing servants of competitors by paying them higher wages, though we suppose no one would say the act gives the commission a right to regulate these matters.

The order is reversed.

ANNOTATION.

Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission.

Only the more recent cases discussing the validity and construction of the statute creating the Federal Trade Commission (Act of September 26, 1914, chap. 311, 38 Stat. at L. 717, Comp. Stat. § 8836a, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 575) are reviewed in this note. The earlier cases on the subject are collected in the annotations in 11 A.L.R., at page 797, and in 6 A.L.R., at page 366.

The validity of the act has been reaffirmed in the two cases in which that question has been raised since the previous annotation was written. See National Harness Mfrs' Asso. v. Federal Trade Commission (1920) — C. C. A. —, 268 Fed. 705; T. C. Hurst & Son v. Federal Trade Commission (1920) 268 Fed. 874. In the former case it was contended that the Federal Trade Commission Act conferred legislative, executive, and judicial powers and functions on one administrative body contrary to articles 1, 2, and 3 of the Constitution. The court held, however, that Congress had the power to authorize an administrative commission to determine the question of fact as to what methods of competition were employed by a given trader, and to decide provisionally the mixed question of law and fact whether such methods were unfair. This authority conferred on the commission was held to be a valid executive and administrative one, and since by the terms of the act creating it no order of the commission could be enforced without obtaining an order from the circuit court of appeals, it was held that no judicial powers were delegated to the commission. The court refused to pass on the validity of the section of the Federal Trade Commission Act relating to the right of the commission or its agents to access to the documentary evidence of any corporation investigated, since the commission in the case before the court had not attempted to exercise that right.

In T. C. Hurst & Son v. Federal Trade Commission (Fed.) supra, the court stated that it was clearly within the power of Congress to legislate generally with respect to the burdens that might or might not be imposed on foreign or interstate commerce. Under this power it was held that Congress could declare what would be fair and what unfair methods and dealings in relation to such commerce, and authorize a commission to make findings of fact as to such dealings, and render an order in relation thereto subject to the requirement that the order should be enforced only through the judgment of the circuit court of appeals in the exercise of its supervisory power of review.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co. (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, 178) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, — A.L.R. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150, it is said that Congress, in enacting the Federal Trade Commission Act, deemed it better to leave the "unfair methods of competition" declared unlawful thereby, without precise definition, and to have each case determined upon its own facts, owing to the multifarious means by which it is sought to effectuate such schemes.

It is within the power of the Federal Trade Commission to make an order forbidding any practice having a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create monopoly. Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co. (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22 178) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, A.L.R. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150.

The commission may make an order enjoining manufacturers and distributors from combining to refuse to sell to a concern on the terms and prices charged competitors. Western Sugar Ref. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) 275 Fed. 725.

In KINNEY-ROME CO. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (reported herewith) ante, 542, the circuit court of appeals of the seventh circuit expresses the opinion that there must be some fraud in trade that injures a competitor or lessens competition, before it can be said that there has been used an "unfair method of competition" within the meaning of the act.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co. (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, 178) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, — A.L.R. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150, it was held, reversing the decision of the circuit court of appeals in (1920) 264 Fed. 885, noted in the annotation in 11 A.L.R. 798, that the unfair methods of competition which the Federal Trade Commission is empowered to condemn and suppress embrace a resale-price plan adopted by a manufacturing corporation, in so far as in its practical operation, though without agreement, express or implied, it necessarily constrains the jobber, wholesaler, or retailer, if he would have the company's products, to maintain the prices "suggested" by it, his failure to do so subjecting him to liability to be reported to the company either by special agents, numerous and active in that behalf, or by dealers whose aid is enlisted in maintaining the system and the prices fixed by it, and causing him to be enrolled upon a list known as "undesirable-price cutters," to whom goods are not to be sold, and who are only to be reinstated as those whose record is "clear," and to whom sales may be made, upon their giving satisfactory assurance that they will not resell the goods of the company except at the prices suggested by it, and will refuse to sell to distributors who do not maintain such prices. The court said: "From this course of conduct a court may infer—indeed, cannot escape the conclusion—that competition among retail distributors is practically suppressed, for all who would deal in the company's products are constrained to sell at the suggested prices. Jobbers and wholesale dealers who would supply the trade may not get the goods of the company, if they sell to those who do not observe the prices indicated, or who are on the company's list of undesirables, until they are restored to favor by satisfactory assurances of future compliance with the company's schedules of resale prices. Nor is the inference overcome by the conclusion, stated in the commission's findings, that the merchandising conduct of the company does not constitute a contract or contracts whereby resale prices are fixed, maintained, or enforced. The specific facts found show suppression of the freedom of competition by methods in which the company secures the co-operation of its distributors and customers, which are quite as effectual as agreements, express or implied, intended to accomplish the same purpose. By these methods the company, although selling its products at prices satisfactory to it, is enabled to prevent competition in their subsequent disposition by preventing all who do not sell at resale prices fixed by it from obtaining its goods. Under the facts established we have no doubt of the authority and power of the commission to order a discontinuance of practices in trading such as are embodied in the system of the Beech-Nut Company."

In Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) 17 A.L.R. 389, — C. C. A. —, 273 Fed. 478, it appeared that an order was issued by the Federal Trade Commission requiring certain wholesale vendors of oil products to desist from making or enforcing contracts whereby retail vendors agreed to lease a pump, tank, or other equipment for handling petroleum products at a rental which would not yield a reasonable profit on its cost, and to use such pump, tank, or other equipment only for storing or handling the products of the lessor. The order was reversed on the ground that the practice forbidden was not an unfair method of competition. As to the contention that the practice tended to produce a monopoly, the court said: "It may be admitted that one function of the Trade Commission is to discern and suppress such practices in their beginning; but a thing exists from its beginning, and it is not a conclusion of law, from any facts here found, that a system which, at least, is keenly competitive, extremely advantageous to the public, and, in the opinion of a majority of the competent witnesses, economical, is at present unfair to anyone or unfair because tending to monopoly. A tendency is an inference from proven facts, and an inference from the facts as found by the commission is a question of law for the court. As matter of law there is at present no violation of the Trade Commissions Statute; therefore the first of respondent's contentions cannot be sustained."

In Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) — C. C. A. —, 270 Fed. 881, the court held that, in view of the long period of effort required to build its novel sales organization, composed of schoolboys, and distributing agents drawn chiefly from the schoolboy salesmen, the Curtis Publishing Company did not engage in an unfair method of competition in requiring its distributing agents to agree not to act as agents for or supply at wholesale rates any periodicals other than those published by the Curtis Company. The court further held that the finding by the Federal Trade Commission that the insistence of the Curtis Publishing Company on the exclusive services of its distributing agents was an unfair method of competition was not a finding of fact which was intended to be conclusive within the meaning of the clause in the act providing "that the finding of facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive." It was also decided that the circuit court of appeals, though bound by the commission's finding of facts, if supported by testimony, was authorized to consider other facts appearing in the transcript of the testimony and proceedings before the commission. On this point the court said: "Now, it is very apparent that, where the supervisory review by the circuit court of appeals, which Congress invoked, provided that that court 'shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript, a decree,' it is the province, and indeed the duty, of the reviewing court to consider not merely the findings of the commission, but the whole record, the whole proofs, and the whole proceeding, and to say, first, whether, in view of all the proofs, the limited facts found by the commission really passed on the pertinent and decisive facts, and so warranted an injunction; and, second, if such limited facts do not reach the merits, and do not alone legally justify and warrant a decree of unfair competition and injunctive relief, then, since Congress has enacted that the circuit court of appeals 'shall make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the commission,' it is quite clear that it is not only the province, but the duty, of the circuit court of appeals, and indeed the expressed purpose of Congress, that such reviewing court should itself examine the pleadings, the entire testimony and proceedings, and upon such inclusive examination determine whether the facts found by the commission and the proofs on which the commission made no findings, and which the court, in the absence of such finding, itself finds and determines, legally established a case of unfair business competition by the Curtis Company. Taking, therefore, the record, proofs, and pleadings as a whole, we hold as a legal and judicial conclusion that the proofs are not such as can support a judgment or decree of unfair competition on the part of the Curtis Company toward the Pictorial Company and the Crowell Company."

In Winsted Hosiery Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) — C. C. A. —, 272 Fed. 957, the commission found that the petitioner in its interstate trade sold certain brands of underwear which were made partly of cotton, with the labels "Men's Natural Merino Shirts," "Men's Gray Wool Shirts," and similar labels containing the word "wool" or "worsted." It was also found that for twenty years it had been a general custom and practice in the underwear business to brand wearing apparel made partly of cotton, with the labels used by the petitioner. The commission, on the basis of its findings of facts, issued an order requiring the petitioner to desist from using on goods not made wholly of wool, labels containing the words "merino," "wool," or "worsted," unless accompanied by a word or words designating the substance, fiber, or material other than wool of which the garment was composed, or by a word or words otherwise clearly indicating that the garment was not made wholly of wool. In reversing the order the court said: "The commission is not made a censor of commercial morals generally. Its authority is to inquire into unfair methods of competition in interstate and foreign commerce, if so doing will be of interest to the public, and if such method of competition is prohibited by the act, to issue an order requiring the person or corporation using it to cease and desist from doing so. . . . In this case there was obviously no unfair method of competition as against other manufacturers of underwear. The labels were thoroughly established and understood in the trade. There was no passing off of the petitioner's goods for those of another manufacturer. There was no combination in restraint of trade nor any attempt to establish a monopoly. Manifestly no other manufacturer of underwear could have maintained a suit against the petitioner for unfair competition or for an injunction or damages under the Anti-trust Act. Assuming that some customers are misled because they do not understand the trade signification of the labels, or because some retailers deliberately deceive them as to its meaning, the result is in no way connected with unfair competition, but is like any other misdescription or misbranding of products. Conscientious manufacturers may prefer not to use a label which is capable of misleading, and it may be that it will be desirable to prevent the use of the particular labels, but it is, in our opinion, not within the province of the Federal Trade Commission to do so."

In NEW JERSEY ASBESTOS Co. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (reported herewith) ante, 546, it is held that the practice on the part of a trader of providing customers and employees of customers with entertainment, liquor, cigars, meals, or theater tickets, is not an unfair method of competition affecting the general public. The court follows the decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz (1919) 11 A.L.R. 793, 169 C. C. A. 380, 258 Fed. 314, in holding that the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission is restricted to the protection of the public from unfair methods of competition, and does not empower the commission to interfere with methods of competition merely because they are unfair as between individuals.

And in KINNEY-ROME Co. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (reported herewith) ante, 542, the court annulled an order requiring a manufacturer to desist from its practice, through arrangement with retailers, of giving premiums to the salesmen of the retailers through whom it marketed its product, as an inducement to push its product in preference to that of its competitors, since that practice was not an "unfair method of competition" within the act.

In National Harness Mfrs' Assn. v. Federal Trade Commission (1920) — C. C. A. —, 268 Fed. 705, it was held to be an unfair method of competition and a matter of public interest for an association to induce, coerce, or compel manufacturers of harness and saddlery goods to refuse to recognize as legitimate jobbers entitled to buy from manufacturers at jobbers' prices and terms individuals and firms carrying on a combined and closely affiliated wholesale and retail business. An order of the Federal Trade Commission requiring an association of harness makers, its officers and members, to desist from continuing such activities, was therefore affirmed.

With respect to whether the Federal Trade Commission is authorized to investigate the transactions of an unincorporated voluntary association which is not itself engaged in trade, but the members and officers of which are so engaged, the court said in National Harness Mfrs' Asso. v. Federal Trade Commission (Fed.) supra: "By § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act the commission is given jurisdiction, when it has reason to believe that 'any . . . person, partnership, or corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, and if it shall appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.' Section 4 of the act (§ 8836d) defines a corporation as 'any company or association, incorporated or unincorporated,' which either (a) is organized to carry on business for profit and has shares of capital or capital stock, or (b) is 'without shares of capital or capital stock, except partnerships, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members.' The Harness Manufacturers' Association is a voluntary unincorporated association, and thus without capital stock. It is not itself engaged in business. Petitioner contends that it, therefore, is not within the act. But this contention overlooks the fact that the association is not the only one proceeded against; but that its officers and the members of its executive committee, as well as its members generally, are included in the proceedings as parties and made subject to the commission's order. The language of the act affords no support for the thought that individuals, partnerships, and corporations can escape restraint, under the act, from combining in the use of unfair methods of competition, merely because they employ as a medium therefor an unincorporated voluntary association, without capital and not itself engaged in commercial business. The order may be enforced by reaching the officers and members, personally and individually. A voluntary association, having many members, may be brought into court by service on its officers and such of its members as are known and can be conveniently reached, sufficient being served to represent all the diverse interests. Evenson v. Spaulding (1907) 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 904, 82 C. C. A. 263, 150 Fed. 517. Among the cases under the Anti-trust Act which have enforced the liability of individual members for acts in violation of the statute, although done through a voluntary unincorporated association, are Loewe v. Lawlor (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 Ann. Cas. 815; Dowd v. United Mine Workers (1916) 148 C. C. A. 495, 235 Fed. 5, and (apparently) Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States (1914) 234 U. S. 600, 58 L. ed. 1490, L.R.A.1915A, 788, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951. These cases, we think, present a satisfactory analogy to the instant case."

In T. C. Hurst & Son v. Federal Trade Commission (1920) 268 Fed. 874, a district Federal court refused to grant any injunctive relief against a seizure and inspection of private papers and records by the Federal Trade Commission, on the ground that the action for such relief should be brought in the circuit court of appeals, which was by statute given exclusive jurisdiction of the enforcement of the order sought to be enjoined.

In Quincy Oil Co. v. Sylvester (1921) — Mass. —, 14 A.L.R. 111, 130 N. E. 217, it was held that the Federal Trade Commission Act had no application to a contract between a wholesale dealer and a retail dealer in gasoline, where the transactions under the contract were wholly domestic, though the gasoline to be sold was brought to the place of business of the wholesale dealer by interstate commerce. The contract in question provided for the loan of a pump to the retail dealer on the condition that he would not use it in handling the products of any other dealer than the one who made the loan to him, and that on violation of the retail dealer's agreement the other party to the contract might remove the pump, or, at its option, require the retail dealer to pay for it at a stipulated price.

An order of the commission must follow the charge in the complaint; otherwise it is improvident and will be annulled by the court. Western Sugar Ref. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) 275 Fed. 725.

An order of the commission, based upon a charge of conspiracy and upon the findings and conclusions sustaining such charge, must be supported by evidence which is sufficient to warrant a finding and conclusion separately against each respondent seeking a review of the order. Western Sugar Ref. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) 275 Fed. 725.

A circuit court of appeals in reviewing an order of the commission is limited by the statute to the question whether there is testimony in the record supporting the findings and conclusions of the commission, and to questions of law. Western Sugar Ref. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1921) 275 Fed. 725. W. S. R.

CATHERINE M. HALLORAN

v.

NEW ENGLAND TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Vermont Supreme Court — October 4, 1921.

(— Vt. —, 115 Atl. 143.)

Damages — allowance for impaired purchasing power of dollar.

1. In allowing compensation for pecuniary losses through personal injury, the jury may take into consideration the impaired purchasing power of the dollar although there is no evidence in the case regarding the matter.

[See note on this question beginning on page 564.]

— mental suffering — knowledge that operation cannot be performed.

2. One suffering from a malady requiring a surgical operation to save life, who is so badly injured by another's negligence that the operation is impossible, may recover damages from the one causing the injury for mental suffering arising from knowledge that the operation cannot be performed.

[See 8 R. C. L. 521, 523.]

Appeal — record controlling on question of exception.

3. The record controls, on appeal, as to whether or not an exception was allowed plaintiff or defendant upon a certain ruling.

New trial — failure to raise question of law — lack of diligence.

4. A new trial should not be granted for failure of counsel to raise, in an action to recover for negligent injuries against a telephone company in possession of the government, the defense of nonliability of defendant because the negligence was that of the government, where at the time of the trial several decisions existed pointing directly to the fact of such nonliability, and defendant had raised the defense successfully in other cases.

[See 20 R. C. L. 287.]

(Watson, Ch. J., and Slack, J., dissent.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Washington County Court (Chase, J.) made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by negligent and wrongful acts of defendant, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff, and petition for new trial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Shields & Conant, for defendant:

The law does not permit recovery for all mental distress, even though the remote cause be the injury.

Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183; Rogers v. Bigelow, 90 Vt. 41, 96 Atl. 417.

Plaintiff erred in asking the jury to draw conclusions unfavorable to the defendant because of its failure to call certain witnesses equally within the power of the plaintiff to call.

Jericho v. Huntington, 79 Vt. 329, 65 Atl. 87; Wood v. Agostines, 72 Vt. 51, 47 Atl. 108; State v. Fitzgerald, 68 Vt. 125, 84 Atl. 429.

Arguments of counsel should be confined to the evidence in the case.

Ward v. Ward, 91 Vt. 157, 99 Atl. 635; Carleton v. E. & T. Fairbanks & Co. 83 Vt. 537, 93 Atl. 462; Blaisdell v. Davis, 72 Vt. 295, 48 Atl. 14; Wood v. Agostines, 72 Vt. 51, 47 Atl. 108.

The court should grant a new trial.

Massucco v. Tomassi, 78 Vt. 188, 62 Atl. 57; Re Ketchum, 92 Vt. 280, 102 Atl. 1032; O'Boyle v. Parker-Young Co. — Vt. —, 112 Atl. 385.

Messrs. Theriault & Hunt, for plaintiff:

One might have physical blemishes and defects which, independently of what others might say or do, would cause no mental distress, and of which the injured one might first become aware from the attitude of others towards him, and yet the mental distress, thus arising, would be a proper element of damage.

Coombs v. King, 107 Me. 376, 78 Atl. 468, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1121, 3 N. C. C. A. 167; Stevens v. Dudley, 56 Vt. 158; Isham v. Dow, 70 Vt. 588, 45 L.R.A. 87, 67 Am. St. Rep. 691, 41 Atl. 585, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 106; Ide v. Boston & M. R. Co. 88 Vt. 66, 74 Atl. 401; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Robinett, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, note; Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 751; Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. 124 Ga. 121, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157, 52 S. E. 152, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 107; Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638; Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 71 N. H. 271, 51 Atl. 918; Butts v. National Exch. Bank, 99 Mo. App. 168, 72 S. W. 1083; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. McSwain, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 317, 118 S. W. 874; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 61 S. W. 978; Cincinnati Traction Co. v. McKee, 27 Ohio C. C. 630; Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 287; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Snyder, 10 Am. St. Rep. 64, note; Sutherland, Damages, 4th ed. § 1248; Nichols v. Central Vermont R. Co. — Vt. —, 12 A.L.R. 338, 109 Atl. 905; Rogers v. Bigelow, 90 Vt. 41, 96 Atl. 417.

Matters relating to the failure of the defendant to produce certain witnesses to show certain things, and the testimony to be given regarding them, were necessarily peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant; at least, it does not appear that such was not the fact, or that the plaintiff, equally with the defendant, had knowledge of such testimony.

Re McCabe, 73 Vt. 175, 50 Atl. 804; McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438; Newton v. American Car Sprinkler Co. 87 Vt. 546, 90 Atl. 583.

Economic and commercial conditions, to which the jury's attention was directed, as a matter of course, enter into every monetary consideration, and it was proper that they should be commented upon by both counsel and court.

Powers v. Calédonia County Grammar School, 93 Vt. 220, 106 Atl. 836; Essex Storage Electric Co. v. Victory Lumber Co. 93 Vt. 437, 108 Atl. 426; Foss v. Smith, 79 Vt. 434, 65 Atl. 553; New Haven Trust Co. v. Doherty, 74 Conn. 468, 51 Atl. 130; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L.R.A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62.

There is nothing before the court upon which its broad power to grant new trials may be exercised. It does not appear, and the court cannot take judicial notice, that the particular property and persons immediately responsible for the plaintiff's injuries were, at the particular time they were inflicted, under government control.

Spring v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 86 W. Va. 192, 10 A.L.R. 951, 103 S. E. 206; Reynolds v. Hassam, 56 Vt. 449; McConnell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280; Rogers v. Whitney, 91 Vt. 79, 99 Atl.

419; Barber v. Vinton, 82 Vt. 327, 73 Atl. 881; Way v. Fellows, 91 Vt. 326, 100 Atl. 682; Wyman v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 115 S. C. 138, 104 S. E. 542; Donovan v. Miller, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 524, note; Payton v. McQuown, 97 Ky. 757, 31 L.R.A. 39, 53 Am. St. Rep. 437, 31 S. W. 874.

Plaintiff had the right to maintain her action.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. 90 Vt. 506, P.U.R.1917C, 320, 99 Atl. 4, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 841; United States v. Geer, 268 Fed. 385; Commercial Club v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O R. Co. 142 Minn. 169, P.U.R.1919D, 417, 171 N. W. 312; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 68 Colo. 475, 190 Pac. 539; Hines v. McCook, 25 Ga. App. 395, 103 S. E. 690; Hines v. Easterly, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 224 S. W. 943; McGregor v. Great Northern R. Co. 42 N. D. 269, 4 A.L.R. 1669, 172 N. W. 841; C. F. Witherspoon & Sons v. Postal Tele. & Cable Co. 257 Fed. 758; Fish v. Rutland R. Co. 189 App. Div. 352, 178 N. Y. Supp. 439; Bryant v. Pullman Co. 188 App. Div. 311, 177 N. Y. Supp. 488; L. N. Dantzer Lumber Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 119 Miss. 328, 4 A.L.R. 1669, 80 So. 770; Postal Tele.-Cable Co. v. Call, 167 C. C. A. 178, 255 Fed. 850.

Powers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff secured a verdict in an action predicated upon the defendant's negligence, and the latter seeks a reversal of the judgment rendered thereon. Only three of the exceptions saved at the trial are briefed by the defendant, and these only are considered.

1. The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that at and before the time of the accident she was suffering from a malignant disease of a private nature, which required a prompt surgical operation if a fatal result was to be averted; that the accident had resulted in a serious and incurable organic disease of the heart, which precluded the operation referred to; that through her physician she learned these facts; and that she suffered much mental anxiety and distress on account of the same. The defendant excepted to the admission of the evidence tending to show such mental anguish, and to its being allowed as an element of the plaintiff's damages.

As we have seen, the physical condition which required an operation existed at the time of the accident, and was not caused by it; but the physical condition which made it impossible to perform the operation was a direct result of the accident. The mental distress which the plaintiff was allowed to show was not on account of the doctor's disclosure of her fatal malady, but from the knowledge that the condition of her heart would not admit of an operation, which would otherwise be an available cure. This anxiety she would have been free from, but for the accident. It was, then, a natural and proximate result of the physical injury sustained through the defendant's neg-

Damages—mental suffering —knowledge that operation cannot be performed.

ligence, and a proper element of recoverable damages. Rogers v. Bigelow, 90 Vt. 41, 96 Atl. 417; Nichols v. Central Vermont R. Co. 94 Vt. 14, 12 A.L.R. 333, 109 Atl. 905.

It is under this rule that fear of hydrophobia (Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 751), apprehension of insanity (Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 71 N. H. 271, 51 Atl. 918), dread of blood poisoning (Butts v. National Exch. Bank, 99 Mo. App. 168, 72 S. W. 1083); fear of giving birth to a deformed child (Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987, 69 Atl. 522), dread of death from swallowing glass (Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. 124 Ga. 121, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157, 52 S. E. 152), are admitted as proper elements of damage. It is to be observed that mere regret, disappointment, or vexation are not mental suffering within the meaning of the rule (Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183), but fear, worry, and apprehension are typical sorts of it (Egan v. Middlesex & B. Street R. Co. (D. C.) 212 Fed. 562). And it is very properly held that the anxiety must be natural and not speculative (Rogers v. Bigelow, supra), real and not fanciful (Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. supra).

(— Vt. —, 115 Atl. 148.)

2. In the course of his argument, counsel for the plaintiff called attention to the fact that none of the defendant's officers or servants had appeared as witnesses, the obvious purpose being to have the jury infer that, if produced, these persons would have given evidence unfavorable to the defendant. To this line of argument the defendant objected, and asked for an exception. The court ruled, in effect, that the argument was improper, saying, "I don't believe you better pursue that line of argument, and you may have an exception." The transcript, to which controlling reference is made, shows that an exception was allowed to the plaintiff. The defendant insists that this is a mistake, and that in fact the exception was allowed to the defendant; and it calls attention to certain circumstances indicating this. But we are bound by the plain terms of the record, and will not allow it to be falsified in this court. Right or wrong, it is the sole and only basis for appellate action.

Appeal—record controlling on question of exemption.

3. Counsel for the plaintiff was allowed to urge in argument that, in assessing the damages, the jury should consider the present impaired purchasing power of the dollar, and the court instructed them that they might consider it. The defendant excepted. There is no claim that there was any evidence in the case regarding this matter.

The result sought by the law in assessing damages in such cases is compensation—so far as a money payment can—the ascertainment of such a sum as will compensate the plaintiff for the injury. Necessarily, damages are to be expressed in terms of money. And while money is the standard of value by which the worth of all other property is to be measured, and while, in theory, its value remains constant and unfluctuating, and while it must be admitted that really it is prices which rise and fall amid changing economic conditions, yet, after all, in a very real and a practical sense, money itself is a shifting standard, varying in value according to the changes in its purchasing power. As a medium of exchange, its value appreciates or depreciates according to the rise and fall in commodity prices. So it is that, at least so far as those elements of damages properly classed as pecuniary losses—like loss of time, loss of earning power, expenses, and the like—are concerned, it is proper for the jury to take into consideration the fact, known to everybody, that the purchasing power of money is, at present, seriously impaired. And it is so held by the courts. Washington & R. R. Co. v. La Fourcade, 48 App. D. C. 364; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott, 188 Ky. 99, 220 S. W. 1066. The question has more often arisen in cases involving the question of excessive verdicts. But the principle is the same, and the decisions are in accord. Noyes v. Des Moines Club, 3 A.L.R. 605, and note (186 Iowa, 378, 170 N. W. 461); Bowes v. Public Service R. Co. 94 N. J. L. 378, 110 Atl. 699; Melish v. New York Consol. R. Co. 108 Misc. 291, 178 N. Y. Supp. 228; Hance v. United R. Co. — Mo. App. —, 223 S. W. 123; Duffy v. Kansas City R. Co. — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 883; Hurst v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 10 A.L.R. 174, and note (280 Mo. 566, 219 S. W. 566); McCreedy v. Fournier, 113 Wash. 351, 194 Pac. 398; Standard Oil Co. v. Titus, 187 Ky. 560, 219 S. W. 1077; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnston, 205 Ala. 1, 87 So. 866. Whether any different rule should be applied to the elements of damages other than pecuniary losses, like physical suffering and mental distress, is a question neither raised nor considered.

Damages—allowance for impaired purchasing power of dollar.

Judgment affirmed.

The defendant also brings a petition for a new trial, which was heard with the exceptions. It is a novel application, in that it is predicated not upon newly discovered evidence, but newly discovered law. The claim is that the system, equipment, and property of the petitioner, including that involved in the accident in question, were, at that time, in the complete control, operation, and management of the United States government, under the resolution of Congress of July 16, 1918, the proclamation of the President of July 22, 1918, and the bulletin of the Postmaster General of August 1, 1918; that the employees responsible for the accident were those of the government, and not of the petitioner; and that, therefore, the suit brought by the petitioner was, in effect, against the government, and could not be maintained; that this point was not raised at the trial, and that the law of the subject was then so unsettled and uncertain that the petitioner was excused for omitting to make this defense.

We have before us, then, a record showing a trial, full and fair, a review disclosing no error, and a petition asking that a retrial be granted to enable the defeated party to take advantage of a defense then available, but not presented through counsel's misapprehension of the law. That such an application should be looked upon with disfavor, and should not ordinarily be granted, is quite apparent. That it will not be granted except in very exceptional cases is equally so. Any negligence or other fault on the part of the petitioner or his counsel will defeat it. Webb v. State, 90 Vt. 65, 96 Atl. 599. Any less stringent rule would open the door to a practice which might overwhelm this court with applications of this character and submerge it in a fathomless sea of disputation.

The Webb Case above cited is not a precedent for the petitioner; for there the action of the court itself, in some measure, misled the petitioner, and he lost his opportunity for a review. And, too, each case must stand on its own merits. Re

Ketchum, 92 Vt. 280, 102 Atl. 1032. In considering the merits of the petition before us we will assume that the facts set forth in it would afford a complete defense to the action against the petitioner, and that the power of this court in the matter of new trials is broad enough to warrant the relief prayed for. Even then, we think the application should be denied for lack of diligence. Several decisions, in both state and Federal courts, pointing directly toward the result contended for by the petitioner here, had been handed down before the trial below. But disregarding these, it appears that the petitioner was, at that time, in possession of information obtained at first hand, which, if communicated to its counsel, would have made it the clear professional duty of the latter to raise these questions at the trial, and the omission to do so such negligence as to disentitle the former to relief.

New trial—
failure to raise question of law
—lack of diligence.

This very petitioner had made these very points—or, at least, those that are fundamental here—in defense of a Massachusetts proceeding to enforce an order regarding intrastate rates, and had obtained therein a decision of the supreme judicial court of that state in its favor, several months before this suit was brought, and a year before it was tried. Public Service Commission v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 232 Mass. 465, 4 A.L.R. 1662, P.U.R.1919D, 49, 122 N. E. 567. The unanimous decision of that court, which left little to be said in answer to the petitioner's claim as to the law, was expressed by Chief Justice Rugg in what Chief Justice White, on June 2, 1919, when it was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, declared to be a "lucid opinion." Macleod v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 250 U. S. 195, 63 L. ed. 934, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511. By that opinion it was made plain that the government had not assumed a mere public supervision over the operations of private owners of telephone lines, but an absolute and complete possession and control of their systems, their equipment and appurtenances, their materials and supplies; that, this being so, the United States, though not named on the record, was the real party defendant; and that, inasmuch as a sovereign cannot be impleaded in a judicial tribunal except by its consent, the suit could not be maintained. The Massachusetts case involved the matter of rates only; but, as argued, the principles applied are those on which this petition is predicated.

The failure of the petitioner or its legal department to call these decisions to the attention of its local counsel was without adequate justification or excuse. It must have known about them; and, if it chose to allow the trial below to proceed without communicating this information to the counsel in charge of the case, it must abide the result. See W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Pierce, 92 Vt. 44, 102 Atl. 96.

Petition dismissed, with costs.

Watson, Ch. J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree with the majority of my associates that there was no error in the ruling below, permitting counsel for plaintiff, when arguing to the jury on the question of damages, to say to them to "consider the value of a dollar today, as compared with what it was," and in upholding the charge of the court to the same effect.

In law we are compelled to compensate for violated rights in money, and for this purpose, to make pecuniary estimates of the value of their violations, the possession of money becomes a kind of legal sum-mum bonum. Terry, Principles of Anglo-American Law, § 126, p. 99. And since the only compensation which the law can compel is a compensation in money, it must be measured by something which will measure the pecuniary loss, and the measure to be applied must be real and a tangible one. 17 C. J. 166c; Thé A. A. Raven (D. C.) 222 Fed.

958; 8 R. C. L. 431, ¶ 8. Actual pecuniary compensation is the general rule, whether the action be in contract or in tort (except where exemplary damages are warranted). 8 R. C. L. 431, § 8. And damages which may be recovered for injuries resulting from the negligence of another are to be arrived at according to general rules of law, framed with reference to the just rights of both parties: Not merely what it may be right for the injured party to receive as just compensation for his injury, but also what it is just to compel the other party to pay. 8 R. C. L. 434, § 8; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88; Kline v. Kline, 158 Ind. 602, 58 L.R.A. 397, 64 N. E. 9.

By the Constitution of the United States, the Congress shall have power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." And by statute enacted by Congress, "the gold coins of the United States shall be legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided by law for the single piece, and, when reduced in weight below such standard and tolerance, shall be a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3585, Comp. Stat. § 6572, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 297. "The silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding five dollars in any one payment." Rev. Stat. § 3586. See Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141. In the case, United States v. Marigold, 9 How. 560, 13 L. ed. 257, the Federal Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Daniel, said: "The power of coining money and of regulating its value was delegated to Congress by the Constitution for the very purpose, as assigned by the framers of that instrument, of creating and preserving the uniformity and purity of such a standard of value; and on account of the impossibility, which was foreseen, of otherwise preventing the inequalities and the confusion necessarily incident to different views of policy, which in different communities would be brought to bear on this subject. The power to coin money being thus given to Congress, founded on public necessity, it must carry with it the correlative power of protecting the creature and object of that power."

Acts were passed by Congress in 1862 (Acts Feb. 25, 1862, § 1; July 11, 1862, § 1) and 1863 (Act March 3, 1863, § 3, Comp. Stat. § 6575, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 299), which made United States Treasury notes a legal tender in payment of debts, public and private. The constitutionality of these acts being challenged, the question came before the Federal Supreme Court in the Legal Tender Cases (Knox v. Lee and Parker v. Davis) 12 Wall. 457, 20 L. ed. 287. The majority opinion (delivered by Mr. Justice Strong) shows that those acts were passed when the Civil War was raging, seriously threatening the overthrow of the government and the destruction of the Constitution itself; that the equipment and support of large armies and navies required the employment of money to an extent beyond the capacity of all ordinary sources of supply; that the public treasury was nearly empty, and the credit of the government nearly exhausted; that moneyed institutions had advanced so largely of their means that they had been compelled to suspend specie payments. An immediate necessity was pressing. The amount then due the soldiers in the field was nearly a score of millions of dollars. The requisitions for supplies exceeded $50,000,000, and the current daily expenditure was over $1,000,000. "The entire amount of coin in the country, including that in private hands, as well as that in banking institutions, was insufficient to supply the need of the government three months, had it all been poured into the Treasury." Therein Mr. Justice Strong further said:

"The Constitution was intended to frame a government, as distinguished from a league or compact, a government supreme in some particulars over states and people. It was designed to provide the same currency, having a uniform legal value in all the states. It was for this reason the power to coin money and regulate its value was conferred upon the Federal government, while the same power, as well as the power to emit bills of credit, was withdrawn from the states. The states can no longer declare what shall be money, or regulate its value. Whatever power there is over the currency is vested in Congress. . . . The Constitution does not ordain what metals may be coined, or prescribe that the legal value of the metals, when coined, shall correspond at all with their intrinsic value in the market. Nor does it even affirm that Congress may declare anything to be a legal tender for the payment of debts. Confessedly, the power to regulate the value of money coined, and of foreign coins, is not exhausted by the first regulation. More than once in our history has the regulation been changed without any denial of the power of Congress to change it, and it seems to have been left to Congress to determine alike what metal shall be coined, its purity, and how far its statutory value, as money, shall correspond, from time to time, with the market value of the same metal as bullion. . . .

"But the obligation of a contract to pay money is to pay that which the law shall recognize as money when the payment is to be made. If there is anything settled by decision it is this, and we do not understand it to be controverted. . . . No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000, contracted before 1834, could be paid by 100 eagles coined after that year, though they contained no more gold than 94 eagles such as were coined when the contract was made, and this, not because of the intrinsic value of the coin, but because of its legal value. The eagles coined after 1834 were not money until they were authorized by law, and had they been coined before, without a law fixing their legal value, they could no more have paid a debt than uncoined bullion, or cotton, or wheat. Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power. . . .

"We have been asked whether Congress can declare that a contract to deliver a quantity of grain may be satisfied by the tender of a less quantity. Undoubtedly not. But this is a false analogy. There is a wide distinction between a tender of quantities, or of specific articles, and a tender of legal values. Contracts for the delivery of specific articles belong exclusively to the domain of state legislation, while contracts for the payment of money are subject to the authority of Congress, at least so far as relates to the means of payment. They are engagements to pay with lawful money of the United States, and Congress is empowered to regulate that money."

Mr. Justice Bradley, writing a concurring opinion (same case) said: "The state governments are prohibited from making money or issuing bills. Uniformity of money was one of the objects of the Constitution. The coinage of money and regulation of its value are conferred upon the general government exclusively. That government has also the power to issue bills. It follows, as a matter of necessity, as a consequence of these various provisions, that it is specially the duty of the general government to provide a national currency. The states cannot do it, except by the charter of local banks, and that remedy, if strictly legitimate and constitutional, is inadequate, fluctuating, uncertain, and insecure, and operates with all the partiality to local interests which it was the very object of the Constitution to avoid. But, regarded as a duty of the general government, it is strictly in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution; as well as in line with the national necessities."

In an earlier case it was held that, Congress having undertaken to provide a currency for the whole country, it could secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation; that to this end Congress could restrain, by suitable enactments, the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its own authority. Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 19 L. ed. 482. And for the undoubted purpose of destroying the use of such notes as money, Congress enacted in 1867 (15 Stat. at L. 6, chap. 8): "Every national banking association, state bank, or banker, or association, shall pay a tax of ten per centum on the amount of notes of any town, city, or municipal corporation paid out by them."

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. United States, 101 U. S. 1, 25 L. ed. 979, the action was brought by the United States to recover such a tax. It was held that, as against the United States, a state municipality has no right to put its notes in circulation as money; that such use is against the policy of the United States; and that Congress had the power to destroy such use. Much to the same effect is Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 28 L. ed. 204, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122. And by an act of 1875 (Act Feb. 8, 1875, § 19, U. S. Comp. Stat. § 6289, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 225) state banks and state banking associations were required to pay a like tax on the amount of their own notes used for circulation and paid out by them. Hollister v. Zion's Co-op. Mercantile Inst. 111 U. S. 62, 28 L. ed. 352, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263. By reason of such taxation state banks of circulation ceased to exist in this state. State v. Franklin County Sav. Bank & T. Co. 74 Vt. 246, 52 Atl. 1069.

After the enactments of 1862 and 1863, making Treasury notes legal tender for the payment of debts, the Federal Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Chase, said: There were "two descriptions of lawful money in use under the acts of Congress, in either of which damages for nonperformance of contracts, whether made before or since the passage of the Currency Acts, may be properly assessed, in the absence of any different understanding or agreement between the parties. . . . When, therefore, it appears to be the clear intent of a contract that payment or satisfaction shall be made in gold and silver [coin], damages should be assessed and judgment rendered accordingly." Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141; Butler v. Horwitz, 7 Wall. 258, 19 L. ed. 149; Dewing v. Sears, 11 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 189.

But, as already observed, if a contract be for the payment of money, without any stipulation as to the kind of money, it is an engagement to pay with lawful money of the United States, and may always be satisfied by payment with legal tender notes. This distinction is made in one of our own cases, in which is the further holding that, in cases involving these different kinds of money and their use under the laws of the United States, the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court are binding in authority upon this court. Townsend v. Jennison, 44 Vt. 315.

In Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 1, 19 L. ed. 361, the contract was for the payment of Confederate notes, made during the Civil War, the parties residing within the so-called Confederate States. It was held that this currency must be considered in courts of law in the same light as if it had been issued by a foreign government, temporarily occupying a part of the territory of the United States; that contracts stipulating for payment in such currency could not be regarded for that reason, only as made in aid of the war, and so should be enforced in the courts of the United States, after the restoration of peace, to the extent of their just obligation; that it is quite clear that a contract to pay dollars, made between citizens of any state of the Union, while maintaining its constitutional relations with the national government, is a contract to pay lawful money of the United States, and cannot be modified or explained by parol evidence; but that it is equally clear if, in any other country, coins or notes denominated dollars should be authorized of different value from the coins or notes which are current here under that name, that in a suit upon a contract to pay dollars, made in that country, evidence would be admissible to prove what kind of dollars was intended, and, should it turn out that foreign dollars were meant, to prove their equivalent value in money of the United States; that the court was clearly of the opinion that such evidence should be received in respect to such contracts, in order that justice be done between the parties, and that the party entitled to be paid in the Confederate dollars can recover their actual value at the time and place of the contract, in lawful money of the United States. The holdings in that case were followed in Bissell v. Heyward, 96 U. S. 580, 24 L. ed. 678, and in Rives v. Duke, 105 U. S. 132, 26 L. ed. 1031.

Specie payment was suspended by banks and by the United States Treasury, December 30, 1861. The first legal tender act was passed February 25, 1862, followed by others of similar import the same year and the next. Under the conditions existing then, and thenceforth during the war period and for some years thereafter, paper currency was at a discount in gold, ranging from $97.68 in 1862, to $35.09 (the lowest), July 11, 1864. Although from the latter date onward its valuation was in a state of fluctuation, the general trend was upward, resulting in an act of Congress, passed in 1875, providing for the payment of Treasury notes in coin after January 1, 1879. With the resumption of specie payment had accordingly, depreciation of paper currency ceased, and ever since that time such currency has been convertible into gold and silver at the will of the holder, its specie value being the same.

In The Vaughn (The Telegraph

(— Vol. —, 115 Atl. 143.)

v. Gordon) 14 Wall. 258, 20 L. ed. 807, an appeal in admiralty from the decree of a United States circuit court (decided in 1872), the libel was for the loss of a large quantity of barley by the negligence of the persons navigating the said propeller, or by the negligence of the persons navigating the said steamboat, or by their joint negligence. The barley was shipped from a certain port in Canada. The estimate of the damages was made in the currency of Canada, which was equivalent in value to the gold coin of the United States. It was admitted that the decree was solvable in legal tender notes, which were then largely depreciated, but it was held by the district court in which the suit was brought that this was an incident of the suit in the forum where it was brought, and the result was unavoidable. In the circuit court the same rule of damages was applied, but the decree gave the value of the Canada currency in legal tender notes. The Supreme Court held that, upon the rule of damages applied by both courts as respects the kind of currency in which the value of the barley was estimated, the libellants were entitled to be paid in specie, or its equivalent; that the decree under consideration presented the same question which was decided in Knox v. Lee, one of the Legal Tender Cases, where the court below instructed the jury that in assessing the damages they might take into account the fact that the judgment could be paid in legal tender notes, the correctness of which instruction was affirmed upon error. The suit of Knox v. Lee (decided in 1871) was brought in the court below by the defendant in error, to recover the value of certain sheep, confiscated as the property of an alien enemy, and sold under the authority of the so-called "Confederate government," March 7, 1863. The defendant in error, in connection with others, perhaps, became the purchaser at said sale.

By the several coinage acts of Congress, gold and silver coins of the United States are made legal tender in all payments, according to their nominal or declared values. Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. 687, 20 L. ed. 460. Mr. Justice Field, in writing the opinion in that case, says the Legal Tender Act of 1862 itself distinguishes between the two kinds of dollars, i. e., coin and Treasury notes; and that contemporaneous and subsequent legislation of Congress has distinguished between the two kinds, "recognizing that the notes and the coin were not exchangeable in the market according to their legal or nominal values." Thereon Mr. Justice Field says: "The practice of the government has corresponded with the legislation we have mentioned. It has uniformly recognized in its fiscal affairs the distinction in value between paper currency and coin. Some of its loans are made payable specifically in coin, whilst others are payable generally in lawful money. It goes frequently into the money market, and at one time buys coin with currency, and at another time sells coin for currency. In its transactions it every day issues its checks, bills, and obligations, some of which are payable in gold, while others are payable simply in dollars. And it keeps its accounts of coin and currency distinct and separate."

In my judgment the discussions and holdings of the United States Supreme Court, in the cases to which I have called attention, conclusively show that the medium of exchange by which everything is to be measured is the gold and silver coin, "the only full legal tender money in use," and having a value regulated by Congress, which value, so regulated, is in law unchangeable, except by Congress under the power delegated to it by the Constitution to provide a currency of uniform legal value throughout the states of the Union. If this be not so, why is it that in every instance where the Federal Supreme Court has been called upon to consider the value of depreciated paper currency, in its use in the payment of obligations, the standard taken has been the value of gold coin as regulated by Congress? In no instance, I believe, has the purchasing power of such currency been made the controlling factor by it in determining the matter. The same principle being applied in the cases involving Confederate notes, and foreign dollars, evidence was held to be admissible to show, not their purchasing power, but their equivalent value in lawful money of the United States. During the period of suspended specie payment, prices of commodities and of services were fluctuating, some of the time as high, perhaps, as during the World War and since; yet not within that period, or since, has that court said anything indicating that the value of United States coin in its use as money may be shown or considered to be other than as declared by the coinage acts of Congress. Is not the position that the value of gold and silver coin, as regulated by Congress, is conclusive, supported by the statement of Mr. Justice Bradley in the Legal Tender Cases, where he says, in effect, that the very object of the Constitution in making it specially the duty of the general government to provide a national currency was to avoid the fluctuations, uncertainties, and insecurities which otherwise would exist and operate with all the partiality to local interests? And yet what can be done by a trial court more strikingly illustrative of a doctrine repugnant to this, than to permit a jury, sitting on a negligence case, to take judicial notice that the purchasing power of United States legal tender money (when there is no difference in its value, whether specie or paper currency) is less than formerly, and so to consider it in fixing the plaintiff's damages to be awarded by their verdict?

It may be that in such cases, where loss of time or value of services is a proper element of plaintiff's damages, the evidence showing the value of his time or services so lost may involve more or less the economic conditions at the time of his injury; but such damages, like all others, are nevertheless to be reckoned on the basis of the standard nominal value of the uniform national currency. To say that damages may be assessed according as a jury may view the purchasing power of such currency is to say that the ever-changing price of commodities and services, bought and sold, as looked upon by the jury in each particular case, instead of the gold dollar, constitutes the standard unit of value—a position, in my judgment, so fundamentally unsound, and so dangerous to the just rights of parties, as not to be sanctioned.

Under the holdings of the majority, "what a door" is opened to a jury to speculate, conjecture, and guess!

I would hold the rulings under discussion to be reversible error, and remand the case for a new trial on the question of damages only.

Slack, J., concurs in this dissenting opinion.

ANNOTATION.

Increase in cost of living, or impaired purchasing power of money, as affecting damages for personal injuries or death.

I. Scope, 564.

II. Personal injuries:

a. In general, 564.

b. Judicial consideration of change, 565.

c. Consideration of change by jury, 566.

III. Death, 566.

I. Scope.

The present annotation supplements those in 3 A.L.R. 610, and 10 A.L.R. 179, wherein the earlier cases were treated.

II. Personal injuries.

a. In general.

(Supplementing annotations in 3 A.L.R. p. 610, and 10 A.L.R. p. 179.)

The recent authorities are in substantial accord with the earlier decisions in supporting the general rule that the increase in cost of living, or the impaired purchasing power of money, may be considered in determining the amount of damages that should be awarded for personal injuries.

Alabama. — Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnston (1920) 205 Ala. 1, 87 So. 866; Tennessee River Nav. Co. v. Woodward (1920) — Ala. App. —, 88 So. 364.

Georgia. — Ocilla S. R. Co. v. McInvale (1920) — Ga. App. —, 105 S. E. 451.

Kansas. — Hood v. American Refrigeration Transit Co. (1920) 106 Kan. 76, 186 Pac. 977.

Kentucky. — Standard Oil Co. v. Titus (1920) 187 Ky. 560, 219 S. W. 1077.

Missouri. — Duffy v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 883; Lowder v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 221 S. W. 800; Yates v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 222 S. W. 1034; Hance v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 223 S. W. 123; Roy v. Kansas City (1920) 204 Mo. App. 332, 224 S. W. 132; Roach v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 228 S. W. 520.

Nebraska. — Dailey v. Sovereign Camp. W. W. (1921) — Neb. —, 184 N. W. 920.

New York. — Roeder v. Erie R. Co. (1917) 164 N. Y. Supp. 167.

Vermont. — HALLORAN v. NEW ENGLAND TELEPH. & TELEG. CO. (reported herewith) ante, 554.

Virginia. — P. Lorillard Co. v. Clay (1920) 127 Va. 734, 104 S. E. 384.

Washington. — McCreedy v. Fournier (1920) 113 Wash. 351, 194 Pac. 398.

Canada. — Ward v. Mainland Transfer Co. (1919) 3 West. Week. Rep. 193.

b. Judicial consideration of change.

(Supplementing annotations in 3 A.L.R. p. 610, and 10 A.L.R. p. 179.)

In accordance with the general rule stated supra, II. a, a number of appellate courts in recent cases have taken into consideration, in passing upon the excessiveness of verdicts for personal injuries, the depreciated value of money as a medium of exchange.

Alabama. — Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnston (1920) 205 Ala. 1, 87 So. 866.

Georgia. — Ocilla Southern R. Co. v. McInvale (1920) — Ga. App. —, 105 S. E. 451.

Kentucky. — Standard Oil Co. v. Titus (1920) 187 Ky. 560, 219 S. W. 1077.

Missouri. — Duffy v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 883; Lowder v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 221 S. W. 800; Yates v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 222 S. W. 1034; Hance v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 223 S. W. 123; Roy v. Kansas City (1920) 204 Mo. App. 332, 224 S. W. 132; Roach v. Kansas City R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 228 S. W. 520.

New York. — Roeder v. Erie R. Co. (1917) 164 N. Y. Supp. 167.

Virginia. — P. Lorillard Co. v. Clay (1920) 127 Va. 734, 104 S. E. 384.

Washington. — McCreedy v. Fournier (1920) 113 Wash. 351, 194 Pac. 398.

Canada. — Ward v. Mainland Transfer Co. [1919] 3 West. Week. Rep. 193.

In passing upon the question of the excessiveness, if any, of a verdict for personal injuries, the court may take judicial notice of the fact that the purchasing power of money has greatly decreased in recent years. Yates v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 222 S. W. 1034; Hance v. United R. Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 223 S. W. 123.

This recognition of the increased cost of living, or impaired purchasing power of money, usually is in justification of the sustaining of unusually large verdicts. For instance, in Standard Oil Co. v. Titus (Ky.) supra, the court said: "Since the cost of living has greatly increased, and the purchasing power of a dollar is far less than it used to be, we conclude that the verdict is not excessive." So, in P. Lorillard Co. v. Clay (Va.) supra, the court, after reviewing many decisions involving the question of excessive verdicts for injuries similar to that under consideration, held that, in comparing such verdicts with the then-present one, the great increase in the cost of living was a legitimate item to be taken into account in fixing compensation, and reduced a verdict for $15,000 for loss of an eye to $10,000, notwithstanding the average of earlier verdicts for a similar injury was but little over $5,000. And again, in Ward v. Mainland Transfer Co. [1919] 3 West. Week. Rep. (B. C.) 193, in holding not excessive an award of damages for personal injuries, it was said that the amounts awarded in earlier cases are no longer a safe guide, owing to the unprecedented advance in the cost of living, and that juries must deal with the state of the times in which they are called upon to act, taking such a reasonable view of future prospects as is humanly possible. And in Duffy v. Kansas City R. Co. (Mo.) supra, where smaller verdicts rendered in 1913 were urged upon the court, it said that it was "authorized to take into consideration that the purchasing power of $5,000 in 1918 is much less than in 1913." In McCreedy v. Fournier (Wash.) supra, the court said that "in determining whether the verdict for personal injuries, largely of a permanent character, is excessive, we must, to some extent, take into consideration factors and standards greatly differing from those prevailing only a few years ago." In Ocilla Southern R. Co. v. McInvale (1920) — Ga. App. —, 105 S. E. 451, the court, in passing upon the excessiveness of a verdict for personal injuries, said that it would take judicial cognizance of the universally known fact that at the time of the return of the verdict (October, 1919), and at the time of the overruling of the motion for a new trial (May, 1920), the normal value of the dollar had greatly decreased.

In Hood v. American Refrigerator Transit Co. (1920) 106 Kan. 76, 186 Pac. 977, it was held that, in determining the capacity of a workman for the purpose of making an award for personal injuries under the Nebraska Workmen's Compensation Law, the cost of living, and of commodities generally, must be taken into consideration, since such matters are factors which enter into the question.

c. Consideration of change by jury.

(Supplementing annotations in 3 A.L.R. p. 611, and 10 A.L.R. p. 180.)

The reported case (HALLORAN v. NEW ENGLAND TELEPH. & TELEG. CO. ante, 554) affords express authority for the proposition that the jury in a personal-injury action may, in assessing damages consisting of pecuniary losses, such as loss of time, loss of earning power, expenses, and the like, consider the present impaired purchasing power of the dollar. In reaching this conclusion it will be remembered that the majority of the court proceeded upon the theory that, to render compensation for pecuniary losses, money must be regarded as having a shifting standard, varying in value according to the changes in its purchasing power, which argument Watson, Ch. J., in his dissenting opinion, strongly refutes, maintaining that damages must be reckoned on the basis of the standard nominal value of the uniform national currency, and that the purchasing power in commodities of such currency is not a controlling factor.

In Tennessee River Nav. Co. v. Woodward (1920) — Ala. App. —, 88 So. 364, it was held in a personal-injury action that a charge to the jury that, "in determining the amount expended by the plaintiff for doctors' bills and medicines, you should not consider any difference, if any, between the purchasing power of a dollar at the time plaintiff expended it and at the present time," did "not" correctly state the law.

And see Ward v. Mainland Transfer Co. [1919] 3 West. Week. Rep. (B. C.) 193, as set out supra, II. b.

III. Death.

(Supplementing annotations in 3 A.L.R. p. 612, and 10 A.L.R. p. 180.)

In Bowes v. Public Service R. Co. (1920) 94 N. J. L. 378, 110 Atl. 699, in passing upon the alleged excessiveness of a verdict in favor of a widow for the death of her husband, the court took judicial notice of the decreased purchasing power of the dollar, saying: "The only question presented is the alleged excessiveness of the damages. The word 'excessive' has a relative meaning. What may be deemed excessive in one environment and social order may be inadequate compensation in another. At a period when the purchasing power of the dollar has, in the language of the day, been 'cut in half,' the value of the sum awarded here is not to be estimated in the numerical quantum of the recompense, but in its comparative ability to furnish the necessities of life. Of these facts the court must take judicial notice."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott (1920) 188 Ky. 99, 220 S. W. 1066, it was held that, in estimating the damages to the estate of one wrongfully killed, the jury had the right to take into consideration the fact that the purchasing power of a dollar had materially decreased. G. J. C.

R. S. HOLT, Receiver of North Shore Railroad Company,

v.

PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY, Operating the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne, & Chicago Railway, Appt.

Pennsylvania Supreme Court — May 26, 1921.

(271 Pa. 76, 118 Atl. 745.)

Eminent domain — partial taking — effect on right to damages.

1. A railroad company which, in appropriating a portion of the right of way of another company, avoids payment of a portion of the claim of damages on the theory that what is left has value, cannot, upon subsequently appropriating the remainder of the right of way, avoid liability for damages on the theory that they were all paid on the former taking.

[See note on this question beginning on page 569.]

Railroads — forfeiture of rights — effect on title.

of its rights as such does not destroy its title to its right of way.

2. Forfeiture by a railroad company

[See 22 R. C. L. 870, 871.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Beaver County (Baldwin, P. J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the taking of its alleged right of way. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. William A. McConnel, for appellant:

When a railroad company takes land by proceedings in condemnation, it takes, for all practical purposes, a fee-simple title.

Ferguson v. Pittsburgh & S. R. Co. 253 Pa. 581, 98 Atl. 732.

In order that the rights of way may be considered as a whole, they must be physically connected with one another, or they must be so inseparably connected in the use to which they are applied as that the injury or destruction of the one must necessarily and permanently injure the other.

• Potts v. Pennsylvania S. Valley R. Co. 119 Pa. 278, 4 Am. St. Rep. 646, 13 Atl. 291; Kossler v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 208 Pa. 50, 57 Atl. 66; North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 251 Pa. 445, 96 Atl. 990; North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 235 Pa. 395, 84 Atl. 402.

Messrs. D. A. Nelson and Holt, Holt, & Richardson, for appellee:

Property is not to be deemed worthless because the owner allows it to go to waste, or to be regarded as valueless because he is unable to put it to any use.

North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 251 Pa. 445, 96 Atl. 990, supra.

Schaffer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This contest is between two corporations, the defendant being the appellant. As we view the record, the matters of complaint are of appellant's own creation.

Plaintiff by grant and condemnation had acquired a right of way for its railroad, some 5 miles in length; just how much use it had made of such right of way was one of the disputed questions on the trial, as were its width and value. Appellant contends appellee had forfeited its rights as a railroad company, and that this had been judicially determined. North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 251 Pa. 445, 96 Atl. 990. Granting that this is so, the right of way in question, as between the parties to this litigation, belonged to plaintiff, and not to defendant. When the latter appropriated it, damages were due to plaintiff, for the value of what was taken, to be fixed by the rule the law prescribes. This same question was raised by appellant in the case just cited, and in disposing of it, we said: "Counsel for appellant contends that the possibility of any such use [for railroad purposes] should not have been taken into consideration, and further, that, since the plaintiff had lost its right to operate as a railroad, the damages for taking its right of way should be based upon the value of the ground for rural or agricultural purposes, only. But this contention is manifestly unsound."

For some years prior to 1912, the right of way had not been used for railroad purposes. In that year, appellant took a strip only 30 feet in width. In 1913 an additional appropriation was made, which is the subject of this litigation. Had defendant used the foresight in 1912 to include in its condemnation that which is now taken, none of the questions before us would have arisen, since, in the main, its present contention is that it paid plaintiff, in the first proceeding, for the damages to the property it is now being asked to pay.

Just how we could so hold on the record before us appellant has not made manifest. Certain it is that the strip now involved was not included in the appropriation of 1912. Appellant, however, contends that, in the prior proceedings, damages were claimed to the entire right of way. It does appear, on the trial of the 1912 case, some of plaintiff's witnesses testified, in substance, that the appropriation then made ruined and destroyed the right of way; but it also appears witnesses for defendant averred that what was left of the right of way, after the 1912 appropriation, could be utilized for railroad purposes. So that defendant's position then and now cannot be reconciled. Having maintained on the former trial that what was left of the right of way was of value, it cannot complain if the jury adopted that view on this. Defendant also claims the result of the 1912 appropriation was to cut off parts of the right of way from that portion of it which is now being appropriated, and therefore a claim for damages to the whole right of way cannot be sustained in this proceeding; but plaintiff counters this proposition with the allegation that, by means of crossing frogs, the whole right of way could be connected up.

The jury before whom the case was tried had the benefit of a view of the property to determine its physical aspects, and, as the question whether there had been a severance of parts of the right of way from other parts of it by the 1912 appropriation was disputed before them, their view must have aided greatly in the solution of that problem. It was a question of fact for

Eminent domain
—partial taking —effect on right to damages.

Railroads—forfeiture of rights—effect on title.

their determination, as were those of title to the right of way and its extent. There was evidence of an appropriation of part of the right of way by plaintiff by appropriate corporate action, and, in addition, evidence of grants to it of portions of it; and, as to both sources of title, there was a dispute in some instances, whether it was for a right of way 60 feet wide, or for a less width. These question were properly submitted to the jury. Bearing on the width of the right of way, it is significant that some of the grants fixed the width at 60 feet. This gave color to the claim that the right of way was of that width in its entirety. In those cases where the width was not mentioned, plaintiff produced evidence to show an entry and use of land to that extent, while defendant's witnesses testified a less width was actually entered upon; necessarily this dispute was for the jury.

The case has been tried three times. On the first trial, there was a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000, and, on motion of both parties, a new trial was granted. On the second, the jury found for plaintiff for $38,700, and appellant filed a motion for a new trial, which was allowed, unless plaintiff filed a stipulation agreeing to a reduction of the verdict to $7,500. This plaintiff refused to do. On the third trial, which we are reviewing, the verdict fixed plaintiff's damages at $9,000; and, in disposing of a motion for a new trial, the court below found this was not excessive.

The litigation between these parties has been varied and of long duration. It first appeared in this court in Ohio River Junction R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 216 Pa. 316, 66 Atl. 92; next in Ohio River Junction R. Co.'s Petition, 219 Pa. 345, 68 Atl. 830; again in North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 235 Pa. 395, 84 Atl. 402; and then in North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 251 Pa. 445, 96 Atl. 990. As we understand it, the pending case ends it. In this protracted legal battle, all the vexed questions which could be raised have, we think, been determined. It is to the interest of society that litigation should end.

Each of the assignments of error has been carefully examined, and full consideration has been given to appellant's arguments addressed to them. None of them points out error which would warrant a reversal of the case. They are all overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Compensation in second eminent domain proceeding.

The question presented in the reported case (HOLT v. PENNSYLVANIA CO. ante, 567) is an interesting one in the law of eminent domain, and seemingly a novel one, as a search has disclosed no other cases passing upon the effect on the compensation in a second eminent domain proceeding relating to property, of a former eminent domain proceeding relating to the same property. The estoppel held to exist in the reported case seems to be well founded; that, however, does not determine the damages to be paid on the second proceeding. Apparently, such damages would be the value of the property in its then situation, irrespective of the fact that under a prior eminent domain proceeding a part of the property had been taken. The situation would seem to be no different than if the owner of the property had sold the right which was taken in the first eminent domain proceeding, leaving him with some interest, or a limited interest, in the property. The question as to the amount of damages would, therefore, be the value of this interest, regardless of the fact that it was, at one time, part of a larger tract. W. A. E.

ALICE G. MICHELS
v.
CLARENCE E. MICHELS.

Maine Supreme Judicial Court — November 1, 1921.

(— Me. —, 115 Atl. 161.)

Divorce — attempt to commit to asylum as cruel and abusive treatment.

1. Whether or not an unsuccessful attempt by a man to commit his wife to an insane asylum constitutes cruel and abusive treatment depends upon the motive from which he acted.

[See note on this question beginning on page 572.]

— when divorce granted.

2. An unsuccessful attempt by a man to commit his wife to an insane asylum, followed immediately by an attempt to have a conservator appointed for her property, when she has never lost any of her property through unwise investments, or wasted it, shows cruel and abusive treatment entitling her to a divorce.

EXCEPTIONS by libellee to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County, at Law, made during the trial of a libel for divorce which resulted in a decree for libellant. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. W. R. Anthoine and E. S. Anthoine, for libellee:

Libellee's acts did not constitute cruel and abusive treatment within the meaning of the statute.

Holyoke v. Holyoke, 78 Me. 404, 6 Atl. 827; Scholl v. Scholl, 194 Mo. App. 559, 185 S. W. 762; Flemming v. Flemming, 95 Cal. 430, 29 Am. St. Rep. 124, 30 Pac. 566; Rebstock v. Rebstock, 2 Pittsb. 124; Reichert v. Reichert, 124 Mich. 695, 83 N. W. 1008.

Mr. William Lyons, for libellant:

Libellee was guilty of cruel and abusive conduct towards libellant.

Holyoke v. Holyoke, 78 Me. 410, 6 Atl. 827; Rockport v. Searsmont, 101 Me. 260, 63 Atl. 820.

Cornish, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Libel for divorce heard by a jury, who found in favor of the libellant on the allegation of cruel and abusive treatment. The presiding justice thereupon entered a decree of divorce, granting the custody of the two minor children to the mother, and ordering the payment of money for their support. To the entering of the decree the libellee filed exceptions. The question presented is whether, as a matter of law, the evidence which is made a part of the exceptions, warrants the decree (Sweet v. Sweet, 119 Me. 81, 109 Atl. 379), or, expressed in another form, whether, as a matter of law, taking the facts disclosed in the evidence for the libellant as true, they gave her an absolute right to a divorce (Freeborn v. Freeborn, 168 Mass. 50, 46 N. E. 428).

"Cruel and abusive treatment" are words of comprehensive meaning, and the charge covers a wide range of conduct. Holyoke v. Holyoke, 78 Me. 404, 6 Atl. 827. The outstanding fact upon which the libellant places great emphasis in the case is the attempt of the libellee to have her committed to the state hospital for the insane. On May 19, 1919, the husband made the necessary application to the municipal officers of Old Orchard, where the wife was then residing with her children, charging that she was insane, and praying for her commitment to the Augusta State Hospital. Notice was thereupon ordered upon the wife, a hearing was held on May 21, 1919, and the testimony of two physicians who made an examination of her was taken, both of whom testified that in their opinion she was not insane. Other evidence was also given on both sides.

At the conclusion of the public hearing the proceedings were dismissed by the municipal officers. This unsuccessful charge of insanity, with its attendant publicity, might or might not constitute cruel and abusive treatment. It depends upon the motive which prompted the institution of the proceedings. If the application, although unsuccessful, was made in good faith, in the honest and sincere belief that the wife was in such an unsettled mental condition that her own good and that of her family required confinement and treatment in such an institution, such an act would be regarded as lacking entirely the essential element of cruel and abusive treatment. Reichert v. Reichert, 124 Mich. 694, 83 N. W. 1008. It would spring from kindness rather than cruelty.

If, on the other hand, the husband, without just cause, wilfully attempted to have her committed to an insane asylum, such conduct, seriously affecting her health, would obviously constitute cruel and abusive treatment within the meaning of the statute. In other words, it was not merely the act itself, but the motive

Divorce—attempt to commit to asylum as cruel and abusive treatment.

which inspired the act, that was to be rigidly inquired into and determined by the jury. As bearing upon this issue, the evidence was necessarily voluminous. It would be futile to rehearse it.

One significant fact, however, which must have carried great weight is that in July, 1919, only two months after his failure to secure her commitment, Mr. Michels instituted proceedings in the probate court for Berkshire county, Massachusetts, where he was residing, to have a conservator appointed to take charge of his wife's property, alleging in his petition that by reason of mental weakness she had become incapacitated to properly care for her property. This petition was signed by a sister of the libellant, as well as by the libellee. It was duly served on Mrs. Michels, but was subsequently dismissed by agreement. Here, again, the question of good faith or wilful persecution on the part of the husband was the crucial point, and, as bearing strongly on that, it satisfactorily appears that Mrs. Michels had never lost a dollar of her property by unwise investments, and that she had wasted none. So that his attempts to deprive her of her liberty and of the management of her property both failed. We are constrained to say that the allegations of the libel, and concerning these two proceedings, are founded upon substantial evidence.

In addition to these specific and notorious acts, the libellant testified to her general treatment by her husband during a series of years. Even the printed page reveals something of the atmosphere that must have pervaded the home life, and the cold, neglectful, unsympathetic, and surly attitude of the husband, resulting in her finally leaving him, taking her two children with her, and declaring that she could never return. She was undoubtedly of a highly nervous temperament, and was for a considerable period on the verge of a nervous breakdown. In that condition she needed the tender care and kindly treatment which his marriage vow demanded, instead of neglect at home, or confinement in an insane asylum away from her home and children.

Without further discussing the evidence, it is sufficient to say that in the opinion of the court the libellant, under the facts presented, was entitled to her decree of divorce as a matter of law, and the entry must be, exceptions overruled.

—when divorce
granted.

ANNOTATION.

Charge of insanity, or attempt to have spouse committed to an insane asylum, as ground for divorce.

It was held in MICHELS v. MICHELS (reported herewith) ante, 570, that unfounded attempts by a husband to have his wife committed to an insane asylum, and to have a conservator appointed to take charge of her property on the ground that, because of her mental weakness, she was incapacitated to take care of the same, might constitute cruel and abusive treatment entitling the wife to a divorce. The court said that the unsuccessful charge of insanity, with its attendant publicity, might or might not constitute cruel and abusive treatment, depending upon the motive which prompted the institution of the proceeding; that if the application, although unsuccessful, was made in good faith, in the honest and sincere belief that the wife was in such an unsettled mental condition that her own good, or that of her family, required confinement and treatment in such an institution, such an act would be regarded as lacking entirely the essential elements of cruel and abusive treatment; but that if, on the other hand, the husband, without just cause, wilfully attempted to have her committed to an insane asylum, such conduct, seriously affecting her health, would obviously constitute cruel and abusive treatment within the meaning of the statute. And a decree of divorce was sustained in this case.

And in an action brought by the wife for separation on account of cruel and inhuman treatment, it was held in Beebe v. Beebe (1916) 174 App. Div. 408, 160 N. Y. Supp. 967, that a finding that the defendant had not been guilty of such treatment should be reversed, where it appeared that he had not acted in good faith in obtaining her commitment to an insane asylum. And it was held, also, that the commitment in the lunacy proceeding did not preclude a finding of the husband's bad faith. The court said that, if the order for commitment were disregarded, the proofs showed that the plaintiff was rational, and that the defendant's action was not taken in good faith, but that the trial court apparently proceeded on the ground that the official commitment precluded a finding that the defendant offended in obtaining it. The court said: "If the plaintiff was insane, the husband banished her from his presence and personal care, and placed the children at the hazard of her frenzy, and contracted with her as if she was in full mental capacity. If she was a woman in the mental and physical distractions of childbirth, and he superadded his confession of love for another, and his proposed disposition of the marital relations, and based his lunacy proceedings on the condition he had excited, he was cruel and inhuman. But he shields himself behind the order in the lunacy proceedings. That should not be allowed. He contends that it is a judgment establishing the insanity, and that it cannot be attacked even to impugn the good faith of the defendant. . . . And it is urged that the commencement of the proceedings and commitment to an asylum are not grounds for a limited divorce. . . . But the evidence tends to show that the lunacy order was obtained by defendant's fraudulent practice. The physicians did not jointly examine the plaintiff, and one of them had not seen her during the year 1911. But such joint examination is one of the grounds of jurisdiction, and a person knowingly omitting compliance with it cannot plead the protection of the order. The defendant instituted the proceeding, and used the certificate of lunacy for that purpose. He, the instigator of the proceedings, and presenting the certificate, knew whether the two physicians had, on May 10th, made a joint visit to his house and conducted a joint examination of his wife with the result stated in the certificate, and he must have known that his application was false and fraudulent. It, therefore, is not unassailable as to him, whatever evidence of insanity it might otherwise be. I think, therefore, that the court was not justified in finding that the defendant had not been guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment."

The MICHELS CASE cites, in support of the doctrine that an attempt by the husband in good faith to have his wife committed to an insane asylum, though unsuccessful, is not such cruelty as entitles her to divorce, Reichert v. Reichert (1900) 124 Mich. 694, 83 N. W. 1008, where, in affirming a decree dismissing a bill for divorce sought on the ground of cruelty in the husband's attempt to have the wife committed to an insane asylum, the court said: "We are convinced that the complainant became intensely jealous of her husband without just cause, and the application to have her adjudged insane was made in good faith, and in the belief that the statements attributing improper conduct to the defendant were induced by an unsettled mind. We are not able to find in the defendant's action in this regard, or in any other respect, such evidence of cruelty as will justify a decree of divorce."

Other cases support the rule that, if the attempt by one spouse to have the other committed to an insane asylum is made in good faith, it does not constitute ground for divorce.

Thus, in Wilson v. Wilson (1916) — Mo. App. —, 190 S. W. 53, it was held that an attempt by the wife to have the husband committed to an insane asylum did not constitute an indignity within the meaning of the statute, so as to entitle him to divorce, where it appeared that she thought that she was acting for his benefit, that he had been, seven years previously, adjudged to be of unsound mind, and that she had been appointed guardian and during the intervening time had managed the estate, although, shortly after being taken to the asylum, he made application to the probate court and was adjudged sane and capable of managing his own affairs.

And it was held in Kuster v. Kuster (1902) 37 Misc. 136, 74 N. Y. Supp. 853, that a wife was not entitled to a degree of separation, either on the ground of cruelty or on the ground that it was unsafe for her to cohabit with her husband, merely because he had secured her commitment to an insane asylum, where it appeared that for several years she had had delusions that her husband and others were trying to poison her, and accused various persons of nefarious designs upon her, that he had received medical advice that she was afflicted with paranoia and was in danger of committing acts of violence upon herself and others, and that, even at the time of the trial, medical experts differed as to her mental condition. The court said that the husband's acts were all inspired, it was convinced, however ill they were conceived, by an honest desire on his part to benefit the plaintiff, and were done because he believed the exigencies of the case warranted them. In reply to the contention that the good faith of the defendant was not involved, the court said that while a husband would not be permitted to escape the consequences of danger to his wife, brought about, for example, by his insane or drunken condition, on the plea that he was not responsible for the acts which menaced her happiness and safety, the question of good faith or motive in such a case being necessarily excluded from consideration, this was not true under such circumstances as those before it; that it was the duty of the husband to protect the wife, and that if, in the performance of that duty, he was confronted with a situation which required him to resort to measures affecting her personal liberty, it would seem to be of the utmost importance to inquire rigidly into his motives and good faith.

In several cases an unfounded charge of insanity has been regarded as a circumstance which, in connection with the other facts in evidence, was sufficient to justify the granting of a divorce.

Thus, in Andrews v. Andrews (1898) 120 Cal. 184, 52 Pac. 298, it was held that a decree in favor of the wife for a divorce should be sustained, where the evidence showed various acts of cruelty on his part, extending over several years, such as calling her vile names, charging her with being "crazy" and "demented," with trying to poison him, and threatening to send her to an insane asylum, as well as also falsely charging her with adultery. The court held that the facts shown were sufficient to constitute "extreme cruelty," within the meaning of the statute.

And it was held in Russell v. Russell (1908) 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 348, that a divorce on the ground of cruelty was properly granted to the wife where the evidence showed that the husband heaped indignities upon her in treating her as a menial in the presence of servants, intimated that she was of unsound mind and that she was under the influence of designing and wicked persons, and, in general, manifested toward her such insistent egotism and arrogant domination as rendered her life a burden and her condition intolerable, and justified her fear that he intended further to humiliate her by threats to resort to legal proceedings to test her sanity.

So it was held in Mamaux v. Mamaux (1916) 64 Pa. Super. Ct. 131, that a decree of divorce should have been granted in favor of the husband, where the evidence showed that the wife had twice assaulted him, one of the assaults being of a violent nature, that she had purchased a horsewhip to use upon him on certain contingencies, that she had employed detectives to watch and to report on his conduct, that she had filed a proceeding in divorce, which she discontinued, and an information charging him with adultery, but abandoned the charge, and that she also had filed a petition charging him with insanity, which proceeding also she discontinued. The court held that the cruel and barbarous treatment defined in the statute was not restricted to acts which necessarily endangered life, and that in this case the series of humiliating offenses was erroneously excused by the trial court on the ground of the wife's jealousy and her belief in her husband's misconduct.

In an action by a wife for separation on the ground of excesses and cruel treatment and defamation, it is said in the syllabus by the court in Harrison v. Harrison (1906) 115 La. 817, 40 So. 232: "The spreading of a report that the wife is insane, and the publishing of a notice that the husband will not be responsible for any debts she may contract, are not sufficient in themselves to support an action for separation from bed and board on the ground of defamation; but these facts will contribute materially to the support of an action on the ground of excesses and cruel treatment, especially in a case where the wife is a woman of culture and refinement." And it was held that a decree for separation was justified, the evidence showing, in addition to the facts above indicated, that on more than one occasion the defendant had used violence toward the plaintiff. The court cited a Code provision to the effect that excesses and cruel treatment can justify a separation only when "of such a nature as to render the living together insupportable."

R. E. H.

RE ESTATE OF A. M. J. CARDONER, Deceased.

E. P. BUJAC et al., Appts.,

v.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Exr., etc., of A. M. J. Cardoner, Deceased.

New Mexico Supreme Court — October 18, 1921.

(— N. M. —, 201 Pac. 1051.)

Executor and administrator — eligibility — residence.

1. Sections 2222, 2223, 2242, 2243, and 2244, Code 1915, interpreted, and held that the residence required of a person to entitle him to qualify as an executor is nothing more than actual residence.

[See note on this question beginning on page 581.]

— effect of testator's desire.

2. Aside from the common-law doctrine which excludes idiots and lunatics, the desire of the testator is a controlling factor in determining the right to administer an estate, and it is only statutory disqualifications which may operate to defeat such desire.

[See 11 R. C. L. 81.]

Headnotes by PARKER, J.

APPEAL by objectors from a judgment of the District Court for Bernalillo County (Hickey, J.), affirming a judgment of the Probate Court holding the executor qualified to administer the estate of deceased in a proceeding by him for appointment as such executor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Marron & Wood for appellant.

Mr. A. B. McMillen for appellee.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon a motion to dismiss the appeal, we handed down an opinion concerning which, upon motion for rehearing, we have some doubts. In view, however, of the opinion we have of the case, we do not deem it necessary to further discuss this motion, and will withdraw the opinion and dispose of the case upon the merits.

The facts in the case are that a Madame Cardoner died at her residence in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on the 1st of October, 1918, leaving a last will, in and by which she appointed Joseph R. Wilson as executor to serve without bond, and named her daughter, Bertha Pauchet, of Barcelona, Spain, her sole legatee. The will was produced and filed by the executor in the probate court, together with a petition for the approval of the will and the issuance to him of letters testamentary on October 12, 1918. There was no contest as to the validity of the will, but the appellants, on November 30, 1918, together with said Bertha Pauchet, the said legatee, filed amended and supplemental objections to the appointment of Wilson as executor and prayed as follows: "Wherefore your petitioners pray that the will of the said Mathilde Cardoner be admitted to probate as prayed for in the petition, but that the application of the said Joseph R. Wilson to be appointed executor thereof without bond be denied and refused by the court, and that Etienne P. Bujac, creditor, be appointed as administrator with the will annexed and manage her said estate, upon giving ample security as required by law."

A hearing was had on November 30, 1918, in the probate court, and Joseph R. Wilson was held by said court to be a qualified executor under said will, and letters testamentary were thereupon issued to him. From this judgment of the probate court the objecting parties appealed to the district court of Bernalillo county. Pending appeal from the probate court to the district court Bertha Pauchet, the legatee, dismissed her appeal, and asked that the said Joseph R. Wilson be allowed to continue to administer the estate, and opposed the appointment of the said Bujac as administrator with the will annexed. The district court, on November 26, 1919, found that said Joseph R. Wilson was qualified to act as executor, and that letters testamentary had been duly issued to him by the probate court, and that the said E. P. Bujac was not entitled to appointment as administrator of the said estate.

1. The principal ground of opposition to the appointment of Wilson is his alleged nonresidence. It appears from the evidence that, at the time of the death of the deceased, Wilson was a resident of the city of Philadelphia, state of Pennsylvania. Upon the death of the deceased he went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, and soon thereafter, and prior to the issuance to him of letters testamentary, he had acquired a place of residence and had removed to Albuquerque and was living there with his family. These facts are undisputed. It is urged, however, by appellants, that Wilson's residence was so established in Albuquerque for the purpose of enabling him to serve as executor of the estate, and was not established for the purpose of becoming an actual, bona fide, permanent resident as an executor. Evidence was introduced by appellants to establish the fact that Wilson's residence was established here, not for the purpose or with the intention of making his residence permanent, but for the purpose of enabling him to qualify as executor in this matter, and some evidence along this line was offered which was excluded by the court upon technical grounds. In the view we take of the matter, however, it may be assumed that the evidence offered and tendered would show that Wilson established his residence in Albuquerque, and maintained the same during the pendency of the administration of the estate, for the purpose merely of qualifying himself to serve as executor, although there is evidence in his behalf to the contrary, which the court might well have been justified in believing.

The question turns upon the proper interpretation of our statutes in this regard, the pertinent provisions whereof are as follows:

Sec. 2222. Persons capable of making a will may be appointed as executors or administrators, and after having accepted said appointment, they shall impartially and punctually discharge the duties thereof.

"Sec. 2223. The following persons are not qualified to act as executors or administrators: Nonresidents of this state; minors; judicial officers; persons of unsound mind, or who have been convicted of any felony, or of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude."

"Sec. 2242. If an executor or administrator become a nonresident of this state, he may be removed and his letters revoked in the manner prescribed in the preceding section, except that the notice may be given by publication for such time as the court or judge thereof may direct.

"Sec. 2243. If a person be named in a will as executor who is a nonresident of the state or a minor, upon the removal of such disability he is entitled to qualify as such executor, if he apply therefor within thirty days from the removal of such disability if otherwise competent. If in the meantime, an administrator with the will annexed has been appointed, his powers and duties cease with the qualification of such executor; but if another executor is qualified and is acting as such, they thereby become joint executors.

"Sec. 2244. Whenever it appears probable to the court or judge that any of the causes for removal of an executor or administrator exist or have transpired, as specified in § 2241, it shall be the duty of such court or judge to cite such executor or administrator to appear and show cause why he should not be removed, and if he fail to appear or show sufficient cause, an order shall be made removing him and revoking his letters; and it is the duty of the court or judge thereof to exercise a supervisory control over an executor or administrator, to the end that he faithfully and diligently perform the duties of his trust according to law." Code 1915.

It will be noticed that, speaking broadly, all persons capable of making a will may be appointed executor, as is provided by § 2222. The general provisions of this section are restricted somewhat by the provisions of § 2223, to the effect that nonresidents of the state, together with others specified in the section, shall not be qualified to act. By § 2243, it is provided that, if the executor named in the will is a nonresident of the state, he may, upon the removal of such disability, become qualified to act if he applies for letters within thirty days after the disability has been removed. By § 2242, if the executor, after he has qualified, becomes a nonresident, he may be removed and his letters revoked in accordance with certain procedure laid down in the statutes.

Taking these sections of the statute together, we are of the opinion that it is clear that the residence contemplated as a basis for the qualification of an executor means nothing more than actual residence.

Executor and administrator—eligibility —residence.

The statute seems to contemplate and to provide for cases exactly like the case at bar. It contemplates that wills may be presented to probate courts in this state which name executors who are, for the time being, nonresidents of the state, and further contemplates that, upon the removal of such disability by establishing an actual residence in this jurisdiction, the right to administer becomes perfect. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the quality or character of the residence necessary to qualify an executor is anything more than an actual residence and presence within the state. So that, in accordance with the provisions of § 2244 above quoted, the probate court or judge may exercise a supervisory control over him to the end that he faithfully and diligently performs the duties of his trust according to law.

18 A.L.R.—37.

Counsel have cited a few cases which have attempted to define the meaning of residence, but none of the same seem to us to be applicable in this jurisdiction. Most of the cases cited define the nonresidence necessary in order to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts under the divers citizenship requirements. One case cited is based upon the distinction between legal and actual residence, and holds that legal residence is required to avoid the necessity of giving a cost bond. Appellants cite two cases which bear directly upon the question. In Re Mulford, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 75 N. E. 345, 3 Ann. Cas. 986, the court held, under a statute which provided that "no nonresident shall be appointed or act as executor," that a resident of Ohio, who still maintained his homestead in that state, and who came to Illinois and testified that he intended to remain in Illinois so long as it might be necessary to perform his duties as executor of the estate, was a nonresident of Illinois, and was not entitled to complain of the action of the court in refusing to issue to him letters testamentary. It is to be observed, however, at least so far as appears from the report of this case, that Illinois has no such provisions of law as we have. There is in Illinois no provision that a nonresident who has been named an executor may remove the disqualification, and obtain letters testamentary within thirty days after the removal of said disqualification.

The other case cited is Re Don- ovan, 104 Cal. 623, 38 Pac. 456. In that case a brother of the deceased, who died intestate in California, resided in the state of Massachusetts at the time of the death of his brother. He, and others entitled to share in the estate, signed and forwarded to the appellant a request for his appointment as administrator and appellant, in pursuance of such request, and later filed his petition praying that letters of administration be issued to him. Three days before the hearing the brother arrived in California. He was put upon the stand, and testified in such a manner as to show that it was not his intention to remain in the state. The statute of California requires that a person requesting appointment as administrator, or requesting the appointment of another person, must be a "bona fide" resident of the state. The court very correctly held in that case, and under that statute, that the residence required was more than a mere actual residence. The case, therefore, has no controlling influence upon the determination of this matter.

We are confirmed in this conclusion by the further consideration that the wishes of a testator as expressed in his last will and testament are to be regarded as of controlling force, and are to be overturned only where some positive provision of law prevents the same being carried out. This is a well-known fundamental principle, universally recognized.

2. Counsel for appellants presented in their objections to the qualifications of Wilson to act as executor certain matters tending to show unfair or dishonest conduct toward the deceased in her lifetime, and here urge the same in a somewhat perfunctory manner. We do not understand them to seriously contend that, upon principle or authority, such objections can be successfully maintained. On the other hand, counsel for appellee have cited Kidd v. Bates, 120 Ala. 79, 41 L.R.A. 154, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735; Re Bergdorf, 206 N. Y.

309, 99 N. E. 714; Clark v. Patterson, 214 Ill. 533, 105 Am. St. Rep. 127, 73 N. E. 806; Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515—all of which are well-considered ^{—effect of testator's desire.} cases, and point out that the desire of the testator is a controlling factor in determining the right to administer an estate, and that it is only statutory disqualifications which may operate to defeat the will of the testator, aside from the common-law doctrine which excludes idiots and lunatics.

It follows from all of the foregoing that the judgment of the District Court was correct, and should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

Raynolds, J., concurs.

Roberts, Ch. J., concurring:

While agreeing that the judgment in this case on the merits should be affirmed, I am unable to give assent to the view of the law as expressed in the majority opinion. As I understand this opinion, it is to the effect that the residence necessary to qualify an executor is simply actual residence or presence within the state at the time application for appointment is made. If by actual residence it is meant to hold that the person must, at the time of applying for letters, be a bona fide resident of the state, I would give ready assent to that. But the majority opinion, as I read it, does not require actual, bona fide residence within the state, but simply physical presence of the applicant for letters at the time the application is made. I am forced to this conclusion, because the opinion states "actual residence and presence within the state" is all that is required, and an attempt is made to distinguish this case from the case of Re Mulford, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 75 N. E. 345, 3 Ann. Cas. 986. I think all who read this opinion will come to the conclusion that it is meant to hold that residence, as generally understood, is not required of the applicant for letters testamentary under our statute. I do not believe there is any basis for the attempted distinction, for the statute of Illinois (Ill. Anno. Stat. 1913, § 66) provides "that no nonresident of this state shall be appointed or act as administrator or executor," which means substantially the same thing as our § 2223, in this regard. It is true they have no provision similar to our § 2243, to the effect that a person may become a resident of the state after the probate of a will in which he is named as executor, whereupon he is eligible for appointment. But I cannot see how this provision can have the effect upon the other provision ascribed to it in the majority opinion. In the case of Re Mulford, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 75 N. E. 345, 3 Ann. Cas. 986, Marion Mulford had been named as executor of the will of Harriet M. Richards. The testator was a resident of the county of Will in the state of Illinois. Mulford was a resident of Ohio. He testified that he was seventy-one years old, and had a wife and two daughters with whom he resided in Dayton, Ohio, when the said Harriet M. Richards died. That he lived with his family on homestead property owned by himself, and which he had not abandoned; that he had come to Illinois with the fixed purpose and intention of accepting the executorship of this estate, and of remaining within the jurisdiction of the court until the estate could be administered upon in accordance with the will, and that he still retained that fixed purpose, whatever time might be required therefor. After reciting the above facts, the court said:

"Nevertheless, the appellant is a resident of the state of Ohio. Residence is lost by leaving the place where one has acquired a permanent home and removing to another place without a present intention of returning. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 697. 'A temporary sojourn within a state for pleasure or business, accompanied by an intention to return to the state of one's former inhabitance, does not constitute residence.' Pells v. Snell, 130 Ill. 379, 23 N. E. 117.

"The court did not err in refusing to issue letters testamentary to the appellant."

In an earlier case (Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357), and before the enactment of the provision that no nonresident should be appointed or act as administrator or executor, the court held that a nonresident could not legally be appointed because of the provision of the statute which authorized the removal of an executor who became a nonresident of the state.

Other states have statutes prohibiting the appointment of a nonresident. The majority opinion seems to attach importance to the use of the word "bona fide" resident in the California statute. I attach no importance to this, as I assume that when the word "resident" is used in a statute it necessarily means a bona fide resident.

Arkansas has a statute (Kirby & C. Dig. of Stat. (Ark.) 1916, § 14) which, as our statute, uses the term "nonresident," and provides that a nonresident is not eligible for appointment. Likewise, Missouri, § 10, Rev. Stat. 1919. Under this statute, in the case of Stevens v. Larwill, 110 Mo. App. 140, 84 S. W. 113, the court held that a nonresident, coming into the state and being appointed, must come with the bona fide intention of becoming a resident of Missouri. Georgia has a similar statute, § 3941, Code 1914; likewise Montana, § 7436, Code 1907. The courts of all these states hold, so far as I am advised, that actual, bona fide residence within the state, at the time of appointment, is essential.

I cite these for the purpose of showing that the importance attached to the use of the term "bona fide" in the California statute is not justified. Decisions under these statutes will be found collected in the note to the case of Re Mulford, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341. See Re Bailey, 31 Nev. 377, 103 Pac. 232, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 743.

In our statute relative to venue in civil actions it is provided that transitory actions shall be brought in the county where the plaintiff or defendant, or some one of them in case there be more than one of either, resides. If this does not require bona fide residence in the county by the plaintiff where he sues in such county, then it will be possible for the plaintiff to temporarily go to some other county in the state, and there file the suit. To constitute "residence," as I understand the term, there must be an actual home where the person intends to reside permanently, or for a definite or indefinite length of time, and residence depends upon fact and intention.

But, entertaining these views as I do, I am still of the opinion that the judgment in this case should be affirmed. For the court found upon conflicting evidence that Joseph R. Wilson, on the 12th day of October, 1918, which preceded his appointment, and ever since that date, has been an actual and bona fide resident of the city of Albuquerque, county of Bernalillo, and under this finding his appointment as executor was justified. The fact that he came to New Mexico for the purpose of qualifying as executor under the will in question is not material, if in fact he came here with the intention of making Albuquerque his home to the exclusion of all other places. As said by the court in the case of Stevens v. Larwill, 110 Mo. App. 140, 84 S. W. 113: "The rule is well established in every jurisdiction that the motive or purpose of a change of domicil or residence is not material. The only question is whether the change of residence is made by the party with the bona fide intention of becoming a resident of another state."

Here Wilson testified that he had given up his home in Philadelphia, and had come to Albuquerque with his wife and daughters with the intention of making Albuquerque his permanent home, that he had either sold or removed his furniture and effects to Albuquerque, and had permanently abandoned his home in Philadelphia. The court had the right to believe this evidence offered by Wilson. It is true that witnesses testified to conversations with Wilson, prior to this time, which indicated that at that time Wilson contemplated making the change temporarily only, but it may be that thereafter he formed the fixed purpose and intention of permanently residing in Albuquerque. The evidence justified the finding. I do not attach any importance to the point made by appellants to the effect that the enumeration of certain disqualifications of persons from becoming executors of wills by § 2223, Code 1915, does not conclude the court from refusing letters testamentary upon grounds other than those named in the statute, such as bad character, insolvency, and antagonistic interest, as the court did not refuse the letters. A different question might be here if letters had been refused on some other than statutory grounds.

The only other point requiring consideration is the refusal of the court to admit in evidence a letter written by Wilson to the legatee under the will, but the statement as to the contents of the letter in the offer of evidence, I think, shows that no prejudice resulted by reason of the refusal. The offer was to show that the letter in question, written by Wilson to Mrs. Pauchet since the commencement of the proceedings to be appointed executor, and during Wilson's sojourn in New Mexico, stated in substance that he was coming here—obliged to come here—solely for the purpose of protecting the interest of Mrs. Pauchet in this estate, and in connection with the properties of the estate. As I have attempted to show heretofore, the motive prompting his taking up his residence in New Mexico was wholly immaterial.

It is urged that the evidence in this case is of such a nature that it ought not to be held that there was substantial evidence offered to establish the bona fide residence in New Mexico of Joseph R. Wilson. I do not agree with this statement. The court had the right to believe Wilson, if it so elected.

(— N. M. —, 201 Pac. 1061.)

I agree that the opinion heretofore filed on the motion was erroneous, and for that reason consent to its withdrawal.

For the reasons stated, I concur in the affirmance.

ANNOTATION.

Nature of residence contemplated by statute or rule making residence within state qualification of executor or administrator.

It has been held that, under a statute making residence a qualification for the appointment of a personal representative, legal residence is essential, so that the competency of a person coming into the state to assume the administration of an estate depends on the existence of a bona fide intention to take up a residence there. Re Donovan (1894) 104 Cal. 623, 38 Pac. 456; Re Newman (1899) 124 Cal. 688, 45 L.R.A. 780, 57 Pac. 686; Stevens v. Larwill (1904) 110 Mo. App. 140, 84 S. W. 113.

Thus, in the case last cited, it was contended that the letters granted to the respondent should be revoked, because he was a nonresident. Denying this contention, the court said: "The facts as to his residence are that, up to March 15, 1901, he had been a resident of Oklahoma territory; having closed out his business there, he made a short visit to Ohio; from thence he went to Montana with a view of locating and going into business; he decided, however, not to remain in Montana, and was on the point of returning, when he received a telegram announcing the death of his brother, John C. Larwill, in Ohio. He went to Ohio to consult with the executors named in his brother's will about the estate, and there learned of the death of Miller Stevens, the agent in charge of the Kansas City real estate. Mr. Smith, one of the executors, suggested to respondent that he go to Kansas City and assume charge of the property. This suggestion was adopted, and respondent came to Kansas City, October 14, 1901, and attempted to take charge of the property and collect the rents, but was prevented by the action of petitioners herein, in notifying tenants not to pay any rent to respondent. He testified that he was then without any permanent home, and he thereupon, on or about October 15, 1901, decided to become a resident of Kansas City, Missouri, and so declared his intention, engaged board and lodging, opened a bank account, and did other things evidencing his intention to become a resident here, and has resided in this city and state ever since. It may be conceded that the respondent became a resident of this state for the purpose of applying for letters of administration, having, under the will, one of the largest interests in said estate. . . . The rule is well established in every jurisdiction that the motive or purpose of a change of domicil or residence is not material. The only question is whether the change of residence is made by the party with the bona fide intention of becoming a resident of another state."

So, it was said in Re Newman (1899) 124 Cal. 688, 45 L.R.A. 780, 57 Pac. 686: "It is contended that petitioner was not a resident of California, and therefore was not entitled to letters. She testified that she came to this state because her husband left an estate here; that, if he had not left such an estate, she would not have come, but that, being here, it was her intention to remain and make this her future home. The court found in her favor. Her intention constituted the material issue, and there certainly was evidence to support the finding. The difference between this case and the case of Re Donovan (1894) 104 Cal. 623, 38 Pac. 456, is that there the court found against the petitioner as to the fact. In each case this court must abide the conclusion."

Re Donovan (Cal.) supra, is sufficiently set out in the reported case (RE CARDONER, ante, 575).

The reported case (RE CARDONER) holds that the New Mexico statute, making residence a qualification for the appointment of an executor or an administrator, does not require an actual bona fide residence within the state, but simply the physical presence of the applicant for letters, at the time the application is made.

Similarly, under the Wyoming statute (Rev. Stat. § 4622) providing for the suspension of an executor when he "has permanently removed from the state," it was held in Hecht v. Carey (1904) 13 Wyo. 154, 110 Am. St. Rep. 981, 78 Pac. 705, that an executor who was personally present in the state, and attending to the business of the executorship, had not permanently removed from the state, not having permanently absented himself from the place where the business was to be transacted, or withdrawn himself beyond the process of the court.

On the other hand, in the case of Re Mulford (1905) 217 Ill. 242, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 75 N. E. 345, 3 Ann. Cas. 986, the conclusion was reached that a nonresident who maintained a residence in another state, and who came into Illinois to remain only so long as was necessary to perform his duties as executor, was not qualified under a statute providing that "no nonresident shall be appointed or act as executor." That case is sufficiently set out in the reported case (RE CARDONER).

If the legal residence of an executor is maintained at the place where he was appointed, temporary absence is not ground for his removal.

In Re McKnight (1903) 80 App. Div. 284, 80 N. Y. Supp. 251, affirmed in (1904) 179 N. Y. 522, 71 N. E. 1134, wherein it was held that the temporary nonresidence of an executor, on account of the ill health of a member of the family, does not constitute a removal from the state within a statute (§ 2569, subd. 6, Code Civ. Proc., now § 99, subd. 6, Surrogate Court Act) providing for the revocation of the letters of an executor who "has removed, or is about to remove, from the state." The court said: "It must be conceded that these averments in the answer certainly do amount to an admission of temporary nonresidence on the part of the executors, so that the case directly calls for the determination as to whether a residence of this character in another state constitutes a removal from New York state, within the meaning of the Code, so as to require the surrogate to revoke the letters testamentary. Not without considerable hesitation, I have reached the conclusion that it does not. It seems quite clear that a temporary absence from the state on account of ill health, or on account of business, or for purposes of travel or pleasure, would not necessarily establish the fact that an executor 'has removed' from the state, within the intent of the statute. The learned surrogate was evidently satisfied that the sojourn of these executors in New Jersey was nothing more than a departure from the state for the benefit of relatives, not designed to constitute a permanent change of abode, and contemplating a return to New York as soon as the purpose of their absence should be accomplished. In this view, I am inclined to think that he was right in refusing to hold that he was constrained to revoke the letters by the provisions of the Code to which I have referred."

In the case of Re Magoun (1903) 41 Misc. 352, 84 N. Y. Supp. 940, it was held that the fact that an executrix had resided without the state from the time of her appointment was not ground for her removal, where it appeared that she was the sole legatee, devisee, and executrix under the will of her husband; that she was the mother and general guardian of his only child, an infant; that she had omitted no step in her duties as the representative of her husband; and that she had denied any intention of becoming a nonresident. A. S. M.

A. T. HASTINGS, Receiver, etc., of Ross & Skinner, a Partnership, etc., Respt.,
v.

LINCOLN TRUST COMPANY, Appt.

Washington Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1)—April 20, 1921.

(— Wash. —, 197 Pac. 627.)

Pledge — delivery of unindorsed warehouse receipt.

1. The delivery of an unindorsed warehouse receipt which makes the property deliverable to storer or order is not sufficient to effect a pledge of the property stored, which will be valid against the creditors of the storer, represented by a receiver.

[See note on this question beginning on page 588.]

Receiver — extent of rights.

2. A receiver possesses no rights with respect to the trust property superior to those which would be possessed by the one for whom he was appointed, were the latter acting for himself.

[See 23 R. C. L. 56.]

Pledge — necessity of delivery.

3. Delivery of pledged property by the pledgeor to the pledgee is absolutely necessary to the life of the contemplated pledge.

[See 21 R. C. L. 642, 643.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover the value of several automobiles alleged to have been wrongfully obtained and sold by defendant, and the proceeds thereof converted to its use.
Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. McCarthy & Edge and George D. Lantz, for appellant:

The delivery of a public warehouse receipt is of the same legal effect upon the property in the warehouse as the physical transfer of possession of other property; it constitutes a symbolic delivery of possession of the property covered by the receipt.

Marsh v. Wade, 1 Wash. 538, 20 Pac. 578; Brockway v. Abbott, 37 Wash. 263, 79 Pac. 924; Reed v. Bank of Commerce, 8 Wash. 539, 36 Pac. 494; Vincent v. Snoqualmie Mill Co. 7 Wash. 566, 35 Pac. 396; Kidder v. Beavers, 38 Wash. 635, 74 Pac. 819; Mutual Invest. Co. v. Walton Mach. Co. 91 Wash. 298, 157 Pac. 682; 23 R. C. L. 56; Lawson v. Warren, 34 Okla. 94, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 194, 124 Pac. 46, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 139; 40 Cyc. 416; Frontier Mill. & Elevator Co. v. Roy White Co-op. Mercantile Co. 25 Idaho, 478, 138 Pac. 825; Morris v. Burrows, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 1108; Whitney v. Tibbits, 17 Wis. 359; Bush v. Export Storage Co. 136

Fed. 918; Shingleur-Johnson Co. v. Vanton Cotton Warehouse Co. 78 Miss. 875, 84 Am. St. Rep. 655, 29 So. 770; Sloan v. Johnson, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 643; National Union Bank v. Shearer, 225 Pa. 470, 74 Atl. 351, 17 Ann. Cas. 664; State v. Loomis, 27 Minn. 521, 8 N. W. 758; Toner v. Citizens' State Bank, 25 Ind. App. 29, 56 N. E. 731; Allen v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 30 L. ed. 573, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460; St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Ross, 9 Mo. App. 399; Burton v. Curyea, 40 Ill. 320, 89 Am. Dec. 350; Callahan v. Marshall, 163 Cal. 552, 126 Pac. 358.

Mr. E. B. Quackenbush, for respondent:

Even though it should be conceded that defendant held the car in question as a pledge for security, the manner of its sale rendered it liable for conversion, and the verdict and judgment must stand.

Nagel v. Ham, Yearsley & Ryrrie, 88 Wash. 99, 152 Pac. 520; Richardson v. Foster, 100 Wash. 57, 170 Pac. 321;

Wilson v. Mears, 105 Wash. 296, 177 Pac. 815.

"Delivery," as used in the warehouse law of this state, is defined by the Warehouse Act, and its effect declared.

Hallgarten v. Oldham, 135 Mass. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 433; Keyes v. Sabin, 101 Wash. 625, 172 Pac. 835; Lyon v. Nourse, 104 Wash. 309, 176 Pac. 359.

The receiver can contest, as the representative of the creditors, a lien which is ineffective as to them because of a failure to comply with the statute in acquiring it.

Keyes v. Sabin, 101 Wash. 625, 172 Pac. 835.

Defendant not having perfected its lien by obtaining an indorsement of the receipt, or by notifying, or having some arrangement with, the warehouseman to hold it for the defendant at the time the receiver was appointed, could not perfect its lien thereafter.

Mutual Invest. Co. v. Walton Mach. Co. 91 Wash. 298, 157 Pac. 682; Haskins v. Fidelity Nat. Bank, 93 Wash. 66, 159 Pac. 1198; Anderson v. Breneman, 44 Mich. 198, 6 N. W. 222; Lyon v. Nourse, supra.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Hastings, as receiver of Ross & Skinner, an insolvent partnership, sought recovery in the superior court for Spokane county from the defendant trust company of the value of several automobiles which he alleged it wrongfully obtained the possession of, and sold, and converted the proceeds thereof to its own use; the automobiles being at the time a portion of the trust property of the receivership in his hands for the benefit of the creditors of Ross & Skinner. Trial upon the merits before the court, sitting with a jury, resulted in verdict and judgment awarding to the plaintiff recovery against the defendant in the sum of $1,050, the value of one of the automobiles in question. From this disposition of the cause in the superior court the defendant has appealed to this court.

There is, we think, no substantial ground for controversy over the facts determinative of the rights of the parties to this cause. They may be summarized as follows: On May 21, 1918, Ross & Skinner were indebted to appellant trust company for sums then and theretofore loaned by it to them, aggregating several thousand dollars. On that day Ross & Skinner placed in storage in the warehouse of the McAllister Warehouse Company the automobile in question, which storage was evidenced by the warehouse company issuing and delivering to them its warehouse receipt, which, in so far as we need here notice its terms, reads as follows:

"Commercial Warehouse Receipt.

"Spokane, Wash., May 21, 1918.

"This is to certify that we have received and hold on storage (1) one Elgin auto No. 175,386, and will deliver the same to Ross & Skinner or order, at our warehouse, as and when directed, upon the surrender of this receipt, properly indorsed, and on payment of charges and advances.

"McAllister Warehouse Co.,
"by J. H. McAllister."

We have italicized the words of this receipt which call for particular notice. Looking to partially securing the indebtedness then owing by Ross & Skinner to appellant, they delivered this warehouse receipt to appellant, but without any indorsement or other written evidence of their assignment of it to appellant. Thereafter, on June 17, 1918, respondent was, by the superior court for Spokane county, duly appointed receiver of Ross & Skinner because of their insolvency, for the purpose of winding up their business and subjecting their property to the payment of their creditors. At that time the automobile in question remained on storage in the McAllister warehouse, the warehouse receipt therefor being still in the possession of appellant, and more than $1,050 of the indebtedness owing by Ross & Skinner to appellant remained unpaid. Thereafter, in September, 1918, these conditions as to the possession of the automobile remaining unchanged, and the indebtedness owing by Ross & Skinner to appellant still exceeding $1,050, appellant induced the warehouse company to deliver to it the automobile upon surrender of the warehouse receipt therefor, which receipt had not been indorsed or otherwise assigned in writing by Ross & Skinner to appellant. Thereafter appellant sold the automobile for the sum of $1,050 and applied that sum in part payment upon the indebtedness owing to it by Ross & Skinner. The evidence fully warranted the jury in concluding that the $1,050 received by appellant from the sale of the automobile was its fair value.

The principal claims of error here made in behalf of appellant, the correct disposition of which, we think, will become decisive of this whole case, are, in substance: That the trial court erred in refusing to withdraw from the consideration of the jury and decide as a matter of law that there was, by virtue of the delivery of the warehouse receipt by Ross & Skinner to appellant, a constructive or symbolic delivery of the automobile to appellant, such as would in law support a pledge of the automobile as security for the indebtedness owing by Ross & Skinner to appellant, and that the trial court erred in giving to the jury instructions which, it is claimed and may be conceded, told the jury in substance that the mere delivery of the warehouse receipt by Ross & Skinner to appellant did not, in law, constitute a delivery of the possession of the automobile to appellant, thus, in effect, deciding as a matter of law that there was no such delivery of the possession of the automobile as would support a pledge as security for the indebtedness owing by Ross & Skinner to appellant, and resulting in leaving to the jury only the question of the value of the automobile as respondent's measure of recovery from appellant.

Now it may be that the mere delivery of the warehouse receipt by Ross & Skinner to appellant, accompanied by an agreement between them that the automobile should be thereby considered as pledged to appellant as security, did have the effect of creating such an inchoate equitable lien upon the automobile in favor of appellant as could in equity be perfected and enforced as between them. But, conceding that to be the effect of such delivery of the warehouse receipt, the question here to be decided would, we think, still remain unanswered. Counsel for appellant invoke at the outset what they conceive to be the general rule that a receiver, assignee, or other trustee of an insolvent concern, appointed for the purpose of winding up its affairs and subjecting its property to the payment of its creditors, stands in the shoes of such concern and possesses no rights with respect to the trust property superior to those which would be possessed by such concern, were it a going concern acting for itself. This Receiver—extent of rights.

may be conceded to be a general rule of law applicable to many controversies which may arise in the settlement of such a trust, but it is, we think, not a controlling rule of law which can be successfully invoked as against the rights of creditors of an insolvent concern, represented by such a receiver or trustee, when it comes to deciding the question of whether or not a mortgage, pledge, or other lien against the property of the insolvent in favor of one of its creditors has been perfected in the manner required by law before insolvency, and the passing of the property and affairs of the insolvent into the hands of such a receiver or trustee. Our decision in Keyes v. Sabin, 101 Wash. 618, 172 Pac. 835, is, we think, a holding, in substance, that a lien in favor of a creditor of an insolvent, in order to become effective as against the creditors of such concern represented by a receiver or other trustee, must be a lien perfected, as the law requires, prior to the time of the passing of the insolvent's property and affairs into the hands of such receiver or trustee.

for the benefit of creditors. In that case there was involved the validity of an unrecorded chattel mortgage, the mortgagors having, after execution of the mortgage, made a common-law assignment of their property to one Sabin for the benefit of their creditors, the mortgage not being recorded until after the making of such assignment and the taking of the possession of the property by the assignee. Holding that the mortgage was void as against the assignee as the representative of the creditors, Judge Fullerton, speaking for the court, said: "It is argued that the assignee takes only such title as the assignor had, and, as the mortgage was good as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee, it is good as between the assignee and the mortgagee. But we cannot think the relation here assumed correctly represents the assignee's position. It is true, unquestionably, that if there was a valid and subsisting lien on the property assigned, good as against all the world, or if the title to any of the property was defective in the assignors, the assignee would take the property subject to such lien or defect. But it does not follow that he takes the property subject to all inchoate or imperfect liens, invalid as to certain persons, although valid as between the parties thereto. The assignee holds the property in trust for certain designated persons; in this instance, the creditors of the assignors. In his individual right he acquired nothing by the assignment. He is but the mediary through whom the title to the assigned property was conveyed to creditors. If, therefore, these creditors, the actual beneficiaries of the assignment, could have acquired a valid title against any inchoate or imperfect lien upon the property by an assignment made directly to them, they can acquire such a right by an assignment made to another for their benefit. It cannot be doubted, we think, that if the assignment had been made directly to the creditors, and the mortgage the appellant seeks to assert is invalid as against them, they could assert its invalidity in any suit against them brought to enforce the mortgage. If they could do this in their individual capacities, there is no reason why they cannot do it through their representative."

It is true that mention is made in that decision, following the above-quoted language, of the fact that the assignee took full legal title to the property by the assignment for the benefit of creditors, as furnishing a possible distinction between that decision and certain of our former decisions which seemed somewhat out of harmony with the views expressed in the above-quoted portion of that decision. Further reflection, however, leads us to conclude that the above-quoted portion of that decision states a correct view of the law applicable to our present inquiry. It seems to us to be of little or no consequence whether we regard the technical legal title to the property as passing to an assignee by formal voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors of the assignor, or control and dominion over the property passing to a receiver or other trustee for the benefit of creditors of its owner by virtue of an order of a court of competent jurisdiction. The owner is as completely divested of control and dominion over the property in the one case as in the other, and the creditors, as beneficiaries, acquire the same rights—no more, no less,—to have the trust property administered to the end that they be paid from the proceeds thereof, in the one case as in the other. A critical reading of our decision in Keyes v. Sabin will, we think, disclose that it was, in its last analysis, rested upon the invalidity of the chattel mortgage as to creditors of the assignee, though good as between the parties, because of the want of its timely recording as required by § 3660, Rem. Code, which makes chattel mortgages "void as against all creditors of the mortgagor, both existing and subsequent, whether or not they have or claim a lien upon such property. . . ."

The holding in that case, it seems to us, means that an inchoate lien as to creditors of the owner of the property, whether sought to be created by mortgage, pledge, or in any other manner recognized by law, becomes void and of no effect in so far as the rights of the creditors of the owner of the property are concerned, not only upon the passing of the property into the hands of an assignee under a voluntary assignment made by the owner for the benefit of his creditors, but also upon the passing of the property and affairs of the owner, because of insolvency, into the hands of a receiver or other trustee lawfully appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction, for the benefit of creditors.

It is elementary law that the delivery of pledged property by the pledgeor to the pledgee is absolutely Pledge—necessity of delivery. necessary to the life of the contemplated pledge. It is well said in Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 74 C. C. A. 186, 195, 143 Fed. 41: "Delivery of possession is the very life of a pledge. No mere agreements respecting possession can create it. The contract of pledge cannot exist outside of the fact of change of possession."

See 21 R. C. L. 643.

It is, of course, not necessary under all circumstances that the delivery be an actual physical movement of the property from the hands of control of the pledgeor to the pledgee; but it must in any event be of such nature that the control and dominion over the property pass from the pledgeor into the absolute control and dominion of the pledgee. Did such possession of this automobile pass from Ross & Skinner to appellant? Now, the real question here is not whether there was such agreement between, or acts on the part of, Ross & Skinner and appellant as would in equity enable appellant to compel the perfection of an inchoate unperfected pledge; but, in principle, as in Keyes v. Sabin, above quoted from, the real question here is whether or not there was such a delivery of the possession of the automobile by Ross & Skinner to appellant, effected by the delivery of the unindorsed warehouse receipt, as in law perfected the contemplated pledge as against the respondent receiver, representing the creditors of Ross & Skinner. In other words, the question is not what claimed rights of appellant could be enforced as against Ross & Skinner, but whether or not there was delivery of possession of the automobile by Ross & Skinner to appellant; for until such a delivery be made there could be no legal pledge. Indeed, in our present inquiry, we can ignore the question of transfer of title by the mere delivery of an unindorsed warehouse receipt such as the one here in question. A mere delivery of such a receipt might be held to transfer the title to the property for which it was issued, accompanied by an agreement to that effect, and still not have the effect of transferring the possession of the property. Possession of this automobile is of the very essence of this controversy, and when we decide who had possession of it, as between appellant and respondent, we will have decided this case.

Recurring to the language of the warehouse receipt, we read that the warehouse company "will deliver the same to Ross & Skinner or order, at our warehouse, as and when directed, upon the surrender of this receipt, properly indorsed." This language of the warehouse receipt all but conclusively shows that one to whom it may be delivered without indorsement or written assignment would not be entitled to receive possession of the automobile from the warehouse company. Such a holder manifestly could not enforce the delivery of the automobile to him by the warehouse company. How, then, can it be said that such a holder of this warehouse receipt acquires constructive, symbolic, or any other form of possession of the automobile, in the sense that the possession of the warehouse company is his possession? Manifestly, the warehouse company does not become the servant of such a holder of the warehouse receipt so that its possession becomes his possession; but the warehouse company remains the servant of the one to whom the receipt is issued—in this case, Ross & Skinner—as long as the warehouse receipt remains undorsed and untransferred in some form of writing as required by its terms. These considerations, it seems to us, leave no escape from the conclusion that the possession of this auto-

—delivery of
undorsed warehouse receipt.

mobile by the warehouse company at all times remained in Ross & Skinner, and, in turn, in the receiver of their property and affairs, until it was wrongfully taken possession and disposed of by appellant.

It may be, because of the negotiable character of this warehouse receipt, in the light of the provisions of our statute relating to warehouse receipts, that, had appellant, even after the appointment of respondent as receiver, procured the indorsement upon it of Ross & Skinner, and then presented it to the warehouse company and demanded possession of the automobile, offering to surrender the receipt so indorsed, the warehouse company would have freed itself from all liability by surrendering the possession of the automobile to appellant. But that is not this case. We are not here concerned with the question of how the warehouse company might have been freed from liability by the doing of something on its part strictly in keeping with the terms and negotiable character of the receipt. This is an action wherein recovery is sought from appellant because of its wrongful act in acquiring possession of this automobile at a time when it had no legal right to the possession of the automobile, either as against the warehouse company, or respondent as receiver representing the creditors of Ross & Skinner.

Our statute relating to bills of lading and warehouse receipts (Rem. Code § 3369) furnishes abundant ground for arguing that a warehouse receipt in the form of the one here in question can be transferred only by indorsement. Counsel for appellant, however, cite authority supporting the view that similar statutes relative to the transfer of warehouse receipts do not prevent valid transfers thereof by methods recognized as effectual in the absence of the statute. If we were here confronted with the sole question of the transfer of the title to this automobile as between Ross & Skinner and appellant, it would probably be necessary to enter upon an inquiry as to whether or not transfer by indorsement of such a warehouse receipt is, because of the statute, an exclusive method of transferring such a receipt and the title to the property therein described. But, as we have seen, we have here a question of the transfer of the possession of this automobile; and we think the very terms of the warehouse receipt answer in the negative the question of whether or not the mere delivery of such an undorsed warehouse receipt constitutes delivery of possession of the automobile.

The judgment is affirmed.

Holcomb, Bridges, and Mackintosh, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Lack of indorsement or irregular indorsement of warehouse receipt or bill of lading as affecting pledge of goods.

I. General rule, 589.

II. Transfer of warehouse receipt, 590.

III. Transfer of bill of lading by consignee, 592.

IV. Transfer of bill of lading by person other than consignee, 595.

V. Effect of statute making bill or receipt negotiable:

a. Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act, 603.

I. General rule.

The general rule unaffected by statute is that a sufficient symbolical delivery of goods to support a pledge may be effected by a mere transfer to the pledgee of a warehouse receipt, or bill of lading, describing the goods. The validity of the pledge is not destroyed by a lack of indorsement, or by an irregular indorsement, on such a document of title.

United States.—Re Levin (1909) 173 Fed. 119; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Bank of Holly Springs (1911) 236 Fed. 562, affirmed on this point in (1912) 115 C. C. A. 358, 195 Fed. 456; National Bank v. Bradley (1920) 264 Fed. 700.

Arkansas.—Bank of Newport v. Hirsch (1894) 59 Ark. 225, 27 S. W. 74. And see infra, V. c.

Illinois.—Michigan C. R. Co. v. Phillips (1871) 60 Ill. 190; Peters v. Elliott (1875) 78 Ill. 321; Lewis v. Springville Bkg. Co. (1897) 166 Ill. 311, 46 N. E. 743.

Indiana.—Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Irvin (1894) 46 Ind. 180. See also Toner v. Citizens' State Bank (1900) 25 Ind. App. 29, 56 N. E. 731.

Iowa.—Morse v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 226, 34 N. W. 825; Shaffer Bros. v. Rhynders (1902) 116 Iowa, 472, 89 N. W. 1099; What Cheer Sav. Bank v. Mowery (1910) 149 Iowa, 114, 128 N. W. 7.

Kentucky.—Petitt v. First Nat. Bank (1868) 4 Bush, 334; Sabel v. Planters Nat. Bank (1901) 110 Ky. 299, 61 S. W. 367; Kentucky Ref. Co. v. Bank of Morillon (1905) 28 Ky. L. Rep. 486, 89 S. W. 492.

Louisiana.—Blanc v. Germania Nat. Bank (1905) 114 La. 739, 38 So. 537.

Massachusetts.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs (1869) 102 Mass. 291; First Nat. Bank v. Dearborn (1874) 115 Mass. 219, 15 Am. Rep. 92; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (1874) 115 Mass. 228. See also Allen v. Williams (1832) 12 Pick. 297, dictum.

V.—continued.

b. Uniform Bills of Lading Act, 604.

c. Other statutes, 605.

VI. Rule in Georgia, 609.

Missouri.—Davenport Nat. Bank v. Homeyer (1869) 45 Mo. 145, 100 Am. Dec. 363; Skilling v. Bollman (1878) 6 Mo. App. 76, affirmed in (1881) 73 Mo. 665, 39 Am. Rep. 537; Clary v. Tyson (1903) 97 Mo. App. 586, 71 S. W. 710; American Zinc, Lead & Smelting Co. v. Markle Lead Works (1903) 102 Mo. App. 158, 76 S. W. 668. See also infra, V. c.

New York.—Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290; City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136; Cayuga County Nat. Bank v. Daniels (1872) 47 N. Y. 631; Marine Bank v. Wright (1871) 48 N. Y. 1; Merchants Bank v. Union R. & Transp. Co. (1877) 69 N. Y. 373; Becker v. Hallgarten (1881) 86 N. Y. 167; Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer (1888) 108 N. Y. 242, 15 N. E. 311; First Nat. Bank v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 160, 32 N. Y. Supp. 604; Driggs v. Dean (1895) 87 Hun, 319, 34 N. Y. Supp. 342, dictum; Sather Bkg. Co. v. Hartwig (1898) 23 Misc. 89, 51 N. Y. Supp. 677; Canandaigua Nat. Bank v. Southern R. Co. (1909) 64 Misc. 327, 118 N. Y. Supp. 668. See also Cartwright v. Wilmerding (1862) 24 N. Y. 521. But see infra, V. b.

Ohio.—Emery v. Irving Nat. Bank (1874) 25 Ohio St. 360, 18 Am. Rep. 299. See also Hunt v. Bode (1902) 66 Ohio St. 255, 64 N. E. 126.

Pennsylvania.—Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (1878) 87 Pa. 525; Holmes v. Bailey (1879) 92 Pa. 57; Richardson v. Nathan (1895) 167 Pa. 513, 31 Atl. 740. See also Bissell v. Steel (1871) 67 Pa. 443. And see infra, V. c.

Texas.—Campbell v. Alford (1882) 57 Tex. 159; Prendergast v. Williamson (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 725, 26 S. W. 421; National Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1906) 41 Tex. Civ. App. 535, 93 S. W. 209; West Texas Nat. Bank v. Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 194 S. W. 835. Compare Carter v. Farmers' Nat.

Bank (1920) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 224 S. W. 265, decided under a specific statute relating to a certificate issued by a public weigher.

With respect to an objection made by counsel in Blanc v. Germania Nat. Bank (1905) 114 La. 739, 38 So. 537, to the effect that the act of pledge did not describe or identify the warehouse receipts as required by statute, the court said: "The clear distinction between this case and that of Pierson v. Metropolitan Bank (1901) 106 La. 298, 30 So. 885, is that in that case the pledged receipts did not describe the property. Here, for all that appears, the receipts may have contained a perfect description of the property. The one receipt that is in the record does so. It identifies the packages by the mark and the number of each. So true is this that the complaint is not, as it was in the Pierson Case, that the receipts do not identify the packages, but that the act of pledge does not identify the receipts. The receipts were actually delivered into the possession of the pledgee, than which no better identification could be desired. In fact, the mere delivery was sufficient, without other formality whatever. Act 157 of 1900, p. 239."

In Scharff v. Meyer (1896) 133 Mo. 428, 54 Am. St. Rep. 672, 34 S. W. 858, wherein the rights of a pledgee as against an attaching creditor of the shipper were involved, the court made the following explanation: "Section 2482, Louisiana Code, does not, as supposed, provide that the only means of the transfer of a bill of lading shall be by indorsement. The law merchant is part of the common law; by it bills of lading are transferable by delivery, and statutes in derogation thereof should be strictly construed. Therefore, the statutes of the state which provide that indorsement and delivery of bills of lading shall pass title should not be so construed as to mean that such bills may not be transferred by delivery for a valuable consideration."

II. Transfer of warehouse receipt.

In several cases it has been held that a delivery of a warehouse receipt without an indorsement is a transfer of the possession of the goods described therein which will support a pledge. Bank of Newport v. Hirsch (1894) 59 Ark. 225, 27 S. W. 74; Cartwright v. Wilmerding (1862) 24 N. Y. 521; Driggs v. Dean (1895) 87 Hun, 819, 34 N. Y. Supp. 342; National Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1906) 41 Tex. Civ. App. 535, 93 S. W. 209. See also Hunt v. Bode (1902) 66 Ohio St. 255, 64 N. E. 126. Compare Toner v. Citizens' State Bank (1900) 25 Ind. App. 29, 56 N. E. 731. But see the reported case (HASTINGS v. LINCOLN TRUST Co. ante, 583).

In National Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Tex.) supra, it appeared that a bank, as security for advances to the owner of certain goods, received warehouse receipts therefor, one of which made the goods deliverable to the owner, the others directly to the bank. The receipts contained a provision that they were not negotiable. The goods were sold to a purchaser under an agreement that the pledge to the bank should continue as security for the purchase money. In holding that the lien of the bank was superior to the rights of a creditor of the purchaser who levied on the goods, the court said: "Bills of lading and warehouse receipts, under the law, are not considered negotiable in the sense that bills, notes, etc., are considered, but are regarded as representatives of the property covered by them, and when delivered, with or without indorsement, in deference to the agreement of parties, are a sufficient constructive delivery. Campbell v. Alford (1882) 57 Tex. 159, supra; Adoue v. Seeligson (1881) 54 Tex. 595; Osborn v. Koenigheim (1882) 57 Tex. 92, supra. The compress company recognizes the right of appellee to the property, for its custom and usage were to consider the holders of the receipts as the owners of the property and entitled to demand same when desired. Under this view the appellee was entitled to this action, unless, by the deal with Witherspoon, as shown by the fact, appellee was divested of the pledge. We are unable to see that the relation of appellee to the property was changed in any manner by such deal.

Dement parted with his interest in the cotton, and Witherspoon simply took his position, the understanding being that the cotton should remain pledged for the purchase money. The receipts remaining with appellee, and Witherspoon agreeing and consenting thereto, did not alter appellee's relations to the property in any sense."

In Cartwright v. Wilmerding (1862) 24 N. Y. 521, it was held that there was a valid pledge of goods described in warehouse receipts of a government bonded warehouse, where it appeared that an advance was made by the pledgee at the date of the transfer of the receipts to him, though no indorsements were made thereon until a few days later, when it was discovered that they had been inadvertently omitted. Although the New York Factors' Act of 1830 was discussed in the opinion as to other points in the case, the question relating to the indorsement of the receipts appears to have been determined in accordance with the custom of the trade and the rules of common law.

In Driggs v. Dean (1895) 87 Hun, 319, 34 N. Y. Supp. 342, it appeared that a depositor of goods in a warehouse delivered the warehouse receipts to a bank as collateral security for the payment of his note to the bank. In holding that the warehouseman was entitled to collect storage charges from a guarantor of the note, who paid it, received the receipts, and exercised rights of ownership over the goods, the court said: "It will thus be seen, as already said, that the real question upon this appeal is, Did the defendants, on the transfer and delivery of the warehouse receipts to them, become the owners of the property covered by such receipts? We do not regard this as being any longer an open question. In Colebrooke on Collateral Securities it is said: 'Section 413. . . . The transfer for value, as collateral security, of warehouse receipts, by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery only, where such receipts are made payable to "holder" or "only upon the return of this receipt," vests the legal title and possession of the property in the pledgee, and is equivalent to an actual delivery of the property. The warehouseman at once, without notice, becomes the bailee of the lender of money upon the receipt he has issued. The title to the property passes by such transfer to the pledgee, under the law merchant, independent of any statute. A formal assignment of the document is not required, as the indorsement of itself sufficiently indicates the intention of the pledgeor to pass the title and possession. . . . Section 414. . . . The pledgee of warehouse receipts, receiving the same, with or without indorsement, as collateral upon a bona fide loan or discount of commercial paper, stands in the same privileged position as a bona fide purchaser for value of like receipts. An indefeasible title to the property represented by the receipts is vested in the bona fide pledgee for value, and he is entitled to its possession. . . . Such innocent pledgee is a bona fide holder in the usual course of business, and has something more than a mere lien for his advances, taking the title to the property and the right to its actual possession. . . . The pledgee of warehouse receipts is under no obligation to notify the warehouseman of the transfer to him of such receipts as collateral security.' "

It has been held, moreover, that where goods had been pledged to one person by a delivery of warehouse receipts, a second pledge subject to the first one could be made by a written agreement of the pledgeor and the second pledgee, and a written notice to the first pledgee, and that the second pledge was valid as against the general creditors of the pledgeor. Apparently there was no indorsement on the warehouse receipts to the second pledgee. Whether there was such an indorsement to the first pledgee is not stated in the report of the case. Hunt v. Bode (1902) 66 Ohio St. 255, 64 N. E. 126.

In Toner v. Citizens' State Bank (1900) 25 Ind. App. 29, 56 N. E. 731, it was held that a warehouse receipt delivered by a depositor to the plaintiff, without indorsement, for the purpose of securing a debt created at the date of the transfer, gave to the plaintiff an equitable interest in the wheat described in the receipt, but that the security was subject to claims of the warehouseman against the depositor, arising before they were notified of the transfer of the receipt.

III. Transfer of bill of lading by consignee.

In a large number of cases it has been held that where a bill of lading of goods is transferred by the person to whose order they are deliverable, to a bank, to secure an advance to him by the bank, a valid pledge of the goods is consummated, though the bill of lading is not indorsed, or is irregularly indorsed.

United States.—New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Bank of Holly Springs (1911) 236 Fed. 562, affirmed on this point in (1912) 115 C. C. A. 358.

Illinois.—Peters v. Elliott (1875) 78 Ill. 321.

Kentucky.—Sabel v. Planters Nat. Bank (1901) 110 Ky. 299, 61 S. W. 367; Kentucky Ref. Co. v. Bank of Morillion (1905) 28 Ky. L. Rep. 486, 89 S. W. 492.

Massachusetts.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (1874) 115 Mass. 228.

Missouri.—Skilling v. Bollman (1878) 6 Mo. App. 76, affirmed in (1881) 73 Mo. 665, 39 Am. Rep. 537.

New York.—City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136; Merchants' Bank v. Union R. & Transp. Co. (1877) 69 N. Y. 373; First Nat. Bank v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 160, 32 N. Y. Supp. 604.

Pennsylvania.—Richardson v. Nathan (1895) 167 Pa. 513, 31 Atl. 740.

Texas.—West Texas Nat. Bank v. Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 194 S. W. 835.

In Merchants' Bank v. Union R. & Transp. Co. (1877) 69 N. Y. 373, the court said: "This evidence abundantly shows that a draft was drawn, advances made, and that the teas were hypothecated, as already stated, to secure the amount to the plaintiff. As the evidence stood, the plaintiff made out a clear and unquestioned right to the teas by indisputable facts showing the transaction, which was also supported by a possession of the bill of lading, and the other papers essential to establish its claim to the teas. And unless it was necessary that the bill of lading should be actually indorsed by Thorel & Company, its title was beyond any dispute. We think the plaintiff's title was perfect and complete without such indorsement. The rule is well settled that property or goods shipped by a bill of lading drawn to order may be transferred by delivery to a third person without any indorsement. . . . Bills of lading are choses in action, and no rule is better established than that instruments of this character may be transferred for a valuable consideration by delivery only. Although the plaintiff was not a party to the bill of lading, it cannot affect his right to the contract contained in the same, if he acquired it lawfully."

In New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Bank of Holly Springs (1911) 236 Fed. 562, affirmed on this point in (1912) 195 Fed. 456, it appeared that a bank received warehouse receipts on cashing checks for the purchase of cotton, that thereafter the warehouse receipts were given to the purchasers of the cotton to enable them to resell it, and bills of lading made out to the shippers' order, but not indorsed, were delivered to the bank, and drafts with the bills of lading attached were forwarded by it for collection. Fictitious bills of lading for the same cotton were delivered for value to a third person, and the cotton was delivered by the defendant railroad company to the holder of the fictitious bills. In granting a decree in favor of the bank and against the railroad company for the conversion of the cotton, the court held that the pledge of the cotton to the bank for the money or credit advanced by it was not affected by the fact that the bills of lading which it received were not indorsed. It appeared that, after the drafts with the genuine bills of lading attached were dishonored and returned to the bank, the bills of lading were indorsed by the shippers, but that indorsement was apparently made after the delivery of the goods on the fictitious bills of lading, and no importance was given to it in the decision.

In Skilling v. Bollman (1878) 6 Mo. App. 76, affirmed in (1881) 73 Mo. 665, 39 Am. Rep. 537, it appeared that bills of lading were made out in triplicate for goods deliverable to the order of the shipper, a corporation. One of the bills of lading was secretly taken from the office of the corporation by one of its officers, who accompanied the shipment of goods and made a sale thereof to the defendants. Another bill of lading was indorsed by another officer of the corporation, who ordinarily transacted such business, to factors of the corporation, and deposited with the plaintiff bank as security for a prior indebtedness. It was held that the right of the plaintiff to the goods as security for the debt due to it, as against the defendants, depended on whether the transfer of the bill of lading to it preceded the sale to the defendants. The court of appeals stated that no indorsement on the bill of lading was necessary to perfect the symbolical delivery of the property to the plaintiff. The supreme court in its opinion affirming the judgment of the court of appeals did not directly refer to the lack of an indorsement of the bill of lading to the plaintiff bank, but its decision was apparently to the same effect, since the only indorsement mentioned was one to the factors of the shippers.

In West Texas Nat. Bank v. Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 194 S. W. 835, it appeared that a person presented to a bank a draft drawn by the shipper on a purchaser of a carload of wheat, and a bill of lading made out to the order of the shipper, and indorsed by the person presenting it in the shipper's name. It further appeared that the bank discounted the draft, which was thereafter forwarded through intermediate agencies to another bank for collection, and was paid by the drawee, the purchaser of the wheat. In a proceeding against the collecting bank to garnish the amount realized on the draft as the property of the shipper, it was held that the bank which discounted the draft acquired a valid lien on the carload of wheat, and was entitled to be reimbursed out of the proceeds therefrom, the court saying: "The draft was drawn by Allen in favor of the Big Springs bank. To it was attached shipper's order bill of lading in favor of Allen. These facts, standing alone, would make the Big Springs Bank the owner of the funds when collected, unless they had been in turn assigned to its correspondents. . . . The fact that the bill of lading was not indorsed by Allen would not, we think, under the circumstances, make any difference. The assignment could be proven in other manner than by indorsement either of the draft or the bill of lading. National State Bank v. Ricketts (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 648; Singletary v. Goeman (1909) 58 Tex. Civ. App. 5, 123 S. W. 436. The bill of lading being attached to a draft drawn by Allen in favor of the Big Springs Bank, with notation on the face of the draft to the bill of lading attached, would be, we think, itself a sufficient assignment of the bill of lading upon its delivery with the attached draft, to the bank; at any rate, all the parties to this transaction so treated it, or recognized that the indorsement of Allen's name by Hatch was sufficient; for otherwise the Wichita Mill & Elevator Company would have had no right to the possession of the wheat when it took up the draft and bill of lading. When the further fact is developed that Hatch, and not Allen, took the draft to the bank, and himself collected the proceeds of the draft, does this discharge the burden and show that Hatch was acting wrongfully, and that the bank knew that he was doing so? Ordinarily, no presumption of wrongdoing exists, and when, as in this case, Hatch presented to the Big Springs Bank a draft drawn by Allen in favor of said bank on a third person, at the same time indorsing Allen's name to the bill of lading, and collecting the proceeds from the bank, it would seem to us that one who has assumed the burden of attacking the transaction should show that Hatch was acting without authority from Allen; and no presumption that Hatch was guilty of forgery, and the bank officials aiding and abetting him in the commission of the crime, could be invoked by appellee as discharging the burden of proof upon it."
18 A.L.R.—38.

Even though a bill of lading made out to the shipper's order is indorsed specially to a person other than one who receives it as collateral security for a debt, it has been held that the latter has a special property in the goods described in the bill of lading, which is superior to the rights of another creditor of the shipper, who, after such delivery of the bill of lading, attaches the goods. Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (1874) 115 Mass. 228; City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136; Richardson v. Nathan (1895) 167 Pa. 513, 31 Atl. 740.

In Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (Mass.) supra, it appeared that bills of lading were issued by a carrier for certain barrels of flour which were made deliverable to the shipper's order. The shipper indorsed on each bill of lading, "Deliver the within to the order of E. Williams & Co. R. H. Sage," and turned them over to a bank as collateral security for advances made by the bank in discounting bills of exchange drawn on E. Williams & Company. The bills of exchange were not accepted, and were returned to the bank. Thereafter the drafts and bills of lading were returned to the shipper, and the bills of lading were transmitted to the railroad company. New drafts were given to the bank, to which were attached bills of lading indorsed, "Deliver to the order of Crockett Bros. R. H. Sage." The drafts with the bill of lading attached were forwarded from Chicago to Boston for collection. A part of the flour was attached in Boston in an action brought by a creditor of the shipper. After the attachment, and after Crockett Brothers refused to accept the drafts, the bank exchanged the bills of lading for new bills of lading indorsed to the bank. In an action brought by the bank against a deputy sheriff who made the attachment, it was held that the delivery of the bills of lading to the bank as collateral security for its allowance gave to it, at least, a special property in the flour, coupled with a right of immediate possession, on which it could maintain an action of replevin.

In Richardson v. Nathan (Pa.) supra, it appeared that bills of lading were issued by a carrier for two carloads of iron, consigned to the order of the shipper with a direction to notify J. H. Richardson & Company. The bills of lading were indorsed by the shipper, "Deliver to the order of J. H. Richardson & Co.," and delivered to a bank as security for the amount of a draft on J. H. Richardson & Company, discounted by the bank. After J. H. Richardson & Company refused to accept or pay the draft, the indorsements on the bills of lading were erased, and they were indorsed in blank by the shipper. In holding that the validity of the pledge of the iron to the bank was not affected by the special indorsement to J. H. Richardson & Company, the court said: "We think the indorsements on the bills of lading cannot, under the circumstances shown by the special verdict, be justly considered as injuriously affecting the rights of the appellant to the property specified in the bills. The delivery of them was obviously made, accepted, and intended as a pledge of the property as security for the sum advanced or paid on the draft to which they were attached. The purpose of the parties being evident, delivery without indorsement was sufficient to accomplish it. Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (1878) 87 Pa. 525. The indorsements which are thought by the appellee's counsel to afford his clients some advantages, and to abridge the rights of the appellant in this contest, were in the following words, to wit: 'Deliver to the order of J. H. Richardson & Co.' These indorsements were probably regarded by the consignor as nothing more than a direction to the pledgee to deliver the property specified in the bills to the appellees, on their acceptance and payment of the draft, together with charges for transportation, storage, etc. His cancellation of the indorsements on their refusal to honor his draft is in accord with this view and with what we have seen was his purpose in delivering the bills. The indorsements were not intended to qualify the rights of the pledgee, and we cannot assent to a construction of them which would defeat the common purpose of the parties to the transaction, which, we think, should be considered in the determination of this issue as if the indorsements had not been made. Thus considered, the effect of it was to invest the appellant with the rights of a purchaser of the property, so far as it might be necessary to exercise such rights for its protection. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 243, and cases there cited. In other words, the appellant, after the delivery of the bills, must be deemed and taken to have been the owner of the property for the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was pledged. Act of September 24, 1867, P. L. 1363, Purdon's Dig. p. 145."

In City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 186, it appeared that grain was consigned to the order of the shipper, and that he delivered the bills of lading therefor to a bank as security for its advance to the shipper in discounting drafts drawn on the purchaser. On the bills of lading there were indorsed orders to deliver the grain described therein to the purchaser, on his payment of the accompanying drafts, but there was no indorsement to the bank. The shipper, after the drafts were protested for nonpayment, directed the sale of the grain by the partner of the purchaser, who sold the entire shipment, and a delivery of a large part of it was made under the sale, although the bills of lading were not presented. The court of appeals following Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290, held that, although there was no indorsement of the bills of lading to the bank, their delivery on the discounting of the drafts constituted a valid pledge of the grain, and conferred on the bank a title to the property on which it could base an action of replevin against a carrier.

The delivery of an unindorsed bill of lading to the shipper's order has, moreover, been held to be a transfer of possession sufficient to support a pledge, though the words "not negotiable" were printed on the back of the order bill of lading, and a penal statute imposed a fine or term of imprisonment on an agent or officer of a railroad company for the delivery of goods shipped under a bill of lading, unless the words "not negotiable" were plainly written or stamped on the face of the instrument. First Nat. Bank v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 160, 32 N. Y. Supp. 604. In that case the court said: "As the printing of the words 'not negotiable' on the back of the bill did not comply with the statute, it may be doubtful whether they in any way affected the rights of the Rochester bank. It had a right to assume that the defendant would not deliver the property without production of the bill, and so it would be able to obtain payment of the draft. Aside from this, by reference to condition No. 9, it was apparently within the contemplation of the parties that if the consignment was in the form which it in fact appears to be on the face of the bill, it then became the subject of transfer, and the rights of third parties might intervene, and so the property must not be delivered without surrender of the bill. I am of the opinion that the Rochester bank had a valid claim on the property to the extent of the draft, and this inured to the benefit of the plaintiff, although the property had passed from defendant's control before the plaintiff made its advancement. . . . The improper delivery by defendant did not relieve it from its liability."

Similarly, it was held in Peters v. Elliott (1875) 78 Ill. 321, that, although a shipping receipt contained a stipulation that it was not transferable, a bank which accepted it as security for a debt thereby became a pledgee of the goods, and the bank's lien on the goods was superior to the rights of attaching creditors of the consignor. Apparently there was no indorsement or assignment on the shipping receipt, though that fact is not definitely stated in the report of the case.

IV. Transfer of bill of lading by person other than consignee.

Though the shipper of goods is not named in a bill of lading as consignee, it has frequently been held that, if he has retained the instrument, he may make a valid pledge of the goods by transferring it without indorsement, as collateral security for an advance to him.

Illinois.—Michigan O. R. Co. v. Phillips (1871) 60 Ill. 190.

Indiana.—Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Irvin (1874) 46 Ind. 180.

Iowa.—Morse v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 226, 34 N. W. 825; Shaffer v. Rhynders (1902) 116 Iowa, 472, 89 N. W. 1099; What Cheer Sav. Bank v. Mowery (1910) 149 Iowa, 114, 128 N. W. 7.

Kentucky.—Petitt v. First Nat. Bank (1868) 4 Bush, 334.

Massachusetts.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs (1869) 102 Mass. 291; First Nat. Bank v. Dearborn (1874) 115 Mass. 219, 15 Am. Rep. 92.

Missouri.—Davenport Nat. Bank v. Homeyer (1869) 45 Mo. 145, 100 Am. Dec. 363; Clary v. Tyson (1903) 97 Mo. App. 586, 71 S. W. 710; American Zinc, Lead & Smelting Co. v. Markle Lead Works (1903) 102 Mo. App. 158, 76 S. W. 668.

New York.—Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290; Cayuga County Nat. Bank v. Daniels (1872) 47 N. Y. 631; Marine Bank v. Wright (1871) 48 N. Y. 1; Becker v. Hallgarten (1881) 86 N. Y. 167; Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer (1888) 108 N. Y. 242, 15 N. E. 311; Sather Bkg. Co. v. Hartwig (1898) 23 Misc. 89, 51 N. Y. Supp. 677.

Ohio.—Emery v. Irving Nat. Bank (1874) 25 Ohio St. 360, 18 Am. Rep. 299.

Pennsylvania.—Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (1878) 87 Pa. 525; Holmes v. Bailey (1879) 92 Pa. 57. See also Bissell v. Steel (1871) 67 Pa. 443.

In First Nat. Bank v. Dearborn (Mass.) supra, it appeared that a receipt issued by a railroad company for certain barrels of flour received for shipment contained the essential averments of a straight bill of lading, and was transferred by the shipper, without indorsement, to a bank as security for a credit by the bank on the shipper's account, for the amount of a draft transferred to it. In holding that the bank was entitled to replevin the flour in the hands of a deputy sheriff, under a writ of attachment in favor of another creditor of the shipper, the court said: "It is true that a receipt of this kind does not purport on its face to have the quasi negotiable character which is sometimes said to belong to bills of lading in the ordinary form; neither does it purport in terms to be good to the bearer. But, independently of any indorsement or formal transfer in writing, the possession and production of it would be evidence indicating to the carrier that the bank was entitled to demand the property, and that he would be justified in delivering it to them. There are cases in which the delivery of a receipt of this nature, though not indorsed or formally transferred, yet intended as a transfer, has been held to be a good symbolical delivery of the property described in it. In Haille v. Smith (1796) 1 Bos. & P. 563, 126 Eng. Reprint, 1066, Eyre, Ch. J., uses this language: 'I see no reason why we should not expound the doctrine of transfer very largely upon the agreement of the parties, and upon their intent to carry the substance of that agreement into execution.' In Allen v. Williams (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 297, 301, Shaw, Ch. J., in delivering the judgment of the court, says: 'Even a sale or pledge of the property without a formal bill of lading, by the shipper, would operate as a good assignment of the property; and the delivery of an informal or unindorsed bill of lading, or other documentary evidence of the shipper's property, would be a good symbolical delivery, so as to vest the property in the plaintiffs.' It is true that he adds that it was not necessary to place the case upon that ground. But this dictum was cited with entire approbation, in a case raising that exact point, in the court of appeals of the state of New York. Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290, in that case, as in this, the plaintiff had discounted a draft drawn against a quantity of flour, and its title, as in this case, depended upon a carrier's receipt, delivered to it without any written indorsement. The court held that the plaintiff thereby acquired a sufficient title to the property, and could call the consignee to account for it, he having converted the property to his own use without accepting the draft. It is not necessary to hold that the plaintiff was absolute owner of the property; it is enough that it had a right of property and of possession to secure the payment of the particular draft; and the right of the former owner, Parks, in the specific property, had become divested, leaving him only a right in the surplus money which might remain after a sale of the flour, and a payment of the draft from the proceeds." See to the same effect, Clary v. Tyson (1903) 97 Mo. App. 586, 71 S. W. 710.

In Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290, it was held that, where a carrier's receipt was delivered without indorsement to a bank as security for an advance by the bank, the latter could claim as a pledgee a special property in the goods, and maintain an action of trover against the purchaser of the goods described in the receipt, who obtained possession of them without accepting the draft drawn on him for their payment. It appeared that the consignee named in the receipt or informal bill of lading was the purchaser.

In Emery v. Irving Nat. Bank (1874) 25 Ohio St. 360, 18 Am. Rep. 299, it was held that where a bill of lading stated that goods were received from one Mirrieles, and were "for Thos. Emery's Sons," Mirrieles could, before they were delivered by the carrier to "Thos. Emery's Sons," make a valid pledge of the goods by a transfer, without indorsement, of the bill of lading to a bank for an advance of the purchase price. The court said: "It is claimed, however, that these bills of lading were not transferable by delivery merely, for the reason that they were not made so negotiable by their terms. Bills of lading are not, and cannot be made, by any form of words, negotiable in the sense that commercial paper payable to bearer, or order, or assigns, is negotiable. If such words of negotiability be contained in them, they only indicate the intention of the shipper as to the person for whose use the consignment is made. If the goods be deliverable, by the terms of the bill, to the consignee or his order, there can be no doubt that the person to whom the bill may be transferred by the consignor would be charged with notice of the rights of the consignee; and, on the other hand, if the bill be made to the use of the consignor, or his order, or his assigns, the consignee would be charged with notice of the rights of those to whom the bill may have been transferred. But, in either case, the question is open to inquiry as to what such rights may be, and can be determined only by inquiry into the real nature and character of the transaction. A bill of lading, being symbolical of the property described in it, like the property it represents, may be transferred by delivery merely, and this is so without regard to the presence or absence of words of negotiability on its face. It is unlike commercial paper, however, in this: the assignee cannot acquire a better title to the property thus symbolically delivered than his assignor had at the time of assignment. It is also claimed that these bills of lading were not transferred to the bank until after the consignees had obtained possession of the goods, and a right had thereby accrued to them to hold the goods, or the price thereof, for the satisfaction of the claims due them from their consignor. This claim is based on the theory that the possession of the carrier was the possession of the consignees, and has already been answered. We do not understand it to be claimed that the goods were, in fact, delivered to the consignees by the carrier, before the transfer to the bank of the bills of lading. But, if it were so claimed, we could not disturb the finding of the court below on that question. From the weight of the testimony, we think the bills of lading had been transferred to the bank before the goods arrived at the place of their destination."

The following cases are, apparently, to the same effect, though the reports of the facts do not state explicitly that the bills of lading were not indorsed to the pledgee: Cayuga County Nat. Bank v. Daniels (1872) 47 N. Y. 631;

Marine Bank v. Wright (1871) 48 N. Y. 1; Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer (1888) 108 N. Y. 242, 15 N. E. 311; Sather Bkg. Co. v. Hartwig (1898) 23 Misc. 89, 51 N. Y. Supp. 677.

In Morse v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 226, 34 N. W. 825, it appeared, that the plaintiffs contracted to sell certain grain to a firm of grain dealers. The grain was loaded in cars, and possession was given to the latter firm for the purpose of inspection, though title did not pass, under the prevailing custom and general rules of law, until the price was paid. A shipment of the grain was made by the purchaser from Minneapolis, under bills of lading naming the purchaser as consignor and a third party at Davenport, Iowa, as consignee. Drafts drawn on the consignee, with the bills of lading unindorsed, were presented to a bank in Minneapolis which discounted them, credited the purchaser with the amount thereof, and cashed a check of the latter firm drawn against the credit on the draft. The bank sent the drafts to the consignee who accepted them, but refused to pay them on being notified that the plaintiffs claimed the ownership of the grain. Under a statute of Minnesota protecting purchasers and creditors of a vendee in possession by virtue of a contract of conditional sale, it was held that the bank, as a pledgee, became the owner of the grain as security for the payment of the drafts. The trial court made the following statements in its conclusions of law, which were adopted by the supreme court and incorporated in its opinion: "By discounting the drafts, the bank became the owner of the property represented by the bills of lading; and the fact that the bills were not indorsed is immaterial. Colebrooke, Collateral Securities, §§ 382, 383; Security Bank v. Luttgen (1882) 29 Minn. 363, 13 N. W. 151; Holmes v. Bailey (1879) 92 Pa. 57; Emery v. Irving Nat. Bank (1874) 25 Ohio St. 360, 18 Am. Rep. 299. The bank became the owner of the grain, however, merely as pledgee, and as security merely for the payment of the drafts. The intervener, Herman, by accepting the drafts, became liable to the bank. Hoffman v. National City Bank (1871) 12 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 20 L. ed. 366, and cases cited. But by such acceptance he did not become the owner of the grain, but, upon payment of the draft, he would succeed to the ownership of the grain to the extent of such payment. The recovery by the bank in this case will extinguish the draft, the liability of Herman thereon, and whatever contingent interest he may have in this controversy. It is accordingly found that the intervener bank recover of plaintiffs, in each case, the amount due on said draft, and that the draft be delivered up to the clerk of the court for cancelation upon payment of this judgment, which may be entered in favor of bank."

Likewise, in American Zinc, Lead, & Smelting Co. v. Markle Lead Works (1903) 102 Mo. App. 158, 76 S. W. 668, it was held that where a purchaser obtained possession of a quantity of ore before paying therefor, and, on receiving from a carrier bills of lading consigning the ore to a third person, delivered them, without indorsement, to a bank, to secure it for an advance in cashing drafts to which the bills of lading were attached, the bank acquired a property interest in the ore superior to the rights of the unpaid seller.

In Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Irvin (1874) 46 Ind. 180, it appeared that the consignors named in a straight bill of lading presented to the plaintiffs a draft on the consignees with the bill of lading attached. The plaintiffs discounted the draft and held the bill of lading as collateral security. In regard to the lack of an indorsement on the latter instrument, the court said: "In support of a motion for a new trial, and to show that the court erred in overruling it, it is insisted that there is no evidence tending to show a transfer of the bill of lading to McEwen & Jones. They had possession of it, and of the draft which was drawn against it, and these facts made at least a prima facie case for the plaintiffs. See authorities above cited. Also Gibson v. Stevens (1850) 8 How. (U. S.) 384, 400, 12 L. ed. 1128, 1129. In Bank of Roches- ter v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 505, 55 Am. Dec. 290, referring to Nathan v. Giles (1814) 5 Taunt. 558, 128 Eng. Reprint, 808, it is said: "The property in a cargo for which the master of a ship has signed bills of lading may be transferred by delivery, without indorsement of the bill of lading." See also Allen v. Williams (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 297. The case in 8 How., and the cases in 47 and 49 N. Y. [Cayuga County Nat. Bank v. Daniels (1872) 47 N. Y. 631, and Bailey v. Hudson River R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 70], fully establish the proposition that the delivery of the bill of lading transfers the title to the property. A formal assignment is not necessary. In the case of 47 N. Y. supra, it was held that the delivery of a bill of lading to a bank for the purpose of securing the payment of drafts drawn by the consignor upon the consignee, and discounted by the bank, is sufficient to transfer the title to the property covered by the bill of lading, subject to be divested by the acceptance and payment of the drafts. In our judgment, the delivery of the bill of lading to, and the payment of the draft by, McEwen & Jones, vested in them the title to the flour; and it was not divested by the acceptance of the draft by Comstock & Company, they not having paid the same."

In Shaffer Bros. v. Rhynders (1902) 116 Iowa, 472, 89 N. W. 1099, it appeared that a shipment of a carload of horses was made, and billed to a firm in Buffalo. The shipper drew a bill of exchange on the consignee in favor of a bank which advanced money for the purchase of the horses, and delivered to the bank the draft, and the bill of lading as security for its payment. It does not appear in the report of the case that the bill of lading was not indorsed, but the question of indorsement seems to have been considered immaterial. In holding that the bank received title to the horses, and that its title was superior to the rights of attaching creditors of the shipper, the court said: "The fact that the money was furnished by the bank, as alleged in its petition, is shown without dispute, as is also the further fact that the bill of lading was duly turned over to the bank to secure the payment of the draft made on Crandall & Company. The effect of the delivery of the bill of lading and draft was to transfer whatever title and interest Rhynders had in the property to the intervener, until the amount of the draft should be paid." See to the same effect, What Cheer Sav. Bank v. Mowery (1910) 149 Iowa, 114, 128 N. W. 7.

In Petitt v. First Nat. Bank (1868) 4 Bush (Ky.) 334, it appeared that bills of lading were issued by a carrier showing that a quantity of cotton was received from the owners for transportation to a certain consignee. The shippers presented a letter to the bank authorizing them to draw on the consignees for a part of the value of the cotton, and on the faith thereof the bank discounted two bills of exchange drawn on the consignees, and received from the shippers the bills of lading as security for the advance. It was held that, although the bills of lading were not indorsed, the bank, as a pledgee, acquired an interest in the cotton superior to the rights of attaching creditors of the shippers.

In Becker v. Hallgarten (1881) 86 N. Y. 167, the court stated, in holding that the delivery of a bill of lading unindorsed, to secure an advance to vendees of the goods described therein, deprived the vendors of the right of stoppage of the goods in transit: "The transaction between Goldstein and the vendees was effectual to pass the property to him, and so deprive the vendors of the right of stoppage, if it otherwise existed. That right may always be defeated by indorsing and delivering a bill of lading of the goods to a bona fide indorsee for a valuable consideration, without notice of the facts on which the right of stoppage would otherwise exist. This was held in Lickbarrow v. Mason (1787) 2 T. R. 63, 100 Eng. Reprint, 35, 5 T. R. 367, 683, 101 Eng. Reprint, 206, 380, 1 H. Bl. 357, 126 Eng. Reprint, 209, 6 East, 21, note, 102 Eng. Reprint, 1192, note, 4 Bro. P. C. 57, 2 Eng. Reprint, 39, 4 Eng. Rul. Cas. 756, and has since been deemed established. It does not impair the force of this position that the money was, in fact, advanced before the delivery of the bill of lading. The goods were in the possession of Goldstein when he paid over the money. The bill of lading was promised and was part of the consideration on which the money was paid, but, more than all, he had the right, under the authority given to him by B. & S., to take the bill of lading in any form, and it was made out for his benefit. City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136. Nor is it material, unless made so by the German law, that the bill of lading was not indorsed. Hallgarten & Company were Goldstein's agents, subject to his control, and, in making the bill of lading in their names as consignees, all was effected which the indorsement of a bill taken in the name of B. & S. would have accomplished. The cases cited by the respondent (Meyerstein v. Barber (1866) L. R. 2 C. P. (Eng.) 45; Short v. Simpson (1866) L. R. 1 C. P. (Eng.) 255, 1 Harr. & R. 181, 35 L. J. C. P. N. S. 147, 12 Jur. N. S. 258, 13 L. T. N. S. 674, 14 Week. Rep. 307) show that a bill so indorsed has the same effect, even if the ship containing the goods was at sea, as delivery of the goods themselves. Here there was a delivery of the goods to Goldstein, and the bill of lading followed the possession. The German law, as set out in evidence, has no application to the case in hand. It applies when the bill of lading is taken in the name of the vendee, or of some person through whom the party claiming its benefit must make title."

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs (1869) 102 Mass. 291, it was held that, where an unindorsed bill of lading which named the purchaser as consignee was attached to a draft on the purchaser and delivered by the seller and consignor to a bank, there was a question of fact for the jury as to whether there was a symbolical delivery of the goods which would constitute a pledge, or whether the bank was merely an agent of the consignor to deliver the bill of lading on payment of the draft. The reporter of the case states that there was evidence introduced by the plaintiff bank tending to show that the bank advanced the full amount of the draft to the consignor on receiving the draft and bill of lading. That fact, if sufficiently proved, would seem to be decisive of the question of the intention of the parties, which the court apparently regarded as determining whether there was a pledge. In the opinion, however, the evidence of an advance made by the bank was not mentioned. As to whether the delivery of the bill of lading without indorsement constituted a pledge, the court said: "The facts stated in this case are not sufficiently distinct and decisive to make it clear, as a matter of law, that the transaction between David Schwartz & Company and the plaintiffs was an actual transfer of property to them by way of pledge or security. The draft, in the ordinary course of the mails, would be presented for payment before the arrival of the property upon which it was drawn, and David Schwartz & Company would have been notified, by telegraph or otherwise, of its nonpayment, in time to prevent the property from coming to the possession of the defendant. It is argued that the facts are equally consistent with a purpose to constitute the bank only an agent to deliver the bill of lading to the defendant, to whom the property, by its terms, was consigned on payment of the draft; and that the right of action, if any, for the alleged conversion, is still in David Schwartz & Company. In the case of Stone v. Swift (1827) 4 Pick. (Mass.) 389, 16 Am. Dec. 349, it was held that a bill of lading, sent unindorsed in a letter, containing no words of transfer, did not give the party receiving it a claim to the property."

In Bissell v. Steel (1871) 67 Pa. 443, the court, in holding that the plaintiffs, to whom bills of lading were delivered without indorsement, on their making advances to the consignor, were not the absolute owners of the goods described in the instruments, intimated that they were pledgees; but the latter point was not decided, as it was not an issue in the case.

In Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (1878) 87 Pa. 525, it appeared that the consignees named in a bill of lading were factors who sold goods for the consignor on commission, and that they refused to pay a draft drawn on them by the consignor, because the latter was indebted to them on account of prior overdrafts. They received, however, the goods against which the draft was drawn, and sold them. The court held that the plaintiffs, to whom the bill of lading was transferred, without indorsement, as security for advances to the consignor, acquired a valid pledge of the goods as against the consignees, who received and sold them after refusing to pay the draft with the bill of lading attached, and therefore after notice of the rights of the plaintiff. See to the same effect, Holmes v. Bailey (1879) 92 Pa. 57, wherein the court said: "This case, we think, cannot be distinguished from Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (Pa.) supra. It was held in that case that, where a bill of lading is attached to a draft as security for its payment, and transferred for a valuable consideration, it is an appropriation of the property contained in the bill, whether it is indorsed or not. We do not see that the fact that the draft in this case was for more than the proceeds of the shipment makes any difference. The consignee was entitled to a receipt from the holder as his voucher, and an indorsement of the part payment on the draft would have made him perfectly secure."

In Michigan C. R. Co. v. Phillips (1871) 60 Ill. 190, it was held that, where the person named as consignee in a bill of lading was a factor or other agent of the shipper, the shipper could make a valid pledge of the goods described in the bill of lading, by surrendering that instrument, without an indorsement, to a bank, on the latter's discounting a draft to which the bill of lading was attached. The court said: "The question remains to be considered whether the bank stands in the relation of a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, and is entitled to the benefit belonging to such position. The exact position of the bank is to be regarded as that of pledgee, it holding the high wines as collateral security for money advanced; but whether it has an absolute property, or but a lien upon the goods, is not material, as respects the right to maintain this defense. In Grosvenor v. Phillips (1841) 2 Hill (N. Y.) 153, it is said a conventional lien, by way of pledge or mortgage, may as well be raised in the hands of a carrier, as a right by absolute sale. It is objected that there was no valid transfer of title, because the bill was not indorsed. Where the shipper is the owner of the goods, and no opposing interest or claim arises on the part of the carrier, consignee, or prior indorsee of the bill of lading, but, on the contrary, the carrier, as in this case, admits and sets up the interest claimed to be derived from the shipper, it is not perceived why the indorsement of the bill of lading should be deemed necessary for the transfer of the title to the goods embraced in it. The shipper's title, where he is owner, does not depend upon the bill of lading, but is independent of and before it. The mere insertion of the name of the consignee in the bill of lading does not vest in him the ownership of the goods. In this case, the consignees were merely the factors and commission merchants of the shipper; by the bill of lading the wines were to be delivered to them or the owner, it being the design, manifestly, to vest the property in the consignees only in case of their acceptance of the accompanying drafts, which were drawn on them." See to the same effect, Davenport Nat. Bank v. Homeyer (1869) 45 Mo. 145, 100 Am. Dec. 363, wherein it was said: "In a qualified and restricted sense, a bill of lading has the attribute of negotiability. Various authorities cited by the defendants' counsel show that this is so, and that such contracts may be transferred by indorsement and delivery. This is undoubtedly the accepted doctrine on that subject. It does not thence follow, however, that a transfer by manual delivery, merely, would be nugatory or ineffectual as against the consignor's factor, to whom the goods described in the bill of lading may have been shipped, as in the present case. But this is the defendant's point. It is plausible, but not sound. Nor is it sustained by the authorities cited in its support. Law v. Hatcher (1837) 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 364, goes no further than to affirm the proposition that the title to goods conveyed by a bill of lading would pass from the consignor to a purchaser, by an indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading to the vendee. This is but the common doctrine affirmed by all the cases. The question whether a mere manual delivery of the bill, without a written indorsement, would not have had the same effect, is a point not noticed in the case. Nor is it raised in the other cases to which the defendants' counsel refers us. Stone v. Swift (1827) 4 Pick. (Mass.) 389, 16 Am. Dec. 349, was a suit for malicious prosecution. It was there decided that the holder of an unindorsed bill of lading could not sue upon it in his own name. In Buffington v. Curtis (1819) 15 Mass. 497, 8 Am. Dec. 115, it was held that an indorsement of the bill of lading, without a delivery of it, did not transfer the title to the goods. In Allen v. Williams (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 297, it was held that, where the bill of lading was filled up with the name of a particular consignee or bearer, the mere delivery of the bill by the shipper, for value, passed the property as against the named consignee. And the court says that whether the transferee acquired by delivery of the bill of lading an absolute property in the goods, or a lien only, was immaterial. But it is urged that, although it be true that the delivery of a bill of lading, without indorsement, conveys the title to the goods it covers, when by the terms of the bill the goods are deliverable to 'bearer,' still, it would be otherwise when, as in this case, the bill contained no word or provision of equivalent force or meaning. This distinction is not shown to be recognized by any adjudicated case. The adjudication in the Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290, sustains fully the proposition that the delivery of a bill of lading for value, although unindorsed, and containing no provision for the delivery of the goods to bearer, carries with it the property in the goods covered by the bill, as against the consignor's factor; and this, although the consignor was indebted to his factor for advances made on account of prior shipments. That case, and the case at bar, are quite identical in all their material facts and circumstances. The bill of lading represents the property therein described, and a delivery of the bill is treated as a symbolical delivery of the property. A written indorsement may be necessary to transfer the contract so as to enable the transferee to sue on it in his own name, as in Buffington v. Curtis; but the delivery of the bill of lading, without indorsement, for value, transfers the property in the goods. In Bank of Rochester v. Jones, the court says: 'The true ground on which to sustain this transfer of property is by regarding the transaction as a sale to the bank in trust to deliver the property to the consignee, in case he accepted the drafts; and, if he refused to accept, then to sell the flour, and to retain out of the proceeds the amount of the drafts, and to pay the surplus to the consignor.' In the case at bar, the shippers were the owners of the flour, and had absolute control over it. They consigned it to the defendants, and drew upon them against the shipments, delivering over to the plaintiff the bills of lading as collateral to the drafts which the plaintiff discounted. The defendants having refused to accept, they were not at liberty to appropriate the flour, or the proceeds of it, to their own use. It was the property of the plaintiff for the purpose of meeting the dishonored drafts."

In Prendergast v. Williamson (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 725, 26 S. W. 421, it was held that, even where a seller delivered goods to a carrier and received bills of lading naming the purchasers as both consignors and consignees, the seller could pledge the goods by delivering the bills of lading to a bank making advances to him on the security thereof, and that the bank holding the bills of lading had an interest in the goods, to the extent of its advances, which was superior to the rights of the purchasers and of another bank which had made advances to the seller under an agreement that the bills of lading should be delivered to it. Apparently the bills of lading were not indorsed, and, if they had been, the indorsements would have been irregular, since they were not made by the consignees. See to the same effect, Canandaigua Nat. Bank v. Southern R. Co. (1909) 64 Misc. 327, 118 N. Y. Supp. 668. In the latter case it was also held that the printed words "Not negotiable," on the margin of a bill of lading, did not affect the rights of a pledgee receiving the instrument without indorsement. The court said: "This action is against the carrier for delivering the goods without the production of the bill of lading, and there is no evidence that the carrier knew that the bill of lading had been assigned to the plaintiff. Section 683 of the Penal Code makes it a misdemeanor for a common carrier to deliver goods for which a bill of lading has been issued, without the production of the bill of lading, unless the words 'Not negotiable' are written or stamped upon the bill. These words are printed upon this bill; and accordingly no right of action arises out of that section of the Penal Code. But, notwithstanding the words 'Not negotiable' which are printed upon this bill of lading, it is made to the order of J. W. Neumann & Company. The goods were not billed 'straight,' and the language of the bill of lading makes it negotiable, in the sense in which bills of lading are negotiated as security for advances upon shipments such as this was; and immediately following the words 'Not negotiable' is the positive statement that the surrender of the bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be required before the delivery of the property, pursuant to § 9 of the conditions on the back of the bill; and § 9, quoted above, is an unqualified assertion that, if the word 'order' is written on the bill before the name of the consignee, the surrender of the bill, properly indorsed, shall be required before the property is delivered; and, if any other form of consignment is used, it shall be optional with the carrier to deliver the property with or without a surrender of the bill of lading. Now, these conditions are not only for the protection of the carrier, but they afford an assurance to bankers, to whom application may be made for advances upon the security of the bills of lading, that the conditions expressed therein will be respected by the carriers; and, in my opinion, a cause of action exists here in favor of the plaintiff, against the defendant, for the delivery of the apples in question, without the production of the bill of lading."

The delivery of a bill of lading to the person who is named therein as the consignee, pursuant to an agreement to pledge the goods to him as security for advances, is clearly sufficient to effect the pledge of the goods, even though the bill of lading is not indorsed. Campbell v. Alford (1882) 57 Tex. 159.

V. Effect of statute making bill or receipt negotiable.

a. Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act.

The general rule as to a pledge of goods by a transfer of a warehouse receipt or bill of lading appears to be materially altered in jurisdictions where the Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act or the Uniform Bills of Lading Act has been adopted. The following provisions of the former act, it would seem, apply to pledges as well as to other transfers:

"Section 42. A person to whom a receipt has been transferred but not negotiated, acquires thereby, as against the transferrer, the title of the goods, subject to the terms of any agreement with the transferrer. If the receipt is non-negotiable such person also acquires the right to notify the warehouseman of the transfer to him of such receipt, and thereby to acquire the direct obligation of the warehouseman to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the receipt. Prior to the notification of the warehouseman by the transferrer or transferee of a non-negotiable receipt, the title of the transferee to the goods and the right to acquire the obligation of the warehouseman may be defeated by the levy of an attachment or execution upon the goods by a creditor of the transferrer, or by a notification to the warehouseman by the transferrer or a subsequent purchaser from the transferrer of a sub-

Even though a bill of lading made out to the shipper's order is indorsed specially to a person other than one who receives it as collateral security for a debt, it has been held that the latter has a special property in the goods described in the bill of lading, which is superior to the rights of another creditor of the shipper, who, after such delivery of the bill of lading, attaches the goods. Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (1874) 115 Mass. 228; City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136; Richardson v. Nathan (1895) 167 Pa. 513, 31 Atl. 740.

In Fifth Nat. Bank v. Bayley (Mass.) supra, it appeared that bills of lading were issued by a carrier for certain barrels of flour which were made deliverable to the shipper's order. The shipper indorsed on each bill of lading, "Deliver the within to the order of E. Williams & Co. R. H. Sage," and turned them over to a bank as collateral security for advances made by the bank in discounting bills of exchange drawn on E. Williams & Company. The bills of exchange were not accepted, and were returned to the bank. Thereafter the drafts and bills of lading were returned to the shipper, and the bills of lading were transmitted to the railroad company. New drafts were given to the bank, to which were attached bills of lading indorsed, "Deliver to the order of Crockett Bros. R. H. Sage." The drafts with the bill of lading attached were forwarded from Chicago to Boston for collection. A part of the flour was attached in Boston in an action brought by a creditor of the shipper. After the attachment, and after Crockett Brothers refused to accept the drafts, the bank exchanged the bills of lading for new bills of lading indorsed to the bank. In an action brought by the bank against a deputy sheriff who made the attachment, it was held that the delivery of the bills of lading to the bank as collateral security for its allowance gave to it, at least, a special property in the flour, coupled with a right of immediate possession, on which it could maintain an action of replevin.

In Richardson v. Nathan (Pa.) supra, it appeared that bills of lading were issued by a carrier for two carloads of iron, consigned to the order of the shipper with a direction to notify J. H. Richardson & Company. The bills of lading were indorsed by the shipper, "Deliver to the order of J. H. Richardson & Co.," and delivered to a bank as security for the amount of a draft on J. H. Richardson & Company, discounted by the bank. After J. H. Richardson & Company refused to accept or pay the draft, the indorsements on the bills of lading were erased, and they were indorsed in blank by the shipper. In holding that the validity of the pledge of the iron to the bank was not affected by the special indorsement to J. H. Richardson & Company, the court said: "We think the indorsements on the bills of lading cannot, under the circumstances shown by the special verdict, be justly considered as injuriously affecting the rights of the appellant to the property specified in the bills. The delivery of them was obviously made, accepted, and intended as a pledge of the property as security for the sum advanced or paid on the draft to which they were attached. The purpose of the parties being evident, delivery without indorsement was sufficient to accomplish it. Holmes v. German Secur. Bank (1878) 87 Pa. 525. The indorsements which are thought by the appellee's counsel to afford his clients some advantages, and to abridge the rights of the appellant in this contest, were in the following words, to wit: 'Deliver to the order of J. H. Richardson & Co.' These indorsements were probably regarded by the consignor as nothing more than a direction to the pledgee to deliver the property specified in the bills to the appellees, on their acceptance and payment of the draft, together with charges for transportation, storage, etc. His cancellation of the indorsements on their refusal to honor his draft is in accord with this view and with what we have seen was his purpose in delivering the bills. The indorsements were not intended to qualify the rights of the pledgee, and we cannot assent to a construction of them which would defeat the common purpose of the parties to the transaction, which, we think, should be considered in the determination of this issue as if the indorsements had not been made. Thus considered, the effect of it was to invest the appellant with the rights of a purchaser of the property, so far as it might be necessary to exercise such rights for its protection. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 243, and cases there cited. In other words, the appellant, after the delivery of the bills, must be deemed and taken to have been the owner of the property for the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was pledged. Act of September 24, 1867, P. L. 1863, Purdon's Dig. p. 145."

In City Bank v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1870) 44 N. Y. 136, it appeared that grain was consigned to the order of the shipper, and that he delivered the bills of lading therefor to a bank as security for its advance to the shipper in discounting drafts drawn on the purchaser. On the bills of lading there were indorsed orders to deliver the grain described therein to the purchaser, on his payment of the accompanying drafts, but there was no indorsement to the bank. The shipper, after the drafts were protested for nonpayment, directed the sale of the grain by the partner of the purchaser, who sold the entire shipment, and a delivery of a large part of it was made under the sale, although the bills of lading were not presented. The court of appeals following Bank of Rochester v. Jones (1851) 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290, held that, although there was no indorsement of the bills of lading to the bank, their delivery on the discounting of the drafts constituted a valid pledge of the grain, and conferred on the bank a title to the property on which it could base an action of replevin against a carrier.

The delivery of an unindorsed bill of lading to the shipper's order has, moreover, been held to be a transfer of possession sufficient to support a pledge, though the words "not negotiable" were printed on the back of the order bill of lading, and a penal statute imposed a fine or term of imprisonment on an agent or officer of a railroad company for the delivery of goods shipped under a bill of lading, unless the words "not negotiable" were plainly written or stamped on the face of the instrument. First Nat. Bank v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 160, 32 N. Y. Supp. 604. In that case the court said: "As the printing of the words 'not negotiable' on the back of the bill did not comply with the statute, it may be doubtful whether they in any way affected the rights of the Rochester bank. It had a right to assume that the defendant would not deliver the property without production of the bill, and so it would be able to obtain payment of the draft. Aside from this, by reference to condition No. 9, it was apparently within the contemplation of the parties that if the consignment was in the form which it in fact appears to be on the face of the bill, it then became the subject of transfer, and the rights of third parties might intervene, and so the property must not be delivered without surrender of the bill. I am of the opinion that the Rochester bank had a valid claim on the property to the extent of the draft, and this inured to the benefit of the plaintiff, although the property had passed from defendant's control before the plaintiff made its advancement. . . . The improper delivery by defendant did not relieve it from its liability."

Similarly, it was held in Peters v. Elliott (1875) 78 Ill. 321, that, although a shipping receipt contained a stipulation that it was not transferable, a bank which accepted it as security for a debt thereby became a pledgee of the goods, and the bank's lien on the goods was superior to the rights of attaching creditors of the consignor. Apparently there was no indorsement or assignment on the shipping receipt, though that fact is not definitely stated in the report of the case.

IV. Transfer of bill of lading by person other than consignee.

Though the shipper of goods is not named in a bill of lading as consignee, it has frequently been held that, if he our decisions, an indorsement of a warehouse receipt, though payable to bearer, is necessary to convey the legal title. Allen v. Maury (1880) 66 Ala. 10; Lehman v. Marshall (1872) 47 Ala. 362. The section is enabling, and was specially designed to provide the mode, in respect to such documents, of passing the legal title, so as to enable the real owner to prosecute an action thereon in his own name. So far as it relates to the passing of title by the delivery of warehouse receipts and similar documents, the statute is an innovation on the mercantile law, and will not be construed as abrogating or modifying it, further than is expressed, or is absolutely required to effectuate the purposes. By § 6 of the Act of February 28, 1881, being the other statute relied on, warehouse receipts given for cotton stored or deposited may be transferred by indorsement; and any person to whom the same may be so transferred shall be deemed and taken to be the owner of the property, so far as to give validity to any pledge, lien, or transfer, made or created by such person; and no cotton shall be delivered except on surrender and cancelation of the original receipt, or the indorsement thereon of the delivery, in case of a partial delivery. Acts 1880-1, 133. This statute does not imperatively require indorsement. The intention is to protect the warehouseman against a mistaken or wrongful delivery, and to protect the holder for value of such indorsed receipts against latent equities and rights. The statute, being permissive, does not prevent the passing of title and delivering possession in any mode previously effectual. Rice v. Cutler (1863) 17 Wis. 351, 84 Am. Dec. 747; Jones, Pledges, § 301. Notwithstanding § 2099 requires indorsement to convey the legal title, neither statute operates to prevent the transfer of a special property and constructive possession, by the delivery of the receipt without indorsement, sufficient to create a valid pledge, as between the parties, and as to third persons not having acquired prior or intervening rights."

Under a statute providing that warehouse receipts shall be negotiable, and that they may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, it has been held that a valid pledge of goods may be made by a transfer of warehouse receipts therefor by the depositor, without indorsement, and, when the receipts are thus received by the pledgee as collateral security for a loan, the pledge is not subject to a secret agreement between the depositor and the warehouseman. National Union Bank v. Shearer (Pa.) supra. In the opinion of the trial court, which was adopted by the supreme court, the following explanation was made: "If the receipt stands as the symbol of the goods, the owner of the latter, to whom it is issued, has the same power to pass title to the goods by delivery of the receipt as he has to pass title to the goods in his manual possession by a delivery of them. Empire Transp. Co. v. Steele (1871) 70 Pa. 190. Delivery of the one is, in law, delivery of the other. Manifestly, therefore, it is immaterial whether the receipt be written to his order or to bearer, or not, except where, as is emphasized in Hallgarten v. Oldham (1883) 135 Mass. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 433, it is by statute required to be 'negotiable in form.' Neither, if the delivery of the receipt is a delivery of the goods, is its indorsement or nonindorsement of any consequence with respect to the completeness of the transaction. The effect of indorsement is not to impart original negotiability to an instrument not originally negotiable. It is not an independent contract, says Gibson, Ch. J., in Patterson v. Poindexter (1843) 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 234, 40 Am. Dec. 554, but a parasite, which takes the hue of the thing with which it is connected, and operates one way when attached to a negotiable instrument, and another way when attached to other choses in action. As already seen, it does not, when put upon a warehouse receipt, import a guaranty of title. But it is asserted by defendant's counsel with much confidence that our statute makes it indispensable to the legal transfer of title. The statute does not say so. It does not say that warehouse receipts are negotiable by indorsement. It says, in guarded and significant language, they 'shall' be negotiable, and 'may' be transferred by indorsement, and when so transferred shall be deemed and taken, etc. In other words, it peremptorily gives to all warehouse receipts a certain quality which does not in any degree derogate from the character they had before, and then permissively provides for a specified method of transfer, not, in terms, exclusive of any other, and attaches to such additional method, if pursued, consequences differing, if at all, only in part from those incident to transfer by mere delivery. It is worthy of note that in Empire Transp. Co. v. Steele (1871) 70 Pa. 188, the decision, involving certain bills of lading, which are included in the Act of 1866 with warehouse receipts, proceeded expressly without reference to that statute. Nor is it insignificant that the supplement to the same of June 13, 1874, P. L. 285, relating to attachments of goods in the hands of warehousemen who have issued receipts therefor, speaks of these as having been 'negotiated and transferred by indorsement or delivery, as provided in the act to which this is a supplement,' and makes 'the holder . . . to whom the same shall have been transferred or delivered as aforesaid' the garnishee. It is doubtless true that a mistaken opinion of the law on the part of the legislature does not avail to change the law. Bank of Pennsylvania v. Com. (1852) 19 Pa. 156; Seiders v. Giles (1891) 141 Pa. 100, 21 Atl. 514. On the other hand, in the interpretation of a statute, it is very well settled that the understanding of it evidenced by the legislature in subsequent enactments is to be treated as of great weight. Folk v. State Capital Sav. & L. Asso. (1906) 214 Pa. 529, and cases cited at p. 538, 63 Atl. 1013."

In Whitney v. Tibbits (1863) 17 Wis. 359, it appeared that the owner had stored flour in a warehouse of the defendants, and received a warehouse receipt therefor. A third party agreed to purchase the flour if he could get a loan on it in the warehouse. The owner delivered to him the receipt to enable him to procure the loan, and the buyer, on obtaining a loan from the plaintiff, transferred to him the receipt, which was not indorsed. After a garnishment proceeding was brought by the owner for the amount due to him on the sale, the plaintiff brought suit to recover the flour. It was held that the delivery to him of the receipt without an indorsement was sufficient to effect a pledge, when so intended by the parties, and that the validity of the pledge was not affected by a statute which provided that warehouse receipts might be transferred by indorsement.

A statute of Missouri to the effect that a warehouse receipt or bill of lading may be transferred by a written indorsement thereon, and delivery, and that any person to whom it may be transferred shall be deemed to be the owner of the goods so far as to give validity to any pledge made on the faith thereof, has been held not to authorize a factor or agent for sale to pledge the goods of his principal by a transfer of warehouse receipts without indorsement, even though the receipts ran to bearer. Allen v. St. Louis Nat. Bank (1887) 120 U. S. 20, 30 L. ed. 573, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460. The court held that, in the absence of an indorsement, the common-law rule prevailed which made invalid a pledge by a factor of the goods of his principal.

Likewise, under the Missouri statute, an unindorsed receipt providing for the delivery of goods "to bearer" has been held not to have a negotiable character which would give validity to a pledge of the goods by one who stole the receipt and delivered it to another as security for a loan. Erie & Pacific Dispatch v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co. (1878) 6 Mo. App. 172. That decision is not in conflict with the cases upholding the validity of a pledge by the owner of the goods through the transfer of an unindorsed warehouse receipt, or bill of lading, describing them, since, even in the absence of a statute on the subject, the owner could thus effect a pledge, but a thief of the document of title could not. On this point the court said: "The transfer of a warehouse receipt, in the absence of some statutory provision giving them a negotiable character, can convey to the transferee no greater rights than would be acquired by the transfer of the goods themselves, of which the receipts are the symbol. The pledgeor in this case could not give a valid pledge of the goods themselves, because he did not own and had no authority to pledge them." In the opinion of a later Missouri case (St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Ross (1880) 9 Mo. App. 399), the court, in the following language, denied that a valid pledge could not in any case be effected by the transfer of an unindorsed warehouse receipt: "The court properly refused instructions, asked by appellant, to the effect that there could be no pledge of the cotton by Dowell & Company without a written indorsement of the warehouse receipts. Where the party has the right to pledge the cotton, the delivery of the warehouse receipt would be as effectual as the delivery of the cotton itself, and it could make no difference that the warehouse receipt was not indorsed by the pledgeor. There is nothing in this at variance with anything decided or said by this court in Erie & Pacific Dispatch v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co. (Mo.) supra. The transfer of a warehouse receipt, not made negotiable by indorsement and delivery, can convey to the transferee no greater rights than would be acquired by a transfer of the goods which the receipt represents. That we have said. But it does not follow, from that, that one may not pledge cotton by delivering to the pledgee the bales themselves."

In Fourth Nat. Bank v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co. (1882) 11 Mo. App. 333, the court said: "Warehouse receipts made payable to bearer, not transferred by indorsement, are not negotiable as mercantile paper; and the transfer of these cotton notes gave the plaintiff no greater rights than it would have acquired by the transfer of the goods themselves. But the warehouse receipt, or cotton note, represented the cotton itself, and the pledge of the cotton note was as effectual as a pledge of the cotton itself would have been. St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Ross (Mo.) supra. Had Moss obtained the cotton notes, or the cotton which they represented, by robbery or larceny, he could have passed no title, as against the real owner, to an innocent purchaser. But the doctrine is that fraud practised by the vendee of a chattel, whereby he obtains the sale and delivery of it to himself, will not authorize the vendor to retake it from one who has subsequently purchased it for value without notice of the fraud. Ditson v. Randall (1851) 33 Me. 202; Hoffman v. Noble (1843) 6 Met. (Mass.) 68, 39 Am. Dec. 711. Goods pledged by a factor may also be recovered by the innocent pawnee. St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Ross (Mo.) supra. In these cases, the owner is not divested by his own act of his right of property. But in the case at bar the vendor seems to have made a sale; the goods sold were marked and set apart to the vendee; and the vendor delivered the warehouse receipts, made out in the vendor's name, to the transportation agent of the vendee. It is true that this was done on the faith of a statement of the vendee that the transportation agent would not issue bills of lading for the goods until certain receipts were delivered to him by the vendor, which receipts the vendor would not give up until the cotton was paid for; it is also true that the transportation agent seems to have made such an arrangement with the vendee; but of all this the pledgee of these warehouse receipts had no notice. The vendor, though desirous of retaining a lien, was deceived by the vendee into allowing the indicia of property and possession to pass into the hands of the vendee in such a way as to enable the vendee to pledge the goods; and we see no principle upon which it can be held that the loss, which must fall somewhere, should fall upon the innocent pledgee, rather than upon the vendor who put it in the power of the pledgeor to hold himself out as the sole owner, and alone entitled to the possession of these goods, under circumstances that must have deceived the most vigilant."

In Turner v. Israel (1897) 64 Ark. 244, 41 S. W. 806, the plaintiff sought to recover the possession of two barrels of whisky for which she had advanced the purchase price, and had taken bills of lading, and later a mortgage, as security. In holding that the plaintiff had a lien on the whisky superior to the rights of a general creditor of the lienor, the court said: "A bill of lading represents the property for which it was given. It is a muniment of title. At common law the property may be transferred by the delivery of the bill of lading, without indorsement. Delivery with intent to transfer the title is sufficient. Jones, Pledges, § 262, and cases cited. But the statutes of this state make it negotiable, by written indorsement thereon and delivery, in the same manner as bills of exchange and promissory notes. Sandels & H. Dig. §§ 509, 510. Assuming that a written indorsement, under the statutes, is necessary to transfer the legal title, a transfer of it without the indorsement, like the delivery of an unindorsed note, would nevertheless be sufficient to pass the equitable title. Mrs. Turner at least acquired an equitable title to the bills of lading, which were delivered to her under the agreement with Surridge & Turner, and a lien on the whisky to secure the payment of the money advanced to pay the charges thereon for the purchase money, and a right to the possession thereof. The mortgage was a continuation of the same lien in another form. She held and retained the lien and right to the possession first acquired until the mortgage was executed, acknowledged, and filed for record, when she delivered the whisky to Surridge & Turner to be sold, with the understanding that the proceeds should be paid to her until she was reimbursed. They acquired no right to the possession until they acquired it from her, and officers had no right to seize the property under process before that time; and, after that, there was no period of time when Mrs. Turner's lien and incidental rights did not exist, and the liens of process could have acquired priority."

In State Sav. & T. Co. v. Kinsolving (1916) 195 Mo. App. 326, 190 S. W. 379, the court said: "By § 11,956, Rev. Stat. 1909, bills of lading are made negotiable, and § 11,957 provides that they may be transferred by indorsement in writing; yet they are transferable without indorsement for value, and then carry with them the property in the goods they cover. Scharff v. Meyer (1896) 133 Mo. 449, 54 Am. St. Rep. 672, 34 S. W. 858. A general discussion and citation of cases on the method of transfer of bills of lading, and the effect it has on the title to the property shipped, will be found in 4 R. C. L. 30 et seq., §§ 34 and 35."

VI. Rule in Georgia.

By the express provision of a Georgia statute, property may be pledged as security for a debt by a mere delivery of a warehouse receipt issued to the owner of the property. Citizens' Bkg. Co. v. Peacock (1897) 103 Ga. 171, 29 S. E. 752; Farmers & M. Bank v. Bennett (1904) 120 Ga. 1012, 48 S. E. 398. In the case last cited the court said: "The suit was properly brought in the name of the Farmers & Merchants Bank. In this state, by express statute, property may be pledged as security for a debt by mere delivery of a warehouse receipt issued to the owner of the property. Civ. Code, § 2956. 'The transfer or surrender of warehouse receipts, or other symbols representing cotton, may very properly be regarded as equivalent to an actual physical delivery of the cotton itself, and therefore will operate as a constructive delivery passing title.' Central Georgia Land & Lumber Co. v. Exchange Bank (1897) 101 Ga. 353, 28 S. E. 863. At the time the defendant is alleged to have made a conversion of the cotton which had been pledged to the bank as security, the legal title to this cotton was in the bank; and it had its election to either bring an action of trover against the defendant, or to waive the tort and sue in assumpsit to recover the market value of the cotton. The pledgeor, Graybill, had merely the equitable title to the property; and, therefore, the trial judge rightly declined to allow the petition to be amended, as proposed by the plaintiff bank, so that the suit might proceed in the name of Graybill for its use."

In Coker v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 112 Ga. 71, 37 S. E. 122, there is a dictum to the effect that, where a bank accepts a bill of lading, without indorsement, as security for money advanced in discounting a draft to which the bill of lading is attached, no title to the goods described in the instrument passes to the bank. The court said: "In one portion of his charge the judge, in effect, instructed the jury that delivery to the bank of bills of lading covering the shipments of corn, with drafts attached, passed title to the corn into the bank. This charge is excepted to on the ground that mere delivery of bills of lading, unindorsed by the consignor, cannot operate to pass title. The criticism on the charge is well founded; but the error thus committed was harmless, because the evidence showed that the bills of lading referred to were properly indorsed, and as to this fact there was no controversy." W. S. R.

MARY HARRINGTON

v.

BORDER CITY MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—November 25, 1921.

(— Mass. —, 132 N. E. 721.)

Negligence — duty to foresee injury.

1. The owner of a lot adjoining the highway who permits ball playing thereon cannot be said to be negligent towards a passer-by who is struck by a batted ball, if there is nothing to indicate that he should have foreseen or anticipated that such passer-by would, or might, be struck by a stray ball coming from the field.

[See note on this question beginning on page 614.]

Nuisance — baseball near highway.

2. Permitting employees to play baseball on a lot near a public highway during hours of intermission is not a nuisance.

[See 20 R. C. L. 419, 420.]

Highway — negligent injury — act on adjoining property.

3. One owning land adjoining a highway is liable for negligent acts of its employees thereon, which injure persons on the highway.

— effect of stopping upon street.

4. A pedestrian does not lose his rights in a highway by stopping for a moment to speak to another person.

[See 13 R. C. L. 292.]

Master and servant — liability for act of employee during intermission.

5. One permitting his employees to play ball on his property near a highway during intermission, when they are free from their obligation to him, is not answerable for their acts as employees.

Negligence — permitting ball playing adjoining highway.

6. The owner of a large field adjoining a highway is not negligent in permitting it to be used for ball playing, although the ball has gone into the highway two or three times.

Evidence — "res inter alios acta" — other accident.

7. Upon the question of negligence in permitting employees to play ball in a lot near a highway to the injury of a passer-by, evidence is not admissible that a short time before plaintiff's injury another person was injured in the same way, where the defendant contended that such injury was caused by persons playing in the street.

[See 10 R. C. L. 937, 940.]

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Bristol County (Sisk, J.) made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, which resulted in a verdict in its favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

(— Mass. —, 132 N. E. 721.)

Messrs. David R. Radovsky and H. William Radovsky, for plaintiff:

A baseball game played under certain attendant circumstances may become a legal nuisance, whether because of the unavoidable descent of balls upon neighboring premises, or because of other conditions naturally following upon the performance of such a game.

Cronin v. Bloemcke, 58 N. J. Eq. 313, 43 Atl. 605; Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. 67 N. J. Eq. 178, 58 Atl. 532; Gilbough v. West Side Amusement Co. 64 N. J. Eq. 27, 53 Atl. 289; Alexander v. Tebeau, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1305, 71 S. W. 427.

An owner of land abutting on the highway, who retains the potential control of his premises, and who authorizes, or permits, or negligently fails to prevent, a condition or use of his land which injures any person on the highway, is liable for the injury caused.

Wetherbee v. Partridge, 175 Mass. 185, 78 Am. St. Rep. 486, 55 N. E. 894; Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L.R.A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, 21 N. E. 482, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 80; Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 268, 2 L.R.A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 N. E. 387; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; Rockport v. Rockport Granite Co. 177 Mass. 246, 51 L.R.A. 779, 58 N. E. 1017, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 298.

A duty is imposed upon the occupant of land abutting on the highway to such extent that if a person on the highway is injured by objects or parcels falling from defendant's premises, or out of the doorway or window of defendant's building, "res ipsa loquitur" will apply.

Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596, 159 Eng. Reprint, 665, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 220, 11 Jur. N. S. 204, 13 L. T. N. S. 148, 13 Week. Rep. 410; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722, 159 Eng. Reprint, 299, 33 L. J. Exch. N. S. 18, 9 L. T. N. S. 450, 12 Week. Rep. 279; Ahern v. Melvin, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 462; Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 163, 14 L. T. N. S. 412, 14 Week. Rep. 658; Connor v. Koch, 89 App. Div. 33, 85 N. Y. Supp. 93; Loughrain v. Auto-phone Co. 77 App. Div. 542, 78 N. Y. Supp. 919, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 182; Lowner v. New York, N. H. & N. R. Co. 175 Mass. 166, 55 N. E. 805; Manning v. West End Street R. Co. 166 Mass. 230, 44 N. E. 135.

It is one of defendant's business purposes to provide a ball field for its male employees, and he is liable for their negligent acts.

Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; Birch v. Abercrombie, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, note; McNeal v. McKain, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, note.

A person in control of premises has to maintain the premises reasonably safe for invitees, and is liable even if the unsafe condition was brought about by the acts of third persons.

Goodale v. Worcester Agri. Soc. 102 Mass. 402; Blakely v. White Star Line, 154 Mich. 635, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, 129 Am. St. Rep. 496, 118 N. W. 482; Wright v. Perry, 188 Mass. 268, 74 N. E. 328, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 461; Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463, 31 N. E. 128; Holmes v. Drew, 151 Mass. 578, 25 N. E. 22; Sweeny v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Gregoric v. Percy-Lasalle Min. & Power Co. 52 Colo. 495, 122 Pac. 785, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1030, 1 N. C. C. A. 715; Strobel v. Gerst Bros. Mfg. Co. 148 Mo. App. 22, 127 S. W. 421; Virginia Bridge & Iron Co. v. Jordan, 143 Ala. 603, 42 So. 73, 5 Ann. Cas. 709.

Messrs. Wood & Brayton, for defendant:

The defendant's duty as landowner towards those on the highway was not that of an insurer of their safety, and was not within the rule laid down in Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, 12 Jur. N. S. 603, 14 Week. Rep. 799, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129.

Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 2 L.R.A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 N. E. 387; Cork v. Blossom, 162 Mass. 330, 26 L.R.A. 256, 44 Am. St. Rep. 362, 38 N. E. 495; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; Gray v. Harris, 107 Mass. 492, 9 Am. Rep. 61; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324.

Defendant's duty towards the plaintiff was only that which a landowner is under towards a mere licensee.

Moffatt v. Kenny, 174 Mass. 311, 54

N. E. 850, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 564; Scanlon v. Wedger, 156 Mass. 462, 16 L.R.A. 395, 31 N. E. 642; Frost v. Josselyn, 180 Mass. 389, 62 N. E. 469; Reardon v. Thompson, 149 Mass. 267, 21 N. E. 369; Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463, 31 N. E. 128; Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475, 16 L.R.A. 557, 31 N. E. 644; Harobine v. Abbott, 177 Mass. 59, 58 N. E. 284; Cole v. Wilcutt, 214 Mass. 453, 101 N. E. 995; Stevens v. Nichols, 155 Mass. 472, 15 L.R.A. 459, 29 N. E. 1150.

There is no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, its servants, or agents.

Holmes v. Drew, 151 Mass. 578, 25 N. E. 22; Carleton v. Franconia Iron & Steel Co. 99 Mass. 216; Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475, 16 L.R.A. 557, 31 N. E. 644; Nicholson v. Erie R. Co. 41 N. Y. 525; Shaw v. Ogden, 214 Mass. 475, 102 N. E. 61; Gunning v. King, 229 Mass. 177, 118 N. E. 233.

Plaintiff assumed the risk.

Shaw v. Ogden, 214 Mass. 475, 102 N. E. 61; Fitzgerald v. Connecticut River Paper Co. 155 Mass. 155, 31 Am. St. Rep. 537, 29 N. E. 464, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 686; Scanlon v. Wedger, 156 Mass. 462, 16 L.R.A. 395, 31 N. E. 642; Stevens v. Nichols and Moffatt v. Kenny, supra; Benton v. Watson, 231 Mass. 582, 121 N. E. 399; Hunt v. Economic Machinery Co. 231 Mass. 155, 120 N. E. 416; Sullivan v. Ridgway Constr. Co. 236 Mass. 75, 127 N. E. 543; Pigeon v. Massachusetts N. E. Street R. Co. 230 Mass. 392, 119 N. E. 762.

The plaintiff's offer of evidence in regard to the alleged accident to Mary Todd was rightfully excluded.

McDowell v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 164 Mass. 394, 41 N. E. 669; George v. Haverhill, 110 Mass. 506; Whitney v. Gross, 140 Mass. 232, 5 N. E. 619; Collins v. Dorchester, 6 Cush. 396; Robinson v. Fitchburg & W. R. Co. 7 Gray, 96; Menard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 386, 23 N. E. 214.

Crosby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort for personal injuries. The plaintiff testified that in the latter part of August, 1916, she was struck in the back by a baseball; that for a considerable period of time before and after the injury she had been employed by the defendant; that the accident occurred during the noon hour, and while she was on Weaver street, an "ordinary street" in Fall River, returning to the mill where she worked; that the defendant operated three cotton mills employing several thousand men; that at the time she was struck some of these men were playing baseball on a lot of the defendant about 25 or 30 feet from the street, and adjacent thereto; that she had seen them there every day, in summer, while she worked there. On cross-examination she testified that she was accustomed to take a walk during the noon hour, and almost every day passed the lot where the boys were playing; that girls gathered there to watch the play; that while she was employed at the mill she had seen the ball "two or three times come out onto the street;" that when injured she was about 3 feet from the fence nearest to the side of the field where the game was played, and had been standing there about a minute to speak to some girls. She further testified that the ball game was being played in the meadow in the vacant lot at the foot of the bank, and the lot stretched for a considerable distance; that it was a long, wide field without any buildings on it.

The due care of the plaintiff is not in issue. The only question is whether a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant would have been warranted.

It is plain, upon the facts as disclosed by the record, that for the defendant to allow its employees, during the noon hour, to engage in games of ball for pleasure and recreation on a large vacant field owned by it, could not be found to constitute a nuisance.

If we assume, without deciding, that Weaver street, which is described as an "ordinary street," was a public highway, the defendant could not, by acts permitted or authorized on its land, negligently injure the

Nuisance—baseball near highway.

Highway—negligent injury—act on adjoining property.

(— Mass. —, 138 N. E. 721.)

plaintiff while she was lawfully on the highway; and she would not lose her rights as a traveler if she stopped for a minute to —effect of stopping upon street. speak to other persons. Judd v. Fargo, 107 Mass. 264; Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 266, 2 L.R.A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 N. E. 387; Com. v. Henry, 229 Mass. 19, 22, L.R.A. 1918B, 827, 118 N. E. 224.

Cases which hold that the owner of land abutting on a highway may be liable to a person lawfully thereon, for injuries caused from objects falling from the premises, are not applicable to the facts in the case at bar. Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 266, 2 L.R.A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 N. E. 387; Woodman v. Shepard, 238 Mass. 196, 13 A.L.R. 982, 130 N. E. 194.

As the persons playing ball at the time the plaintiff was injured were not so engaged during the hours of employment, the defendant is not liable for any negligence of such persons as employees.

If the plaintiff were entitled to the rights of an invited person on the defendant's land, she could not recover without proof of negligence on its part; there was nothing dangerous in allowing ball games to be played in a large field; the testimony of the plaintiff that she had been in the defendant's employ for about two years, and had passed the lot almost every day and seen boys and men playing ball there during the summer time, and "had seen the ball two or three times come out onto the street," falls far —Negligence—permitting ball playing adjoining highway. short of establishing negligence of the defendant in permitting games to be played on its lot. As it could not have been inferred that the defendant should have foreseen or anticipated that the plaintiff would or might be struck by a stray ball coming from the field, it follows that the defendant violated no duty which it owed to her. As she failed to sustain the burden resting on her to establish neg- —duty to foresee injury. ligence of the defendant, a verdict against her was ordered rightly. Harnois v. Cutting, 174 Mass. 398, 54 N. E. 842; Childs v. American Exp. Co. 197 Mass. 337, 84 N. E. 128; Shaw v. Ogden, 214 Mass. 475, 102 N. E. 61; Gunning v. King, 229 Mass. 177, 118 N. E. 233.

The plaintiff offered to show that two weeks before the accident another employee of the defendant was struck by a baseball during the noon hour, while the defendant's employees were playing in the same lot; the defendant offered to show that that accident occurred while the men were playing on the street. This evidence was excluded subject to the plaintiff's exception. The injury to an employee other than the plaintiff was plain-—Evidence—"res inter alios acta"—other accident. ly res inter alios; its admission would have presented collateral issues and was rightly excluded. Whitney v. Gross, 140 Mass. 232, 5 N. E. 619; Menard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 386, 388, 23 N. E. 214; McDowell v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 164 Mass. 394, 41 N. E. 669; Noyes v. Boston & M. R. Co. 213 Mass. 9, 11, 12, 99 N. E. 457.

Exceptions overruled.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of owner for injury to person in street in consequence of games or sports which he allows on his premises.

Aside from the reported case (HARRINGTON v. BORDER CITY MFG. Co. ante, 610), there appears no other authority on the specific question under annotation. It, however, seems to fall within the general principle, as laid down in 13 R. C. L. 324, that an abutting owner has a right to use his property for every lawful purpose for which he may desire to use it, and is required to exercise only ordinary care in order to relieve him from liability and damages on account of injuries incidentally resulting to a traveler on the highway.

A case of interest, perhaps, on the question under annotation, is Ward v. Abraham [1910] 47 Scot. L. R. 252, which held that the owner of a back yard in which a game of cricket was being played was not liable for injuries inflicted upon a child who, while playing in a neighboring back yard, was struck by a ball which had been hit over the fence in the course of the game of cricket. Lord Dundas, in rendering his decision, said: "I do not think it can be laid down as an abstract proposition that it is illegal to play cricket or bat and ball in a back green or garden. One could, of course, quite well figure a case which might be stated where obviously the conditions and manner of the playing would be such as to infer damages for negligence. On the other hand, one can equally well imagine a game being played in a back green or garden under obviously legitimate conditions. The point at this stage is to determine whether this pursuer has or has not stated a relevant case to the effect that this game in this back green was being carried on in an illegal manner. I think that he has not done so. The pursuer avers in condescendence 2 that these greens 'are primarily for the purpose of a drying green, and not a playground;' but it is not said that to play cricket of any sort in them is forbidden, and I gather from condescendence 5 that such a thing is not unprecedented. The averments of 'fault' are of the most vague and general nature. The mere fact that a regrettable accident has occurred cannot, of course, by itself, infer damages as for fault or negligence. The record as a whole seems to me to contain no definite facts from which the conclusion ought necessarily or reasonably to be deducted that this game of bat and ball, such as it was, was dangerous and illegal in this back green."

In view of the holding in the reported case (HARRINGTON v. BORDER CITY MFG. Co.) that permitting the playing of the game did not amount to a nuisance, attention is called to Royse Independent School Dist. v. Reinhardt (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 159 S. W. 1010, a suit to enjoin the conducting of baseball games, where relief was denied because the evidence disclosed that the noises and incidents of the games of ball played were such only as usually attend games of that character, the court saying that an injunction against the games would not be granted simply because it was feared that they might become a nuisance.

J. H. B.

CITIZENS' TELEPHONE COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.,
v.
CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS, & TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—June 7, 1921.

(192 Ky. 399, 233 S. W. 901.)

Railroads — right to complain of wires crossing tracks.

1. A railroad company having a mere easement for its right of way cannot complain that a telephone company crosses the right of way without its consent, with wires strung so high as to constitute no obstruction to the full enjoyment of the easement.

[See note on this question beginning on page 619.]

Telephone — franchise to maintain wires — extent.

2. A franchise granted by a county to a telephone company to maintain and operate its lines along the roads and highways of the county is limited to the roads and highways under the jurisdiction of such county.

Highways — construction of telephone line — additional burden.

3. The construction of a telephone line along a public highway is not an additional burden on the fee.

[See 10 R. C. L. 110; *2 R. C. L. Supp. 974, 975.]

Railroads — height of easement for right of way.

4. An easement for a railroad right of way extends to a height sufficient for the safe and convenient passage of all trains and their burdens, of whatever nature.

[See 22 R. C. L. 865.]

Easement — dimensions.

5. A right of way is a limited estate in land,—limited as to dimension,—width, height, depth, and length; and the grantee must keep within such limitation or he at once becomes a trespasser.

[See 9 R. C. L. 785, 786.]

APPEAL by the Citizens' Telephone Company from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grant County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin and restrain defendants from maintaining telephone wires across plaintiff's right of way, and from erecting other lines. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Myers & Howard, for appellant:

The additional-servitude rule does not obtain in Kentucky.

Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Avritt, 120 Ky. 34, 85 S. W. 204, 8 Ann. Cas. 955; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, 33 Am. Dec. 497; Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50, 44 Am. St. Rep. 203, 23 S. W. 592; Georgetown & L. Traction Co. v. Mulholland, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 578, 76 S. W. 148; Ashland & C. Street R. Co. v. Faulkner, 106 Ky. 332, 43 L.R.A. 554, 45 S. W. 235, 51 S. W. 806.

Where telephone poles are not set on the railroad right of way, no invasion of a property right, or trespass, is committed by stringing wires over the right of way, when it does not interfere with the use and enjoyment of the easement held by the railroad company.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Centerville Teleph. Co. 135 Tenn. 198, 186 S. W. 90; 9 R. C. L. 797; Flaherty v. Fleming, 58 W. Va. 669, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461, 52 S. E. 857; Bittello v. Lipson, 80 Conn. 497, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 125 Am. St. Rep. 126, 69 Atl. 21; Burnham v. Nevins, 144 Mass. 88, 59 Am. Rep. 61, 10 N. E. 494; Grafton v. Moir, 30 N. Y. S. R. 314, 9 N. Y. Supp. 3; Stevenson v. Stewart, 7 Phila. 293; Lipsky v. Heller, 199 Mass. 310, 85 N. E. 453; Baker v. Willard, 171 Mass. 220, 40 L.R.A. 754, 50 N. E. 620; Weed v. McKeg, 37 Misc. 105, 74 N. Y. Supp. 250.

Messrs. De Jarnette & Harrison for appellee.

Sampson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Sometime before January, 1915, appellant Home Telephone Company, Incorporated, erected over and across the right of way of appellee, Cincinnati, New Orleans, & Texas Pacific Railroad Company, in Grant county, a line of telephone wires without first obtaining from said railroad company in any manner a right to do so. About two years later this action was brought by the railroad company against the telephone company and C. J. Daly to enjoin and restrain them from maintaining said wires across the railroad right of way, and from erecting other lines.

The answer of the telephone company admits the erection and maintenance of the telephone wires over and across the right of way of the railroad company, but denies the right of the railroad company to require it to remove them. The telephone company further says that the wires were and are erected in a substantial and permanent manner at a height which does not and will not interfere with the operation of the trains of the railroad company and the free and unobstructed use of the right of way. The evidence taken on both sides relates only to the manner, nature, durability, strength, and height above the rails of the telephone wires. The chancellor found the defendant telephone company, previous to the filing of this action, set telephone poles on each side of plaintiff's right of way, and strung two telephone wires over and across said right of way, at or near the residence of defendant Daly; "that said defendant did not, before stringing said wires on said right of way, procure by contract plaintiff's consent so to do, or undertake any condemnation proceedings to procure such right; that each of said lines of telephone so constructed is a private, not a commercial line, and serves only the residences of Daly and Foree." A judgment was entered, enjoining the telephone company from maintaining the said wires over and across the railroad right of way until the telephone company acquired, in one of the ways allowed by law, the right to do so, and the telephone company appeals. Daly, who was made a defendant, did not answer below, nor is he a party to this appeal.

The sole question is, May a telephone company, without obtaining in one of the ways allowed by law a right to do so, erect and maintain over and across a railroad right of way, not at a highway crossing, a line of wires to be used by it in connecting one or more of its patrons with its telephone exchange? This question has never been passed upon by this court, nor do we find but few cases in point from other jurisdictions, and these are not entirely harmonious.

The telephone company in this case claims no right in or across the railroad right of way which is not common to all persons and companies. If the appellant Home Telephone Company may, without grant from the railroad company or condemnation, erect and maintain a line of wires over the railroad right of way, surely anyone may do so. Its Telephone-franchise to maintain wires—extent. franchise, granted it by Grant county, to "maintain and operate its telephone lines for the accommodation of the public, on and along all the roads and highways of said county," gave no right to erect and maintain its lines upon or over the railroad right of way, or on any road or highway except such as were under the jurisdiction of the Grant fiscal court, which gave the franchise.

It is the contention of the telephone company that, as the railroad company only has an easement in its right of way, and does not own the fee thereto, it has no right to have its right of way open to the sky, but only to such height as to insure free and unobstructed passage for its trains and employees in the conduct of its business, for which the right of way was granted in the first place. This is undoubtedly true as to the owner of the fee in the servient estate over which the right of way extends; but what right has a stranger, as against the first and dominant easement holder, to cross or use the right of way of a railroad company?

Our rule with respect to rights of way for a public highway is to hold that the owner of the servient estate has no right or power to interfere with or claim damages for the erection and maintenance of telephone lines along the highway where the grant is made by public authority. This is on the theory that a grant for a public use and purpose is not violated by the employment of the right of way for telephone lines, which is also a public purpose. We have held that this is not an additional servitude. Street railroads, interurban lines, and telegraph lines are embraced in this exception. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Avritt, 120 Ky. 34, 85 S. W. 204, 8 Ann. Cas. 955; Georgetown & L. Traction Co. v. Mulholland, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 578, 76 S. W. 148; Magee v. Overshiner, 150 Ind. 127, 40 L.R.A. 370, 65 Am. St. Rep. 358, 49 N. E. 951; Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 60 Minn. 539, 28 L.R.A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111.

Highways—construction of telephone line—additional burden.

This rule rests upon the theory that the grant for a public purpose includes every public use and purpose to and for which the grant may reasonably be employed, and that telephone, telegraph, and interurban lines are and were such public facilities as were actually contemplated by the grant of the right of way, and therefore do not constitute an additional servitude for which the owner of the servient estate may demand and have compensation. The grant in such case is to the public, and the public makes use of it. But the telephone company, a private corporation, claims no grant whatever in this case to erect and maintain its lines at any place except over and above the public highways of Grant county. Its trunk line is along the Covington and Lexington pike, a highway of Grant county, which parallels but is located some distance from the right of way of appellee railroad company. To reach the home of Daly, one of its patrons, with a wire, it set two poles, one on either side of the right of way, 170 feet apart, and stretched the wires over the right of way between the two poles. The evidence shows that after the commencement of this litigation the telephone company reconstructed and brought up to standard its line over the railroad by putting in taller, larger, and more substantial posts, and stringing copper instead of steel wire thereon. Since its reconstruction, it is admitted by the railroad company that the line complies with its specifications for such work.

The petition does not aver that the railroad company owns the fee to the right of way, and in the absence of such averment we must presume that it had merely an easement which allows the operation of the railroad in its regular business, and reverts to the owner of the fee when that use ceases. If it owns the fee, it has the exclusive right of occupancy of the right of way indefinitely upward, and can enjoin the stringing of wires or the erection of any structure whatsoever over the same. But if the railroad company owns merely the easement or right of use of the land on which its road is constructed, it cannot complain that another, even a stranger, as is the telephone company in this case, has entered over the easement at an elevation so high as to give no obstruction to the full enjoyment of the easement for the purposes for which it was granted, and there maintains a wire or wires in connection with its telephone business.

Railroads—right to complain of wires crossing tracks.

To what height an easement extends where there are no dimensions fixed depends upon the facts of each case. For a railroad the height must be sufficient for the safe and convenient passage of all trains and their burden, of whatever nature. This is usually fixed at about 25 to 30 feet above the top of the steel rails of the track. So long as the structure above the track does not interfere with the full enjoyment of the right of way, and is of such permanent and substantial nature as not to be a menace to those who have to pass under it, the owner of the easement has no right to require its removal, nor can such owner maintain an action for such purpose, for its domain has not been invaded, nor has it suffered a wrong, although the fee owner may maintain such action.

—height of easement for right of way.

The ownership of an easement extends only to such height as reasonably to permit the full and free enjoyment thereof for the purpose for which it was granted or acquired, and no further. The easement holder would be as much a trespasser if he ascended and occupied the realm above the right of way for some purpose not contemplated by the grant as would be a stranger. One who has a lease or easement to enjoy the first floor of a building cannot prevent a stranger from occupying the second floor if, in so doing, the stranger does not invade the realm of the holder of the first floor. In other words a right of way is a limited estate in land,—limited as to dimension,—width, height, depth, and length; and the grantee must dimensions.

Easement—

keep within such limitations or he at once becomes a trespasser. Whatever may happen to the estate outside these limitations is of no concern to the holder of the right of way unless it directly or indirectly affects such right of way. But he can protect from wrongful invasion the whole of the right of way. Beyond this he has no legal concern.

In the case of Stevenson v. Stewart, 7 Phila. 293, where a foot pass-way was involved, it was held that a grantee of an easement had no right to have the right open to the sky or any other height except so far as necessary and convenient for the footway reserved, sufficient in height and breadth for the purpose expressed in the grant. Baker v. Willard, 171 Mass. 220, 40 L.R.A. 754, 68 Am. St. Rep. 445, 50 N. E. 620.

The owner of the soil may make any use of the land which does not interfere with a reasonable use of the right of way granted for the purposes intended, even to erecting bridges, roofs, and other structures over the same. Flaherty v. Fleming, 58 W. Va. 669, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, 52 S. E. 857.

In Cook on Telegraph Law (1920) page 64, the text is: "A railroad company owning only a right of way, and not the fee, cannot object to telegraph or telephone wires crossing such right of way, even though not on the highway, inasmuch as 'the railroad company is not entitled to have its way kept open to the sky.'"

A case almost exactly like the one under consideration was decided by the supreme court of Tennessee in 1916, styled Illinois C. R. Co. v. Centerville Teleph. Co. reported in 135 Tenn. 198, 186 S. W. 90. In that case the telephone company had erected its wires over the railroad's right of way without leave or license, as in this case, and the railroad sought to have them removed, but the court said:

"Having only an easement, the railroad company is not entitled to have its way kept open to the sky, and the grant to it is not interfered with by constructing overhead telephone wires, so long as the reasonable and safe use of the easement is not impaired. 9 R. C. L. p. 799. In notes under Flaherty v. Fleming, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, and Bitello v. Bipson, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 193, numerous cases sustaining the foregoing statement are collected. In these cases it is shown that the owner of the fee may build a bridge for his convenience over the easement or passageway, and the owner of the easement has no ground of complaint, provided the use of his easement is not seriously obstructed.

"There is no question of light and air in this case. Neither is it alleged that the wires of defendant telephone companies interfere with the telegraph or telephone lines of the railroad company, maintained along the right of way. The only interference with the railroad company's use of its easement suggested is the possibility that wires crossing the track may fall and injure a passenger or employee on a train beneath."

Both upon reason and authority we are of the opinion that appellee railroad company had no such property in the right of way as would enable it to maintain this action to enjoin the telephone company from maintaining at a reasonable height a properly constructed and managed line or lines of telephone wires, even without grant from the railroad company or other authority, as against all but the owner of the fee.

It follows that the judgment of the lower court must be reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied October 18, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way.

The books contain comparatively little about the right to cross a railroad right of way with wires. Sometimes the statutes prescribe the height of crossing wires.

It has been held in several cases that a railroad company not owning the fee may not restrain the stringing of wires across its line at a proper height and properly supported. CITIZENS' TELEPH. CO. v. CINCINNATI, N. O. & T. P. R. CO. (reported herewith) ante, 615; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Centerville Teleph. Co. (1916) 135 Tenn. 198, 186 S. W. 90.

A railroad company which does not own the fee is not entitled to have its way kept open to the sky, and the grant to it is not interfered with by stringing and maintaining overhead telephone wires across the right of way, so long as the reasonable and safe use of the railroad company's easement is not impaired. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Centerville Teleph. Co. (Tenn.) supra.

In a case where the rights of way of both railroads were merely easements, while the plaintiff railroad company was occupying its line through a city, a second railroad company condemned a line crossing at an angle the plaintiff's line near the plaintiff's station grounds, and contracted with the defendant telephone company, granting it the right and privilege to construct, maintain, and operate, for a term of twenty-five years, its line and system of telephones over and along the right of way of the second railroad company, for the purpose of serving that railroad company in the operation of its road; but the telephone company also contemplated serving the general public. In virtue of this contract, the second railroad company was granted the right to attach to the poles and cross arms of the telephone company, and to maintain thereon, such wire or wires as were owned by the second railroad company for its telegraph line, and the telephone company granted free service over its system to the officers and agents of such railroad company concerning railroad business. The telephone company proceeded, under the right obtained by this contract, to erect its line of telephone along the right of way of the second railroad company, and was engaged in the act of planting its poles and constructing its line across the right of way of the plaintiff, on the right of way theretofore condemned by the second railroad company, when the plaintiff brought this action for injunctive relief. The telephone company relied solely on its contract with the second railroad company, but the plaintiff claimed that the intended use of the telephone by the public made an additional burden on its right of way. The court denied the injunction, holding that the second railroad company might erect in proper manner, or contract with another to erect the line, and furnish the telegraph or telephone service necessary for the operation of its road, and that the commercial use of the telephone constituted no additional interference with the plaintiff's easement. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586, supra.

In Cumberland Valley & W. R. Co. v. Chambersburg & G. Electric R. Co. (1903) 15 Pa. Dist. R. 965, the court stated that the property rights of a railroad company not owning the fee in its right of way "do not extend upwards beyond a line necessary to transport its passengers and employees with safety and despatch, or downward below a line of support for their tracks and superstructures. The line of demarcation has not been, and probably cannot be, defined in feet."

In Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Clark (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 192 S. W. 1077, an action by a brakeman against a telephone company for personal injuries due to his being caught while on top of a car by defendant's wire, which crossed the railway line, the court said: "In acquiring easements for the construction and operation of railways, such corporations are entitled to so much of the space above the territory appropriated as may be necessary for the use and enjoyment of their franchises. That space is as much a part of the railway right of way as the ground which it covers. The telephone companies have no right to invade that zone in placing wires across the tracks, without the consent of the railway company whose property is affected, or by legal condemnation proceedings. In the absence of a right to share this space, it was the duty of the appellant, in placing its wires across the track at the point where the injury occurred, to put them at an elevation which would allow the unobstructed use of the railway right of way for all legitimate railway purposes. That elevation could be determined only by taking into consideration the general and probable uses essential to railway operation. 1 Joyce, Electricity, §§ 409 and 419. To arbitrarily go below that altitude would be an unlawful invasion and obstruction of the railway right of way."

(In Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Corbett (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 826, it was held that if a private person, without authority from the railroad company, employs a telephone company to string a wire across the railroad track to his home, and the telephone company so strings the wire as to injure an employee of the railroad company, the telephone company cannot escape liability because it acted for the private person.)

Where an employee of a railroad company, on the instructions of his superior, cut a crossing telephone line, the court affirmed his conviction of the offense of wilfully cutting a telephone line, holding that it was no defense that the owner of the telephone line, without the consent of the railroad company, and without condemnation proceedings, had crossed the right of way of the railroad company, where the facts were that the line crossed the tracks and right of way of the railroad company at a public road crossing, that the poles upon which the telephone wire was strung were not on the right of way of the railway company, and that the wire at the public road crossing, where it crossed the tracks of the railroad, was 35 feet high above the tracks, and 5 or 6 feet above the telegraph wires, strung on poles and running parallel with the railroad, and used by the railroad company, in the operation of its trains. McGowan v. State (1906)

40 So. 142, also briefly reported in 146 Ala. 679.

And in Alt v. State (1911) 88 Neb. 259, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1212, 129 N. W. 432, the court, without passing upon the question whether there was an invasion of the rights of the railroad company in stringing telephone wires across its right of way at a highway crossing, without permission of, or compensation to, the railroad company, which owned the fee subject to an easement for highway purposes at the locus in quo, held that, even if there was such an invasion, the railroad company was not justified in cutting the wires as a nuisance, it appearing that they did not in any way endanger the company's employees, or interfere with the moving of trains or with the right of way.

But in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Batesville & W. Teleph. Co. (1906) 80 Ark. 499, 97 S. W. 660, which was a suit for double damages provided for in a statute making it a misdemeanor to wilfully and intentionally destroy, injure, or obstruct any telegraph or telephone line, it was held that the statute was not applicable where a railroad company, along whose route the telephone line was constructed for several miles, crossing it several times, removed the poles and wires after repeated notice to the telephone company to do so, under the belief that it seriously menaced the operation of its trains, although the jury found as a matter of fact that it did not,—that at most it was only shown that the railroad company made a mistake in removing the line, which was far from proving the bad intent and evil motive necessary to convict it under the criminal statute.

(It may be noted that, in an action by a brakeman against the railroad company, his employer, for personal injuries from a telephone wire, the court said: "The telephone line being established when the track of the railway company was constructed, it is to be presumed that it was rightfully so established; and we are of opinion that the railway company had no right to demand that the telephone company should elevate its wire, in the absence of some contract, or of appropriate proceedings condemning the right of way under the wire, and conferring the right to entail upon the telephone company the burden of elevating its line at the point of intersection." Dillingham v. Crank (1894) 87 Tex. 104, 27 S. W. 93.

In New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Central Massachusetts Electric Co. (1915) 219 Mass. 85, L.R.A.1915B, 822, 106 N. E. 566, it was held that municipal authority to maintain electric light wires along a public highway does not include the right to carry them along the line of the street, over an intersecting railroad, upon the relocation of the street so as to pass under the railroad tracks, under statutory authority to abolish the grade crossing.

In this connection it may be noted that in South Eastern R. Co. v. European & American Electric Printing Teleg. Co. (1854) 9 Exch. 363, 156 Eng. Reprint, 154, 2 C. L. R. 467, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 113, on a construction of English statutes it was held that a telegraph company, in crossing a railway line at a place where that crossed the highway at a level, could not lay the wires under the track, but must cross overhead.

While the crossing of railroad tracks by street railways is beyond the scope of this annotation, some of those cases may be referred to on the subject of crossing trolley wires.

It seems that a street railway company may not be denied the right to cross a railroad track in a city because of the use of trolley wires, where it is otherwise entitled to cross, and the trolley wires do not interfere with the operation of the trains. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Wilmington City R. Co. (1897) 8 Del. Ch. 134, 38 Atl. 1067; West Jersey R. Co. v. Camden, G. & W. R. Co. (1893) 52 N. J. Eq. 31, 29 Atl. 423.

The crossing of a steam railroad in a city by an electric railroad may be reasonable and feasible although the trolley wires overhead will be a source of danger in the operation of trains, and electric cars may stop on the crossing from failure of the current, and the passage of the regular trains on the railroad will delay the street cars. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowling Green R. Co. (1901) 110 Ky. 788, 63 S. W. 4, where the Constitution provided: "All railway, transfer, belt lines and railway bridge companies shall allow the tracks of each other to unite, intersect and cross at any point where such union, intersection and crossing is reasonable or feasible."

In Cincinnati & H. Electric Street R. Co. v. Cleveland, H. & I. R. Co. (1898) 12 Ohio C. D. 118 (affirmed in (1901) in supreme court without report, see note to 12 Ohio C. D. 113), the court, in enjoining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in putting in crossings of the defendant's line in a city street, said: "So long as it is a settled law of this state that a street railway is not an additional burden to that of the easement which the general public has in the street, and that the street railroad company's right to use a street is founded on that easement, that long it must be held that the right of such a street railroad to cross over the tracks of a steam railroad laid on such street is subject to no conditions other than those to which the general public is subject in traveling over such street." The court said also: "The law . . . expressly provides that 'all telegraph, telephone, electric light or other wires of any kind constructed over the line of any steam railroad within the state of Ohio . . . to clear the top of the rails at least 25 feet, except in cases of trolley wire crossings, when such height, as may be agreed upon is approved by the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs, shall govern.' It is very evident that the only wire that can be strung at a less height above the tracks of a steam railroad than 25 feet is the trolley wire, and this wire can only be placed at a less height by agreement of the parties, when approved by the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs. If the trolley wire is placed 25 feet above the track, the same as the other wires, there is no necessity for the approval of the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs."

It has been stated that, in respect to a mere crossing, a railroad company is not an abutting owner to a street car company. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Greensburg, J. & P. Street R. Co. (1896) 176 Pa. 559, 36 L.R.A. 839, 35 Atl. 122; North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co. (1903) 205 Pa. 579, 55 Atl. 774.

The question of wires does not seem to be discussed in Chicago & C. Terminal R. Co. v. Whiting, H. & E. C. Street R. Co. (1894) 139 Ind. 297, 26 L.R.A. 337, 47 Am. St. Rep. 264, 38 N. E. 604, where it was held that an electric street railway need not pay compensation to a steam railroad company for the privilege of intersecting the railroad tracks where they cross a city street, if it makes the crossing as passable as it was before, or as nearly so as practicable.

It may be noted that in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen (1914) 67 Fla. 257, L.R.A.1915C, 20, 65 So. 8, where the lines crossed at the crossing of city streets, it was held that it is negligence on the part of an electric street railway company, in the construction and establishment of its road, so to place one of its trolley wires over the track of a steam railway company as not to afford sufficient space for the latter's trains to pass easily and conveniently, without risk of danger and injury to its servants and employees. It is negligence on the part of a steam railway company to permit an electric street car company so to construct and maintain over the track of the steam railway company a trolley wire that it will endanger the lives of its servants and employees. In the event of an injury to an employee of the steam railway company, while in the discharge of his duty, occasioned by his coming in contact with such wire, the electric company and the steam railway company are jointly liable as tort-feasors for such injury.

For right and measure of compensation to owner of fee when telegraph or telephone line is erected along railroad right of way or highway, see the annotation to Query v. Postal Telegr.-Cable Co. 8 A.L.R. 1290.

B. B. B.

ETTA YOUNG McDOWELL, Exrx., etc., of J. R. McDowell, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

A. S. McDOWELL et al.

Tennessee Supreme Court — October 29, 1921.

(— Tenn. —, 234 S. W. 319.)

Trust — conversion of property — tracing funds.

1. Owners of an interest in bonds pledged by a trustee as collateral for his own note cannot recover the amount from the insolvent estate of the trustee without tracing the proceeds of the note into possession of the representative of the estate.

[See note on this question beginning on page 626.]

Appeal — master's finding of facts — conclusiveness.

2. A finding of facts by the master, approved by the chancellor, will not be disturbed by the supreme court.

[See 2 R. C. L. 210, 211.]

Bonds — negotiable — collateral — innocent holder.

3. The owners of an interest in negotiable bonds pledged by one having possession of them as trustee to a bank as collateral for his own debt cannot recover their interest in specie, since the bank holds them as an innocent purchaser for value.

[See note in 12 A.L.R. 1048.]

APPEAL by the executrix from a decree of the Chancery Court for Knox County (Brown, Ch.), confirming the finding of the master in favor of intervening petitioners in a proceeding to wind up the insolvent estate of J. R. McDowell, deceased. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Fowler & Fowler for appellant.

Mr. Henry Hudson, for intervening petitioners:

Property in the possession of the debtor, which is established to belong to a third party, must be surrendered to that third party.

39 Cyc. 529; Twohy Mercantile Co. v. Melbye, 78 Minn. 357, 81 N. W. 20; Bircher v. Walther, 163 Mo. 461, 63 S. W. 691; Bromley v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Wis. 569, 79 N. W. 741; Dowie v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 98, 64 N. W. 315.

A court of equity will go as far as it can in tracing and following trust property.

39 Cyc. 545; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L.R.A. 570, 23 N. E. 1005.

A trustee may be compelled by a court of equity to refund money misappropriated.

39 Cyc. 510; Hassam v. Barrett, 115 Mass. 256; Roosevelt v. Land & River Improv. Co. 3 App. Div. 563, 38 N. Y. Supp. 242; 2 Perry, Trusts, § 844; Fowlet v. Herbert, 1 Ves. Jr. 297, 30 Eng. Reprint, 352; Pocock v. Reddington, 5 Ves. Jr. 794, 31 Eng. Reprint, 862; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 4,847; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 622; Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 681, 24 Eng. Reprint, 913; Vernon v. Vaudrey, Barnard, Ch. 303, 27 Eng. Reprint, 655; Freeman v. Cook, 41 N. C. (6 Ired. Eq.) 375; Norman v. Cunningham, 5 Gratt. 72.

If property be bought with partnership funds, a trust results, no matter how the title is taken.

Wells v. Stratton, 1 Tenn. Ch. 328; Brocchus v. Morgan, 3 Shannon, Cas. 671.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The insolvent estate of J. R. McDowell is being wound up in this cause in the court below. This appeal arises upon the validity and alleged priority of two claims presented by intervening petitions.

During his lifetime J. R. McDowell had in his possession ten bonds of the par value of $1,000 each. McDowell pledged these bonds to a Knoxville bank to secure a note for $10,000. The petitioners assert that they were interested in and part owners of said bonds. Petitioner Williams claims to have owned a one-third interest in one of the bonds, and petitioner Wilson claims to have owned a one-third interest in all of the ten bonds. They came into this cause asserting claims against the estate for the value of their respective interests in said bonds, and they also alleged that they were entitled to preferential payment of their claims out of the general assets of the deceased.

The master found that these petitioners did own the interests in the bonds which they asserted, and he allowed them to recover the value of their interests as general creditors of said estate. The chancellor confirmed the finding of the master as to the interests of said petitioners in said bonds, and in addition directed that their claims for the value of the bonds, converted by the deceased, be paid in full out of the funds of said estate, which estate, as said before, is insolvent.

Error is assigned in this court upon the allowance of the Wilson claim and upon the priority in payment given to both the Wilson and the Williams claims by the chancellor.

Both the said claims have been found just demands against the estate of the deceased by the master and the chancellor. This presents a concurrent finding upon an issue of fact which is supported by evidence in the record, and we will not go behind said finding.

The only question in this court is upon the chancellor's action in directing preferential payment of these claims. In this we think his Honor erred.

According to the stipulation of counsel, McDowell pledged said bonds to the bank as his own property and to secure an indebtedness of his own. The bank had no knowledge of the interests of the petitioners in said bonds, and took them as the property of McDowell. Moreover, the bonds appear to have been negotiable in form.

McDowell's note was unpaid, and the bank held said bonds as collateral security at the time of his death. Later, by agreement of all parties, steps were taken to realize upon the bonds, and there was obtained from this source something over $7,000, which was paid over to the bank. It was agreed that the bank should take and hold the proceeds of the bonds just as it held the bonds themselves, and that the rights of none of the parties would be affected by the proceedings had to collect said bonds.

The petitioners justify their claim to payment in full on the theory that McDowell held said bonds as a trustee for them to the extent of their several interests. They insist that, having converted the bonds to his own use, they were entitled in the first instance to have his estate redeem these securities from the bank to the extent of the petitioners' interests in them. Or, what is the same thing, the estate not having redeemed the bonds, petitioners should be allowed to recover from the estate the value of their property in the hands of deceased and misappropriated by him.

They cannot recover their interests in the bonds in specie as a matter of course, for the bank acquired the whole of said bonds as an innocent purchaser for value. Neither do we think that the petitioners are entitled to recover on the theory of tracing the proceeds of trust property.

Since Moffitt v. McDonald, 11 Humph. 457, it has been held in this state if a trustee converts a trust fund in his hands into another species of property, and its identity can be traced, it will be held in its new

Appeal—master's finding of facts
—conclusiveness.

Bonds—negotiable—collateral—
innocent holder.

form liable to the rights of the cestui que trust. All of our cases, however, emphasize the necessity of identifying the proceeds of the trust property misappropriated, and following such proceeds into some specific investment. This was done, or attempted, in Treadwell v. McKeon, 7 Baxt. 445; Wells v. Stratton, 1 Tenn. Ch. 328; and Brocchus v. Morgan, 3 Shannon, Cas. 671, relied on by the petitioners.

In Brocchus v. Morgan, supra, which is pressed upon our consideration, the trust fund was traced into a particular bank account. The presumption was applied that money thereafter checked from that account was the trustee's own money deposited first, and that the amount remaining represented the proceeds of the embezzled fund.

This court has never accepted the doctrine announced in some jurisdictions that, if one's general estate has been swelled by the proceeds of trust property, the trust may be established against the general assets although the estate be insolvent. This view formerly prevailed in some jurisdictions, but seems to have been abandoned almost everywhere now. We cannot undertake to review all the cases, but the trend of decision on the subject will be shown in an elaborate note under Macy v. Roedenbeck, 142 C. C. A. 42, 227 Fed. 347, following the report of that case in L.R.A.1916C, 12.

No effort is made to trace the proceeds of the note to which McDowell attached these bonds as collateral security. Whether the money thus obtained was used to pay debts, or whether it came into his general estate, does not appear. If it came into his estate, it is not followed into any assets now in the hands of his executrix. So far as the record shows, the amount realized on said note was mingled with McDowell's assets generally, and cannot now be distinguished.

In Moffitt v. McDonald, supra, the court declared this rule with respect 18 A.L.R.—40.

to tracing the proceeds of a trust fund: "It must, however, be clearly established that the property upon which the trust is sought to be fastened has been paid out of the specific trust fund. It is not sufficient to prove that the purchaser of the property had a fund belonging to another in his hands, unless the employment of that particular fund in the purchase be also proved."

We have three cases in which negotiable instruments were placed in the hands of banks, as agents to collect and remit the proceeds. These collections were mingled with the general funds of the collecting banks, and assignments were made by them before remittances. In each of these cases it was held that no trust could be imposed on funds in the hands of the assignee, even though the particular collection was made by the assignor as agent,—this because the fund collected had not been kept separate and could not be identified. Akin v. Jones, 93 Tenn. 353, 25 L.R.A. 523, 42 Am. St. Rep. 921, 27 S. W. 669; Sayles v. Cox, 95 Tenn. 579, 32 L.R.A. 715, 49 Am. St. Rep. 940, 32 S. W. 626; Klepper v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 534, 34 L.R.A. 536, 56 Am. St. Rep. 823, 37 S. W. 284.

The same rule is announced in Arbuckle Bros. v. Kirkpatrick, 98 Tenn. 221, 36 L.R.A. 285, 60 Am. St. Rep. 854, 39 S. W. 3, with reference to the proceeds of goods said to have been held on consignment, which was sold, and the proceeds thereof mingled by the insolvent firm with its own assets.

There is no reason for applying a different rule as to assets in the hands of an executor or administrator. Moffitt v. McDonald, supra, was an effort to fix a trust on property in the hands of the personal representative of a decedent. In Richardson v. Vick, 125 Tenn. 536, 545, 145 S. W. 177, it is said: "The general principles applicable to assignments for the benefit of creditors and proceedings in bankruptcy are much the same as those governing the administration of the estates of insolvent decedents."

Trust—conversion of property—tracing funds.

In order to follow trust money there must be specific property, capable of being identified, into which the trust money has gone. We have here only the general estate of the deceased, and there is no showing that any part of it came from the money secured by the pledge of these bonds.

A case almost exactly parallel to this is Lowe v. Jones, 192 Mass. 94, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 225, 78 N. E. 402, 7 Ann. Cas. 551. In that case certain securities were pledged by a trustee for his individual benefit. The trustee died insolvent, and it was sought to compel his representative to redeem the trust property pledged by the deceased. The court denied this relief in a well-reasoned opinion, and said that the effort was merely one to impress a trust on the general estate of the deceased to the amount of the securities misappropriated by him.

The Chancellor's decree will be modified as herein indicated. The petitioners are entitled to share in the assets of the estate of deceased as general creditors, but are not entitled to preferential payment. The petitioners will pay the costs of this court, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Right of cestui que trust to have trust property wrongfully pledged by trustee for his personal debt redeemed by money belonging to his insolvent estate.

In order to entitle a cestui que trust to have trust property wrongfully pledged by the trustee as security for a personal debt redeemed by money belonging to the trustee's insolvent estate, it is necessary that he be able to trace, not the trust property itself, but its proceeds. See the reported case (McDOWELL v. McDOWELL, ante, 623); Lowe v. Jones (1906) 192 Mass. 94, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 225, 78 N. E. 402, 7 Ann. Cas. 551.

The view has been entertained in some cases that it is sufficient to entitle the cestui que trust to a preference over the general creditors of the trustee's insolvent estate, to show that the assets of such estate have been augmented by the proceeds of the trust property without identifying them in any form; but most, if not all, of these cases have been overruled or greatly limited or qualified, and the generally accepted rule at the present time is that it must appear that the trust property or its proceeds have found their way directly into the estate of the trustee, that the property must be found to reside in the assets at the time when the claim is asserted, and must not have been expended or dissipated for any purpose in the business of the trustee. See 26 R. C. L. pp. 1355, 1356.

The view that the proceeds of the trust property must be traced into some specific property or fund is adhered to in Lowe v. Jones (Mass.) supra, and in the reported case (McDOWELL v. McDOWELL).

Although the cestui que trust may not be entitled to have the trust property redeemed at the expense of the trustee's insolvent estate, he may nevertheless assert his claim thereto, subject to such rights as the pledgee may have acquired as a bona fide purchaser for value.

Thus, he may claim from the pledgee the surplus remaining after satisfaction of the loan, provided the pledgee has not turned it over to the trustee before receiving notice of the claim of the cestui que trust thereto (see Thompson v. Bank of California (1906) 4 Cal. App. 660, 88 Pac. 987); and he may recover such surplus from the trustee in bankruptcy of the pledgor, to whom the pledgee has turned over such surplus (see Hutchinson v. LeRoy (1902) 51 C. C. A. 159, 113 Fed. 202).

He may, by notice to the pledgee, require him to resort first to other collateral held by him. See Furber v. Dane (1909) 203 Mass. 108, 89 N. E. 227.

See also in this connection, Woodside v. Graffin (1900) 91 Md. 422, 46 Atl. 968, in which it was held that where the trustee pledged stock held by him in trust as security for a loan for his individual benefit, which loan was refused by his assignee for the benefit of creditors upon the pledge of the same stock together with other stock belonging to the trustee individually, which individually owned stock was sold by the assignee for a sufficient amount to pay off the whole loan, the beneficiaries were entitled to a return of their stock, and the assignee was not entitled to be subrogated, as against their claim, to the rights of the pledgee of the stock, though he had used funds of the estate to discharge the debt, upon the ground that the assignee occupied no better position than the trustee, who, had he redeemed the stock before making the assignment, could not have withheld it from the beneficiaries.

If the pledgee is chargeable with notice that the subject of the pledge is trust property, or if he is not a purchaser for value, as where the pledge was to secure an antecedent debt, the cestui que trust may claim the property without first discharging the debt for which it was pledged. As to the right of the beneficial owner to recover property or funds transferred by the trustee or fiduciary to pay or secure his own antecedent indebtedness, see annotation in 12 A.L.R. 1048. E. S. O.

OLIN S. WRIGHT, Appt.,

v.

PALESTINE C. WRIGHT.

Florida Supreme Court — April 4, 1921.

(— Fla. —, 87 So. 156.)

Divorce — desertion — refusal to condone.

1. The refusal by a deserted spouse to resume marital relations after the obstinate, wilful, and continued desertion for a period of a year does not deprive him or her of the right to a divorce on the ground of such desertion.

[See note on this question beginning on page 630.]

Husband and wife — desertion — duty to condone.

2. Where there has been wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion by either the husband or wife for a period of a year, there is no obligation on the part of the deserted spouse thereafter to resume the marital relations, and the refusal to do so does not extinguish the cause of action.

[See 9 R. C. L. 373.]

Divorce — acquiescence — effect.

3. Where a husband or wife wilfully and wrongfully deserts the other, the willingness for, or tacit acquiescence in, the desertion, on the part of the deserted spouse, will not defeat the cause of action, if such wilful desertion is obstinate and continued for the period of a year.

[See note in 3 A.L.R. 503.]

Headnotes by BROWNE, Ch. J.

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Hillsborough County (Robles, J.), dismissing a bill filed for a divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Martin Caraballo, for appellant:

An offer to discontinue the desertion and return to and live with the deserted spouse, though made in good faith and before the institution of any suit for divorce, cannot, unless accepted, constitute any defense to such suit.

Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 468; Fishli v. Fishli, 2 Litt. 337; Cargill v. Cargill, 1 Swabey & T. 235, 27 L. J. Prob. N. S. 69, 4 Jur. N. S. 764, 6 Week. Rep. 870; Brookes v. Brookes, 1 Swabey & T. 326, 28 L. J. Prob. N. S. 38; Basing v. Basing, 3 Swabey & T. 516, 33 L. J. Prob. N. S. 150, 10 Jur. N. S. 806, 10 L. T. N. S. 756; Hesler v. Hesler, Wright (Ohio) 210; M'Lauchlan v. M'Lauchlan, 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d series, 294; Muir v. Muir, 6 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 1353, 16 Scot. L. R. 785.

When a husband or wife, without cause, abandons the other, and makes no offer to resume the marital relation, a divorce will not be denied.

Fielding v. Fielding, 67 Fla. 143, 64 So. 546.

Where one spouse drives the other, who is innocent of any offense against the marital relation, from the matrimonial domicile, the former is guilty of deserting the latter.

Hudson v. Hudson, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 51 So. 857, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

Mr. William H. Malone also for appellant.

Mr. G. B. Wells for appellee.

Browne, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree denying the prayer of the bill for divorce and dismissing the bill. The divorce was sought on the ground of the wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion, for the period of one year, of Olin S. Wright, by his wife, Palestine C. Wright. Dr. Wright and his wife had lived for many years in a house belonging to Mrs. Wright. In the latter part of April, 1915, Mrs. Wright informed her husband that she was going away and that her house had sheltered him as long as it could, and that he must move out, as she wanted to rent it. She told him that he had a room over his office that he could occupy, and he took up his lodging there.

During their married life she frequently told him to move out of her house, but on this occasion it seems she took more care to see that her wishes were complied with by moving out of the house herself, and renting it for a boarding house or hotel. During their married life there was considerable faultfinding on the part of the wife, and when her husband would not agree to her wishes or demands she would threaten separation.

Mrs. Wright remained away from Plant City from May, 1915, to January, 1917. She admits that she rented her house and told her husband that he could live over his office, where he had plenty of room, and that she left Plant City in May, 1915, but says her reason for leaving him was to keep her children in school. She spent the time that she was away from her husband in Gainesville, Florida; Atlanta, Georgia; Hiddenmire, North Carolina; Gainesville, Georgia; New York city, and Atlantic City, New Jersey. She also admits having told her husband some time prior to her putting him out of the house that she wanted him to get a divorce.

Dr. Wright's testimony is corroborated by other witnesses. Mrs. Evers testified that in April or May, 1915, she rented from Mrs. Wright the house in which they were living at that time. She says she was anxious to secure some boarders and asked Mrs. Wright what was to become of Dr. Wright and his son, to which Mrs. Wright replied: "She had furnished shelter over their heads long enough, and it was time for them to get out." She reserved one room in the house for a son by a former husband. Mrs. Evers testified that she wanted to have Dr. Wright and his son board with her, but that Mrs. Wright said they would get out.

The deputy sheriff who served the subpoena in chancery on Mrs. Wright testified that she asked him what it was for, and he told her he supposed it was a divorce proceeding, and that she told him that she had insisted on that for several years. He told her that she would not have to appear in court if she did not want to, if that was the way she felt about it.

The only conclusion to be reached from all the testimony is that for some time prior to Mrs. Wright putting her husband out of the house she desired a divorce, and that she no longer cared to live with him; but, as they were living in her house and she could not abandon him without leaving him in possession, she adopted the alternative of putting him out, renting the house, and, in order that all semblance of relations between them might be severed, she objected to the party to whom she rented the house letting her husband remain there even as a boarder.

At the time she left, instead of arranging their affairs so that whenever she returned their marital relations could be easily resumed, she, on the contrary, took the precaution to see that he was not even permitted to board in their former home, and had him move into a room over his office, which, while it might have been an admirable bachelor's apartment, was hardly suitable for a married couple.

An effort is made to show an attempt at reconciliation on the part of Mrs. Wright, but it came twenty months after the desertion and eight months after the cause of action accrued. Whatever may be the duty of either spouse during the period when the cause of action on the ground of desertion is incubating, there is no obligation upon the part of either, after the desertion has been wilful, obstinate, and continued for the period of a year, to resume the marital relations.

Husband and wife—desertion—duty to condone.

The testimony in support of the contention that Mrs. Wright, after twenty months' absence, wanted to resume marital relations with her husband, consists only of a statement by her to her husband, that she had gotten the house fixed up and that she was to begin eating there that day, and when he got ready he could come over. This the chancellor properly construed to be only an invitation to dinner, but, even if it had been an offer on her part to resume marital relations, it came too late, as the desertion had been obstinate, wilful, and continued for a year, and after such a desertion the injured party is within his rights if he declines to resume marital relations.

Divorce—desertion—refusal to condone.

The decree in this case is predicated upon the erroneous doctrine that if a husband or wife deserts the other there must be no willingness or acquiescence in such desertion on the part of the deserted spouse. We know of no such rule, and there is nothing in the statute to warrant grafting that doctrine upon it.

A drunken husband may make his wife's life so wretched that his desertion may come as a relief, and it would be a strange and harsh doctrine if, in order to procure a divorce on the ground of wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion for a year, she would have to establish, in addition to the desertion, the fact that she had grieved her heart out at the loss of her drunken husband.

The frame of mind of the deserted spouse in no way lessens the gravity of the offense of a wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion.

—acquiescence—effect.

We think the evidence sustains the allegations of the bill, and as the question of whether the complainant was pleased or not at his wife's desertion does not affect the issue, the chancellor erred in refusing to grant the divorce and dismissing the bill, and the decree is therefore reversed.

Taylor, Whitfield, Ellis, and West, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Divorce: offer after lapse of statutory period of desertion to resume marital relations.

An offer by the offending party, after the lapse of the statutory period of desertion, to resume marital relations, comes too late.

California. — Benkert v. Benkert (1867) 32 Cal. 467; Vosburg v. Vosburg (1902) 136 Cal. 195, 69 Pac. 694; Walker v. Walker (1910) 14 Cal. App. 487, 112 Pac. 479. See also Kenniston v. Kenniston (1907) 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 Pac. 1037.

Florida. — WRIGHT v. WRIGHT (reported herewith) ante, 627.

Idaho. — Stoneburner v. Stoneburner (1905) 11 Idaho, 603, 83 Pac. 938.

Illinois. — Kerby v. Kerby (1910) 157 Ill. App. 564 (apparently taking a like view).

Iowa. — Tipton v. Tipton (1915) 169 Iowa, 182, 151 N. W. 90, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 360.

Kentucky. — Fishli v. Fishli (1822) 2 Litt. 342 (apparently obiter).

New Jersey. — See Gordon v. Gordon (1918) 89 N. J. Eq. 535, 105 Atl. 242, infra.

Oregon. — Luper v. Luper (1908) 61 Or. 418, 96 Pac. 1099 (apparently approving the rule).

Washington. — See Egbers v. Egbers (1914) 79 Wash. 72, 139 Pac. 767.

The same rule was held where the right had accrued to the wife to a judicial separation on the ground of desertion without cause for two years and upwards. Cargill v. Cargill (1858) 1 Swabey & T. (Ir.) 235, 4 Jur. N. S. 764, 6 Week. Rep. 870, 27 L. J. Prob. N. S. 69. See also Mallinson v. Mallinson (1866) L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. (Eng.) 93, 14 Week. Rep. 353; Basing v. Basing (1864) 3 Swabey & T. (Ir.) 516, 10 Jur. N. S. 806, 33 L. J. Prob. N. S. 150, 10 L. T. N. S. 756.

It will be seen that the rule is sustained by the reported case (WRIGHT v. WRIGHT, ante, 627).

So, in case of a constructive desertion, the offer of the guilty spouse to become reconciled is too late if made after the other party's right of action accrues. Lundy v. Lundy (1922) — Ariz. —, 202 Pac. 809.

The rule is suggested by a statute which provides that "if one party deserts the other, and, before the expiration of the statutory period required to make the desertion a cause of divorce, returns and offers in good faith to fulfil the marriage contract and solicits condonation, the desertion is cured." Walker v. Walker (1910) 14 Cal. App. 487, 112 Pac. 479.

When the statute provides that, after the lapse of four years and the adoption of certain prescribed procedure, the party deserted shall have a right to obtain a divorce, the deserter cannot, after four years and the prerequisite procedure, defeat the divorce action, by an offer to return made after the beginning of such action. M'Lauchlan v. M'Lauchlan (1838) 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d series, 294.

In Tutwiler v. Tutwiler (1916) 118 Va. 724, 88 S. E. 86, where after a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro had been granted to a wife against her husband, at least for desertion, he asked her to return to him, the court said: "With reference to the appellant's overtures made after the decree was rendered against him, we have no difficulty in holding that they were too late to have any effect upon the correctness of that decree. The cause is still pending, however, the decree for alimony is temporary only, there has been no divorce a vinculo, and the provisions of § 2266 of the Code will enable the lower court to afford the parties any relief to which they may hereafter show themselves entitled."

In New Jersey, while in Hall v. Hall (1902) — N. J. Eq. —, 53 Atl. 455, affirmed in (1903) 65 N. J. Eq. 709, 55 Atl. 300, the opinion of Vice Chancellor Pitney seems to indicate a view in accordance with the general rule, the court of errors and appeals in Myles v. Myles (1910) 77 N. J. Eq. 265, 76 Atl. 1037, laid down the rule that "the two-years' duration contemplated by the statute are, of course, those immediately preceding the filing of the petition;" and this rule of law was held binding on the court of chancery in its decision in Gordon v. Gordon (1917) 88 N. J. Eq. 436, 103 Atl. 31, wherein it was accordingly held that where, after the two-years' desertion period had expired, the deserting party had become insane, the offended party could not obtain a divorce on the ground of desertion. But the court of errors and appeals, while affirming the judgment in (1918) 89 N. J. Eq. 535, 105 Atl. 242, did so on the ground that the wilful desertion period of two years had not been completed when the insanity began, and said, inter alia, referring to the Myles Case, supra: "What we intended to express was that, no matter how long the period of desertion had existed beyond the statutory two years preceding the filing of the petition, unless the desertion had continued up to the time of such filing, the injured spouse could take no benefit from the statute. But, in our view, when the two-years' period has once elapsed the desertion becomes permanently established, and its character continues until the filing of the petition, unless it is sooner brought to an end by the act of the injured husband or wife. During the whole of the two years immediately following the act of desertion the offending spouse is offered an opportunity of repenting of his or her sin, and may put an end to the running of the statute by exhibiting such repentance to his or her wife or husband, and offering in good faith to return to the deserted home and to renew cohabitation. But if he or she declines to take advantage of the opportunity to repent afforded by the statute, and persists in the desertion for the full period of two years, the right to return has gone, the hour of repentance has passed, the benefit given by the statute to the spouse offended against has become vested, and he or she can never thereafter be deprived of that benefit—of his or her right to a divorce—except by his or her own act. Repentance by the sinner, offers of return by him or her, are then of no avail. Not even the fact that the offending spouse, after the termination of the two-years' period, has ceased to be a free agent by reason of mental aberration, or from any other cause, can deprive the injured spouse of that vested right. It is absolute and unassailable."

In Massachusetts, where the statute made a ground for divorce "utter desertion continued for three consecutive years next prior to the filing of the libel," the court, in LaFlamme v. LaFlamme (1911) 210 Mass. 156, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1133, 96 N. E. 62, said, arguendo: "It is true, as was argued in behalf of the libellant, that in December, 1909, he had become entitled to a divorce from his wife on the ground of her desertion. Cargill v. Cargill (1858) 1 Swabey & T. (Ir.) 235, 4 Jur. N. S. 764, 6 Week. Rep. 870, 27 L. J. Prob. N. S. 69." B. B. B.

RE ESTATE OF MARGARET GRAHAM, Deceased.

R. B. TAPPAN, Exr., etc., of Margaret Graham, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

ANNA FORTMAN, Respt.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—October 18, 1921.

(— Cal. —, 201 Pac. 456.)

Executor and administrator — right of lawyer administrator to employ attorney to probate the estate.

That an administrator is a practising attorney does not, under a statute providing that he shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care and settlement of the estate, prevent his receiving an allowance for the expenses of an attorney to perform the usual and ordinary legal services incident to a probate proceeding, where the legislature has provided compensation for both the administrator and the attorney in such proceeding.

[See note on this question beginning on page 635.]

APPEAL by the executor from an order of the Superior Court for Alameda County (Robinson, J.), denying an allowance in his final account of fees to an attorney employed by him in the administration of the estate of his decedent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Nusbaumer & Bingaman for appellant.

Mr. Allen G. Wright, amicus curiæ:

An administrator has the right to retain counsel to aid him in the settlement of the estate, and to pay him reasonable compensation therefor out of the assets of the estate.

Re Gasq, 42 Cal. 288; Re Page, 57 Cal. 238; Re Simmons, 43 Cal. 543; Re Ogier, 101 Cal. 381, 40 Am. St. Rep. 61, 35 Pac. 900; Re Kasson, 119 Cal. 489, 51 Pac. 706; Collier v. Munn, 41 N. Y. 143; Re Runyon, 125 Cal. 197, 57 Pac. 783; Re Hite, 155 Cal. 448, 101 Pac. 448; Re Murphy, 171 Cal. 697, 154 Pac. 839; Willard v. Bassett, 27 Ill. 38, 79 Am. Dec. 393; 1 Perry, Trusts, § 432; Re Brignole, 133 Cal. 162, 65 Pac. 294.

Mr. L. R. Weinmann for respondent.

Sloane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by R. B. Tappan, executor of the last will of Margaret Graham, deceased, from an order of court denying an allowance in the final account of the executor of fees to an attorney employed by said executor in the administration of the estate of said decedent.

The executor, Tappan, is himself a practising lawyer, and it was the ruling of the probate court that his employment of an attorney for the usual and ordinary legal proceedings of the administration was not a necessary expense of the administration. An allowance of attorneys' fees was made for certain extraordinary services rendered by the attorney employed in the course of the administration. So the only question presented is whether an executor or administrator, who is himself a practising lawyer, is entitled to employ and pay from the estate an attorney for the performance of the usual and ordinary legal services that are incident to a probate proceeding.

The Code of Civil Procedure, as in force at the time this estate was in process of administration, contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 1616. Compensation of the executor and administrator. . . . He shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate, and for his services such fees as provided in this chapter."

"Sec. 1618. When no compensation is provided by the will, or the executor renounces all claim thereto, he must be allowed commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him."

Then follows a graded scale of commissions, varying with the valuation of the estate. Section 1619 provides that attorneys for executors and administrators shall be allowed out of the estate, as fees "for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, the same amounts as are allowed by the last section as compensation for executors and administrators for their own services."

The reasonable necessity for the employment of an attorney to prepare legal papers and conduct the ordinary court proceedings by the average layman administrator is not disputed. Such employment is a matter of universal practice, the compensation is provided for by statute, and made equal to that of the executor or administrator, and such allowance is not made an issue in this case further than to claim an exception where such executor or administrator is himself a lawyer, and competent to perform the legal services required.

We may, therefore, confine ourselves to a consideration of the question whether a duty rests upon the executor who is a lawyer to render this professional legal service to the estate without additional compensation, rather than to employ another attorney for such service.

Counsel in this case are disposed to agree that, if the executor does perform these legal services, he may not receive extra compensation therefor.

The issue presented here is whether the performance of such professional legal duties is part of the service designated by the Code when it provides that the executor or administrator shall receive "for his services such fees as are provided in this chapter." It is clear that the services incumbent upon the executor in the exercise of his duty to the estate are the same, irrespective of his general vocation in life. The "care, management, and settlement of the estate" referred to in § 1616, supra, may call for the services of a plumber, a carpenter, an auctioneer, a real estate agent, or an expert accountant. Must the administrator render these services if they happen to be in the line of his general occupation? Clearly not. He would be entitled to hire such work done, and pay for it as part of the "necessary expense of the care, management, and settlement of the estate." If he did perform such services, which were not in the line of his duty as administrator, he might not be permitted to receive compensation, but the reason would be one of public policy, forbidding him to be his own employer.

In many of the states and in California prior to 1873, attorneys' fees have been approved under the general provision that the administrator "shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate," and, as already pointed out, under such general provision an attorney administrator would be no more called upon to give his professional services to the estate than would the plumber, carpenter, or accountant administrator to render services that might be required in his special line of business, when the care and management of the estate should call for such employment.

It is true that such services as just referred to are of a more exceptional and casual nature than that of handling the legal business of an administration, but that is an additional reason why the latter should not be gratuitously added to the responsibilities of the lawyer administrator, while all others are allowed to avail themselves of outside legal assistance.

The legal end of the probate of an estate has come to be recognized as a distinct branch of employment. Hence we have had various amendments to the Code, recognizing and providing for such legal services. In 1873 there was added to the general provision hereinbefore quoted, providing for an allowance to the administrator of all necessary expenses," etc., the words, "including reasonable fees paid to attorneys for conducting the necessary proceedings or suits in the probate or other courts." In 1905 the legislature advanced the position of an attorney in probate matters, so far as relates to compensation, to an equality with the administrator, upon a commission basis, graduated according to the value of the estate, and in 1909 the law as it now stands was enacted, which gives the same compensation to the attorney for the ordinary legal services of a probate proceeding as are allowed to the administrator for the ordinary business administration of the estate.

We are bound to assume that the legislature, in its deliberations, has determined that the services rendered by the administrator and by the attorney in such probate proceedings are of equal value, and that the compensation to each is a reasonable compensation for the service rendered. It certainly would be an unjust interpretation of the law which would require of the lawyer administrator twice the service for the same pay that is required of the merchant or mechanic or physician in the same position.

Although the employment of an attorney for the probate of an estate is not required by law, such employment is recognized by our legislation as the usual and customary practice, and it is doubtless conducive to system and accuracy in the administration of the probate law. The probate procedure in California may be considered by many as unduly intricate and expensive, but it cannot be disputed that it is effective in the settlement of estates and the transmission of property and titles in a way to protect the rights of creditors and of heirs and devisees.

The whole matter of the disposition of the estates of deceased persons is within the legislative control. Our legislature has seen fit to recognize the services and compensation of the administrator, and the services and compensation of an attorney, as relating to distinct employments in probate administration.

There are, and have been, to the knowledge of all legislators, hundreds of practising lawyers serving as executors and administrators, but there has been no intimation in any law upon the subject that a different rule should apply to a lawyer in such position, in the matter of employing legal assistance, than to an administrator of any other business calling.

And in all of the innumerable instances in this and in other states where lawyer administrators have employed and paid attorneys, there seems to be but one case in the courts where the right of such employment has been called in question.

There are decisions cited where, on grounds of public policy, it has been held that an administrator rendering legal services cannot receive additional compensation therefor. Taylor v. Wright, 93 Ind. 121; Hough v. Harvey, 71 Ill. 72; Collier v. Munn, 41 N. Y. 143; Bushby v. Berkeley, 153 App. Div. 742, 138 N. Y. Supp. 831; Doss v. Stevens, 13 Colo. App. 535, 59 Pac. 67.

Other courts have upheld allowances to the administrator for legal services rendered by him as an attorney in the interests of the estate. Harris v. Martin, 9 Ala. 895; Morgan v. Nelson, 43 Ala. 586; Wisner v. Mabley, 74 Mich. 143, 41 N. W. 835; Chatfield v. Swing, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 666; Fulton v. Davidson, 3 Heisk. 614.

The only decision which the diligence of the counsel in this action and of amicus curiæ filing briefs in behalf of this matter has been able to find, bearing upon the right of such administrator to employ an attorney, is that of Noble v. Whitten, 38 Wash. 262, 80 Pac. 451. This decision was under a statute similar to the provisions of the California law prior to 1873, which merely allowed to the administrator "all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate." It was there held that the administrator, who was a practising lawyer, was not under the necessity of employing additional legal assistance, and was not entitled to an allowance therefor. It is said in the course of the opinion: "In this case the record shows that the administrator was a lawyer. He had control of the estate as agent and attorney for the deceased during her lifetime. He was allowed a claim of $200 for services and advice to Mrs. Whitten prior to her death. Mr. Whitten, the principal heir, desired to retain him as attorney to represent 'my interest and that of my children, if any, and continue to manage the property, so far, at least, as our interests are concerned;' and, upon this request, Mr. Noble voluntarily offered to serve as administrator. Because of these facts, no doubt, Mr. Whitten consented to his appointment as administrator, and because of his ability and fitness to conduct the administration of the estate the court appointed him."

To what extent the court was influenced in the decision cited by the circumstances referred to as to the choice of this administrator with a view to his legal services does not appear. In the application of the limitation as a general rule, especially in view of the more specific recognition of the functions of an employed attorney under our Code, its authority is not controlling and its reasoning is not convincing.

Conceding that it is still within the discretion of the probate court in this state to pass upon the necessity for the employment of an attorney in the administration of an estate, the same as upon other matters of necessary expenditure, we are satisfied that denial of such necessity cannot be made to rest upon the mere fact that the required services are in the line of the administrator's profession or business.

Executor and administrator—right of lawyer administrator to employ attorney to probate the estate.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Wilbur, J.; Lennon, J.; Lawlor, J.

Petition for rehearing denied November 10, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Right of executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is himself an attorney, to employ another attorney at the expense of the estate.

General rule.

An executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee who is himself an attorney may properly employ another attorney to render the necessary legal services for the estate, and the court may make an allowance out of the estate for the value of such legal services. RE GRAHAM (reported herewith) ante, 631; Doss v. Stevens (1899) 13 Colo. App. 535, 59 Pac. 67; Re Van Buren (1897) 19 Misc. 373, 44 N. Y. Supp. 857; Re Wick (1907) 53 Misc. 211, 104 N. Y. Supp. 717; Re Lester (1916) 172 App. Div. 509, 158 N. Y. Supp. 763; Burge v. Bruttin (1843) 2 Hare, 373, 67 Eng. Reprint, 153, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 368, 7 Jur. 988; Stanes v. Parker (1846) 9 Beav. 385, 50 Eng. Reprint, 392, 10 Jur. 603 (arguendo); Re Corsellis (1887) L. R. 34 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 675, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 294, 56 L. T. N. S. 411, 35 Week. Rep. 309, 51 J. P. 597 (arguendo); Broughton v. Broughton (1855) 5 De G. M. & G. 160, 43 Eng. Reprint, 831, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 250, 1 Jur. N. S. 365, 3 Week. Rep. 602 (arguendo). Contra in part, Noble v. Whitten (1905) 38 Wash. 262, 85 Pac. 451.

It is held in the reported case (RE

GRAHAM, ante, 631) that an executor who is himself a practising lawyer is entitled to employ another attorney to render the usual and ordinary legal services incident to the administration of the estate, at the expense of the estate.

In Doss v. Stevens (1899) 13 Colo. App. 535, 59 Pac. 67, supra, the court, while denying to an administrator who was a lawyer, his claim for legal services rendered by himself, allowed him for the services of counsel employed by him in and about the hearings on his final report, where the statute provided: "Executors and administrators shall be allowed as a compensation for their trouble a sum not exceeding 6 per cent on the whole amount of personal estate and not exceeding 3 per cent on the money arising from the sale or letting of land; with such additional allowances for costs and charges in collecting and defending the claims of the estate and disposing of the same as shall be reasonable, to be allowed and paid as other expenses of administration."

In Burge v. Brutton (1843) 2 Hare, 373, 67 Eng. Reprint, 153, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 368, 7 Jur. 988, supra, it was held that where an executor who is a solicitor, practising in the country, acts as solicitor in a case in which he is a party in his representative character, though he is only allowed personally as against the estate such costs as he actually pays, he is entitled to be allowed as against the estate that proportion of the whole costs which his town agent in the cause was entitled to receive.

In Stanes v. Parker (1846) 9 Beav. 385, 50 Eng. Reprint, 392, supra, the court observed, arguendo: "The safety of the public has been justly thought to require the rule now clearly established, that, although a trustee, being a solicitor, may appoint another solicitor to execute the professional business relating to the trust, yet, if he does it himself, he shall not be allowed to charge for his professional services."

In Re Corsellis (1887) L. R. 34 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 675, supra, a case of a testamentary trustee, Cotton, L. J., said, arguendo: "A trustee who is a solicitor cannot, as a rule, make any profits as a solicitor on business which is done by himself or by the firm of which he is a member in matters relating to the estate. . . . If there is business which a layman cannot properly perform, he may employ a solicitor to do that legal business."

A part of the amount paid by an executor who was a lawyer, to other attorneys, for services, was allowed in Re Wick (1907) 53 Misc. 211, 104 N. Y. Supp. 717, supra.

In the contra case of Noble v. Whitten (1905) 38 Wash. 262, 85 Pac. 451, supra, quoted from in the reported case (RE GRAHAM, ante, 631), the court said also: "Where the administrator is a lawyer, and competent to prepare his own ordinary papers in the conduct of the estate, he should be required to do so without extra compensation. Where there is litigation concerning the estate, and the administrator is a party, under such circumstances, the services of a legal assistant would no doubt be necessary and proper. This is not such a case. The only time in the course of the administration of the estate when an attorney or assistant to the administrator was necessary was in the trial of the questions now presented here. These questions were caused by the administrator attempting to obtain an allowance to which he was not entitled. He should not be authorized to employ an attorney for that purpose."

It may be here noted that in Re Van Buren (1896) 19 Misc. 373, 44 N. Y. Supp. 857, supra, where, upon the accounting of an administrator who was a lawyer, the court allowed part of the moneys paid out by him for services by other attorneys, one of whom was his law partner, the court said, in refusing to allow payments to lawyers and others for collecting testimony: "It is difficult to see on what legal principle this expense can be allowed, or how it can be construed as necessary. . . . This administrator is a lawyer, and accustomed to collecting and weighing testimony himself. He has already been allowed $185 for one attorney, $565 for another, and in the Lovel-Quitman Case his attorney was allowed $93 more, which would seem to be a sufficient allowance for attorneys, even in this estate, for litigations prior to the final accounting, without $80 additional for legal services of the kind herein disclosed. This is not the case of an executor brought into the care of an estate without his knowledge or consent, nor of an administrator endeavoring to make as good settlement as possible for a near relative, but a lawyer not of any kin to deceased, appointed apparently of his own volition, and necessarily bound to use his best ability and legal training to properly discharge the duties of the trust he had voluntarily assumed."

Of course, an executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee will not be allowed for the expense of services of an attorney when the services are such as a layman executor, etc., could perform as well. Thus, an executor and trustee who is an attorney and an experienced business man cannot pay other lawyers for business judgment, at the expense of the estate. In Re Lester (1916) 172 App. Div. 509, 158 N. Y. Supp. 763, supra, the court made an allowance for part of the payments made by an executor and trustee, who was a lawyer, to his firm, for legal services rendered both in court proceedings and otherwise, it having been agreed before such services were rendered that he was not to share in the moneys received therefor. In this case, the court said as to one item: "An examination of the evidence and findings above referred to, and the bills presented for legal services on account of the Hotel Brunswick property of approximately $12,500, show that a considerable portion of such services was rendered in the discharge of duties which the respondent himself was fully competent to discharge, and which he was under legal obligation to perform. The respondent had been admitted to practise in the courts of the state of New York prior to 1880, and had been actively engaged in general law practice, and was a member of the real estate firm of Lester Brothers, and was undoubtedly well qualified to pass upon many of the matters requiring simply the exercise of good business judgment in connection with handling the Hotel Brunswick property."

There are some jurisdictions in which an executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee who is a lawyer may be allowed for his own legal services to the estate, and it has been held in such jurisdictions that he may employ his partner or other attorneys.

In Bendall v. Bendall (1854) 24 Ala. 295, 60 Am. Dec. 469, in allowing an administrator for payment for services to his law partner, the court said: "The mere fact that the administrator and B. T. Moore were law partners at the time, which is so prominently set out in the bill of exceptions, and in the argument of the attorney for the plaintiff in error, is wholly without weight in considering the propriety of this allowance. We have already decided, upon full consideration, that allowances of this character may well be made to the administrator himself, if he be an attorney, and, as such, renders necessary legal services to the estate; the judge of the probate court deciding upon the propriety and reasonableness of the charges. Harris v. Martin (1846) 9 Ala. 895. It would seem to follow from this, that there would be no impropriety whatever in the employment of the law partner of the administrator to render legal services for the estate, and in paying him a just and reasonable compensation for such services when rendered."

"It is the opinion of a majority of the members of the court that where an administrator, being an attorney at law, finding it necessary to institute a suit in behalf of the estate, associates another attorney with him, and they—himself and such other attorney—jointly render professional services to the estate in the institution and prosecution of such suit, the administrator is entitled to a credit on the settlement of the administration in the probate court to the extent of the reasonable value of such services." John v. Sharp (1906) 41 So. 635, also briefly reported in 148 Ala. 665.

Where the executor was an attorney, the court said that the statute authorizes the probate judge to allow "for services extraordinary in their character and out of the common course of the duty of the administrator. While it would have been within the course of plaintiff's duty to have secured the services of an attorney, it was not within that duty for him to perform those services himself, and, in the discretion of the court, he may be allowed therefor." Re Wilson (1909) 83 Neb. 252, 119 N. W. 522.

In Fulton v. Davidson (1871) 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 614, the court said: "Nor does the fact that John M. Bright was executor as well as solicitor for the estate interfere with his right to compensation as a solicitor or counselor. Every executor or administrator has a right to procure the necessary legal counsel in administering his trust, and to pay reasonable compensation therefor out of the assets of the estate. If the executor or administrator is himself an attorney at law, he may either employ other counsel, or he may give to the business his own professional services. In the latter case, he is entitled to the same compensation which he would have paid to another attorney in the former case. There is no incompatibility in the two offices of executor and solicitor."

In Re Mumma (1855) 1 Pearson (Pa.) 394, the court said (arguendo): "In England and New York an attorney administrator is justifiable in engaging another attorney to attend to the interests of the estate; and if such attorney happens to be an executor or guardian, he may, in turn, employ his employer in relation to his trust. Why not permit each to attend to the business of his own estate, which he best understands, and not drive the two to an exchange of labor?"

Employment of one's law firm or partner.

The cases in the English books holding that if an executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee who is a solicitor, employs his law firm or law partner in matters of the trust, the employer will be allowed only his costs out of pocket, go upon the theory that the employer would share in the fees to his firm or partner. See Collins v. Carey (1839) 2 Beav. 128, 48 Eng. Reprint, 1128; Christophers v. White (1847) 10 Beav. 523, 50 Eng. Reprint, 683; Lyon v. Baker (1852) 5 DeG. & S. 622, 64 Eng. Reprint, 1271. See also cases beyond the scope of this annotation: Clark v. Carlon (1861) 7 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 441, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 639, 4 L. T. N. S. 361, 9 Week. Rep. 568; Re Doody [1893] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 129, 62 L. J. Ch. N. S. 14, 2 Reports, 166, note, 67 L. T. N. S. 650, 41 Week. Rep. 49.

Upon the same theory it has been held in this country that an executor who is a lawyer will not be allowed for services rendered by his law firm. Liles's Succession (1872) 24 La. Ann. 490.

An executor and trustee may not, out of trust funds with which he is chargeable, pay for legal services rendered the estate by a law firm of which he is a member, sharing himself in the amount paid, where the statute provided that the court should allow an executor or administrator reasonable attorney's fees, where he employed an attorney in the management of the estate, but that such attorney's fees should not be included in the allowance to said executor or administrator for his personal services. Taylor v. Wright (1883) 93 Ind. 121.

A lawyer who is suing his law partner for an accounting cannot claim to share in fees paid by an estate, whereof he was one of the executors, to the defendant personally for professional services rendered it as an attorney. Bushby v. Berkeley (1912) 153 App. Div. 742, 138 N. Y. Supp. 831.

But he may employ his law firm if it is understood that he is not to share in the fees. Re Lester (1916) 172 App. Div. 509, 158 N. Y. Supp. 763. Probably it was on this theory that an allowance was made for payment to the administrator's law partner in Re Van Buren (1896) 19 Misc. 373, 44 N. Y. Supp. 357.

In jurisdictions where the executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is a lawyer, is allowed for his own legal services to the estate, he may employ his law partner (Bendall v. Bendall (1854) 24 Ala. 295, 60 Am. Dec. 469, supra), or law firm (see next case).

In Re Leckie (1900) 36 Can. L. J. 136, the court allowed the solicitor's bill of the executor's firm as part of the remuneration, under the statute providing that "the judge of the surrogate court may allow the executor, trustee, or administrator, acting under a will or letters of administration, a fair and reasonable allowance for his care, pains, and trouble, and his time expended in or about the executorship, trusteeship, or administration of the estate and effects vested in him under the will or letters of administration, and in administering, disposing of, and arranging and settling the same, and generally in settling the affairs of the estate, and may make an order or orders from time to time therefor, and the same shall be allowed to an executor, trustee, or administrator, in passing his accounts"—the court considering that the statute had changed the old rule.

Miscellaneous.

While not directly within the scope of this annotation, reference should be made to the observations of Cranworth, L. C., in Broughton v. Broughton (1855) 5 DeG. M. & G. 160, 43 Eng. Reprint, 831, where he said: "The rule applicable to the subject has been treated at the bar as if it were sufficiently enunciated by saying that a trustee shall not be able to make a profit of his trust; but that is not stating it so widely as it ought to be stated. The rule really is, that no one who has a duty to perform shall place himself in a situation to have his interests conflicting with that duty; and a case for the application of the rule is that of a trustee himself doing acts which he might employ others to perform, and taking payment in some way for doing them. As the trustee might make the payment to others, this court says he shall not make it to himself; and it says the same in the case of agents, where they may employ others under them. The good sense of the rule is obvious, because it is one of the duties of a trustee to take care that no improper charges are made by persons employed for the estate. It has been often argued that a sufficient check is afforded by the power of taxing the charges, but the answer to this is that that check is not enough, and the creator of the trust has a right to have that, and also the check of the trustee. The result therefore is that no person in whom fiduciary duties are vested shall make a profit of them by employing himself, because in doing this he cannot perform one part of his trust; namely, that of seeing that no improper charges are made. The general rule applies to a solicitor acting as a trustee."

It may be noted that in New York, since the Statute of 1914 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2753, Surrogate's Court Act 1920, § 285), the surrogate may, upon an accounting, allow an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee who is an attorney and counselor at law of that state, and has rendered legal services in connection with his official duties, such compensation for such legal services as shall appear to the surrogate to be just and reasonable. See Re Bell (1916) 94 Misc. 552, 16 Mills, 337, 158 N. Y. Supp. 142; Re Plimpton (1921) 186 N. Y. Supp. 257. B. B. B.

L. DUNNE

v.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—February 25, 1921.

(— Cal. —, 196 Pac. 41.)

Corporation — ultra vires — effect of decision of officers.

A corporation having charter authority to invest in mortgages which do not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged is bound by the valuation placed upon the property by its investment board, so that it cannot repudiate a contract for purchase of a mortgage as ultra vires from one acting in good faith, although the mortgage exceeded 60 per cent of the value of the land, if its board in good faith determined that the value was sufficient.

[See note on this question beginning on page 645.]

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco (Sturtevant, J.) in an action brought to recover the balance alleged to be due on a contract for the sale of a promissory note and mortgage; plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as denied her relief, and defendant appealing from so much as denied it relief upon its cross complaint, and from an order denying its motion for vacation of the judgment, and for entry of judgment in its favor on the cross complaint. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Gavin McNab, R. P. Hen-shall, and Nat. Schmulowitz, for plaintiff:

A plea of ultra vires as to the purchase of the note and mortgage cannot be sustained for the reason that the charter of the corporation expressly authorized the investment of its funds in notes and mortgages, and if the value of the real property did not exceed the required percentage fixed in the charter, that was a matter of which the state alone could complain, and is not a good ultra vires plea as against a third person, who could not be aware of the internal economy of the defendant.

J. S. Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 609, 104 Pac. 432; Lewin v. Hanford, 35 Cal. App. 36, 169 Pac. 242; Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 304, 125 Pac. 926; Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Elliott, 178 Cal. 181, 172 Pac. 584; Blochman Commercial & Sav. Bank v. F. G. Investment Co. 177 Cal. 762, 171 Pac. 943; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 59, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Sherwood v. Alvis, 83 Ala. 115, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695, 3 So. 307; Natomia Water & Min. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 544; Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flat Fluming Co. 22 Cal. 620, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 487; Cowell v. Colorado Springs, 100 U. S. 55, 25 L. ed. 547; Union Trust Co. v. Hendrickson, — Okla. —, 172 Pac. 440; McCann v. Children's Home Soc. 176 Cal. 359, 168 Pac. 355; San Diego County Sav. Bank v. Barrett, 126 Cal. 413, 58 Pac. 914; Bates v. Coronado Beach Co. 109 Cal. 160, 41 Pac. 815; McKee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. 159 Cal. 206, 113 Pac. 140; Goodland v. Bank of Darlington, 74 Mo. App. 373.

The contract, even if ultra vires in its most extreme sense, and especially if ultra vires in any of the modified senses used in the decisions, is enforceable here because it was fully executed so far as the plaintiff was concerned, and was partly performed by the defendant; and such part performance estops the corporation from pleading ultra vires.

Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 59, 35 L. ed. 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Goodland v. Bank of Darlington, 74 Mo. App. 373; Fletcher, Corp. § 1543; Sioux City Terminal R. & Warehouse Co. v. Trust Co. of N. A. 173 U. S. 99, 43 L. ed. 628, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341; Re Mutual Guaranty F. Ins. Co. 70 Am. St. Rep. 156, and note, 107 Iowa, 143, 77 N. W. 868; Citizens' Bank v. Weakley, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, and note, 126 Ky. 169, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282, 103 S. W. 249; Bay City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Broad, 136 Cal. 525, 69 Pac. 225; Pixley v. Western P. R. Co. 33 Cal. 183, 91 Am. Dec. 623; Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 604, 34 Pac. 337; Cemp v. Land, 122 Cal. 167, 54 Pac. 839; Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden, 139 Cal. 488, 73 Pac. 238; McQuaide v. Enterprise Brewing Co. 14 Cal. App. 315, 111 Pac. 927; 10 Cyc. 1163; Sargent v. Palace Cafe Co. 175 Cal. 737, 167 Pac. 146.

Messrs. Corbett & Selby, for defendant:

Ultra vires contracts are void while executory.

San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453; Coleman v. San Rafael Turnp. Road Co. 49 Cal. 521; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 49; Clark & M. Corp. § 211 (E); Coppin v. Greenlees & R. Co. 38 Ohio St. 275, 43 Am. Rep. 425; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Shaw, 37 Wis. 655, 19 Am. Rep. 781; Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2786; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 685, 689; Machen, Corp. § 1055.

Full performance by the other party will not estop a corporation as defendant from pleading the defense of ultra vires unless the performance by the other party has benefited the corporation, as where goods have been received by the corporation itself.

First Nat. Bank v. Alexander, 152

(— Cal. —, 196 Pac. 41.)

Ala. 585, 44 So. 866; Nebraska Shirt Co. v. Horton, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 888, 93 N. W. 225; Stone-Ordean-Wells Co. v. New England Pie Co. 201 Mich. 407, 167 N. W. 943; Sturdevant Bros. v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 62 Neb. 472, 87 N. W. 156; Marcy v. Guanajuato Development Co. 228 Fed. 150; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 59; Jemison v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 122 N. Y. 135, 9 L.R.A. 708, 19 Am. St. Rep. 482, 25 N. E. 264; Visalia Gas & E. L. Co. v. Sims, 104 Cal. 326, 43 Am. St. Rep. 105, 37 Pac. 1042.

A mere part performance by the plaintiff will not render the contract enforceable as against the plea of ultra vires.

Day v. Spiral Springs Buggy Co. 57 Mich. 146, 58 Am. Rep. 352, 23 N. W. 628; Bowman Dairy Co. v. Mooney, 41 Mo. App. 665; Greenville Compress & Warehouse Co. v. Planters' Compress & Warehouse Co. 70 Miss. 669, 35 Am. St. Rep. 681, 13 So. 879; McNulta v. Corn Belt Bank, 164 Ill. 427, 56 Am. St. Rep. 203, 45 N. E. 954; Keokuk v. Ft. Wayne Electric Co. 90 Iowa, 67, 57 N. W. 689; Fletcher, Cyc. Corp. § 1585; Clark & M. Corp. § 211 (E); Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. 130 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 837, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409.

Part performance by defendant does not estop it from pleading ultra vires.

28 Am. L. Rev. 376; 9 Harvard L. Rev. 255; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 689; 10 Cyc. 1162; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Mitchell v. Hydraulic Bldg. Stone Co. 61 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 129 S. W. 148; Day v. Spiral Springs Buggy Co. 57 Mich. 146, 58 Am. Rep. 352, 23 N. W. 628; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Shaw, 37 Wis. 655, 19 Am. Rep. 781.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case three appeals are presented. By reason of the fact that the transcripts were filed at different times they received two numbers. Number 9005 is an appeal by the plaintiff from the part of the judgment denying her the relief asked in her complaint. Number 9155 presents appeals by the defendant from the part of the judgment which denied it relief upon its cross complaint, and from an order denying its motion that the judgment entered be vacated, and for the entry judgment in its favor on the cross complaint. It is stipulated that the record filed in appeal No. 9005 may be used on all the appeals.

The complaint alleges that on April 6, 1916, the plaintiff and defendant executed an agreement whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to buy a certain note and mortgage executed by Newark Realty & Development Company to said plaintiff, and dated February 15, 1916, covering 2,186 acres of land in Alameda county, and the defendant agreed that on February 15, 1917, it would pay for said note and mortgage the sum of $225,000 and all interest accrued thereon from February 15, 1916, to February 15, 1917; the note and mortgage to be transferred to the defendant upon payment by it to the plaintiff of said sum of money and interest. The agreement is awkwardly expressed, but we have stated its legal effect. It is alleged that on March 1, 1917, defendant paid $20,000 on the agreement, and that on October 3, 1917, plaintiff tendered the note and mortgage to the defendant, together with an assignment conveying to it all plaintiff's title thereto, and demanded payment of the balance of the principal and interest under said agreement, which the defendant then refused to pay. The prayer was for judgment for $205,000 with interest.

The defendant answered, setting up several defenses. Its first defense was that it had not executed the agreement sued on. The second defense alleged that the defendant had paid $42,500 on the agreement set forth in the complaint, and that it was induced to execute the same by reason of certain false and fraudulent representations made by plaintiff to defendant. The third defense was that the defendant is a Canadian corporation, and that, under its articles and the laws of Canada governing it, it was without authority to purchase the said mortgage described in said agreement, and that any agreement executed by it purporting to agree to purchase the same was void for that reason. It also filed a cross complaint wherein it alleged the same facts as are set forth in the answer, and in reliance thereon asked for a recovery of the $42,500 alleged to have been paid upon said agreement, and for the cancelation thereof.

The court found that all the allegations relating to fraud were untrue. With regard to the execution of the agreement of April 6, 1916, it found that Stevenson, who was the president and attorney in fact of the defendant, on the one part, and the plaintiff, on the other part, "went through the form of making, delivering, and executing, as and for the contract of the" defendant, the said agreement. As to the power of the defendant to make the agreement, it found that it never at any time was authorized or empowered by law to enter into such contract; that it was not authorized by law to invest any of its funds in the purchase of mortgages where the amount paid therefor exceeded 60 per cent of the value of the land covered by such mortgage; and that on April 6, 1916, the value of the land covered by the mortgage to be purchased under said agreement did not exceed $231,803.55. It also found that the defendant had, by mistake, paid $42,500 upon the agreement; that the agreement was void; that the defendant was not guilty of laches, and had done nothing whereby it was estopped to contend that the agreement was beyond its powers.

The judgment was that the plaintiff take nothing by her action, that the defendant take nothing by its cross complaint, and that defendant recover of plaintiff its costs.

To authorize the defendant to invest $225,000 on a real-estate mortgage, the real estate should have been worth $375,000. If the theory of the court below, that it could inquire into and revise the decision of the corporate authorities of the defendant as to the value of that land, is correct, its conclusion that the defendant was not empowered to purchase said mortgage at that price is sustained by the facts; otherwise not, as we shall presently see.

Upon the trial it appeared that the denial of the alleged execution of the agreement of April 6, 1916, was based entirely on the theory that the execution of such a contract was not within the corporate powers of the defendant. The formal execution of the agreement was fully proven and found. The defense of the nonexecution of the contract, therefore, need not be considered, except as it may be connected with the defense that it was ultra vires.

The defendant is a corporation organized in Canada, under the laws of Canada. Those laws confer upon it power (a) "of loaning and of investment prescribed by the Insurance Act of 1910;" (b) to "constitute an investment board . . . to have charge of the loaning and investment of the funds of the society, . . . and to exercise such powers and under such regulations, . . . applicable thereto, as the society, or the executive council thereof, may from time to time determine;" (c) under the "Insurance Act of 1910," to "invest its funds, or any portion thereof, in the purchase of . . . mortgages . . . on real estate in Canada, or elsewhere where the company is carrying on its business, provided that the amount paid for any such mortgage . . . shall in no case exceed 60 per cent of the value of the real estate covered thereby;" and (d), under said act, to "loan its funds or any portion thereof on the security" of such mortgages, "provided, however, that no such loan shall exceed 60 per cent of the value of the real estate or interest therein which forms the security for such loan."

The defendant corporation was, at all times here involved, doing business in California. Consequently, its power to invest its money on the security of mortgages on real estate extended to this state, and included authority to buy mortgages on California real estate in order to invest its money on such security. The only limitation upon this power is found in the proviso "that the amount paid for any such mortgage shall in no case exceed 60 per cent of the value of the real estate covered thereby."

It appears from the uncontradicted evidence that Elliott G. Stevenson was the president, chief executive officer, and general manager of the defendant at the time the transactions involved in the action occurred; also, that prior to the making of the agreement sued on the "investment board" of the defendant, by resolution duly adopted, had authorized Stevenson, as its "president and general manager," "to undertake to purchase for" the defendant the mortgage described in the agreement sued on, "for such sum and upon such terms as to payment as he may deem expedient," and to execute as such president, in the name and on behalf of the defendant, a contract by which the defendant should "undertake to purchase said mortgage and to pay for the same the face value, plus accrued interest from the date of transfer, upon such terms as to time of payment as aforesaid as he shall deem expedient."

The decision of the court below that the defendant did not have power to make the contract for the purchase of the mortgage is based entirely on the theory that defendant's power depended on the conclusion of the court as to the value of the land covered by the mortgage at the time the agreement was made, and that the belief and decision of the investment board of the defendant that the land then had the necessary value to empower the defendant to invest the proposed sum in the mortgage was immaterial. There is no finding that Stevenson did not believe that the sum to be paid for the mortgage exceeded 60 per cent of the value of the land, nor any finding of any kind on the subject of the belief, opinion, or knowledge of Stevenson, or of the investment board, as to the value of the land. No question with respect to the effect of fraud of any sort, or of any breach of trust, is involved in the case.

We are of the opinion that the court below was in error. The purposes of the defendant are those of a life insurance company or mutual benefit association. It has a large fund which it invests both in Canada and other countries for the purpose of obtaining money to pay to the beneficiaries of its policies or certificates. It is authorized to invest these funds in real-estate mortgages to the extent of 60 per cent of the value of the real estate mortgaged. Its "investment board" invests these funds, and it is charged with the duty, before making an investment thereof upon a real-estate mortgage, of ascertaining and determining that the sum invested does not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the property, and, consequently, of determining to its own satisfaction the value of that property. It is not required to obtain the sanction of any court or tribunal before making the investment. Therefore, when it has, in good faith, determined that the value is sufficient, it has the power to invest the money upon that security. In the absence of any allegation and proof to the contrary, the law presumes that legal duty has been performed. The board authorized Stevenson to enter into an agreement on its behalf to buy this mortgage at its face value. He did so, and the evidence shows that it received the agreement and paid part of the price stipulated therein. These facts raise the presumption that the board satisfied itself by due inquiry that the sum to be paid did not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the mortgaged land, and that the members of the board then believed ultra vires—effect of decision of officers.

Corporation—

that the land was worth at least $375,000. We think that with respect to third persons dealing with the corporation, in the absence of fraud, the decision of the board on the question of that value is conclusive as to the power to make the contract. We need not go so far as to say that it is conclusive in any action against the unfaithful officers of the defendant, or against third persons chargeable with participation in a fraudulent valuation, or with notice that the officer or officers acting for the company did not believe that the value of the mortgaged property was sufficient to authorize the taking of the mortgage in accordance with the defendant's articles.

Any other rule would make it practically impossible for the corporation to carry on its business successfully in such matters. The validity of its contracts relating thereto would remain undecided until some attempt was made to enforce them in the courts, and until the court had finally determined that the value was sufficient to give the corporation power to enter into the particular contract. In effect, the investment of the funds would be committed to the courts instead of the board. It is apparent that with this condition it would not be able to obtain such contracts. The value of property rests on opinion. There is no subject of inquiry in the courts upon which opinions are more widely variant or more positive. If such contracts could be set aside whenever a court should find that the investment board had, even to a slight extent, overestimated the value of the property, no one could safely deal with the defendant in such matters, however cautious the board might be in coming to a decision.

The language of Chief Justice Field in Natoma Water & Min. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 552, is pertinent here. Speaking of a corporation with power to buy and hold "such real and personal estate, as the purposes of the corporation shall require," and referring to a proposal to have the court determine whether certain property was so "required," he said: "Whether or not the premises in controversy are necessary for those purposes, it is not material to inquire; that is a matter between the government and the corporation, and is no concern of the defendants. It would lead to infinite inconveniences and embarrassments if, in suits by corporations, to recover the possession of their property, inquiries were permitted as to the necessity of such property for the purposes of their incorporation, and the title made to rest upon the existence of that necessity."

In Bates v. Coronado Beach Co. 109 Cal. 163, 41 Pac. 856, where a corporation having similar powers sought to avoid its contract as ultra vires, the court said: "Whether a contract is 'essential' to the transaction of its ordinary affairs, or for the purposes of the corporation, is to be determined by . . . those to whom the management of its affairs is intrusted. If it is within the apparent scope of its organization, the fact that the contract has been entered into by it, or by its representative, is a determination on the part of the corporation that it is essential, and the corporation will not be permitted . . . to question its effect."

And in San Diego County Sav. Bank v. Barrett, 126 Cal. 417, 58 Pac. 915, the court said: "Whether the purchase of the mortgage in question was 'such as the purposes of the corporation required' was to be determined by its board of directors (Civ. Code, § 305), and is not open to investigation at the instance of the defendant."

The provisions considered in these cases were limitations upon the power of the corporation, and the principle enunciated is applicable to any limitation of a similar nature where the action of the corporation is to be taken according to the discretion or judgment of the officers in charge of its affairs, as is the case here. Such limitations are for the benefit and protection of the corporation and its beneficiaries or creditors, or the state. The corporation, or its beneficiaries or creditors suing in its name or on its behalf in equity, on the ground that its officers had acted fraudulently or in bad faith, or that it had been defrauded by third parties, might perhaps impeach the finding as to value. But where there is no fraud or bad faith charged, the contract in such cases cannot be shown to be ultra vires by proof that the property was not of sufficient value to justify the investment made.

(— Cal. —, 196 Pac. 41.)

It follows from what has been said that the judgment in favor of the defendant is not supported either by the pleadings or the findings, and that it cannot stand. This renders it unnecessary to consider the appeals of the defendant further than to state that the allegations of the answer and cross complaint, so far as they were found to be true, do not, upon the principles we have stated, constitute grounds for any relief to the defendant against the plaintiff. The entire judgment should be set at large for a new trial.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Olney, J.; Lennon, J.; Sloane, J.; Wilbur, J.; Lawlor, J.

Petition for rehearing denied March 24, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Conclusiveness of decision of corporate officers or directors that property is of sufficient value to warrant a loan under the powers of the corporation.

An extensive search has disclosed no case other than the reported case (DUNNE v. INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS, ante, 639) in which the conclusiveness of the decision of the corporate officers or directors that property on which the corporation is about to make a loan is of sufficient value to warrant the loan under the corporate powers has been considered. The cases of Bates v. Coronado Beach Co. (1895) 109 Cal. 163, 41 Pac. 856, and San Diego County Sav. Bank v. Barrett (1899) 126 Cal. 417, 58 Pac. 915, referred to and sufficiently set out in the reported case, are of interest in this connection in so far as they deal with the conclusiveness of a determination by corporate officers or directors of facts which are conditions precedent to the validity of a contract by the corporation.

The question passed upon in the reported case is very similar to the question passed upon in a large number of cases involving the acts of corporations in excess of corporate powers, where the court has denied the right to question the corporate powers on the theory that only the state can thus question acts of corporations in excess of authority. The reported case, in dealing with the facts before the court, as will be observed, treats this question as one of conclusiveness of corporate determination.

W. A. E.

A. H. JONES et al.

v.

JOHN C. DAY et al.

Mississippi Supreme Court (Division B)—November 23, 1921.

(— Miss. —, 89 So. 906.)

Schools — adoption of uniforms — validity.

Where the trustees of an agricultural high school adopted a rule that the pupils of the school should wear a uniform of khaki when in attendance upon the school and when visiting public places within 5 miles of the school, even on Saturdays and Sundays, this rule is not ultra vires, unreasonable, and void, and applies to all students boarding in the dormitory of the school and until their return to the custody of their parents. It applies to those students who live with their parents when they are in the custody of the school authorities; that is to say, after they leave the home of their parents to attend school and until they return to the home after the school is over. It does not apply to those children on holidays, when they are within the care, custody, and control of their parents.

Headnote by SYKES, P. J.

[See note on this question beginning on page 649.]

CROSS APPEALS from a decree of the Chancery Court for Wilkinson County (Cutrer, Ch.) dismissing a bill filed to enjoin the enforcement and to have declared void certain rules adopted by defendants, requiring pupils to wear uniforms; complainants appealing from the decree dismissing the bill, and defendants appealing from the amount allowed for attorney's fee. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. A. H. Jones, in propria persona:
The entire rule or regulation is utterly void, ultra vires the power of the board of trustees, and is in conflict with the Constitutions of the state and of the United States.

Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Wilby v. State, 93 Miss. 767, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 677, 47 So. 465.

The regulation is unreasonable, and is an invasion of parental rights.

Hobbs v. Germany, 94 Miss. 469, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983, 49 So. 515; Dritv v. Snodgrass, 66 Mo. 286, 27 Am. Rep. 343; J. T. Thompson & Co. v. Lamar County Agri. High School, 117 Miss. 621, 78 So. 547.

The decree is erroneous in that it allows an attorney's fee to the defendants.

Curphy v. Terrell, 89 Miss. 632, 42 So. 235; Jamison v. Dulaney, 74 Miss. 890, 21 So. 972; Mims v. Swindle, 124 Miss. 686, 87 So. 151; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 469.

Mr. David Clay Bramlette, Jr., for defendants:

Defendants had the right to prescribe and enforce regulations for the wearing of uniforms by students.

Waugh v. University of Mississippi, 237 U. S. 589, 59 L. ed. 1131, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720; 11 C. J. 998; Connell v. Gray, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 336, and note, 33 Okla. 591, 127 Pac. 417, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 399; Kinzer v. Independent School Dist. (Kinzer v. Toms) 129 Iowa, 441, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 496, 105 N. W. 686, 6 Ann. Cas. 996; 24 R. C. L. 575, ¶ 24; 27 R. C. L. 140, ¶ 9; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 730; Turner v. Hattiesburg, 98 Miss. 337, 53 So. 681.

Defendants are entitled to recover attorneys' fees necessarily incurred in defending the case.

Jamison v. Dulaney, 74 Miss. 890, 21 So. 972; Thomas v. McDanel, 77 Iowa, 302, 42 N. W. 301; 2 High, Inj. § 1686; 1 Beach, Inj. § 203, note 4; Bolling v. Tate, 65 Ala. 428, 39 Am. Rep. 5; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Martin, 105 Miss. 230, 62 So. 228; Leflore County v. Allen, 80 Miss. 298, 31 So. 815; Thornton-Claney Lumber Co. v. J. M. O'Quin & Sons, 115 Miss. 857, 76 So. 732; Rubon v. Stephan, 25 Miss. 253.

Sykes, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant A. H. Jones, on behalf of himself, and as father and next friend of Ben Shaifer Jones, minor, in this proceeding against the county superintendent and the trustees of the Wilkinson County Agricultural High School, seeks to perpetually enjoin the enforcement and to have declared null and void certain rules and regulations adopted by the board of trustees of this high school, which are as follows:

A rule passed on September 10, 1918, as follows: "It was carried that a uniform of khaki, as per sample selected, be adopted for high school boys, and that all of same be required to wear them, which shall consist of one coat, two pairs of pants, one pair of leggings, two shirts, one cap, two black ties, as a minimum, and two coats, three pairs pants, two pairs leggings, three shirts, one cap and three ties as a maximum."

And also the following rule, adopted on the 25th day of October, 1920, as follows: "It was ordered that the principal be instructed to enforce the uniform regulations on all students when visiting public places within 5 miles of the school, even on Saturdays and Sundays."

The bill alleges that under these rules all students and pupils of the high school are required to wear at all times and at all places—at home, at school, and elsewhere—this uniform; that these rules are illegal, unauthorized, and ultra vires, because by them it is attempted to govern and manage the said students and pupils at times and places when the authority of the board of trustees is at an end, and when the students have left the school, and are under the control and supervision of their parents. The answer denies the material allegations of the bill, and alleges that, because of existing conditions, in the judgment of the board of trustees it was necessary, for the welfare of the school and in order to maintain proper discipline, to pass these rules. A temporary injunction was issued, which was dissolved on final hearing, when decree was entered dismissing the bill, and assessing as damage an attorney's fee for $25. The complainant, appellant here, prosecutes an appeal from this decree, and the defendants in the court below, appellees here, prosecute a cross appeal, presenting solely the question of the inadequacy of the fee allowed in the court below.

In his decree the chancellor held that the orders passed by the board of trustees, requiring the students to wear the uniform not only while in attendance in the school, but when they appear in public places and on the streets, is not such an unreasonable regulation that the court should interfere when the testimony shows that it aids in the discipline of the school. But further held that, if it is the purpose to invade the home, and undertake to say what the children should wear at home, that would be unreasonable.

The authority principally relied upon by the appellant is Hobbs v. Germany, 94 Miss. 469, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 983, 49 So. 515. The rule adopted by the teachers of the public school in that case was one requiring the pupils to remain in their homes and study from 7 to 9 in the evening. In the very exhaustive opinion in that case the court quotes with approval from the opinion of Dritt v. Snodgrass, 66 Mo. 286, 27 Am. Rep. 343, as follows: "The directors of a school district are invested with the power and authority to make and execute all needful rules and regulations for the government, management, and control of such school as they may think proper, not inconsistent with the laws of the land. Under the power thus conferred, the directors are not authorized to prescribe a rule which undertakes to regulate the conduct of the children within the district, who have a right to attend the school, after they are dismissed from it and remitted to the custody and care of the parent or guardian. They have the unquestioned right to make needful rules for the control of the pupils while at school, and under the charge of the person or persons who teach it, and it would be the duty of the teacher to enforce such rules, when made. While in the teacher's charge, the parent would have no right to invade the school room and interfere with him in its management. On the other hand, when the pupil is released and sent back to his home, neither the teacher nor directors have the authority to follow him thither, and govern his conduct while under the parental eye. It certainly could not have been the design of the legislature to take from the parent the control of his child while not at school, and invest it in a board of directors or teacher of a school. If they can prescribe a rule which denies to the parent the right to allow his child to attend a social gathering, except upon pain of expulsion from a school which the law gives him the right to attend, may they not prescribe a rule which would forbid the parent from allowing the child to attend a particular church, or any church at all, and thus step in loco parentis and supersede entirely parental authority? For offenses committed by the scholar while at school he is amenable to the laws of the school; when not at school, but under the charge of the parent or guardian, he is answerable alone to him."

Chapter 186, Laws of 1914 (Hemingway's Code, § 3421), which deals with the appointment and the powers of the trustees, among other things, provides that they "shall have full power to do all things necessary to the successful operation of said school."

It will be noted from an examination of these laws relating to agricultural high schools that the power is given them to have dormitories where students may board during the school term. The students of these agricultural high schools who board in the dormitories are under the care and custody of the school authorities during the entire scholastic session, and until they have returned to the care and custody of their parents. For the proper maintenance, the board of trustees of this school had a right to pass these orders, which would apply to all students boarding in the dormitory during the time that they remained as students of the school. These rules will continue to apply to them until they cease to be under the care and control of the school management, and return to the parental charge.

With reference to the students who are merely day pupils of this school, and who each afternoon return to the parental charge, the order would not apply to them while under the control of their parents. That is to say, after they return home from school in the afternoon they would be under the control of their parents until they again start for school. This order would not control what apparel these children should wear after school hours, and while under parental control.

Children are under parental control until their parents start them to the school during the day. They are under the parental control during the school holidays, which, I assume from this record, are Saturdays and Sundays. Consequently the orders here in question would apply to those students boarding in the dormitory, if there be one, during the scholastic term, but would not apply to those students living with their parents except while going to, at the school, and returning to the parental roof. We understand the decree of the chancellor to be to this effect.

Schools—adoption of uniforms—
validity.

A temporary injunction was issued, which was not dissolved until the final hearing of the cause on its merits. The end and aim, however, of this litigation, was injunctive relief sought, viz., to perpetually enjoin the enforcement of these rules and to declare them null and void. It was therefore proper to allow the appellees a reasonable attorney's fee. Mims v. Swindle, 124 Miss. 686, 87 So. 151; Curphy v. Terrell, 89 Miss. 624, 42 So. 235.

In fixing the amount of a reasonable attorney's fee for the dissolution of the injunction, necessarily the Chancellor is vested with discretionary powers. In this case we cannot say that the fee fixed by the Chancellor is an inadequate one. The decree is affirmed, both on direct and cross appeal.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of regulation by school authorities as to clothes of pupils.

There have been but few cases which have considered the reasonableness or validity of regulations as to the dress of students.

The reported case (JONES v. DAY, ante, 645) is in accord with the general rule that school authorities may make reasonable rules and regulations governing the conduct of pupils while under their control. It is to be observed that the extent of the decision in JONES v. DAY is that the rule requiring the students to wear certain uniforms was reasonable and valid so long as it applied to the time when the students were under the control of the school authorities, and that, if it were intended to apply when the student had come again under the control of his parents, it would, to that extent, be unreasonable and void.

A case upholding the right of school authorities to prescribe the kind of dress to be worn by students is Connell v. Gray (1912) 33 Okla. 591, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 336, 127 Pac. 417, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 399, which held that the board of regents of a state college has power to prescribe the kind of uniform or gymnasium suit, and to require the same to be worn by the students, and may require the students, at the time of entrance, to provide themselves with such uniform or suit, or make a reasonable deposit to cover the cost of the same.

But an order of a school board, depriving a pupil of his diploma for refusal to wear cap and gown at graduation, is unreasonable and ultra vires. Valentine v. Independent School Dist. (1919) 187 Iowa, 555, 6 A.L.R. 1525, 174 N. W. 334, same case, later appeal, in (1921) — Iowa, —, 183 N. W. 434. The court, in the opinion on the later appeal, said: "Conceding appellant's contention that there was a rule formerly adopted and effective at the time in question, we hold that such rule is unreasonable and a nullity as a condition precedent to receiving the honors of graduation and a diploma. The wearing of a cap and gown on commencement night has no relation to educational values, the discipline of the school, scholastic grades, or intellectual advancement. Such a rule may be justified in some instances from the viewpoint of economy, but from a legal viewpoint the board might as well attempt to direct the wearing of overalls by the boys and calico dresses by the girls. The enforcement of such a rule is purely arbitrary, and especially so when the offending pupil has been passed for graduation after the performance on her part of all prescribed educational requirements. . . .

This plaintiff, having accepted the benefits of education tendered by the public school system established in the independent school district of Casey, and having complied with all the rules and regulations precedent to graduation, may not be denied her diploma by the arbitrary action of the school board subsequent to her being made the recipient of the honors of graduation."

The court in the opinion last cited, however, said that school authorities may deny the right of a graduate to participate in public ceremonies of graduation unless cap and gown are worn.

J. H. B.

LEO G. GOSTINA and Wife, Respts.,

v.

A. L. RYLAND and Wife, Appts.

Washington Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1) — July 1, 1921.

(— Wash. —, 199 Pac. 298.)

Adjoining owners — right to clip branches of trees.

1. A property owner may without notice, if he has not encouraged the maintenance of the nuisance, and after notice if he has, clip the branches of trees standing on adjoining property, which overhang his premises.

[See note on this question beginning on page 655.]

Estoppel — to abate nuisance.

2. Acquiescence for a few months by a landowner in a nuisance consisting of branches overhanging his boundary line does not estop him from maintaining an action to abate it.

Nuisance — overhanging branches.

3. Branches of a tree overhanging a boundary line may be abated as a nuisance, under a statute providing for abatement of whatever is an obstruction to the free use of property, where the falling leaves litter the lawn, stop gutters on the house, and blow into the house to the annoyance of the occupants.

[See 1 R. C. L. 401; 20 R. C. L. 433, 434; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 130.]

— abatement — laches.

4. Mere delay for a few months does not deprive one of equitable relief for abatement of branches of trees overhanging his boundary line.

(Mackintosh and Bridges, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County (Gilliam, J.) in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought for the abatement of an alleged nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Walter B. Allen, for appellants:

In order to be a nuisance a thing must work a hurt, inconvenience, or damage.

Everett v. Paschall, 61 Wash. 47, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827, 111 Pac. 879, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1128; Thornton v. Dow, 60 Wash. 633, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968, 111 Pac. 899; Veazie v. Dwinel, 50 Me. 479; Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366; Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun, 405.

One who has slept upon his rights for a considerable time, by acquiescing in an alleged nuisance, will be denied equitable relief, and left to his remedy at law.

20 Cyc. 1231; Clifton Iron Co. v. Dye, 87 Ala. 468, 6 So. 192; Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 47 N. H. 426; Washington Lodge v. Frelinghuysen, 138 Mich. 350, 101 N. W. 569; Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658; Crolin v. Bloemecke, 58 N. J. Eq. 313, 43 Atl. 605.

Mr. Warren Hardy, for respondents:

Where actual damage is shown, overhanging branches are nuisances to the extent to which they overlap the land of the injured party.

Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366; 1 C. J. 1232, § 92; Henry v. Shepherd, 52 Miss. 125; Cooley, Torts, 1st ed. p. 567.

Plaintiffs' right of action is for the abatement of a nuisance.

Doran v. Seattle, 24 Wash. 182, 54 L.R.A. 532, 85 Am. St. Rep. 948, 64 Pac. 230; Thornton v. Dow, 60 Wash. 622, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968, 111 Pac. 899.

Overhanging branches are nuisances per se.

Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 183; Ackerman v. Ellis, 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883.

Holcomb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These adversaries own and reside upon adjoining lots in the city of Seattle. Appellants have owned and resided upon their lot for many years. Respondents bought their lot in August, 1918. There is growing upon appellant's lot a Lombardy poplar tree, situated about 2 feet from the division line fence separating the properties; also, a fir tree in the rear of appellant's premises, situated within 2 feet of the division fence. It is alleged that some branches of the trees overhang the premises of respondents. Appellants also maintain a creeping vine, growing in a rustic box on top of a large stump, a few feet from the division fence, which is trained downward from the stump, and it is alleged that parts of the creeping plant go through and under the division fence, and onto the lawn on respondent's premises. There are also some raspberry bushes and a rosebush at the rear of appellants' premises, growing near the line, which the respondents allege are permitted to hang over the division fence.

On July 28, 1919, respondents caused their attorney to give notice in writing to the appellants that the branches of the fir tree (then mentioned as a pine tree) standing upon appellants' premises extended over the lot of respondents, and that the needles therefrom fell upon the lawn of respondents, injuring the same, and that the ivy planted in the yard of appellants ran under the fence and onto the lawn of respondents. Demand was made that appellants, within ten days, cut off the branches of the fir tree at the point where they crossed the boundary line, and remove the ivy from respondents' property, and keep the tree and ivy from further encroaching upon their property.

This demand not having been complied with, about fifteen days thereafter respondents began their action under the statute (Rem. Code, §§ 943, 944, and 945) for the abatement of a nuisance, and for such other and further relief as might seem equitable and just. Issue was joined as to the overhanging branches and encroaching ivy constituting a nuisance. Findings of fact and conclusions of law, and judgment ordering abatement of the nuisances by appellants within sixty days, and, in case of failure by them, ordering the sheriff to do so, were entered in favor of respondents by the trial court, and this appeal resulted.

Appellants desired to defend on the theory that the action by respondents was merely for spite and vexation, and first complain because the court excluded evidence offered by them to the effect that, when respondents purchased their property adjoining that of appellants, they knew of the existence and condition of the trees and shrubs, and expressed their admiration therefor, and had no objection to their maintenance, as they were, upon the property of appellants, until after they had had some sort of personal disagreement, which caused their action in regard to the trees and shrubs. The court rejected all such evidence and offered proof, on the ground that it was immaterial, because, where branches of trees overlap adjoining property, the owner of the adjoining property has an absolute legal right to have the overhanging branches removed by a suit of this character.

Section 943, Rem. Code, provides: " . . . Whatever is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to essentially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of the life and property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action for damages and other and further relief."

Section 944, supra, provides: "Such action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by the nuisance. . . ."

It cannot be said that acquiescence in the existence of the alleged nuisance for the period of a few months is such as to constitute estoppel or equitable abate nuisance.

Estoppel—to

laches. Whatever may have been respondents' sentiments regarding the situation and character of the trees and shrubs at one time, when they entered upon the enjoyment of their own possessions, after occupancy for a few months they gave notice on July 28, 1919, that their permissive acquiescence in the existence of the alleged nuisances—at least, as to the fir tree and the ivy—had ceased, and that they required the encroachment to be stopped.

In Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 Barn. & C. 311, 107 Eng. Reprint, 396, it is held by the English court: "Nuisances by an act of commission are committed in defiance of those whom such nuisances injure, and the injured party may abate them without notice to the person who committed them; but . . . nuisances from omission [may not be thus abated], except that of cutting the branches of trees which overhang a public road, or the private property of the person who cuts them. The permitting [of] these branches to extend so far beyond the soil of the owner of the trees is a most unequivocal act of negligence. . . . The security of lives and property may sometimes require so speedy a remedy as not to allow time to call on the person on whose property the mischief has arisen to remedy it. In such cases an individual would be justified in abating a nuisance from omission without notice. In all other cases of such nuisance, persons should not take the law into their own hands, but follow the advice of Lord Hale, and appeal to a court of justice."

"Trees whose branches extend over the land of another are not nuisances, except to the extent to which the branches overhang the adjoining land. To that extent they are technical nuisances, and the person over whose land they extend may cut them off, or have his action for damages, if any have been sustained therefrom, and an abatement of the nuisance against the owner or occupant of the land on which they grow; but he may not cut down the tree, neither can he cut the branches thereof beyond the extent to which they overhang his soil." Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 108.

"It may be understood that any erection upon one man's land that projects over the land of another, as well as any tree whose branches thus project, doing actual damage, or anything that interferes with the rights of an adjoining owner, is an actionable nuisance." Wood, Nuisances, § 106.

From ancient times it has been a principle of law that the landowner has the exclusive right to the space above the surface of his property. To whomsoever the soil belongs, he also owns the sky and to the depths. The owner of a piece of land owns everything above it and below it to an indefinite extent. 1 Co. Litt. 4.

"On the same principle it is held that the branches of trees extending over adjoining land constitute a nuisance; at least, in the sense that the owner of the land encroached on may himself cut off the offending growth." 20 R. C. L. 433-435, § 49, and cases cited.

"But whether a suit for an injunction and damages may be maintained without proof of actual damage is a point upon which the authorities are not very clear or satisfactory. According to some of the decisions, sensible, appreciable damage must be shown in order to give overhanging branches the character of nuisance; in other words, the fact that the branches extend over another's land does not constitute them a nuisance per se." 20 R. C. L. pp. 433-435, § 49.

Thus, in Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun, 405 (not an ancient case, as respondents state, but decided in 1881), it was held that: "The overhanging branches of a tree, not poisonous or noxious in its nature, are not a nuisance per se, in such a sense as to sustain an action for damages. Some real, sensible damage must be shown to result therefrom"—and the complaint which does not describe the damages caused will not state a cause of action.

That is our view. It is generally the rule that "one adjoining owner cannot maintain an action against another for the intrusion of roots or branches of a tree which is not poisonous or noxious in its nature. His remedy in such case is to clip or lop off the branches, or cut the roots at the line." 1 C. J. 1233, § 94; Countryman v. Lighthill, supra; Crowhurst v. Burial Bd. L. R. 4 Exch. Div. 5, 48 L. J. Exch. N. S. 109, 39 L. T. N. S. 355, 27 Week. Rep 95; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537; Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645; Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Iowa, 440, 100 N. W. 329; Tanner v. Wallbrunn, 77 Mo. App. 262.

It is, therefore, well settled that the powerful aid of a court of equity, by injunction, "can be successfully invoked only in a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity," and "there must be satisfactory proof of real, substantial damage." Tanner v. Wallbrunn, supra. Hence, were it not for our Statute of Nuisances, the respondents herein would not be accorded any judicial relief. But our statutes accord a remedy to one "whose personal enjoyment is lessened," or for a very slight nuisance: "Whatever is an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to essentially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of the life and property."

But in this case the respondent did describe some annoyance and damage—insignificant, it is true; so insignificant that respondents did not even claim them, or prove any amount in damages,—but simply proved that the leaves falling from the overhanging branches of the poplar tree caused them some additional work in caring for their lawn; and that the needles from the overhanging branches of the fir tree caused them some additional work in keeping their premises neat and clean, and fell upon their roof, and caused some stoppage of gutters; and that sometimes, when the wind blew in the right direction, the needles blew into the house and annoyed the occupants. We cannot avoid holding, therefore, that these are actual, sensible damages, and not merely nominal, and, although insignificant, "the insignificance of the injury goes to the extent of recovery, and not to the right of action." Henry v. Shepherd, 52 Miss. 125.

The respondents in this case certainly had one remedy in their own hands, and under all the authorities could—without notice, if they had not encouraged the maintenance thereof; after notice, if they had (which they gave)—have clipped the branches that overhung their premises at the line.

Adjoining owners—right to clip branches of trees.

And although the right to trim encroaching branches must be conceded, it may be said that the watching to see when trimming of noxious branches would be necessary, and the operation of trimming, are burdens which ought not to be cast upon a neighbor by the acts of an adjoining owner. But, if the trees are innocuous, it might well be held that the occupier of the land projected over would have no right of action from grounds of general convenience, but should be left to protect himself by clipping. Crowhurst v. Burial Bd. L. R. 4 Exch. Div. 5.

Since they had the statutory right to bring an action for abatement, and have shown some actual and sensible damages, although insignificant, we consider that we have no option but to sustain it. The remainder of the trees will doubtless shed their leaves and needles upon the respondents' premises; but this they must endure positively without remedy.

The appellants' contention that "one who has slept upon his rights for a considerable time by acquiescing in the alleged nuisance, will be denied equitable relief, and left to his remedy at law" (29 Cyc. 1231), cannot apply here. The cases cited by appellants under this head show delays, not of months, but of years. That principle is applied where one has encouraged the nuisance, and allowed the party to go on and make a heavy expenditure, under the reasonable belief that no objection would be made, or where the damages were small, and the injury not of a continuous and permanent nature. 2 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 785. The courts look beyond the injury to the consequence of their action, and if fair redress can be had at law they will not tie up important industries or operations by injunction, unless the equities of the case demand. Varney v. Pope, 60 Me. 192; Sparhawk v. Union Pass R. Co. 54 Pa. 401.

Here, respondents did not encourage an active nuisance, or nuisance by commission, but for a short time permitted an omission, when they gave notice of the cessation of their permission. No expenditure had been encouraged, and incurred on the part of appellants. It cannot be considered that respondents slept upon their rights for such a considerable time, by acquiescing in the alleged nuisance, so that they would be denied equitable relief; nor is this equitable relief, but legal and statutory relief. Carl v. West Aberdeen Land & Improv. Co. 13 Wash. 618, 43 Pac. 890. While it has some appearance of being merely a vexatious suit, appellants admit that the tree boughs do overhang respondents' lot to some extent. There is sufficient foundation in fact to sustain a case, and the authorities are clearly with respondents.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Parker, Ch. J., and Fullerton, J., concur.

Mackintosh, J., dissenting:

To have the acts complained of in this case constitute a nuisance under § 943, Rem. Code, they must be acts (1) injurious to health; or (2) indecent; or (3) offensive to the senses; or (4) an obstruction to the free use of the property, so as to essentially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of the life and property. It is conceded that the acts do not come within classifications 1, 2, or 3; but it is held that such acts amount to an obstruction of the free use of the property, so as to essentially interfere with its comfortable enjoyment. I cannot agree with such a result; for the trivial encroachment of the branches of a tree, and the growth of a few vines under a fence, do not appear to me to amount to such an obstruction as to essentially interfere with the respondents' comfortable enjoyment of their property, and are not such circumstances as will entitle respondents, under § 944, Rem. Code, to institute an action, it being provided in that section that the action may be brought by a person whose property is injuriously affected or whose personal enjoyment is lessened.

I agree with the writer of the opinion in his characterization of this action as vexatious, and I think that the statutes on nuisances are hardly susceptible of the interpretation given them, which has rendered the action, not only vexatious, but successful.

I therefore dissent.

Bridges, J.:

I concur in the dissent of Judge Mackintosh.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Rights and remedies in case of encroachment of trees, shrubbery, or other vegetation across boundary line.

- I. Ownership, 655.
- II. Right to remove, 658.
- III. Right to compel removal, 659.
- IV. Right to enjoin planting, 661.
- V. Right to damages, 662.
- VI. Right to fruit, 667.

I. Ownership.

When the base of a tree is wholly on the land of one owner, the whole tree is his without reference to its ramifications. Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Robinson v. Clapp (1895) 65 Conn. 365, 29 L.R.A. 582, 32 Atl. 939, later appeal in (1896) 67 Conn. 538, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298, 35 Atl. 504; Wideman v. Faivre (1917) 100 Kan. 102, 163 Pac. 619, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1168; Hoffman v. Armstrong (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, affirming (1866) 46 Barb. 337; Dubois v. Beaver (1862) 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming (1861) 34 Barb. 547; Cobb v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1916) 90 Vt. 342, 98 Atl. 758, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1156. See also Grandona v. Lovdal (1889) 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366; Holder v. Coates (1827) Moody & M. (Eng.) 112, 31 Revised Rep. 724 (ownership in owner of soil where planted).

Thus, in Hoffman v. Armstrong (1866) 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 337, affirmed in (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, the court said: "The strong current of authority shows that the mere fact of the boughs or limbs of a tree, planted upon the land of one man, extending to or overhanging the land of an adjoining owner, does not give the latter any right or title to any part of the tree, or to the overhanging branches, or the fruit growing thereon."

The fact that a tree stands in such proximity to a boundary line that its roots extend into the soil of the adjacent owner does not affect the sole ownership of the tree by the person on whose soil the tree is standing. Lyman v. Hale (Conn.) supra; Robinson v. Clapp (1895) 65 Conn. 365, 29 L.R.A. 582, 32 Atl. 939, later appeal in (1896) 67 Conn. 538, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298, 35 Atl. 504; Skinner v. Wilder (1865) 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645; Masters v. Pollie (1620) 2 Rolle, Rep. 141, 81 Eng. Reprint, 712; Holder v. Coates (1827) Moody & M. (Eng.) 112, 31 Revised Rep. 724. Compare Waterman v. Soper (1697) 1 Ld. Raym. 737, 91 Eng. Reprint, 1393.

Thus, in Skinner v. Wilder (Vt.) supra, it was said: "This principle of tenancy in common in a tree merely because some of its roots extend into the land of the adjoining proprietor, regardless of the location of the tree, would be attended with so much inconvenience, uncertainty, and embarrassment in its practical application that it furnishes a strong argument against the construction of these cases contended for by the defendant, as well as against recognizing such a principle unless the authorities lead to that result, or the purposes of justice imperiously demand it. There is, at first view, an apparent equity in the proposition that the proprietor from whose land a tree draws a portion of its support should have some benefit in return; but to allow him an equal right to the tree and its fruits, because a single root penetrates his soil; is quite as unjust as to deny him any right in the tree whatever. If he is tenant in common, what proportion does he own? If his interest is in proportion to the portion of nourishment the tree draws from his land, how is the fact to be ascertained? Suppose the division line runs through a grove, a fruit yard, a nursery of trees, or a forest, and this rule is adopted, there might be a belt of land, rods in width, on which the parties would be tenants in common of more or less of the trees. How is each to know or ascertain what he owns solely, and what in common, and what in proportion, especially as the rights of the parties would be constantly changing by the growth, and consequent extension of roots across the division line. Principles of law and rules of property must be such as are capable of practical application to business affairs.

On the whole, we think the weight of authority, reason, and analogy, as well as convenience, is in favor of the principle that a tree and its product is the sole property of him on whose land it is situated; and that, considering the necessary uncertainty of evidence as to the location and extent of the roots of a tree, its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body of the tree above the soil, rather than by the roots within or branches above it. But even if a tree standing with its trunk at the extreme limit of one's land, with the main roots extending immediately into the soil of the adjoining proprietor, should be regarded as so far substantially upon the line as to become common property, it cannot be so regarded in relation to the tree in question, situate 6 feet from the division line."

So, in Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728, it was said: "This writ of error is reserved for our advice; and the principal question raised and discussed is whether, upon the facts disclosed on the record, the plaintiff and defendant are joint owners, or tenants in common, of the tree in controversy. It is admitted that the tree stands upon the plaintiff's land, and about 4 feet from the line, dividing his land from that of the defendant. It is further admitted that a part of the branches overhang, and that a portion of the roots extend into, the defendant's land. If, then, he be a joint owner of the tree with the plaintiff, he is so in consequence of one or the other of these facts, or of both of them united. It has not been insisted on in the argument that the mere fact that some of the branches overhang the defendant's land creates such a joint ownership. Indeed, such a claim could not have been made with any well-grounded hope of success. It is opposed to all the authorities, and especially to that on which the defendant chiefly relies. 'Thus,' it is said, 'if a house overhang the land of a man, he may enter and throw down the part hanging over, but no more; for he can abate only that part which constitutes the nuisance. 2 Rolle, Abr. 144, l. 30; Rex v. Pappineau (1726) 2 Strange, 688, 93 Eng. Reprint, 784; Cooper v. Marshall (1757) 1 Burr. 267, 97 Eng. Reprint, 303; Welsh v. Nash (1807) 8 East, 394, 103 Eng. Reprint, 394; Dyson v. Collick (1822) 5 Barn. & Ald. 600, 106 Eng. Reprint, 1310, 1 Dowl. & R. 225; Comyns's Dig. title, 'Action on the Case for a Nuisance,' D. 4. And in Waterman v. Soper (1697) 1 Ld. Raym. 737, 91 Eng. Reprint, 1393, the case principally relied on by the defendant's counsel, it is laid down: 'That if A. plants a tree upon the extremest limits of his land, and the tree, growing, extends its root into the land of B. next adjoining, A. and B. are tenants in common of the tree. But if all the root grows in the land of A., though the boughs overshadow the land of B., yet the branches follow the root, and the property of the whole is in A.' The claim of joint ownership, then, rests on the fact that the tree extends its roots into the defendant's land, and derives a part of its nourishment from his soil. On this ground the charge proceeded in the court below, and on this the case has been argued in this court. We are to inquire, then, whether this ground be tenable. The only cases relied upon in support of the principle are the cases already cited from Lord Raymond, and an anonymous case from Rolle's Reports. 2 Rolle, Rep. 255, 81 Eng. Reprint, 783. The principle is, indeed, laid down in several of our elementary treatises. 1 Sw. Dig. 104; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1457, note; Bull. N. P. 84. But the only authority cited is the case from Lord Raymond. And it may well deserve consideration whether that case is strictly applicable to the case at bar, and whether it carries the principle so far as is necessary to sustain the present defense. That case supposes the tree to be planted on the 'extremest limit'—that is, on the utmost point or verge of A's land. Is it not, then, fairly inferable from the statement of the case that the tree, when grown, stood in the dividing line? And in the case cited from Rolle the tree stood in the hedge, dividing the land of the plaintiff from that of the defendant. Is it the doctrine of these cases that whenever a tree growing upon the land of one man, whatever may be its distance from the line, extends any portion of its roots into the lands of another, they, therefore, become tenants in common of the tree? We think not; and, if it were, we cannot assent to it. Because, in the first place, there would be insurmountable difficulties in reducing the principles to practice; and, in the next place, we think the weight of authorities is clearly the other way. How, it may be asked, is the principle to be reduced to practice? And here it should be remembered that nothing depends on the question whether the branches do, or do not, overhang the lands of the adjoining proprietor. All is made to depend solely on the inquiry whether any portion of the roots extends into his land. It is this fact alone which creates the tenancy in common. And how is the fact to be ascertained? Again, if such tenancy in common exist, it is diffused over the whole tree. Each owns a certain proportion of the whole. In what proportion do the respective parties hold? And how are these proportions to be determined? How is it to be ascertained what part of its nourishment the tree derives from the soil of the adjoining proprietor? If one joint owner appropriate all the products, on what principle is the account to be settled between the parties? Again, suppose the line between adjoining proprietors to run through a forest, or grove. Is a new rule of property to be introduced, in regard to those trees growing so near the line as to extend some portions of their roots across it? How is a man to know whether he is the exclusive owner of trees growing, indeed, on his own land, but near the line, and whether he can safely cut them without subjecting himself to an action? And again,—on the principle claimed, a man may be the exclusive owner of a tree one year, and, the next, a tenant in common with another; and the proportion in which he owns may be varying from year to year, as the tree progresses in its growth. It is not seen how these consequences are to be obviated, if the principle contended for be once admitted. We think they are such as to furnish the most conclusive objections against the adoption of the principle. We are not prepared to adopt it, unless compelled to do so by the controlling force of authority. The cases relied upon for its support have been examined. We do not think them decisive. We will very briefly review those which, in our opinion, establish a contrary doctrine. In the case of Masters v. Pollie (1620) 2 Rolle, Rep. 141, 81 Eng. Reprint, 712, it was adjudged that where a tree grows in A's close, though the roots grow in B's, yet, the body of the tree being in A's soil, the tree belongs to him. The authority of this case is recognized and approved by Littledale, J., in the case of Holder v. Coates (1827) Moody & M. (Eng.) 112. He says: 'I remember, when I read those cases, I was of opinion that the doctrine in the case of Masters v. Pollie was preferable to that in Waterman v. Soper; and I still think so.' The same doctrine is also laid down in Mitten v. Faudrye (1625) Popham, 163, 79 Eng. Reprint, 1259; Norris v. Baker 3 Bulstr. 178 [proper citation (1612) 1 Rolle, Rep. 394, 81 Eng. Reprint, 559]. See also 20 Vin. Abr. 417; 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 652. We think, therefore, both on the ground of principle and authority, that the plaintiff and defendant were not joint owners of the tree; and that the charge to the jury in the court below was, on this point, erroneous."

In Grandona v. Lovdal (1889) 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366, discussing the title of the plaintiff as to trees which overhung his land, the court said: "The trees and the overhanging branches, in so far as they were on or over his land, belonged to the plaintiff, and he could have cut them off or trimmed them at his pleasure."

In Reed v. Drake (1874) 29 Mich. 222, the facts were stated by the court as follows: "Plaintiff sued defendant for removing certain peach trees from his freehold. It appeared on the trial, and the jury found, that some fourteen years before the suit defendant purchased of the common grantor of both parties a parcel of land 18 rods wide, and that they procured a surveyor to find the line; and they set a worm fence, and set out the trees in question on defendant's side of the fence. Defendant has ever since continued in possession up to that boundary. The plaintiff claims that the fence laps over a few feet on his land. The court instructed the jury, if they believed these facts, that defendant was entitled to a verdict." Affirming the judgment of the trial court, the appellate court said: "We think the charge was correct. Whether there was such action as would have conclusively fixed the boundary for all purposes was not decided, and is not important, in this controversy. The defendant, being in a possession which was taken by joint consent as his rightful possession under his deed, has merely removed what he placed there with the co-operation of his grantor, and for his own use and advantage. It would be difficult to find a plainer case. He has done nothing which was not within the direct intent of his grantor when he was put in possession. He has not removed what he found already there, but what was placed there after his purchase, with his grantor's aid as well as assent. The trees were planted by their joint help for the defendant's benefit as owner. His actual possession was measured by their joint action, and was notice to plaintiff of the extent of his claim. It would operate as a fraud upon defendant to deny his right to remove the trees which were planted and retained under such circumstances; and plaintiff must be held estopped from complaining of such removal, which comes within the scope of the authority under which they were placed on the ground. We think there is no support for any principle which would not go far enough to sustain this defense for the removal of such improvements, whatever may be the case as to the title itself, which, as already stated, is not involved in the case, and needs no discussion."

II. Right to remove.

A landowner may cut or lop off the overhanging branches of a tree belonging to an adjoining landowner.

California. — Grandona v. Lovdal (1886) 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Grandona v. Lovdal (1889) 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366.

Connecticut. — Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Robinson v. Clapp (1895) 65 Conn. 365, 29 L.R.A. 582, 32 Atl. 939, later appeal in (1896) 67 Conn. 538, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298, 35 Atl. 504.

Illinois. — Simpson v. Gibson (1911) 164 Ill. App. 147.

Iowa. — Harndon v. Stultz (1904) 124 Iowa, 440, 100 N. W. 329.

Louisiana. — Tissot v. Great Southern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 39 La. Ann. 996, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248, 3 So. 261 (citing statute).

Michigan. — See Hickey v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1893) 96 Mich. 498, 21 L.R.A. 729, 35 Am. St. Rep. 621, 55 N. W. 989; Newberry v. Bunda (1904) 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277.

Mississippi. — Buckingham v. Elliott (1884) 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188.

Missouri. — Tanner v. Wallbrunn (1898) 77 Mo. App. 262.

New York. — Countryman v. Lighthill (1881) 24 Hun, 405.

Vermont. — Cobb v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1916) 90 Vt. 342, 98 Atl. 758, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1156. See also Skinner v. Wilder (1865) 38 Vt. 116, 88 Am. Dec. 645.

Washington. — See the reported case (GOSTINA v. RYLAND, ante, 650).

England. — See Lonsdale v. Nelson

(1823) 2 Barn. & C. 302, 107 Eng. Reprint, 396; Lemmon v. Webb [1895] A. C. 1, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 205, 11 Reports, 116, 71 L. T. N. S. 647, 59 J. P. 564.

"Trees whose branches extend over the land of another are not nuisances, except to the extent to which the branches overhang the adjoining land. To that extent they are nuisances, and the person over whose land they extend may cut them off." Grandona v. Lovdal (1886) 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623.

A landowner desiring to cut off overhanging branches of trees belonging to an adjacent landowner is not required to give notice. Hickey v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1893) 96 Mich. 498, 21 L.R.A. 729, 35 Am. St. Rep. 621, 55 N. W. 989; Lemmon v. Webb [1895] A. C. (Eng.) 1, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 205, 11 Reports, 116, 71 L. T. N. S. 647, 59 J. P. 564, affirming [1894] 3 Ch. 1; Lonsdale v. Nelson (1823) 2 Barn. & C. 302, 107 Eng. Reprint, 396 (dictum).

Thus, in Lemmon v. Webb (Eng.) supra, it was said: "I think it is clear that a man is not bound to permit a neighbor's tree to overhang the surface of his land, however long the space above may have been interfered with by the growth of the tree. Nor can it, I think, be doubted that if he can get rid of the interference or encroachment without committing a trespass, or entering upon the land of his neighbor, he may do so whenever he pleases, and that no notice or previous communication is required by law."

In Simpson v. Gibson (1911) 164 Ill. App. 147, discussing the right of a municipality in regard to a tree belonging to a private person, the branches of which overhung a street, the court said: "If the trees were so located that the branches which overhung a portion of the street and damaged the street, or were an inconvenience to the public in the use of the street, or if the body of the tree extended into the street so as to obstruct its use by the public, the city would have the right to remove such branches of the tree as extended into the public street, without any compensation to the property owner."

A landowner cannot destroy or cut down an overhanging tree belonging to his neighbor, but has only the right to cut the overhanging branches back to the boundary line. Grandona v. Lovdal (1886) 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Hickey v. Michigan C. R. Co. (Mich.) supra; Newberry v. Bunda (1904) 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277. See also Harndon v. Stultz (1904) 124 Iowa, 440, 100 N. W. 329.

Thus, one who cuts branches overhanging his land is ordinarily liable for any subsequent damage, if he cuts off a part of the branches not over his land. Newberry v. Bunda (1904) 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277. And the owner of a tree may maintain an action to enjoin the adjacent landowner from destroying it. Wide-man v. Faivre (1917) 100 Kan. 102, 163 Pac. 619, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1168.

A landowner has the same right to remove encroaching roots of trees belonging to an adjoining owner as he has to cut off the overhanging branches. Robinson v. Clapp (1895) 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, later appeal in (1896) 67 Conn. 538, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298, 35 Atl. 504; Tissot v. Great Southern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (1887) 39 La. Ann. 996, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248, 3 So. 261 (citing statute). See also Grandona v. Lovdal (1886) 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Skinner v. Wilder (1865) 38 Vt. 116, 88 Am. Dec. 645; Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1, affirmed in [1895] A. C. 1, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 205, 11 Reports, 116, 71 L. T. N. S. 647, 59 J. P. 564.

While the landowner may cut off the overhanging branches of trees belonging to an adjacent landowner, he may not convert them to his own use. Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728. Compare Grandona v. Lovdal (1889) 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 366.

III. Right to compel removal.

There are a few decisions which recognize the right of a landowner, whose premises are invaded by the overhanging branches of a tree standing on the land of another, to maintain an action to compel the latter to remove the branches. Grandona v. Lovdal (1886) 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Tissot v. Great Southern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (1887) 39 La. Ann. 996, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248, 3 So. 261; Hoffman v. Armstrong (1866) 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 337, affirmed in (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537. See also the reported case (GOSTINA v. RYLAND) ante, 650.

Thus, in the reported case (GOSTINA v. RYLAND), it is held that where the branches of trees growing on the land of one man overhang the land of another, and shed leaves and needles on the latter's lawn, affirmative equitable relief will be granted under the Washington statute as to nuisances. Two judges dissent, and in the opinion of the majority of the court it is pointed out that ordinarily the only remedy of the person on whose property the trees encroach would be to clip them; but that the rule in Washington is otherwise, on account of the statute relating to the abatement of nuisances.

Likewise, under a Louisiana statute, a landowner who suffers a damage from his neighbor's overhanging trees may compel the owner to have them torn up, or to have their branches cut off. Tissot v. Great Southern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (1887) 39 La. Ann. 996, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248, 3 So. 261.

In Tanner v. Wallbrunn (1898) 77 Mo. App. 262, holding that an injunction would not lie against a landowner to compel the removal of his trees because their roots extended into his neighbor's soil, the court said: "The extraordinary relief awarded in this case should not be granted, except where the right thereto is clear and the necessity therefor imperative. Such relief will not ordinarily be given, either, when other legal remedies are open to the complaining party. While it is true that my neighbor has no technical right to overhang my soil with the branches of his trees, yet, if he do so, I have no right to cut his tree down and destroy it entirely. I may, however, clip off the overhanging branches, but only to the extent of such overhanging. . . . The judgment in the case at bar commands not only the destruction of the overhanging branches, but would destroy the tree itself. This clearly is erroneous. At most, the plaintiff could only have been entitled to cut away these branches, and to the extent only that they may have overhung his property. And this cutting away may have been done without calling in aid the extraordinary writ of injunction. Before this equity power can be successfully invoked, there should be 'a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity.' Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 3d ed. 701; 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 740. From the evidence it appears that about the date of the institution of this suit (whether before or after is not clear), defendant did cut away the branches of the tree to the extent that they overhung plaintiff's building, and thereby plaintiff got all that he was entitled to. But, even had defendant refused to cut off such overreaching limbs, plaintiff had the undoubted legal right himself so to do. And, having this right, it was his duty to avail himself thereof before resorting to this extraordinary remedy. As to the extension of the roots from defendant's tree into the soil of plaintiff's lot, the evidence fails to show that any substantial damages were thereby committed. There is no basement under plaintiff's house; it rests on a stone foundation beginning down 3 feet below the surface, and the roots complained of have grown beneath this. It is difficult to understand how this did or could damage the foundation wall, or the building resting thereon; and, indeed, the evidence fails to show that any damage did result therefrom. Equity will not interfere where the injury from a private nuisance is merely nominal or uncertain; there must be satisfactory proof of real substantial damage."

In Grandona v. Lovdal (1889) 78 Cal. 611, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 Pac. 866, the suit was brought for damages and to abate a nuisance consisting of trees overhanging the boundary line of the plaintiff's land. Affirming a judgment in favor of the defendant, as against various objections raised by the plaintiff, the court said: "It is urged for appellant that the trees were a nuisance because they interfered with and prevented his enjoying the free and full use of his land for growing fruit trees. But we are unable to see how it can be said that land is injuriously affected, or that its owner's personal enjoyment is lessened, because he cannot use it for a purpose which he has never attempted or wished to use it for. . . . It is specified that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, because it appeared that the trunks had crowded the division fence over and upon plaintiff's land, and thereby ousted him from a part of his land. But the plaintiff had never been called upon to repair that part of the fence, and had never been prevented from plowing and cultivating his land as near the line as he could if the trees had not been there. His property, therefore, was not injuriously affected, nor his personal enjoyment lessened by the crowding. Besides, the trees and the overhanging branches, in so far as they were on or over his land, belonged to the plaintiff, and he could have cut them off or trimmed them at his pleasure. This being so, we do not see how the fact that the trees had grown so that a small part of them was on plaintiff's land could give any cause of action. It is further specified that the decision was contrary to the evidence, for the reason that defendant maintained the trees for the purpose of supplying himself with fuel and hop poles, and thereby using the plaintiff's land for his own profit and advantage. But how can this maintain plaintiff's contention? The fuel and hop poles growing over plaintiff's land were his, and could have been claimed by him as against the defendant. And the fact that the balance of the limbs and branches were useful to defendant in no way harmed the plaintiff, or gave him cause for complaint.

We conclude that the judgment cannot be reversed on the ground that the decision was contrary to the evidence or the law."

It appears, also, from the reported case (GOSTINA v. RYLAND, ante, 650), that under the Washington statute relating to the abatement of nuisances, a mandatory injunction will lie for the removal of a vine which is planted on the land of one owner, and which creeps through a boundary fence and spreads on the lawn of another.

IV. Right to enjoin planting.

In Brock v. Connecticut & Pass. R. Co. (1862) 35 Vt. 378, a suit was brought against a railroad to enjoin the planting of willow trees within a few feet of the line between the plaintiff's line and the railroad right of way. It was alleged that the soil for a considerable distance from the boundary line would be injured by the willows. Holding that relief was properly granted, the court said: "From a consideration of all the testimony which has been introduced on both sides, we are of opinion that the orator has established the fact, by a fair balance of testimony, that the planting and continuance of the trees and their growth, as designed and contemplated by the defendants, would produce the injuries to the orator which he has alleged in his bill would result therefrom. The question then arises, Have the defendants a right to plant and cultivate a row of willow trees on each side of their road, through the orator's land, in the manner and for the purposes contemplated, notwithstanding the great injury that must inevitably ensue to the orator therefrom? The defendants surveyed their road across the orator's land, under and by virtue of their charter. Whether they obtained it all by proceedings in invitum, or whether a part was transferred to them by deed, would seem to be immaterial, so far as this question is concerned. They obtained it for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad. By their charter the company was bound to fence its road, and it was in view of this obligation that the price to be paid was fixed upon by the commissioners of the parties; but evidently neither party contemplated that the road was to be fenced in this unusual and extraordinary manner, in a way that should virtually destroy or render nearly worthless an amount of land along the sides of the road nearly, if not quite, equal to the amount taken, and that, too, by the introduction into the farms of the willow tree, which some of the witnesses represent as the common enemy of the farmer in that vicinity, and one with which they have been contending half their lives, a tree that most of the witnesses seem to consider as injurious to the surrounding land, to an extent beyond that of most other trees. Whether one or two adjoining landowners, holding their titles in fee, and for the ordinary purposes of cultivation, would have the right to construct a fence in this manner, on the line between them, to the manifest injury of the other, is a question we are not now called upon to decide."

In an action wherein the testimony was conflicting as to the character and effect of Johnson grass, and left in doubt the result of its introduction into agricultural lands, an injunction against its planting by an insolvent owner was denied to an adjoining owner, who claimed that it would overrun his lands, rendering them unfit for the production of crops usually produced in the country. McCutchen v. Blanton (1881) 59 Miss. 116.

V. Right to damages.

The owner of a tree the branches of which overhang the premises of an adjoining landowner is liable for damages caused by the overhanging branches. Ackerman v. Ellis (1911) 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883; Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Bd. (1878) L. R. 4 Exch. Div. (Eng.) 5, 48 L. J. Exch. N. S. 109, 39 L. T. N. S. 355, 27 Week. Rep. 95; Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 448, 2 B. R. C. 897, 73 L. J. K. B. N. S. 894, 91 L. T. N. S. 296, 20

Times L. R. 596, 53 Week. Rep. 207. See also Buckingham v. Elliott (1884) 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188; Hoffman v. Armstrong (1866) 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 337, affirmed in (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537; Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1. Compare Countryman v. Lighthill (1881) 24 Hun (N. Y.) 405; Kank Realty Co. v. Brown (1921) 114 Misc. 357, 187 N. Y. Supp. 556; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Oakes (1900) 94 Tex. 155, 52 L.R.A. 293, 86 Am. St. Rep. 835, 58 S. W. 999; Reed v. Smith (1914) 19 B. C. 139, 27 West. L. R. 190, 6 West. Week. Rep. 794, 17 D. L. R. 92; Giles v. Walker (1890) L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 656, 59 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 416, 62 L. T. N. S. 933, 38 Week. Rep. 782, 54 J. P. 599, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235.

In Buckingham v. Elliott (1884) 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188, it was said: "Undoubtedly, if the branches of a noxious tree extend over the land of another and do injury, the owner of the tree may be held responsible for the damage done."

In Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Bd. (1878) L. R. 4 Exch. Div. (Eng.) 5, 48 L. J. Exch. N. S. 109, 39 L. T. N. S. 355, 27 Week. Rep. 95, it appeared that the plaintiff's horse was poisoned by eating some of the overhanging branches of a yew tree belonging to the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff could recover damages.

In Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 448, the court said: "It is no doubt quite true that there is no case to be found in the books in which the action has been held to lie against an adjoining owner for allowing his trees to project over the boundary line, where the only damage resulting from the projection has been a damage to the plaintiff's crops. It was pointed out by Kelly, C. B., in Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Bd. (Eng.) supra, that there was no precedent for such an action, and it was there suggested that there was much to be said on grounds of general convenience in favor of such an action not being maintainable. But I am of opinion that the principle upon which that case was decided is enough to enable us to decide the present case in favor of the plaintiff. There the action was brought against the owners of a yew tree, which they or their predecessors in title had planted on their land, and which they allowed to overhang their boundary, whereby the plaintiff's horse in the adjoining meadow, feeding on the projecting branches, was poisoned; and it was held that the action lay. The court treated the case as an illustration of the rule in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 37 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, 19 L. T. N. S. 220, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, that a person who brings onto his land something that is likely to do damage if it escapes is responsible if that damage occurs. It seems to me that there is no distinction in principle between the damage occasioned in that case and the damage in the present. The injury to the plaintiff's fruit trees was the natural consequence of the defendant's trees being allowed to overhang. I have come to this conclusion with considerable reluctance, for I have a strong feeling that it is highly desirable not to establish new causes of action, if it can possibly be avoided; but I do not see how we can refuse to hold that this action lies, without departing from the principle of Crowhurst's Case. Moreover, we are fortified in this view by the dictum of Kay, L. J., in the case of Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1, where, although it was not necessary to the decision, he distinctly states it as his opinion that for any damage occasioned by overhanging boughs an action on the case would lie. It has been contended that the remedy which the plaintiff has of cutting the trees back himself is all-sufficient, and that under those circumstances it is unnecessary to invent a new cause of action. But that, in my opinion, is no answer to the action."

In Ackerman v. Ellis (1911) 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883, discussing the right of a landowner to bring an action against an adjoining landowner whose trees overhung the boundary line, the court said: "Trees which overhang the premises of another are a nuisance to the extent that their branches extend over such premises, and the person over whose land they spread is entitled to his action for damages against the person who is responsible for their presence there. Wood, Nuisances, § 112; Cooley, Torts, 1st ed. 567. And this is so without regard to the extent of the damage resulting therefrom, the insignificance of the injury going to the extent of the recovery, and not to the right of action. Cooley, Torts, supra. The right of action in the present case, therefore, depends upon the fact that the trees overhang the plaintiff's premises, not upon the character of the trees, that being merely an element in determining the amount of the damage sustained by reason of the nuisance." In that case it was held that a landowner could maintain an action against a person in possession of an adjoining tract of land for planting spruce trees so close to the boundary line that the roots and branches of the trees extended into the plaintiff's premises. It was alleged that the trees were "poisonous or noxious," but that allegation was disregarded as surplusage, the character of the trees being considered only in determining the amount of the damage sustained. But it was held that a tenant in possession of the land on which the overhanging trees grew was not liable merely because he maintained the demised land in the condition in which it came to him.

However, in Kank Realty Co. v. Brown (1921) 114 Misc. 357, 187 N. Y. Supp. 556, affirmed on opinion below in (1921) 198 App. Div. 958, 189 N. Y. Supp. 946, it was held that where a violent windstorm had partially broken a limb of a tree standing on the defendant's land, so that the limb overhung the premises of the plaintiff and menaced his dwelling house, the defendant was not liable in trespass for damage to the plaintiff's house caused by the falling of the limb while an experienced workman, employed by the defendant, was in the act of removing it. It did not appear that the workman performed his task in an improper or careless manner. The court said: "A careful examination of a number of the cases cited on both sides leads me to the conclusion that an actionable trespass, such as would carry the right to damages, must necessarily presuppose and involve a wrongful or unjustifiable entry upon the lands of another, or the performance of some improper, careless, wrongful, or unnecessary act thereon. An act done in good faith, in a careful and proper manner, and in the performance of a legal or moral duty, does not, in my opinion, constitute such a trespass.

. . . So far as this proof goes, the tree was not dangerous before the storm—it became a menace to plaintiff's property by reason of an act of God, and without the intervention or fault of defendant. Finding it thus a menace to his neighbor's home, the defendant, with reasonable diligence and prudence, and through the medium of an experienced agent exercising due care, attempted to remove it in the usual way, and in a careful manner. Its fall is not claimed to have been due to negligence or want of care. If I am correct in my conception of an actionable trespass, and unless it can be held that every entry upon another's lands, for purpose right or wrong, and with method good or bad, must impose liability for damages for any and all accidental occurrences, I think that there can be no basis for recovery in the case at bar. Had the plaintiff alleged and proven negligence of any kind, or in any respect, then, confessedly, the rule would be otherwise; but this is plainly and definitely an action for trespass, and nothing more."

And it has been held that no landowner has a cause of action from the mere fact that the branches of an innoxious tree, belonging to an adjoining landowner, overhang his premises, his right to cut off the overhanging branches being considered a sufficient remedy. Countryman v. Lighthill (1881) 24 Hun (N. Y.) 405, wherein the court said: "It would be intolerable to give an action in the case of an innoxious tree, whenever its growing branches extend so far as to pass beyond the boundary line and overhang a neighbor's soil. The neighbor has a remedy in such case by clipping the overhanging branches, especially if the owner of the tree refuses to do it on being requested.

. . . The overhanging branches of a tree, not poisonous or noxious in its nature, are not a nuisance, per se, in such a sense as to sustain an action for damages. Some real, sensible damage must be shown to result therefrom. The complaint in this case alleged that in consequence of the overhanging limbs the plaintiff's garden was damaged. That was not a necessary result, and in what way it was produced was not alleged. The only proof on the subject was that plaintiff had berry bushes on his side of the line, and he thought there was a difference between those in the shade and those that were not. What the difference was—whether the shaded bushes were injured or benefited by the shade—does not appear. The action was misconceived, and the justice erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff."

In Reed v. Smith (1914) 19 B. C. 139, 17 D. L. R. 92, it appeared that a decayed tree of native growth, standing on an unoccupied lot of the defendant, fell on the lot of the plaintiff and damaged his dwelling house. It also appeared that the plaintiff had, before the accident, given notice to the defendant of the dangerous situation created by the decay of the tree and requested the defendant to remove it. In holding that the defendant was not liable in trespass the court said: "We have been referred to no case, and I am unable to find one quite like this. In Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 448, 2 B. R. C. 897, 73 L. J. K. B. N. S. 894, 91 L. T. N. S. 296, 20 Times L. R. 596, 53 Week. Rep. 207, the plaintiff was awarded damages for injury caused by the branches of defendant's trees overhanging the plaintiff's land, thereby causing injury to his crops. On the other hand, it was decided in Giles v. Walker (1890) L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 656, 59 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 416, 62 L. T. N. S. 933, 38 Week. Rep. 782, 54 J. P. 599, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, that when an occupier of land allows it to become overgrown with thistles, and the seed is carried by the wind into his neighbor's fields to his great injury, no action will lie, because, as Lord Coleridge, Ch. J., and Lord Esher, M. R., said, the thistles were the natural growth of the soil. Now, it does not appear to have been regarded as wrongful to allow branches to overhang another's land, when no injury was occasioned thereby. It would seem that there must be something more than that. Kelly, C. B., in Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Bd. (1878) L. R. 4 Exch. Div. (Eng.) 5, at pp. 9, 10, said: 'On the part of the defendants it may be said that the planting of a yew tree in or near to a fence, and permitting it to grow in its natural course, is so usual and ordinary that a court of law ought not to decide that it can be made the subject-matter of an action, especially when an adjoining landowner over whose property it grew could, according to the authorities, have the remedy in his own hands by clipping.' And Kennedy, J., in Smith v. Giddy (Eng.) supra, at p. 451, said: 'If trees, although projecting over the boundary, are not in fact doing any damage, it may be that the plaintiff's only right is to cut back the overhanging portions; but where they are actually doing damage, I think, there must be a right of action. In such a case I do not think that the owner of the offending trees can compel the plaintiff to seek his remedy in cutting them. He has no right to put the plaintiff to the trouble and expense which that remedy might involve.' This is not a case of nuisance. If the defendant is liable at all it is for trespass, and if any act of his had brought about the falling of the tree on the plaintiff's house, there would be no difficulty in the case. The doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 37 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, 19 L. T. N. S. 220, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, supra, is not one which must govern the decision of this case. There the defendant was liable because of his own acts, irrespective of negligence. Here, clearly he cannot be liable unless he has been guilty of negligence. My difficulty is to say, under the peculiar circumstances now arising for the first time, so far as any direct authority goes, that there was any duty on the defendant either to cut down the menacing tree, or to make good the damage, should it fall without any act of his. If the law does not reach such a case, then it stands thus; the owner of a lot in a city may maintain on that lot a primeval forest tree in such a condition of decay that it is a menace to a neighbor, and should it fall upon his neighbor without any inducing act of the owner of the tree, the neighbor must bear the loss. If it were the case of an ancient building falling into decay, although not erected by the then owner of the lot, but by a remote predecessor in title, the owner would undoubtedly be liable, but there would be privity of estate between the person who erected the artificial structure and his successor who diligently maintained it. I think there is no warrant for saying that, at common law, one who allows his land to remain in its natural state, neither he nor a predecessor in title having changed that state, is under any obligation to his neighbor in respect to what is standing or growing thereon. The neighbor must protect himself, if he can, or suffer the consequences."

In Buckingham v. Elliott (1884) 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188, holding that a landowner could recover damages from an adjoining landowner for injuries caused by the noxious roots of a tree belonging to the latter, the court said: "We are not able to draw a distinction between the roots of a tree which extend into a neighbor's land, and overhanging branches. It seems to be settled law that overhanging branches are a nuisance, and it must follow that invading roots are. The person intruded on by branches may cut them off; it must be true that one may cut off invading roots; it must be true that he who is injured by encroaching roots from his neighbor's tree can recover the damages sustained from them. The right of action seems clear. In determining how much the person injured shall recover, it may be proper to consider the means of protection in his own hands against the injury complained of. It is an admitted fact in this case that the roots of the mulberry trees destroyed the well. That proves the noxious character of the trees. The trees were planted by a former owner, but the appellee has no right to maintain and continue a nuisance after notice of its character and the injury done by it. True, he has as much right to shade and ornamental trees as his neighbor has to his well of unpolluted water; but if in the enjoyment of his right he invades his neighbor's he is answerable for it. The trees and their roots are his; he must so restrain his roots as not to work injury to his neighbor; he can enjoy the full advantage of his trees, as we suppose, without permitting them to damage his neighbor; he is not required to destroy them, but only to prevent them from encroaching injuriously upon others. This he is required to do upon the principle embodied in the fundamental maxim, 'so use your own as not to hurt another.'

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Oakes (1900) 94 Tex. 155, 52 L.R.A. 293, 86 Am. St. Rep. 835, 58 S. W. 999, an action for damages by an adjoining owner against a railroad company, for planting Bermuda grass on its right of way which spread on to the land of plaintiff and injured his crops, it was held that the plaintiff, having failed to show that the planting of this grass to protect the right of way was unreasonable, could not recover. The court said: "While the ground of liability, if one can be shown, would be negligence or other culpable conduct on the part of appellant, nothing of the sort could be imputed to it if what it did was, under the principles stated, only a legitimate use of its property, and the facts stated fail to show that it was not such a use."

And in an action wherein it appeared that a farmer occupied land which was previously a forest, and after cultivating it thistles sprang up on it, and he neglected to remove them so as to prevent them from seeding, and thousands of thistles on his land produced seed which was blown on to the land of plaintiff and took root there, the question was left to the jury whether the defendant, in not cutting the thistles, had been guilty of negligence. The jury found that he was negligent, and judgment was entered for plaintiff. On appeal this was set aside. Giles v. Walker (1890) L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 656, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235; Coleridge, Ch. J., said: "I never heard of such an action as this. There can be no duty as between adjoining occupiers to cut the thistles, which are the natural growth of the soil. The appeal must be allowed."

It seems that, if the owner of a tree cuts the overhanging boughs so that they fall on the land of another, an action of trespass may be maintained by the latter. Mitten v. Fawdrye (1625) Popham, 161, 79 Eng. Reprint, 1259 (reported as Millen v. Fawdry, Latch, 120, 82 Eng. Reprint, 304); Lambert v. Bessey (1715) T. Raym. 421, 467, 83 Eng. Reprint, 220, 244.

But in Wilson v. Newberry (1871) L. R. 7 Q. B. (Eng.) 31, the action was brought against the owner of yew trees to recover damages for injuries to the plaintiff's stock, which had eaten some of the clippings of the tree and were thereby poisoned. It was alleged that the defendant had allowed the clippings to escape from his land. Holding that no cause of action was shown, the court said: "It is not alleged that the defendant clipped the yew trees; it is not alleged that he knew the yew trees were clipped; and it is not alleged that he had anything to do with the escape of the yew clippings on to his neighbor's land. It is quite consistent with the averments of this declaration that the cutting may have been done by a stranger without the defendant's knowledge. I cannot think that the duty charged can be deduced from the facts stated; and therefore, in my opinion, the declaration is bad."

VI. Right to fruit.

The fruit of a tree overhanging a boundary line belongs to the owner of the tree. Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Newkirk v. Sabler (1850) 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 655; Hoffman v. Armstrong (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, affirming (1866) 46 Barb. 337; Skinner v. Wilder (1865) 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. In the case last cited the court said: "In this case it appears that the plaintiff planted or set apple trees on his own land 6 feet from the division line between his land and the defendant's land; the trees grew until the roots extended into, and the branches overhung, the defendant's land. The question is whether the defendant is liable, either in trespass on the freehold or in trover, for picking, carrying away, and converting to his own use the apples growing on the branches overhanging his own land. Each party claims to be the sole owner of the fruit in question; the plaintiff upon the ground that he is the owner of the tree, and the defendant upon the ground that the branches and the fruit thereon overhung his land, and that in virtue of his ownership of his land he owns everything above it. . . . The defendant . . . cannot be regarded as the owner of the apples merely because the branches on which they grew were wrongfully encumbering his ground. Suppose the defendant's counsel is correct, as he probably is, in the proposition that the defendant had the right to cut the roots and branches of the tree to the division line, so far as they penetrated or overhung his land, upon the ground that they were unlawfully encumbering his premises; this justification does not extend to the carrying away and converting the apples upon such branches to his own use, unless he was the owner of the apples, either solely, or in common with the plaintiff. The title to the apples depends upon the title to the tree, and the defendant was not the sole owner of any part of the tree. The defendant is liable in either count in the declaration unless he has some property in the tree."

Hence, if an owner of premises converts to his own use fruit on branches overhanging his premises, the owner of the tree may maintain trespass against him. Lyman v. Hale (1836) 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728.

And if fruit on a overhanging tree falls to the ground in the neighboring close, the owner of the tree may enter to gather it. Norris v. Baker (1616) 1 Rolle, Rep. 394, 81 Eng. Reprint, 559, as cited in Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1. See also Mitten v. Faudrye (1625) Popham, 161, 79 Eng. Reprint, 1259, also cited as Millen v. Fawdry, Latch, 120, 82 Eng. Reprint, 304.

In Hoffman v. Armstrong (1866) 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 337, affirmed in (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, it appeared that the plaintiff was forcibly prevented by the defendant from picking fruit from a tree overhanging the defendant's land. The plaintiff was not the owner of the tree, but was authorized by its owner to pick the fruit. The court held that the defendant was liable for assault and battery.

W. S. R.

EDWARD J. CUNNIEN
v.

SUPERIOR IRON WORKS COMPANY et al.

Wisconsin Supreme Court—October 13, 1921.

(— Wis. —, 184 N. W. 767.)

Damages — personal injury — deduction of allowance for lost time because of award from government.

1. The amount awarded one enlisted in the United States Navy for loss of time because of injury negligently inflicted upon him by a third person should not be deducted from the total amount awarded him as damages for the injury, although he continued for a time to draw his pay from the government and received an allowance for vocational rehabilitation under the Federal statutes.

[See note on this question beginning on page 678.]

Automobile — duty to keep lookout.

2. An automobilist must keep a reasonably careful lookout so that he may be able to avoid collision with persons upon the highway.

[See 2 R. C. L. 1184; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 722.]

Trial — jury — negligence in hitting one alighting from vehicle.

3. The jury must determine the question of the negligence of an automobilist who in daylight, with the machine under full control, hits one attempting to alight from a standing vehicle which the automobile passes without sounding a warning.

— negligence in operating automobile.

4. Questions of negligence arising out of automobile accidents are peculiarly for the jury, and will not be decided as matter of law except under the clearest circumstances.

[See 2 R. C. L. Supp. 725.]

Highway — negligence in alighting from standing vehicle.

5. One cannot be said to be negligent as matter of law in alighting backwards from a vehicle standing in a street with ample passing room and little traffic, without looking to the rear to ascertain whether or not other vehicles are approaching.

Trial — jury — negligence in alighting from vehicle.

6. The jury must determine whether or not one is negligent in alighting backwards from a vehicle standing in a highway with ample passing space and little traffic, without looking to the rear to see if other vehicles are approaching, where he is hit by a passing automobile before both feet reached the ground.

[See 13 R. C. L. 297.]

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Douglas County (Foley, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence, defendants appealing from the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as denied recovery of the amount found as damages for loss of earnings. Modified and affirmed.

Statement by Doerfler, J.:

Ogden avenue is a paved street in the city of Superior, extending north and south, and at the point of the accident is 40 feet wide from curb to curb, and it is intersected by Belknap street at right angles, there being on said last-named street a line of street cars.

The plaintiff at the time of the trial, in September, 1920, was twenty-two years of age, and had been a railroad car seat upholsterer from the time he was seventeen years of age until he arrived at the age of twenty years, when he enlisted in the United States Navy, in the month of April, 1917. On July 19, 1919, while on a furlough, he came to Superior and aided in assisting a drayman by the name of Young in the moving of his mother's furniture from her former home in the city of Superior to the freight depot. Immediately prior to the happening of the injury, the dray on which the plaintiff and the driver, Young, were seated, was returning from the freight yards empty, the dray being driven south on the west side of Ogden avenue, the horse going at a slow trot or walking, up to the point where it stopped, about 10 feet north of the north crossing at the intersection of Belknap street, in order to permit the plaintiff to alight from the wagon. The dray box had sides to it, about 2 feet high, and the seat was elevated about 5½ feet from the street. The driver sat on the right-hand side of the seat, while the plaintiff sat on the left-hand side.

(— Wts. —, 184 N. W. 787.)

There is very little dispute in the evidence as to the actual facts in the case. The defendant Hayes, who was the president of the defendant company, immediately preceding the accident, was driving a single-seated six-cylinder Saxon car, used in the business of the defendant Superior Iron Works Company, south on Ogden avenue, from the Y. M. C. A. building, and when he caught up with the dray, which had stopped, as stated, within a distance of about 10 feet from the north crossing of Ogden avenue and Belknap street, turned to the left in order to pass the dray, and thereafter proceeded on his course. Immediately after the dray had been stopped, the plaintiff started to alight therefrom, and in doing so faced the west, and stepped down backwards, first stepping on the tongue of the wagon with one foot, then with the other foot on the hub, and then down onto the pavement. He still clung with his hands to the dray at the time of the accident, and it appears from the evidence that he had alighted on the pavement with only one foot, such foot being a distance of about a foot east of the wagon wheel, the other foot being still on the hub of wheel. While the plaintiff was so alighting, the defendant Hayes was passing around the dray towards the east, and in proceeding along the highway came so close to the dray that his automobile struck the plaintiff, causing him to be thrown upon the pavement, and to sustain the injuries complained of.

It also appears quite conclusively that immediately prior to the happening of the accident the automobile was driven at a rate of speed between 7 and 8 miles an hour, and that no horn or signal was blown or sounded to attract the attention of the plaintiff, or to warn him of the approach of the machine.

The testimony also shows that the plaintiff, prior to the time he attempted to alight from the dray, did not look towards the north in order to discover the approach of an automobile.

After the collision, the automobile of the defendant Hayes swerved off to the left, across Ogden avenue, and stopped close to the east curb. There were no automobiles, excepting the one in question, going along either side of Belknap street, and the evidence shows that there was little traffic at the time in question on either of the streets.

The case was submitted to the jury on a special verdict, and the jury found in its answer to question No. 2 that the defendant Hayes failed to exercise ordinary care in the operation of the automobile as it approached and collided with the plaintiff; and, in answer to question No. 3 found that such failure to exercise ordinary care was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, and also found that no want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff proximately contributed to produce the injury.

The defendants contend: First, that there was no evidence in the case under which they could be found guilty of negligence; and, second, that the evidence in the case conclusively shows that the plaintiff, at the time of the happening of the accident, was guilty of contributory negligence, and that, therefore, defendants' motion for nonsuit or for a direction of a verdict should have been granted, and that after verdict the answer to the question in which it was found that the defendant Hayes was guilty of negligence should have been set aside, and that such answer should have been changed from "Yes" to "No," and that the answer by which the plaintiff was held to be free from contributory negligence should have been changed from "No" to "Yes;" and that judgment should have been entered in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff, dismissing plaintiff's complaint, etc.

Messrs. Pickering & Rieser, for appellants:

Defendant was not guilty of negligence.

Feyerer v. Durbrow, 172 Wis. 71, 178 N. W. 306; Becker v. West Side Dye Works, 172 Wis. 1, 177 N. W. 907; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 2 A.L.R. 1493, 166 Pac. 8, 15 N. C. C. A. 880; Depons v. Ariss, 182 Cal. 485, 188 Pac. 797.

Even where one party violates the law of the road, the injured party is not absolved from the duty to exercise ordinary care.

Becker v. West Side Dye Works, 172 Wis. 1, 177 N. W. 907; Zimmerman v. Mednikoff, 165 Wis. 333, 162 N. W. 349; Lloyd v. Pugh, 158 Wis. 441, 149 N. W. 150; Goldberg v. Berkowitz, — Wis. —, 181 N. W. 216; Weber v. Swallow, 136 Wis. 46, 116 N. W. 844; Larner v. New York Transp. Co. 149 App. Div. 193, 133 N. Y. Supp. 743.

One who steps into a known zone of danger without looking is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Moss v. Boynton Co. — Cal. App. —, 186 Pac. 631; Livingstone v. Dole, 184 Iowa, 1340, 167 N. W. 639; Hill v. Lappley, 199 Mich. 369, 165 N. W. 657; Mills v. Powers, 216 Mass. 36, 102 N. E. 912; Fulton v. Mohr, 200 Mich. 538, 166 N. W. 851; Gleason v. Smith, 180 Mass. 6, 55 L.R.A. 622, 91 Am. St. Rep. 261, 61 N. E. 220, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 599; Young v. Small, 188 Mass. 4, 108 Am. St. Rep. 457, 73 N. E. 1019; Fuller v. Dederick, 35 App. Div. 93, 54 N. Y. Supp. 593; Lieberman v. Stanley, 88 N. Y. Supp. 360; Harder v. Mathews, 67 Wash. 487, 121 Pac. 983.

It was improper to admit evidence of plaintiff's former earnings, or earnings in some other occupation, because, by all the evidence submitted, the period of his disability would not have extended beyond the period for which he enlisted, and which he was bound to serve by a more binding and exacting obligation than an ordinary contract.

Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Elliott, 149 U. S. 266, 37 L. ed. 728, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Maday, 188 Ill. 308, 58 N. E. 933; Boston & A. R. Co. v. O'Reilly, 158 U. S. 334, 39 L. ed. 1006, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880; Bonnet v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 89 Tex. 72, 33 S. W. 384;

Legendre v. Consumers' Seltzer & Mineral Water Mfg. Co. 147 La. 120, 84 So. 517.

Where wages have been paid as before the injury during the period of disability, the plaintiff cannot recover for loss of time, because he has suffered no loss.

17 C. J. 782; Travis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 183 Ala. 415, 62 So. 851; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Mallette, 92 Ala. 209, 9 So. 363; Chielinsky v. Hoopes & T. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 273, 40 Atl. 1127; Drinkwater v. Dinsmore, 80 N. Y. 390, 36 Am. Rep. 624; Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 210 Pa. 162, 59 Atl. 958; Goodhart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 1, 55 Am. St. Rep. 705, 35 Atl. 191.

Messrs. Dietrich & Dietrich, for respondent:

The finding of negligence on the part of defendants is supported by the evidence.

Lipsky v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 136 Wis. 307, 117 N. W. 803.

Plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Deitchler v. Ball, 99 Wash. 483, 170 Pac. 123; Undhejem v. Hastings, 38 Minn. 485, 38 N. W. 488; Kathmeyer v. Mehl, — N. J. L. —, 60 Atl. 40, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 688; Zimmerman v. Mednikoff, 165 Wis. 333, 162 N. W. 349.

Defendants cannot escape payment of loss of earnings by plaintiff from March 8, 1920, to March 8, 1921, by showing that plaintiff's government vocational allowance during same period, plus apprentice wage, equaled such loss.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 120 Ga. 453, 67 L.R.A. 87, 47 S. E. 959, 1 Ann. Cas. 210; Western & A. R. Co. v. Sellers, 15 Ga. App. 369, 83 S. E. 445; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Clifford, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 1163; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bir, 56 Ind. App. 598, 105 N. E. 921, 7 N. C. C. A. 114; Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 123 Mo. 573, 27 S. W. 387; Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Wittnebert, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 104 S. W. 424; Houston Belt & T. R. Co. v. Johansen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 1186, affirmed in 107 Tex. 836, 179 S. W. 853, 13 N. C. C. A. 829; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Haddox, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 81 S. W. 1036.

Doerfler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Did the evidence warrant submission of the question involving defendants' negligence to the jury? The accident happened at about noontime, on a clear day in the month of July. The defendant Hayes, with his automobile, was coming along the west side of Ogden avenue, and from the time that he approached the dray, up to the time of the happening of the accident, the dray and the occupants thereof were fully within his view. The machine was driven at a rate of speed of between 7 and 8 miles per hour, and, assuming that the appliances on the machine were in proper order, the machine was at all times within the easy control of the driver, so that he could readily pursue any course, by either swerving his machine to the left a sufficient distance away from the dray or by stopping it, and thus avoid the accident. It is the duty of a driver of a machine to keep a reasonably careful lookout so that he may be able to avoid a collision, and whether a driver has fulfilled his duty in regard to watching for pedestrians and other persons is generally a question for the jury. Huddy, Automobiles, § 332.

Automobile—duty to keep lookout.

Section 1636-52 of the Statutes, among other things, provides: "Every automobile . . . while being used upon any public highway of this state, shall be provided with efficient brakes and an adequate bell, horn or other signal device."

The legislature evidently realized the necessity for enacting a provision requiring the presence of a suitable horn or signal device upon every automobile propelled along the streets in this state, and the only object and purpose which that body could have had in mind in the enactment of such a precaution was to enable the driver of a machine to give a proper warning of his approach under any circumstances where such warning would be liable to prevent an accident.

It is true that this court has held that there is no rule of law which requires an automobilist to sound his horn in approaching a street intersection. However, that was not intended to convey the idea that the horn or signal device was a useless appliance, but that a warning or signal by use of such horn or device would be necessary in the exercise of reasonable care, wherever there was anticipated danger which could be averted by the giving of a proper, timely signal.

Therefore, the matter of the negligence of the defendant presented a proper question for the jury, both upon the theory that the defendant Hayes did not keep a proper lookout, and that he did not seasonably, by means of his automobile horn, sound a warning of danger. Furthermore, while going at the rate of 7 or 8 miles an hour, and under circumstances from which it must be assumed that he had full control of his machine, it is very questionable indeed whether he could not be deemed guilty of negligence, under the circumstances, in driving his machine so close to the dray while passing it, as to leave a space of but 1 foot between his machine and the wheels of the dray. As stated, there was no other vehicle or pedestrian on Ogden avenue; the street was 40 feet wide; the dray stood between 1 and 3 feet from the west curb of Ogden avenue, and there was ample space, even on the west side of the street, for the defendant Hayes to pass the dray, without in any way endangering the plaintiff under the circumstances detailed herein. This, also, was a proper matter to submit to the jury, under all the facts and circumstances in the case, in order to determine the question of negligence. The question of the negligence of the defendant Hayes, if any, was therefore properly submitted to the jury.

Trial—negligence in operating automobile.

Questions of negligence arising out of automobile accidents are peculiarly for the jury, and will not be decided as a matter of law, except under the clearest circumstances. Groeschner v. John Gund Brewing Co. 173 Wis. 366, 181 N. W. 212.

—Jury—negligence in hitting one alighting from vehicle.

What was said in the case of Shortle v. Sheill, 172 Wis. 53, 178 N. W. 304, is strictly applicable to the instant case: "There is no yardstick by which it may be determined whether any given action amounts to ordinary care. The decision must, of necessity, be a matter of human judgment. This is signally true in automobile accident cases. Whether the conduct of one charged with responsibility for an automobile accident amounts to negligence is, in the vast majority of cases, a question calling for the exercise of human judgment, and one upon which men are very likely to differ. In these days, when automobiles are in well-nigh universal use, who is better qualified to pass final judgment upon such matter than a jury, who can apply to the facts of the case a collective and varied experience? The daring, the reckless, the moderate, the careful, and the timid driver, as well as the pedestrian and he who still clings to 'old Dobbin,' all find their way to the jury box, and the decision of the jury upon these questions reflects a judgment founded upon varied views, sympathies, and experiences, which a court can disregard only when palpably unsupported by evidence or inconsistent with law."

We come now to the question submitted to the jury in the special verdict, involving the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. In this connection it must be borne in mind that the plaintiff did not look towards the north before climbing down from the wagon, and that he proceeded to climb down backwards in the manner heretofore stated. To hold that the plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, under the facts and circumstances detailed in the evidence, would appear to establish a very harsh rule indeed.

Highway—negligence in alighting from standing vehicle.

In determining the question of negligence, the traffic on the street must be taken into consideration, the width of the street, and all the surrounding facts and circumstances. It is true, had the plaintiff, after alighting, with one foot on the pavement, proceeded, without looking, to cross the highway, and then had been struck, it would be quite clear that under the decisions there would be little difficulty in finding that he was guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law. However, in the instant case, he had only partially alighted from the vehicle. There is sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion that the foot which had settled on the pavement was not to exceed 1 foot distant from the dray. The injury would have resulted even though it had been the intention of the plaintiff to pass forward towards the south around the wagon, and to gain access to the west sidewalk in that manner; or it would have happened if he had merely stepped down from the dray and had stood within 1 foot of the dray, intending to discuss some matter with the driver; or if he had alighted from the dray for the purpose of either examining some portion of the dray on the traffic side, or of attending to some slight repair upon the wagon. It would seem that whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in doing what he did at the time of the happening of the collision presented a situation which, like the negligence of the defendant Hayes, constituted a proper jury question. At least, it has been so held by courts of last resort of eminent respectability. Deitchler v. Ball, 99 Wash. 483, 170 Pac. 123; Undhejem v. Hastings, 38 Minn. 485, 38 N. W. 488; Kathmeyer v. Mehl, — N. J. L. —, 60 Atl. 40, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 688.

While other courts of eminent standing have held to the contrary doctrine in cases somewhat similar to the instant case, the very fact that there should be a dispute among learned judges upon the question involved in this case on contributory negligence would make it appear clear that, under the rulings of this court, the matter of contributory negligence is a proper subject to be submitted to and decided by a jury; and what has been quoted and said in the case of Shortle v. Sheill, supra, is equally applicable to the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, as it is with respect to the negligence of the defendant Hayes. We have arrived at this conclusion not without considerable difficulty, but after mature consideration. In view of our former holdings and what has been heretofore said and referred to, we hold that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff is a proper matter to be submitted to the jury.

Trial-jury—negligence in alighting from vehicle.

In answer to the fifth question of the special verdict, namely, "What sum will fairly compensate plaintiff for the damages he has sustained?" the jury answered, "$3,250." The jury further answered that, of said amount, the sum of $1,500 is allowed as damages for loss of earnings since March 8, 1920, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for the sum of $1,725 and costs, etc. The plaintiff in his cross appeal contends that it was error for the trial court to deduct the sum of $1,500 from the total amount of the damages, namely, $3,250, and to render judgment as aforesaid.

The plaintiff's injury consisted of a simple fracture of the tibia of the right limb, about an inch below the knee joint. Dr. Ground testified that the bone at the point of the injury, in hardening, ossifies separately from the shaft and the part which involves the new joint. The injury twisted and bent the bone at the joint, and the ligaments lifted the epiphylum cap off the shaft of the bone. That is what is called an epiphysial fracture. It is a weak point naturally, and the two pieces of the bone do not become ossified or thoroughly fastened together until the person becomes twenty-four or twenty-five years of age, and then they become very firm; and the injury was such as to bend the bone and lift the shaft right off of the tibia. The doctor treated the plaintiff about two months in St. Mary's Hospital, at Superior, and thereafter, when the plaintiff went to St. Paul, he still had some retentive dressing on his limb. The injury will naturally constitute a weak place for a few years. The fact that the bone has been immobilized for so long a time makes the joint stiff, and the tissues around the joint have become thickened, and that thickening has to be absorbed before the joint can be used normally, and that always takes a considerable time. The doctor further testified that he would expect it to take a year, or possibly a year and a half, before conditions would become reasonably normal.

The plaintiff testified that since his injury he was able to work, with great difficulty, inconvenience, and pain, at his regular employment, for a period of about one week, for which he earned the sum of $34, but that the condition of his limb was such as to prevent him from continuing in his employment, and that such disability continued up to the time of the trial.

In December, 1918, the plaintiff filed his application for a discharge from the Navy, and his four-year term was changed automatically to one which continued during the duration of the war. He received his discharge from the Navy on October 29, 1919. From the time of the happening of the injury, up to the time of his discharge from the Navy, the plaintiff received his usual compensation from the government, amounting to $45 a month.

The plaintiff thereafter presented an application for vocational training, under an act of Congress (Comp. Stat. §§ 3078½a-3078½gg, 3078½h, 3078½i, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 875-879), and for a period of one year thereafter, under the provisions of said act, he was afforded an opportunity to improve himself in the business of general upholsterer, so as to enable him to pursue a gainful occupation. The work required under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act was not so strenuous, nor did it require the person to kneel or to stand to any considerable degree while so employed. Under this Vocational Rehabilitation Act, the plaintiff received from March 8, 1920, the sum of $120 per month, and for a portion of the time his employer paid him the sum of $6 per week, which was subsequently raised to $10 per week.

The lower court instructed the jury that, inasmuch as the government paid plaintiff's salary of $45 a month to him until the time of his discharge on October 29, 1919, nothing was to be allowed to him prior to said date for loss of earnings. The jury was further instructed that in arriving at plaintiff's loss of earnings they were to leave out of consideration the $120 per month which the plaintiff received from the government under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, and find his loss of earnings, if any, just the same as if he did not receive any money from the government.

Plaintiff testified that since his injury and up to the time of the trial he would have been able to earn 72½ cents per hour in his former occupation, had he been able to resume it, and that, since plaintiff was injured, the compensation for railway car upholsterers has materially increased.

The jury was instructed also by the lower court to answer separately the amount awarded to the plaintiff for damages since March 8, 1920, and the jury fixed said sum at $1,500, and this amount was subsequently, in the judgment, deducted from the total amount of the plaintiff's damages, as aforesaid.

The plaintiff in his cross appeal now raises the question that in making such deduction the court committed error, and that the total damages should be, by the judgment, fixed at $3,250, instead of $1,725.

The Vocational Rehabilitation Act, which was enacted on June 27, 1918, and which is known as §§ 10,349,-10,359 of the Federal statutes, and as set forth in Barnes's Federal Code of 1919, among other things, provides as follows:

Sec. 10,350. "Every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, for compensation under article 3 of the act entitled 'An Act to Amend an Act Entitled "An Act to Authorize the Establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,"' approved October sixth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, hereinafter referred to as 'said act,' and who, after his discharge, in the opinion of the board, is unable to carry on a gainful occupation, . . . shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

"The board shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to furnish the persons included in this section suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation to be prescribed and provided by the board, and every person electing to follow such a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, receive monthly compensation equal to the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of his active service, or equal to the amount to which he would be entitled under article 3 of said act, whichever amount is the greater. If such person was an enlisted man at the time of his discharge, for the period during which he is so afforded a course of rehabilitation, his family shall receive compulsory allotment and family allowance according to the terms of article 2 of said act in the same manner as if he were an enlisted man, and for the purpose of computing and paying compulsory allotment and family allowance his compensation shall be treated as his monthly pay: Provided, that if such person wilfully fails or refuses to follow the prescribed course of vocational rehabilitation which he has elected to follow, in a manner satisfactory to the board, the said board in its discretion may certify to that effect to the bureau and the said bureau shall, during such period of failure or refusal, withhold any part or all of the monthly compensation due such person and not subject to compulsory allotment which the said board may have determined should be withheld.

"No compensation under article 3 of said act shall be paid for the period during which any such person is furnished by said board a course of vocational rehabilitation except as is hereinbefore provided." Comp. Stat. § 3078½b, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 876.

Article 3 (Comp. Stat. §§ 514qqq-514tttt, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 1317-1324), above referred to, provides for compensation to be paid on account of the death of one serving in the Army or the Navy, or for partial or total or temporary or permanent disability.

Article 2 of the Act entitled "War Risk Insurance" (Comp. Stat. §§ 514nnnn-514qqq½, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 1312-1316, provides for compulsory and voluntary allotments for the benefit of the wives and families, which allotments are deducted and paid directly by the government to the dependents.

Section 10,304 of the Federal statutes pertaining to war risk insurance provides as follows: "(1) Assignment to United States or Prosecution of Right of Action for Death or Injury; Credit of Recovery on Compensation; Mortality Table Applicable.—If an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed to the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made." Comp. Stat. § 514tttt, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1323.

In the next paragraph this section provides that if a recovery has been had as the result of the suit brought or of a settlement, the amount so obtained shall be credited upon any compensation payable, or which may become payable, to such beneficiary. Said section further provides: "(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person, other than the United States or the enemy, to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death."

On June 5, 1920 (Barnes's Fed. Code Supp. 1921) § 10,356a was enacted by Congress, which, among other things, provides as follows: "That the board may, after June 30, 1920, pay, subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed by § 2 of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act as amended, to all trainees undergoing training under said section residing where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high, in lieu of the monthly payments for maintenance and support prescribed by § 2, as amended, such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons dependent upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under § 204 of article 2 of the War Risk Insurance Act."

The Federal statutes above quoted and referred to make it clear that Congress first intended to provide for those engaged in the military and naval service, and who had sustained injury, compensation for disability, which compensation matured after the discharge of the soldier or sailor, and which compensation was subject to compulsory allotment for the benefit of dependents, in the same manner as the compensation received in the form of monthly pay was subject to while such soldier or sailor was in service.

Article 3, above referred to, is a separate and independent article, and has no connection with article 4 (Comp. Stat. §§ 514u-514bbb, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 1325-1328), which provides for soldiers' and sailors' insurance. It is very clear that Congress had in mind, at the time of the enactment of the foregoing statutes, not only to relieve in a measure those who had served the government during the period of the war, but also to afford them some compensation by way of appreciation and gratitude of the great sacrifices made. And it cannot logically be maintained that these enactments were brought about, or had in view any thought of relieving those who were guilty of wrongdoing towards anyone engaged in the military or naval service of the United States.

The plaintiff, after his discharge, from March 8, 1920, took advantage of the statutes pertaining to vocational rehabilitation, and received the maximum provided for under said statute, and, in addition thereto, received from his direct employer, up to the month of July, 1920, the sum of $6 per week by way of additional compensation, and thereafter the sum of $10 per week.

Section 10,350, referred to above, provides that no compensation under article 3 of said act shall be paid for the period during which any such person is furnished by said board a course of vocational rehabilitation, showing that the amount allowed by way of compensation during the vocational rehabilitation period is substituted for the amount of the compensation provided for in article 3; and said last-named section also provides that, in order to enable one to take advantage of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, he must have been disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces, to compensation under said article 3. So that the Vocational Rehabilitation Statutes really act for the time being as a substitute for and a supplement to the provisions of said article 3, and under said article 3 all causes of action and all amounts recovered belong to the United States, and must be ultimately credited to the military and naval compensation appropriations; so that, in any event, it appears that whatever is ultimately realized out of this suit goes to the credit of the United States, and does not constitute or give to the plaintiff double compensation for the damages sustained for loss of time.

(— Wis. —, 184 N. W. 767.)

It has been held by this court in Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 186 Wis. 34, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 116 N. W. 633, 16 Ann. Cas. 633, that the amount received by an injured party under an accident policy for which he has paid the premiums cannot be considered by way of partial or total satisfaction of damages claimed by such injured person from a tort-feasor.

In Harding v. Townshend, 43 Vt. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 304, which was an action for an injury caused by a defect in a highway, defendant claimed to have the amount received by plaintiff on an accident insurance policy deducted from the recovery, but the court said: "There is no technical ground which necessarily leads to the conclusion that the money received by the plaintiff of the accident insurance company should operate as a defense, or inure to the benefit of the defendant. The insurer and the defendant are not joint tort-feasors or joint debtors so as to make a payment or satisfaction by the former operate to the benefit of the latter. Nor is there any legal privity between the defendant and the insurer, so as to give the former a right to avail itself of a payment by the latter. The policy of insurance is collateral to the remedy against the defendant, and was procured solely by the plaintiff, and at his expense, and to the procurement of which the defendant was in no way contributory."

In answer to the objection that plaintiff was not entitled to more than one recovery, the court said: "Defendant was not in a position to raise that question, since it was primarily liable for the injury."

See also Regan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 60 Conn. 134, 25 Am. St. Rep. 306, 22 Atl. 503; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Rains, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 635; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carothers, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1673, 65 S. W. 833, 66 S. W. 385; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Thompson, 56 Ill. 138.

It also seems to be the prevailing doctrine in this country that, where the salary of an injured person is continued by his employer during the time of his inability to perform services, such payment is no ground for diminution of the damages to be paid by the one who has caused the injury. Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 123 Mo. 573, 27 S. W. 387; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 59 Ind. 317; Elmer v. Fessenden, 154 Mass. 427, 28 N. E. 299; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard, 65 Tex. 560. New York and Alabama courts seem to hold the contrary view.

From the foregoing statutes we hold that the lower court, in reducing the amount of the plaintiff's damages for loss of earnings since March 8, 1920, in the sum of $1,500, committed error, and that the judgment should be for the full amount of the damages as found by the jury, namely, $3,250.

The judgment of the lower court is, therefore, modified accordingly, and, as so modified, affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Damages—personal injury—deduction of allowance for lost time because of award from government.

ANNOTATION.

Compensation from other source as precluding or reducing recovery against one responsible for personal injury or death.

I. Scope, 678.

II. Recovery for personal injury:

a. Receipt of salary or wages:

1. View that amount of recovery is not affected, 678.
2. View that recovery for loss of time is barred, 680.
3. View that recovery for loss of time depends on whether payment is gratuitous, 681.

b. Receipt of money on insurance policy, 683.

c. Receipt of charitable fund, 686.

III. Recovery for death by wrongful act:

a. Receipt of money on insurance policy, 686.

b. Receipt of pension, 689.

I. Scope.

With the exceptions hereinafter noted, there are reviewed in this annotation the cases wherein the courts have considered to what extent, if any, compensation from other sources affects a recovery against a defendant who is responsible for a personal injury or death. Cases governed by workmen's compensation statutes are not considered, nor are cases discussing the effect of compensation from a joint tort-feasor, or from a benevolent association to the support of which the defendant has contributed. Likewise, cases involving the effect of gratuitous medical, nursing, or similar services are excluded.

II. Recovery for personal injury.

a. Receipt of salary or wages.

1. View that amount of recovery is not affected.

Although the courts of different jurisdictions are not in entire agreement on the question, the amount of a recovery from a third person who is responsible for a personal injury is, in most jurisdictions, held not to be affected by the receipt by the plaintiff, from his employer, of wages or salary for the period during which he has suffered from the injury. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (1904) 120 Ga. 453, 67 L.R.A. 87, 47 S. E. 959, 1 Ann. Cas. 210; Western & A. R. Co. v. Sellers (1914) 15 Ga. App. 369, 83 S. E. 445; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dickerson (1877) 59 Ind. 317; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bir (1914) 56 Ind. App. 598, 105 N. E. 921, 7 N. C. C. A. 114; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Porter (1906) 117 Tenn. 13, 94 S. W. 666, 10 Ann. Cas. 789; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard (1886) 65 Tex. 560; Houston Belt & Terminal R. Co. v. Johansen (1915) 107 Tex. 336, 179 S. W. 853, 13 N. C. C. A. 829; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Haddox (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 385, 81 S. W. 1036; Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Wittnebert (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 104 S. W. 424, reversed on other grounds in (1908) 101 Tex. 368, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1227, 130 Am. St. Rep. 858, 108 S. W. 150, 16 Ann. Cas. 1153; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Clifford (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 1163. See also the reported case (CUNNIEN v. SUPERIOR IRON WORKS Co. ante, 667).

In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dickerson (1877) 59 Ind. 317, the court said: "It is insisted that the damages are excessive; and the principal argument in support of this alleged error is that the salary of the appellee, as the agent of a sewing-machine company, went on during the time he was disabled by the alleged injury, without abatement. This forms no ground for the reduction of the damages. In such cases, damages are assessed according to uniform principles, and are not to be affected by the mere accidental business relations of the party injured. The liberality of his employer forms no reason why the appellee should not be compensated for the injury he sustained." That case was cited and followed in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bir (1914) 56 Ind. App. 598, 105 N. E. 921, 7 N. C. C. A. 114.

In Texas it has been held that a tort-feasor who has caused an injury to an employee of another person is not entitled to a reduction of damages because of the payment of salary or wages during the period of disability, whether the payment was in discharge of a legal obligation, or was a mere gratuity. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard (1886) 65 Tex. 560, wherein the court said: "The defendant in error testified that the injury he sustained caused him to lose a few days' time in Cincinnati, but that his employers made no deduction on this account from his wages. He lost time as a result of the injury, and was entitled to be compensated for this loss. If the continuance of his wages was a provision of his contract, or a grace of his employers, the defendant was not entitled to the benefit of either. The time was lost by him, and what it was worth, he was properly authorized to recover."

In Houston Belt & Terminal R. Co. v. Johansen (1915) 107 Tex. 336, 179 S. W. 853, 13 N. C. C. A. 829, the court said: "If, on account of his injury, any time was actually lost by Johansen during this period, a finding favorable to him upon the other issues submitted in the charge would have entitled him to damages in the amount of its reasonable value; and if during such period he was paid by the city, as a gratuity or bounty, the same or a greater salary than he was receiving when injured, the railway company was not entitled to the benefit of such payment. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard (1886) 65 Tex. 560. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the amount paid by the city in that interval was a gratuity; and there was evidence that he actually suffered the loss of such time. This fully warranted the submission of the issue of lost time as a part of the recoverable damages."

In Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (1904) 120 Ga. 453, 67 L.R.A. 87, 47 S. E. 959, 1 Ann. Cas. 210, it was held that the payment to a government postal clerk of his salary during the time that he was disabled did not preclude a recovery for loss of time from the defendant who caused his injury. The court stated that there was no evidence that the government was under a legal obligation to pay the clerk's salary while he was unable to perform his duties, and it declined to pass on the effect of such an obligation, had it existed. See to the same effect, Western & A. R. Co. v. Sellers (1914) 15 Ga. App. 369, 83 S. E. 445; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Porter (1906) 117 Tenn. 13, 94 S. W. 666, 10 Ann. Cas. 789. In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Clifford (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 1163, the court said: "Appellant by its third assignment of error complains of that portion of the court's charge wherein appellee is permitted to recover damages for loss of time. The proposition is asserted that the undisputed testimony shows that appellee received his salary from the government from the time of his injury to the time of his trial, and hence lost no time, and as a consequence cannot recover therefor. Loss of time, as the result of an injury, is a damage for which the injured person is entitled to be compensated, and if the injured person is a wage earner, and his wages continue during the time he is incapacitated, the defendant is not entitled to the benefit thereof. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard (1886) 65 Tex. 560; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Haddox (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 81 S. W. 1036. The supreme court of Georgia, in our opinion, correctly states the rule and the reason therefor in these words: 'The wrongdoer may show, in defense to a claim for lost time, that no time has been lost; and this, of course, is right and just, because, if no time has been lost, no compensation is due from anybody on account of lost time. But, if time has been lost as the result of a tort, sound sense, common justice, and, it may be, public policy, would demand that the tort-feasor be prohibited from making a defense founded upon the proposition that he has been guilty of a wrong,—it may be a grievous and outrageous wrong,—but that some third person . . . not in sympathy with the wrongdoer . . . has, from some worthy motive, paid to the injured person an amount which, if it had come from the wrongdoer, would have equaled the damages which would have been assessed against him.' Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (1904) 120 Ga. 456, 67 L.R.A. 87, 47 S. E. 960, 1 Ann. Cas. 210. While the authorities are not unanimous on this question, we are persuaded, not only that it is now the adopted rule in this state, but the fairest and safest."

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Haddox (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 385, 81 S. W. 1036, the court stated the material facts on the question herein considered, and its conclusion thereon, as follows: "The first proposition urged under this assignment is that the diminished capacity of the plaintiff to earn money was not a proper matter to be submitted, because it appears from the evidence that the plaintiff was a salaried officer of the city of Austin, and there had been no stoppage of his salary on account of his injury. In determining the amount of damages that the plaintiff was entitled to recover by reason of his diminished capacity to earn money, the appellant is not entitled to any credit in the amount of the salary received by the plaintiff during that time. The plaintiff was entitled to full compensation for the injuries sustained, notwithstanding he may have received an income in the nature of a salary during the time he was incapacitated from work. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Jarrard (1886) 65 Tex. 566."

In Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Wittnebert (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 104 S. W. 424, reversed on other grounds in (1908) 101 Tex. 368, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1227, 130 Am. St. Rep. 858, 108 S. W. 150, 16 Ann. Cas. 1153, it was held that the refusal to give an instruction that nothing should be allowed to the plaintiff for lost time was not error, where it appeared that the plaintiff was an old and valued employee, and was paid his regular salary by his employer during the time he was unable to work on account of the injury sued for.

In the reported case (CUNNIEN v. SUPERIOR IRON WORKS Co. ante, 667) it is held that the amount of salary paid to a soldier under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act is not to be considered, in computing the damages to which he is entitled for an injury inflicted on him by a person other than the United States or "the enemy." The decision is apparently governed by the Federal statute (9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1323) which provides, as a condition for compensation by the Federal government to a soldier injured by a person other than the United States or the enemy, that the United States may require the soldier to assign to that government any right of action he may have against the person causing the injury, or may require the soldier to prosecute his cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, and also provides that any money realized on a cause of action so assigned shall be paid to the beneficiary, and be credited on any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the injury. The statute clearly contemplates that compensation paid to an injured soldier by the United States is not to have the effect of barring or reducing the damages recoverable from the person who caused the injury. The court, however, in support of its decision, also refers to cases in which the receipt of money on accident insurance policies is held not to bar or reduce a recovery from the person causing the injury, and to cases discussing the effect of the payment of salary by an employer to an employee during the time the latter has suffered from an injury caused by a third person.

2. View that recovery for loss of time is barred.

In two jurisdictions, however, the payment of wages or salary by an employer to an employee, for the period during which he is suffering from an injury, is held to bar a recovery by the employee for loss of time from a third person responsible for his injury. Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Mallette (1890) 92 Ala. 209, 9 So. 363; Travis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1913) 183 Ala. 415, 62 So. 851;

Drinkwater v. Dinsmore (1880) 80 N. Y. 390, 36 Am. Rep. 624, reversing (1878) 16 Hun, 250. Compare Bachelder v. Morgan (1912) 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. 815, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 888.

In Drinkwater v. Dinsmore (1880) 80 N. Y. 390, 36 Am. Rep. 624, reversing (1878) 16 Hun, 250, an action for a personal injury, the plaintiff was asked, on cross-examination, whether his wages were not paid by his employer during the time he was suffering from the injury. In holding that it was error to sustain an objection to the question, the court said: "Here the proof was offered, not in mitigation or satisfaction of any damages actually done the plaintiff, but to show that he did not suffer the damages claimed; to wit, the loss of wages. Before the plaintiff could recover for the loss of wages, he was bound to show that he lost the wages in consequence of the injuries, and how much they were. The defendant had the right to show that he lost no wages, or that they were not as much as claimed. He had the right to show, if he could, that for some particular reason the plaintiff would not have earned any wages if he had not been injured, or that he was under such a contract with his employer that his wages went on without service, or that his employer paid his wages from mere benevolence. In either case, upon such showing, the plaintiff could not claim that the defendant's wrong caused him to lose his wages, and the loss of wages could form no part of his damages."

In Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Mallette (Ala.) supra, it appeared that for a month or two the plaintiff was prevented, by an injury, from performing the services incident to his position as general manager of a corporation. The evidence did not show, however, that his salary was not paid, or that it was diminished during that period. An instruction was held to be erroneous which assumed that he was personally damaged by this loss of time, and which authorized the jury to include in their verdict damages therefor.

Similarly, in Travis v. Louisville

& N. R. Co. (1913) 183 Ala. 415, 62 So. 851, an action to recover for sickness due to the serving of spoiled oysters, it was held to be proper to give an instruction that the plaintiff could not recover for loss of time, if he received his wages during the time that he was sick.

A donation, however, by an employer, to an injured employee whose salary had been suspended, has been held in Alabama not to lessen the amount of damages recoverable by the employee from a third person who was responsible for his injury. Bachelder v. Morgan (1912) 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. 815, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 888.

3. View that recovery for loss of time depends on whether payment is gratuitous.

In Missouri and Pennsylvania the courts appear to attach importance to whether the payment of a salary or wages by an employer to an employee, while the latter is suffering from an injury, is gratuitous or in discharge of a legal obligation. The rule enforced in those states, it seems, entitles an employee to recover compensation for loss of time from the third person who caused the injury, in case, and only in case, the payment of the wages or salary is gratuitous. Moon v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1912) 247 Mo. 227, 152 S. W. 303; Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1904) 210 Pa. 162, 59 Atl. 958; Rundle v. State Belt Electric Street R. Co. (1907) 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 233. See also Ephland v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 57 Mo. App. 147, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 440. Compare Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 573, 27 S. W. 387.

In Moon v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) supra, it appeared that the plaintiff, the president of a corporation, after sustaining an injury, was unable to attend to business duties daily, but did go to the office of the corporation once or twice each week and attended a few directors' meetings. His salary continued to be paid to him regularly, without any deduction. It was held that, in the absence of evidence showing that the plaintiff did not perform the services incumbent on him as president, it was to be presumed that his salary was not illegally paid to him; that, therefore, the salary payments were not to be treated as gratuities, and that the plaintiff could not recover for loss of time from the person responsible for his injury. The court distinguished as follows cases in which salary payments, so-called, were really gratuities: "It is quite true appellant can have no greater right to a reduction of damages on account of a gratuity or gift to respondent from the J. W. Moon Buggy Company than from a stranger, and no more right to such reduction on account of a gift after injury, than one before injury. It may also be conceded that in case one is employed for wages, or in a subordinate capacity on a salary, and his right to the agreed compensation depends upon his rendition of specific services, and his failure to render such services ends his right to compensation, then, in case of his injury and consequent inability and failure to work, he has no legal claim to compensation, and if money is paid him it is, on its face, a mere gratuity, and falls within the rule. Before the rule as to gratuities can apply in a particular case, however, the evidence must show the payment was a gratuity. The burden is on respondent to show loss of time and its value. If the buggy company was not entitled to his whole time, the value, if any, of the excess, might be recovered; but there is no evidence in this record justifying a recovery on such theory. The only evidence in connection with loss of time relates to time lost from respondent's duties as president of the buggy company, and there having been no evidence he owed any duty he did not perform, and the respondent's own testimony showing he received during the whole time the amount agreed to be paid him as salary, and that he drew it, and the company paid it and charged it to him, as salary, the rule as to gratuities, on the record before us, has nothing to do with the case. There was no evidence justifying the instruction authorizing recovery for loss of time. The authorities cited in the briefs of counsel, while in conflict in other respects, in so far as they are pertinent, accord with the conclusion reached. It was error, on this evidence, to permit the jury to consider loss of time as ground of recovery."

In Ephland v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 57 Mo. App. 147, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 440, it was held that a person who received from his employers his regular wages or salary, without deduction or diminution, during the time he suffered from an injury, was not entitled to recover from a third person who caused the injury, for loss of time, since under the facts of the case he was entitled to compensatory damages only, and, if the payment of his wages or salary was not suspended, there was no damage due to loss of time for which he could be compensated.

However, in Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 573, 27 S. W. 387, the court took a different view, saying: "Most clearly it was no defense to this action to show that plaintiff's employer, the Adams Express Company, had continued his salary while he was disabled by an injury caused by defendant. There can be no abatement of damages on the ground of partial compensation, when it comes from a collateral source, independent of defendant."

In Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1904) 210 Pa. 162, 59 Atl. 958, it was held that where the injured plaintiff, after the injury, performed services for his employer similar in character to, though perhaps less efficient than, those performed before the injury, the payment of his salary by his employer was not a gratuity, and he could not recover from a third person, who caused the injury, for loss of earning power during that time.

On the other hand, it has been held in Pennsylvania that where a payment of salary to an employee during a period of disability is a donation or gift, rather than a payment for services, the employee is entitled to recover for loss of time from a third person who has caused his injury. Rundle v. State Belt Electric Street R. Co. (1907) 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 233.

b. Receipt of money on insurance policy.

There appears to be no dissent among the courts from the view that the receipt of money on an accident insurance policy, by one who has suffered a personal injury, does not preclude a recovery, or lessen the amount recoverable, from the person who is responsible for the injury.

United States. — Dempsey v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1915) 219 Fed. 619.

Illinois. — Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Thompson (1870) 56 Ill. 138.

Kentucky. — Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carothers (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1673, 65 S. W. 833, 66 S. W. 385.

Massachusetts. — Gray v. Boston Elevated R. Co. (1913) 215 Mass. 143, 102 N. E. 71, 8 N. C. C. A. 602.

Minnesota. — Evans v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1916) 133 Minn. 293, 158 N. W. 335.

New Jersey. — Cornish v. North Jersey Street R. Co. (1906) 73 N. J. L. 273, 62 Atl. 1004.

New York. — Chernick v. Independent American Ice Cream Co. (1910) 66 Misc. 177, 121 N. Y. Supp. 352.

Texas. — Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Rains (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 635; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Flood (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 197, 79 S. W. 1106; Texas C. R. Co. v. Cameron (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 709.

Vermont. — Harding v. Townshend (1871) 43 Vt. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 304. Compare Congdon v. Howe Scale Co. (1894) 66 Vt. 255, 29 Atl. 253.

Wisconsin. — Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1908) 136 Wis. 34, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 116 N. W. 633, 16 Ann. Cas. 633.

England. — Bradburn v. Great Western R. Co. (1874) L. R. 10 Exch. 1, 44 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 31 L. T. N. S. 464, 23 Week. Rep. 48, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 439.

Canada. — Misner v. Toronto & Y. Radial R. Co. (1908) 11 Ont. Week. Rep. 1064.

In the opinion by Bramwell, B., in Bradburn v. Great Western R. Co. (Eng.) supra, the material facts, and the conclusion of the court thereon, were stated as follows: "The jury have found that the plaintiff has sustained damages through the defendants' negligence to the amount of £217, but it is said that, because the plaintiff has received £31 from the office in which he insured himself against accidents, therefore, the damages do not amount to £217. One is dismayed at this proposition. In Dalby v. India & L. Life Assur. Co. (1854) 15 C. B. 365, 139 Eng. Reprint, 465, 3 C. L. R. 61, 24 L. J. C. P. N. S. 2, 18 Jur. 1024, 3 Week. Rep. 116, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 383, it was decided that one who pays premiums for the purpose of insuring himself pays on the footing that his right to be compensated, when the event insured against happens, is an equivalent for the premiums he has paid; it is a quid pro quo, larger if he gets it, on the chance that he will never get it at all. That decision is an authority bearing on the present case, for the principle laid down in it applies, and shows that the plaintiff is entitled to retain the benefit which he has paid for, in addition to the damages which he recovers on account of the defendants' negligence."

In Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Thompson (Ill.) supra, it was held to be proper to refuse an instruction that any sum paid to the injured plaintiff by an accident insurance company should be deducted from the amount of the plaintiff's damage.

With respect to an instruction that the net proceeds received by the plaintiff on an accident insurance policy should be deducted from the damages sustained by him on account of an injury for which the defendant was responsible, the court said, in Harding v. Townshend (1871) 43 Vt. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 304: "There is no technical ground which necessarily leads to the conclusion that the money received by the plaintiff of the accident insurance company should operate as a defense, or inure to the benefit of the defendant. The insurer and the defendant are not joint tort-feasors or joint debtors, so as to make a payment or satisfaction by the former operate to the benefit of the latter. Nor is there any legal privity between the defendant and the insurer, so as to give the former a right to avail itself of a payment by the latter. The policy of insurance is collateral to the remedy against the defendant, and was procured solely by the plaintiff and at his expense, and to the procurement of which the defendant was in no way contributory. It is in the nature of a wager between the plaintiff and a third person, the insurer, to which the defendant was in no measure privy, either by relation of the parties, or by contract, or otherwise. It cannot be said that the plaintiff took out the policy in the interest or behalf of the defendant; nor is there any legal principle which seems to require that it be ultimately appropriated to the defendant's use and benefit."

In Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1908) 136 Wis. 34, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 116 N. W. 633, 16 Ann. Cas. 633, the defendant filed an answer, stating that the plaintiff held an accident insurance policy on which he had received $2,500 on account of his injury. It was held that a demurrer to the answer was properly sustained. The defendant contended that the receipt of the money on the insurance policy operated as a pro tanto equitable assignment to the insurance company of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, and that the insurance company was, therefore, a necessary party to the action. The court, however, refused to recognize the validity of the contention, and based its decision affirming the order of the trial judge on the ground that the accident insurance policy was an investment contract, not an indemnity contract. On this point, Marshall, J., said: "We are not inclined to adopt counsel's view, but rather to hold that such a policy is an investment contract, giving to the owner or beneficiary an absolute right, independent of the right against any third party responsible for the injury covered by the policy; that, if such a company desires protection against loss caused by the wrongs of third persons who would ordinarily be liable, they must do so by the contracts they make; that, in the absence of a feature expressly making the policy of insurance an indemnity contract, it should not be regarded as such, but held to be an investment contract, in which the only parties concerned are the insurer and the assured, or the beneficiary. It follows that the order sustaining the demurrer must be affirmed."

In Evans v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1916) 133 Minn. 293, 158 N. W. 335, the court stated the material facts, and its conclusion on the question herein considered, as follows: "The plaintiff was a passenger on a night train of the defendant from Minneapolis to Owatonna. He claims that as he was on the platform passing from the smoker to another coach, just as the train was leaving Minnehaha Falls, he slipped and fell down the steps, and, in trying to save himself, was thrown under the coach. His hand was crushed. Afterwards it was amputated at the wrist. The evidence was such as to sustain a verdict in his favor. On the cross-examination of the plaintiff, the defendant was permitted to show, over his objection, that he had received $5,000 on policies of accident insurance covering his injury. The purpose was to reduce or defeat his recovery, upon the theory that, the larger the amount he received from insurance, the less was the loss for which he could recover of the defendant. The receipt by one injured through the negligence of another, of the proceeds of accident policies, does not defeat or diminish his recovery of the tort-feasor."

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Rains (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 635, the court said: "It appears from the facts that, as a result of his injuries, the plaintiff will receive on an accident policy the sum of $430. It is contended by appellant that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to the effect that they could consider this sum in mitigation of the damages which the plaintiff may be entitled to. There was no error in this ruling. The rule upon this subject, which is sustained by the weight of authority in this country and in England, is to the effect that a payment upon a policy of insurance can neither be considered as a defense, nor in mitigation of an action for damages against a wrongdoer."

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Flood (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 197, 79 S. W. 1106, it was said: "The fact that the appellee, at the time of the injury, held a policy of accident insurance which was then in full force, and which he has since collected, was not admissible in evidence, and the court did not err in so holding. This fact could not have the effect of reducing the compensation to which the appellee was entitled for his injury, if the same was the result of negligence on the part of appellant, and was not contributed to by his own negligence. Nor was the evidence admissible on the issue of contributory negligence of appellee. It was proven that the appellee had accident insurance, and the amount thereof, and appellant sought to prove that he had collected the same, the contention being that the same was admissible on the issue of contributory negligence. We fail to appreciate upon what theory the evidence was admissible as tending to prove contributory negligence on the part of appellee."

In Texas C. R. Co. v. Cameron (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 709, the court said: "There was no error in refusing to permit the defendant to prove by plaintiff on cross-examination that he held an accident insurance policy at the time of the injury complained of, and collected from that company a sum of money to compensate him for the time lost on account of the injury. It is well settled by the authorities in this state that a tortfeasor, through whose negligence an injury is sustained, cannot be accorded any benefits of such a policy, for which it has paid nothing, in mitigation of the damages allowed by law for tort."

Moreover, it has been held not to be error, in an action to recover for a negligent injury, to exclude testimony that the plaintiff had made a claim against an insurance company for $2,000 under an accident insurance policy, and had settled the claim for $300. Dempsey v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1915) 219 Fed. 619, wherein it was said, in holding that it was a proper exercise of discretion to refuse to allow cross-examination as to the settlement: "The real question before the jury was the extent of plaintiff's injuries. Upon this the jury had direct evidence. The fact excluded could have borne upon it only inferentially and more or less remotely. If the case were to be retried, and the question required to be answered, and the answer elicited no fact which had a proper bearing upon the amount of damages or the integrity of the claim, but elicited only the fact that the plaintiff had received compensation for these injuries from the insurance company, the consequence of which was a verdict for the defendant or the assessment of inadequate damages in favor of the plaintiff, we would then feel constrained to direct a third trial of the case. Our conclusion, therefore, is that, in any view of the question, the discretion of the trial judge was properly exercised. Questions of discretion may well be subjected to the test of results. Tested by the result in this case, we would not feel justified in granting a new trial unless a legal right of the defendant had been denied to it. The case properly called for a verdict for plaintiff. The assessment of damages was not excessive. This brings us to the final question of whether there was appellate error in the ruling. We have considered with care the very able and forceful presentation of the views of counsel for the defendant, but remain unconvinced of error. We think the offer of evidence was properly overruled, because not shown to be relevant, and the restriction of cross-examination properly applied, for the same reason, and within the discretion of the trial judge."

On the other hand, in an action for personal injuries, it has been held not to be error to admit evidence of an accident insurance policy under which the plaintiff was paid certain benefits, for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff's injuries were feigned. Congdon v. Howe Scale Co. (1894) 66 Vt. 255, 29 Atl. 253.

Payment made to an injured policeman out of a pension fund, into which each policeman pays a percentage of his monthly salary as a consideration for participation in its benefits, is, in its essence, a payment of municipal insurance for which compensation is made, and does not reduce the damages which the policeman may recover for personal injuries negligently inflicted on him. Heath v. Seattle Taxicab Co. (1913) 73 Wash. 177, 131 Pac. 843.

Sick benefits received by an injured person from a source other than a person who caused the injury, it has been held, should not be considered in determining the amount of damages recoverable from the latter. Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Baer (1899) 90 Md. 97, 44 Atl. 992.

c. Receipt of charitable fund.

In Norristown v. Moyer (1871) 67 Pa. 355, an action against a city for a personal injury, the following instruction was held to be a correct statement of law: "You will make no deduction because the plaintiff was aided by charity; individual benevolence cannot be made a set-off by the municipality."

III. Recovery for death by wrongful act.

a. Receipt of money on insurance policy.

In United States.

In the United States the rule appears to be well settled that a recovery for death by wrongful act is not barred, or the amount of the recovery diminished, by the receipt by any of the beneficiaries of the suit, of money paid by an insurance company on a life or casualty insurance policy.

United States.—Clune v. Ristine (1899) 36 C. C. A. 450, 94 Fed. 745, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 416. Compare Ladd v. Foster (1887) 31 Fed. 827.

Georgia.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Meigs (1885) 74 Ga. 857.

Illinois.—Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett (1904) 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435, affirming (1903) 109 Ill. App. 468; Deel v. Heiligenstein (1910) 244 Ill. 239, 91 N. E. 429.

Indiana.—Sherlock v. Alling (1873) 44 Ind. 184, affirmed in (1876) 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819.

Missouri.—Carroll v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1885) 88 Mo. 239, 57 Am. Rep. 382; Bright v. Thacher (1919) 202 Mo. App. 301, 215 S. W. 788.

New York.—Althorf v. Wolfe (1859) 2 Hilt. 344, affirmed in (1860) 22 N. Y. 355. See also Kellogg v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1879) 79 N. Y. 72.

Pennsylvania.—Coulter v. Pine Twp. (1894) 164 Pa. 543, 30 Atl. 490. See also North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kirk (1879) 90 Pa. 15.

Texas.—Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. (1901) 95 Tex. 5, 55 L.R.A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804, 64 S. W. 923; Tyler S. E. R. Co. v. Raspberry (1896) 13 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 34 S. W. 794; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Weaver (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 41 S. W. 846; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Cody (1899) 20 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 50 S. W. 135; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Lemair (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 119 S. W. 1162.

Virginia.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman (1877) 29 Gratt. 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384, reversed on other grounds in (1881) 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. ed. 643.

In Sherlock v. Alling (Ind.) supra, the court discussed as follows the right of the defendant to a reduction of damages because of the receipt of money paid on a policy insuring the life of the plaintiff's intestate: "The sixth paragraph of the answer raises the question whether the receipt of a sum of money by the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, on account of a policy of insurance on the life of the deceased, can be shown to reduce the amount of the recovery. The argument urged in support of the position is that the damages are recoverable for the death, and when that death brings money, which might not otherwise come to the party, a pecuniary benefit, to the extent of the amount received, has accrued to the party from the death; that if the wrongful act causing the death has been the occasion of pecuniary benefit, the pecuni-any damage cannot be ascertained without deducting from the whole damage the pecuniary benefit. If the argument is sound, it would apply to a case where the pecuniary benefit resulted by descent or devise. It proposes to use, as a defense to damages resulting from the wrongful act of the defendants, by way of set-off, recoupment, or in mitigation of such damages, pecuniary benefits received by the injured party, to which the defendants had not contributed, and not resulting from, or connected with, the act causing the death—benefits which, it is fair to presume, would have been realized at a future day, without the aid of their wrongful act. To allow such a defense would defeat actions, under the law, when the party killed had, by his prudence and foresight, made provision or left means for the support of his wife and children, and the wrongdoer would thus be enabled to protect himself against the consequences of his own wrongful act."

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman (Va.) supra, the court said: "The defendant's sixth bill of exceptions is to the refusal of the court to receive the evidence offered by the defendant to show that the deceased, at the time of his death, held policies of insurance on his life to the amount of $5,000, for the benefit of his wife and children, and that since his death the amount called for by said policies had been collected and paid over to the widow and children. We think the court did not err in refusing to admit this evidence. It was clearly calculated to mislead the jury as to the issues they were to try. The mere fact that the family of the deceased received money from some other source would not justly influence the measure of compensation to be made by the defendant, for injuries attributable to the misconduct of its employees and agents. The party effecting the insurance paid the full value for it, and there is no equity in the claim of the defendant to the benefit of a contract for which it gave no consideration."

In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett (1904) 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435, affirming (1903) 109 Ill. App. 468, it was said: "It is immaterial whether the widow and next of kin of the deceased engineer had been paid, or were entitled to receive, any sum of money as beneficiaries in a policy of insurance on the life of the husband and father. Any such mortuary benefit would accrue from a collateral source wholly independent of the appellant company, and would present no ground for an abatement of the pecuniary loss occasioned by the death of the appellee's intestate, to his widow and next of kin."

Likewise, in Clune v. Ristine (1899) 36 C. C. A. 450, 94 Fed. 745, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 416, an action for the negligent killing of the plaintiff's son, it was held to be error to admit evidence of an amount of money recovered by the plaintiff from an insurance company, since a wrongdoer is not entitled to a reduction of damages by proving that the plaintiff has received compensation from a collateral source.

In Ladd v. Foster (1887) 31 Fed. 827, the defendant sought to have the amount of a recovery for the negligent killing of a person reduced by the amount which his estate had received on a life insurance policy. The action was based on a statute which made the amount recovered for death by wrongful act a part of the estate of the deceased. The claim of set-off for the amount of the life insurance was apparently abandoned and disallowed on that ground, but the court discussed the legal effect of the receipt of life insurance money, stating that the English courts had permitted a deduction therefor, but that the American courts had not. The court doubted, however, whether the rule adopted by the American courts was applicable where the recovery was sought by, and the set-off claimed against, the estate of the injured person.

In an action by a widow for the death of her husband under a Dramshop Act, evidence of the receipt by her of money on an insurance policy on her husband's life is not admissible to bar her recovery or diminish the amount of her damages. Deel v. Heiligenstein (1910) 244 Ill. 239, 91 N. E.

429. In the case last cited the material facts on the question herein considered, and the conclusion of the court thereon, were stated as follows: "The instruction given on behalf of the appellee which is particularly complained of stated that this was a suit brought by plaintiff for damages to her means of support, and that the fact that she had received money upon a policy of insurance on her husband's life was not to be considered; but if the jury found she had been deprived of her means of support, she might recover, without reference to what money or property she had of her own,—whether derived from insurance policies, or from any other source. This instruction contained a correct statement of the law. It was proven that the deceased earned from $80 to $100 per month as a railway switchman, and that he gave his earnings each month to his wife; that he supported her and kept her in comfortable circumstances. He was under a legal obligation to support his wife, and this obligation was not limited to supplying the bare necessities of life, but included supplying such comforts as were suitable to his condition in life. The fact that a wife may have means of her own, or an income from a source other than her husband, will not affect her right to recover damages under the Dramshop Act, for an injury to her means of support on account of the death of her husband. She still has the right to recover for the loss of the support she was entitled to receive from her husband. . . . Though the deceased, at the time of his death, had in force a policy of insurance on his life payable to his wife, that fact would in no wise affect her right to recover for the injury to her means of support, occasioned by reason of his death."

On the other hand, it has been held that the amount of insurance money received by the estate of a deceased person is not a part of his earnings, and that, therefore, evidence of such sum is not admissible to show the earning power of the deceased, and thus enhance the damages recoverable for his death. Nevers Lumber Co. v. Fields (1907) 151 Ala. 367, 44 So. 81.

In England and Canada.

The opposite view to that adopted in the United States has been taken in England and in Canada. See Hicks v. Newport, A. & H. R. Co. (1857) 4 Best & S. 403, note, 122 Eng. Reprint, 510, note; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Jennings (1888) L. R. 13 App. Cas. 800, 58 L. J. P. C. N. S. 1, 59 L. T. N. S. 679, 37 Week. Rep. 403, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 439; Saindon v. Rex (1914) 15 Can. Exch. 305 (obiter); Jacob v. Rex (1917) 16 Can. Exch. 349, 33 D. L. R. 203; Royal Trust Co. v. Canadian P. R. Co. (1921) 16 Alberta L. Rep. 523; Millard v. Toronto R. Co. (1914) 31 Ont. L. Rep. 526, 9 B. R. C. 539, 6 Ont. Week. N. 519 (obiter). The law has, however, been changed in England by the Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act of 1908, 8 Edw. VII. chap. 7.

The reason given for this view is that, in an action under Lord Campbell's Act, the action is for pecuniary loss caused by the death to the survivors, and that therefore the receipt of insurance money is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether any loss has been incurred.

This doctrine goes back to the case of Hicks v. Newport, A. & H. R. Co. supra, wherein Lord Campbell, in charging the jury, said: "Gentlemen, the case is entirely in your hands, and the only direction I can give you in point of law is that you ought to consider the amount of the pecuniary loss which the family have sustained by the death of the father. You are not to look to the wants of the family, but to the loss they have sustained by the father's death; and I would say, in the words of a very learned brother judge, 'Take a reasonable view of the case, and give a fair compensation.' I think you should first consider what would be the sum if there were no insurances. What sum should you say? That is entirely for you to consider. If there were no insurances, what would be the amount? Well, then, if there be an insurance for £1,000 by some company that insured him against accidents by railways, and they being entitled to receive £1,000 upon that policy, it is quite clear that there ought to be a deduction from the aggregate amount in respect of that £1,000. Then, with regard to the policies upon his life independently of accident, if you allow any deduction (and I think you will probably consider that some deduction ought to be allowed), it will only be in respect, I should think, of the premiums that would be paid by the family, or which would have been paid by himself, if this fatal accident had not happened. I leave that, however, entirely in your hands. You will first make a calculation, and say what you think would be a reasonable sum that ought to be allowed as a compensation for the pecuniary loss his family would sustain, had there been no insurance. You will then deduct from that the £1,000 insured against accidents, and then any reasonable sum that you think should be further deducted in respect of the life insurance. You will then have the balance which is to be distributed among the family; and then it will be your duty to allot it among the different members of the family according to your judgment." See to the same effect, Royal Trust Co. v. Canadian P. R. Co. (1921) 16 Alberta L. R. 523.

And in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Jennings (1888) L. R. 13 App. Cas. 800, 58 L. J. C. P. N. S. 1, 59 L. T. N. S. 679, 37 Week. Rep. 403, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 439, that in an action brought by a widow under Lord Campbell's Act, for the pecuniary loss sustained through the death of her husband by wrongful act, the benefit received by her must be deducted from the amount of damages assessed, which, in the case of life insurance in her favor, is that accruing from the acceleration of payment of the amount of the policy; and that the benefit which she derived from acceleration might be compensated by deducting from the estimate of the future earnings of the deceased the amount of the premiums, which, if he had lived, he would have had to pay out for the maintenance of the policy.

However, in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Beckett (1886) 16 Can. S. C. 713, the court affirmed a judgment of a divided court in (1886) 13 Ont. App. Rep. 174, holding that insurance on the life of the plaintiff's intestate should not be deducted from the damages awarded. In the lower court, Hagarty, Ch. J., argued that the statute said that if death is caused by wrongful act, the one responsible therefor must pay the widow and children the pecuniary damages sustained by them, and that if the benefit exceeds the damages there is nothing to recover. But Burton, J., said that, if that view was correct, then the insurance had in fact been effective for the benefit of the one to whose negligence the death is attributable, and the family would lose the payments and interest which had been expended to procure that result.

b. Receipt of pension.

In Geary v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1902) 73 App. Div. 441, 77 N. Y. Supp. 54, a pension received by the widow of a fireman from the city of New York was held not to be a proper deduction in computing the damages recoverable from a street car company, which negligently caused his death. The court said: "It appeared that under the pension law provisions of the Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, chap. 378, §§ 789 et seq.) the decedent's widow was receiving $700 per annum. The court instructed the jury that in assessing the damages they should not take into consideration this pension which the widow was receiving, and the defendant excepted. We think the instruction was proper. The duty of the jury under the statute was to ascertain the pecuniary loss which the widow and children sustained by the death of the husband and father, and any benefits which they received by way of insurance or pension are not to be offset or deducted."

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Maddy (1893) 57 Ark. 306, 21 S. W. 472, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 133, it was held that, although a pension received by the plaintiff's intestate was to be considered in determining the damage sustained by reason of his death, evidence that his wife and younger children were entitled to a pension on his death did not have the effect of lessening the amount of damages recoverable.

W. S. R.

GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH OF ST. MICHAELS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
ARCHBISHOP PLATON ROIZDESTVENSKY et al.

Colorado Supreme Court (Dept. No. 2)—July 7, 1919.

(67 Colo. 217, 184 Pac. 295.)

Religious society — delay in suing for recovery of property — laches.

1. Delay in instituting proceedings to recover church property transferred by the controlling majority of a religious society to a denomination other than that in which the church was organized until after its debts had been paid and valuable improvements placed upon the property will prevent a recovery.

[See note on this question beginning on page 692.]

Laches — delay in proceedings to cancel void deed — disadvantage.

2. The doctrine that laches does not apply to a suit to cancel a void deed is inapplicable where the party pleading the laches has been put to a disadvantage by the delay.

ERROR to the District Court for Pueblo County (Rizer, J.) to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a suit brought to cancel changes of name of the plaintiff church, and a deed to the defendant Archbishop, and to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. M. J. Galligan, for plaintiff in error:

There was not, and could not have been, any valid or legal change made, so far as plaintiff was concerned; and the alleged attempts to change name of plaintiff, etc., were illegal and void.

State v. Warner Valley Stock Co. 56 Or. 283, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861; Harrison v. Miller, 87 Kan. 48, 123 Pac. 854; Slingerland v. Slingerland, 109 Minn. 407, 124 N. W. 19.

In a case of this kind the usual rules as to limitations and laches do not apply.

Burckhalter v. Vann, 59 Okla. 114, 157 Pac. 1148; Shute v. Shute, 82 S. C. 264, 64 S. E. 145; Lake v. Perry, 95 Miss. 550, 49 So. 569; O'Connor v. O'Connor, 100 Iowa, 476, 69 N. W. 676; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Southern Granite Co. 96 S. C. 106, 79 S. E. 985; Onn Lumber & Shingle Co. v. Powell Lumber Co. 94 Neb. 267, 143 N. W. 216; Scott v. Hubbard, 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653; Sheffield Car Co. v. Constantine Hydraulic Co. 171 Mich. 423, 137 N. W. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 984; Huntsville Elks Club v. Garrity-Hahn Bldg. Co. 176 Ala. 128, 57 So. 750; Torbitt & Castleman v. Middleboro Grocery Co. 147 Ky. 343, 144 S. W. 16; Osburn v. Court of Honor, 152

Mo. App. 652, 133 S. W. 87; First M. E. Church v. White Bear Beach Church, 126 Minn. 282, 148 N. W. 271; Martin v. German Reformed Church, 149 Wis. 19, 134 N. W. 1125; Poronto v. Sinnott, 89 Vt. 479, 95 Atl. 647; State v. Warner Valley Stock Co. 56 Or. 283, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861; Chandler v. White, 84 Ill. 435; Cook v. Lasher, 19 C. C. A. 654, 42 U. S. App. 42, 173 Fed. 708; Bushnell v. Loomis, 234 Mo. 371, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1039, 137 S. W. 257; Helm v. Brewster, 42 Colo. 25, 93 Pac. 1102; Terry v. Gibson, 23 Colo. App. 273, 128 Pac. 1127; Burritt v. Dickson, 8 Cal. 113; Davidson v. Young, 38 Ill. 145; Boynton v. Holcomb, 49 Ill. App. 503; Robbins v. Magee, 76 Ind. 381; Thorne v. Mosher, 20 N. J. Eq. 257; Tazewell v. Saunders, 13 Gratt. 354; Nelson v. Carrington, 4 Munf. 332, 6 Am. Dec. 519; Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 22; Cranmer v. McSwords, 24 W. Va. 594; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Carson, 186 Mo. App. 221, 172 S. W. 69; Myers v. DeLisle, 259 Mo. 506, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 937, 168 S. W. 676.

Messrs. F. R. McAliney and W. B. Vates, for defendants in error:

It was the duty of plaintiff to amend its bill, and set forth with particularity its excuse for laches.

(67 Colo. 217, 184 Pac. 295.)

Price v. Immel, 48 Colo. 166, 109 Pac. 941; Baird v. Baird, 48 Colo. 506, 111 Pac. 79; Kelly v. Boettcher, 29 C. C. A. 14, 56 U. S. App. 363, 85 Fed. 55; Hall v. Fullerton, 69 Ill. 448; Zeigler v. Hughes, 55 Ill. 288.

Assent or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff to defendants' adverse claim will bar the action, and this is particularly true when continued for so long a period as in the present instance.

Graff v. Portland Town & Mineral Co. 12 Colo. App. 106, 54 Pac. 854; Long v. Olson, 115 Iowa, 388, 88 N. W. 933; 16 Cyc. 162; Green v. Dietrich, 114 Ill. 636, 3 N. E. 800; Leavenworth v. Douglass, 59 Kan. 416, 53 Pac. 123; Moreman v. Talbott, 55 Mo. 392.

Laches does not grow out of mere lapse of time, but is founded on the inequity of permitting claims to be enforced after change in condition or relation of parties.

Arkins v. Arkins, 20 Colo. App. 123, 77 Pac. 256; Cliff v. Cliff, 23 Colo. App. 183, 128 Pac. 860.

A party is entitled to bring a suit in equity any time within the Statute of Limitation except in cases of delay or acquiescence amounting to recognition of rights, or where other equitable considerations, equally strong, are established.

Graff v. Portland Town & Mineral Co. 12 Colo. App. 106, 54 Pac. 854; Dunne v. Stotesbury, 16 Colo. 89, 26 Pac. 333; Great West Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min. Co. 12 Colo. 46, 13 Am. St. Rep. 204, 20 Pac. 771.

Plaintiff's action is barred by the Statute of Limitation.

Arnett v. Coffey, 1 Colo. App. 34, 27 Pac. 614; Griffith v. Seattle Consol. Street R. Co. 36 Wash. 627, 79 Pac. 314; Bates v. Boyce, 135 Mich. 540, 106 Am. St. Rep. 402, 98 N. W. 259; DeMares v. Gilpin, 15 Colo. 77, 24 Pac. 568; Pipe v. Smith, 5 Colo. 146.

Denison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was plaintiff below. July 6, 1900, Greek Catholic Church of the St. Michaels was incorporated by the filing of the affidavit in accordance with the statute for incorporating churches.

June 12, 1901, an affidavit was filed, showing that a meeting of the church was held May 20, 1901, at which a change of name was attempted to the "Greek Catholic Church of St. Michaels."

March 31, 1908, an affidavit was filed, purporting to change the name of the "Greek Catholic Church of St. Michaels" to the "Greek Orthodox Church of St. Michaels."

July 3, 1908, the attempt seems to have been made to change the name again to the "Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic St. Archangels Michaels Church of Pueblo, Colorado."

On the same day, by warranty deed, the Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Archangels Michaels Church purports to convey to Archbishop Platon Roizdestvensky and his successors in office the church property, which had been conveyed in 1901 to the "trustees of the Greek Catholic Church of the St. Michael." The grantee was an archbishop of the Greek Orthodox Church.

March 15, 1913, this suit was brought in the name of the "Greek Catholic Church of St. Michaels" against Archbishop Platon Roizdestvensky. The Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic St. Archangels Michaels Church of Pueblo, Colorado, was afterwards added as a defendant.

The prayer was to cancel the last two changes of name and the deed to the archbishop, and to quiet the title in the plaintiff.

The plaintiff alleged, and its evidence tended to show, that these changes of name were, for various reasons, invalid, and also that the Greek Catholic Church was subject to the Roman Catholic Pope; that the Greek Orthodox Church was under allegiance to the Czar of Russia or the Holy Synod of Russia, not to the Pope of Rome; that the first priest in charge of the church at its organization was a Greek Catholic priest; that most of the members were Greek Catholics, and the church was organized as a Greek Catholic Church; that the land in question was purchased and a church built thereon during the incumbency of the Greek Catholic priest; that after the first pastor died, no Greek Catholic priest could be obtained, and a priest of the Orthodox Greek Catholic Church was obtained about 1903 or 1904; that a succession of priests of that church has remained in charge thereof from thence hitherto; and that the property had been diverted from its purpose as a Greek Catholic Church, under the Pope, to that of an Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, under the Czar or Holy Synod.

It was claimed, on the other hand, that the church had always been an Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, and that the changes of name were made to express that more clearly, and the defendants' evidence tended to show this. The defendants, moreover, pleaded laches, and showed that, during the incumbency of the orthodox priests, from about 1904 to 1913, some $3,000 or $4,000 had been expended in improving the property and paying off mortgages upon it.

The opinion of the court below, which is made a part of the record on error, shows that the learned judge who tried the case was of the opinion that the plea of laches had been sustained by the evidence, and, accordingly, he gave judgment for the defendants.

Argument is made here that mere lapse of time is not sufficient to constitute laches. While we think that is not always the case, yet the question does not now arise, because, during the long delay from 1904 to 1913, the parties in possession, in apparent good faith,—we must assume that the court below found that it was in good faith,—expended the money, as stated above.

Religious society—delay in suing for recovery of property—laches.

It is also urged that the proceedings sought to be canceled are absolutely void, and therefore the doctrine of laches does not apply. The rule here invoked does not itself apply to a case where the party pleading the laches has, by reason of the delay, been put to disadvantage.

Laches—delay in proceedings to cancel void deed—disadvantage.

We can see no equity in returning to the plaintiff the property with additions made and debts removed which would not have been made or removed if the plaintiff's action had been prompt.

We think the record shows other grounds to support the judgment, but it is not necessary to notice them.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Garrigues, Ch. J., and Scott, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied October 6, 1919.

ANNOTATION.

Laches as preventing recovery of property diverted from one religious sect or denomination to another.

Controversies between religious bodies, especially between rival factions of religious societies, have been a prolific source of litigation in the civil courts in regard to property rights, as is illustrated by the annotation in 8 A.L.R. 105, which deals with only one branch of the subject. An extended search, however, has disclosed but little authority other than the reported case (GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH v. ROIZDESTVENSKY, ante, 690) as to the effect of laches on the part of the society or faction seeking relief. In Atty.-Gen. v. Meeting-House (1854) 3 Gray (Mass.) 1, a lot in Boston having been conveyed in trust for a place of religious worship for the preaching and maintaining of the doctrine and form of government known as the "Presbyterian Church of Scotland," the court was of the opinion that from 1786 when a majority of the congregation passed a vote purporting to resolve themselves into a society different from a Presbyterian society, the possession, whether lawful or not, became adverse, so as to bar a suit in equity to enforce the trust in the interest of a Presbyterian society formed in Boston in 1846, the body in possession having continued in the meantime, with various changes of worship, to be a society other than Presbyterian. But, in any event, whether such vote and the acts and possession under it were to operate as a bar or not, it was held that the possession was adverse from the time of the passage, in 1805, of an act declaring and confirming the incorporation of those "who now are or who may hereafter be the proprietors of the pews in the Congregational Meeting-house in Federal street, in the town of Boston."

In discussing the effect of the vote of 1786, the court said: "It is not now the question whether they have a right to do so, and whether their possession was lawful, but whether it was adverse. If it was, then all those who had any claims, legal or equitable, including all synods and Presbyterian bodies with whom they had at any time been associated, were bound to come forward and assert their rights; otherwise, their consent was to be presumed. We believe the Statute of Limitations was not then in force; but the rule of twenty years' acquiescence in similar cases was held equivalent. That vote was passed nearly seventy years ago."

In discussing the effect of the act of incorporation of 1805, and the possession thereunder, the court said: "Regarding the question as affecting the realty, these acts would seem to constitute a seisin either by right or by wrong, and, of course, a disseisin of trustees and cestuis que trust, claiming to hold for a different purpose, and against whom such entry and holding by the respondent society must be deemed adverse; and after the lapse of twenty years, or, perhaps, as the law then stood, thirty years, from the time of such acts, all right of entry and of action would be barred. In fact, the act itself implies that they had been long in possession before its date; and more than forty years elapsed, after its passage, before their right was questioned. If this would have been a good bar at law, on a question of title in a real action, a fortiori must it be regarded as a long-continued adverse possession, sufficient to preclude all claim in equity."

In Rehoboth v. Carpenter (1834) 23 Pick. (Mass.) 131, where, after the repeal of an act incorporating a committee to manage the parish fund, which was independently incorporated, and after the incorporation of a new society upon the petition of the parish and most of its members, the proprietors of the common lands of the town reconsidered a vote by which they had granted a lot for a meetinghouse to the parish, and conveyed the same by warranty deed to the new society, which took possession thereunder and enjoyed the same for a long term of years,—it was held that, even if the old parish corporation continued to exist, it was disseised of the property by the adverse possession of the new society, whether the latter's entry in the first instance was legal or not.

G. H. P.

E. N. ARMSTRONG, Receiver of Toledo, Peoria, & Western Railway Company, et al.,

v.

LOUIS L. EMMERSON, Secretary of State.

Illinois Supreme Court—October 22, 1921.

(300 Ill. 54, 132 N. E. 768.)

Tax — on railroad in hands of receiver.

1. A state may assess a franchise tax on a railroad company incorporated by it, although the road is in the hands of a receiver appointed by a Federal court.

[See note on this question beginning on page 700.]

— capital stock — amount authorized by charter or commission.

2. The annual franchise tax to be assessed on the authorized stock of a corporation must be reckoned upon the full amount of stock authorized by its charter, and not be limited to the amount which the public utilities commission has sanctioned.

— effect of Federal control.

3. The assumption by the Federal government of control of the railroads did not deprive the states of the power to impose franchise taxes upon roads incorporated by them.

Commerce — tax on interstate railroad.

4. The imposition by a state of a franchise tax upon a railroad chartered by it to do an interstate business does not impose an unlawful burden on interstate commerce.

[See 26 R. C. L. 123.]

CROSS APPEALS from an order of the Circuit Court for Sangamon County (Smith, J.) overruling a demurrer to plaintiffs' bill, enjoining payment of a certain amount into the state treasury, and requiring its return to plaintiffs; defendant appealing from a decree in favor of plaintiffs, and plaintiffs appealing from so much as denied full relief. Reversed with directions.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Edward J. Brundage, Attorney General, Clarence N. Boord, and James W. Gullett, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant:

The annual franchise fee or tax provided for by the General Corporation Act of 1919 is based on the amount of capital stock authorized in and by the charter or articles of incorporation of the corporation, whether such corporation is a public utility or otherwise.

American Can Co. v. Emmerson, 288 Ill. 289, 123 N. E. 581; Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co. v. Emmerson, 293 Ill. 387, 127 N. E. 746.

A receiver is liable for a franchise tax where he continues the business.

Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Atlantic Transp. Co. 62 N. J. Eq. 751, 48 Atl. 997; Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A. 260, 18 N. E. 92; Re George Mather's Sons Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 607, 30 Atl. 321; State ex rel. Dawson v. Sessions, 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789; New York Terminal Co. v. Gaus, 204 N. Y. 512, 98 N. E. 11; Bright v. Arkansas, 162 C. C. A. 148, 249 Fed. 950; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Russell, 115 Ill. 55, 3 N. E. 561; Safford v. People, 85 Ill. 558; Bartlett v. Cicero Light, Heat & P. Co. 177 Ill. 68, 42 L.R.A. 715, 52 N. E. 339.

Messrs. George B. Gillespie, George M. Gillespie, and J. M. Elliott, for plaintiffs:

No franchise tax can be imposed upon a corporation for the exercise of its franchise, at the time its franchise is being exercised by a receiver or the Federal or state government.

Chicago City R. Co. v. People, 116 Ill. App. 633; Knickerbocker v. McKindley Coal & Min. Co. 67 Ill. App. 291; Coates v. Cunningham, 80 Ill. 467; 23 R. C. L. 46; High, Receivers, 4th ed. p. 207; 8 Fletcher, Cyc. Corp. pp. 8898, 8967; United States v. Whitridge, 231 U. S. 144, 58 L. ed. 159, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Johnson v. Johnson Bros. 108 Me. 272, 80 Atl. 741, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1304; Johnson v. Monson Consol. Slate Co. 108 Me. 296, 80 Atl. 750; Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493; State v. Bradford Sav. Bank, 71 Vt. 234, 44 Atl. 349; McCoach v. Minehill & S. H. R. Co. 228 U. S. 295, 57 L. ed. 842, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419.

A state has no power to levy a tax on interstate commerce or foreign commerce, either directly or indirectly; and if a franchise tax, or tax on business, is measured or apportioned upon the basis of division of interstate commerce between the taxing state and other states in which a transportation company does business, that is a direct tax on interstate commerce in violation of the Federal Constitution.

26 R. C. L. 124; Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292, 62 L. ed. 295, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Western U.

Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Taggart, 141 Ind. 281, 60 L.R.A. 681, 40 N. E. 1051; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Botkin, 240 U. S. 227, 60 L. ed. 617, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 292 Ill. 429, 127 N. E. 41.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Toledo, Peoria, & Western Railway Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, and on July 2, 1917, E. N. Armstrong was appointed receiver for it under a decree of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, and has, since his appointment, been in possession of all its property, and has operated its railroad exclusively under the control of that court, except during such time as the railroad was in the possession of the government of the United States and was operated under the act known as the Federal Railway Control Act (Comp. Stat. §§ 3115½a-3115½p, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 757). The secretary of state assessed the annual license fee or franchise tax provided by § 105 of the General Corporation Act, as amended in 1919 (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 32, § 28a77), upon the capital stock of the railway company in the year 1919, and notified the railway company and its receiver of such assessment, amounting to $2,250, which they were required to pay on or before July 31, 1919, or else the assessment would become delinquent and the penalties provided by the act would be added. The receiver appeared before the secretary of state by counsel, and endeavored to obtain a cancellation of the assessment, but, the secretary having refused to cancel or modify it, the receiver paid to the secretary of state the sum of $2,250, the amount of the assessment, under protest, and a bill was filed in the name of the railway company and the receiver, to restrain the secretary of state from paying the money over to the treasurer and to require him to repay it to the receiver. The bill, in addition to the facts stated, alleged that the railway company, previous to the receivership, was operating the railroad extending from Effner, in the state of Indiana, through the state of Illinois and into the state of Iowa, and was engaged as a public utility in intrastate and interstate commerce as a common carrier of passengers and goods; that, during the whole of the year 1919, for which the license fee or franchise tax was assessed, the railroad was operated exclusively by the Director General of Railroads of the United States; that neither the railway company nor its receiver was in possession, control, or operation of the railroad, or transacted any transportation business within the state of Illinois or elsewhere; and that, if any franchise tax may be assessed against the railway company, it should be assessed under § 107 of the General Corporation Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 32, § 28a79), instead of under § 106, as it was assessed by the secretary of state. It is also charged that the assessment was wrongfully made upon the total amount of capital stock authorized to be issued under the laws of the state of Illinois ($4,500,000), of which $4,076,900 only had in fact been issued, and before any additional stock of the company can lawfully be issued it will have to be authorized by the public utilities commission of the state of Illinois. A temporary restraining order was entered, restraining the secretary of state from paying the amount received into the state treasury. A demurrer to the bill was overruled, and, the defendant having elected to stand by the demurrer, an order was entered, perpetually enjoining the payment of the sum of $211.56 into the state treasury and requiring its return to the receiver. The defendant has appealed, and the complainants have assigned cross errors.

The only question raised by the appellant's assignment of errors is whether the assessment should be based upon the amount of $4,500,000, the total amount of capital stock which the corporation was authorized to have, or upon the amount of $4,076,900, the amount of capital stock which had been issued. The claim of the appellees that the assessment should be based upon the latter amount is founded on the fact that the corporation is a utility corporation, and its power to issue its stock is subject to the supervision, regulation, and control of the state public utilities commission, and can be exercised only under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe. The decision of the question requires the determination of the meaning of the words "authorized capital stock," in § 105 of the General Corporation Act. The appellant contends that the language refers to the total amount of capital stock authorized by the articles of incorporation; the appellees, that it refers to the amount of capital stock which the corporation has been authorized to issue under the regulations of the Public Utilities Commission, in accordance with §§ 20 & 21 of the Public Utilities Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 111a).

The expression "capital stock," or "authorized capital stock," is capable of use to express different meanings. It may be used to designate the capital stock which the corporation is authorized to have, or the capital stock authorized by the directors to be issued, or, in the case of a public utility, the capital stock authorized by the public utilities commission to be issued in accordance with its regulations. "Capital stock is the sum fixed by the corporate charter as the amount paid in, or to be paid in, by the stockholders, for the prosecution of the business of the corporation and for the benefit of corporate creditors. The capital stock is to be clearly distinguished from the amount of property possessed by the corporation.

Occasionally it happens that, under the terms of statutes relating to taxation which have been drawn without regard to the technical meaning of words, the courts will construe the capital stock to mean all the actual property of the corporation. But this is for the purpose of carrying out the intent of the statute, and is not the real meaning of the term. At common law the capital stock does not vary, but remains fixed, although the actual property of the corporation may fluctuate widely in value, and may be diminished by losses or increased by gains." 1 Cook, Stocks & Stockholders, § 9; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 781; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 466; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Markle v. Burgess, 176 Ind. 25, 95 N. E. 308; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097; State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 84 Vt. 167, 78 Atl. 944, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22. It is this invariable sum fixed by the charter as the amount to be paid in by the stockholders, for the prosecution of the business of the corporation and for the benefit of the corporate creditors, which is ordinarily understood by the term "capital stock," unless the context indicates a different meaning. The capital stock is not the same thing as the capital of the corporation, or its actual property, the value of which may fluctuate from time to time. However much the value of the property of the corporation may increase in the prosecution of a successful enterprise, or may be diminished by losses incurred, the capital stock remains unchanged. The fees and franchise taxes which every corporation must pay under the General Corporation Act are fixed by §§ 96 to 107, inclusive, of that act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 32, §§ 28a68-28a79). The initial fee is provided for by § 96, and is $\frac{1}{2}\%$ of 1 per centum upon the amount of the capital stock which the corporation is authorized to have, and the section provides that each public utility corporation shall pay the same fees as are required to be paid for incorporation by other corporations organized for pecuniary profit. Section 99 provides that when a public utility corporation shall renew its charter, or extend the term of its existence, the secretary of state shall charge and collect the same fees as provided in the case of a new company. The annual license fee or franchise tax which each corporation for profit, including railroads (except insurance companies), is required to pay by § 105, is also $\frac{1}{20}$ of 1 per centum upon the authorized capital stock. Public utility corporations are not specifically mentioned, but there is nothing to indicate that the authorized capital stock upon which the franchise tax of such corporations is to be assessed is any different from the authorized capital stock upon which other corporations are to be assessed.

In American Can Co. v. Emmer-son, 288 Ill. 289, 123 N. E. 581, an objection was made to the amount of the tax assessed against a foreign corporation, under § 5b of the Foreign Corporation Act (Laws 1917, p. 306), then in force, that in ascertaining the proportion of the capital stock represented by property located and business transacted in the state of Illinois, the secretary of state used as a basis the entire capital stock of the company, including the unissued as well as the issued capital stock, but it was held that the words referred to the amount of capital stock authorized by the charter, and not the stock actually issued; and so it was held in Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co. v. Emmer-son, 293 Ill. 387, 127 N. E. 746.

A public utility corporation, upon filing the statement required by § 4 of the General Corporation Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 32), becomes a corporation having an authorized capital stock of the amount provided in the statement, although such stock can only be issued with the consent and approval of the public utilities commission. So, under § 28, any corporation which, in its statement of incorporation, has specified an amount of stock which it is proposed to issue at once, less than the total amount fixed by such statement, cannot issue any stock in addition to that specified as to be issued at once, until a statement showing the total amount of the capital stock authorized by the articles of incorporation, the amount already issued, the extent to which it is paid up, the additional stock proposed to be issued and the manner in which it is to be paid up, with a description and valuation of the property, if any, to be received in payment of such stock, and stating that, of the capital stock then proposed to be issued, at least one half of the par value of such stock having a par value, and not less than $5 per share for each share of capital stock having no par value, will be paid in in money or property, has been filed with and approved by the secretary of state. In either case the unissued part of the stock of the corporation is a part of its authorized capital stock, though it may be issued only in compliance with the provisions of the statute authorizing its issue.

The court erred in holding that the tax should have been assessed only upon the stock actually issued, and not upon the full amount of the authorized capital stock of the corporation.

Tax—capital stock—amount authorized by charter or commission.

By the assignment of cross errors it is contended that no franchise tax could be imposed upon the corporation for the exercise of its franchise while its property and business were in the hands of a receiver or the Federal government. There is a conflict in the decisions as to whether a corporation is liable to a franchise tax when its property is in the hands of a receiver who operates and controls it. In McCoach v. Minehill & S. H. R. Co. 228 U. S. 295, 57 L. ed. 842, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419, it was held that a railroad company which had leased its entire railroad, with all its rights, powers, privileges, and franchises, except that of being a corporation, for a term of years at an annual rental, the lessees agreeing to keep the road in good repair, and in public use, and efficiently operated, and return it to the lessor at the termination of the lease, was not engaged in business within the meaning of the Federal Corporation Tax Law (Act Cong. Aug. 5, 1909, chap. 6, 36 Stat. at L. 112, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 260), and was not, therefore, liable to the franchise tax imposed by that act upon corporations doing business in the state, although it retained the franchise of corporate existence, maintained its organization, and held itself ready to exercise its corporate powers when required by the lessees, and ready to resume possession of the property at the expiration of the lease. It was held by the same court that the income derived from the management of street railways by receivers operating such railways under the order of the court are not subject to the tax imposed by the same act. United States v. Whitridge, 231 U. S. 144, 58 L. ed. 159, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24. It has been held by some courts that the right of a corporation to do business ceases upon the appointment of a receiver, and the franchise tax cannot be assessed against the corporation after such appointment. Johnson v. Johnson Bros. 108 Me. 272, 80 Atl. 741, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1303; State v. Bradford Sav. Bank, 71 Vt. 234, 44 Atl. 349; Obm. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493. In those cases, however, the receiver was appointed to wind up the affairs of the corporation under a proceeding for its dissolution, and the corporation was deprived of the exercise and use of its franchise. It is said in Thompson on Corporations (vol. 5, § 6443): "The receiver is liable for a franchise tax where he continues the business, but not where he was appointed to wind up the corporation in a proceeding instituted by the state, and the reason is that the state has intervened and prevented the corporation from further exercising its franchises."

We have held that the appointment of a receiver for a railroad company creates no change in the corporate body, but its existence remains, with its legal functions unimpaired, its acts being performed by agents appointed by the court, and not by the corporation. The court does not enlarge or restrict the powers and duties conferred by the charter, but assumes the management of the corporation under and in accordance with the charter, and is bound by its provisions, and the agents appointed by the court are required to act within the limits of the charter and to perform the duties imposed by it. Safford v. People, 85 Ill. 558; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Russell, 115 Ill. 52, 3 N. E. 561; Bartlett v. Cicero Light, Heat & P. Co. 177 Ill. 68, 42 L.R.A. 715, 69 Am. St. Rep. 206, 52 N. E. 339.

In Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A. 260, 18 N. E. 92, it was held the receiver was liable to the franchise tax. It was said: "It is claimed, however, that, when a receiver is appointed by the court, if he operates the railroad under its order he does so by virtue of the equity powers of the court conferred by the Constitution, and hence that the receiver is not bound to pay the taxes, although he receives all the earnings of the company. But what does the receiver operate? Under this order of the court he takes possession of all the property of the corporation and proceeds to operate, that is, to run its trains and to do all that was formerly done under the direction of the board of directors. In this way he uses the franchise which has been conferred by the state upon the company, and he uses it as an officer of the court which is administering the affairs of the company, and through the court he acts as the company to the same extent, pro hac vice, as if the board of directors were operating the railroad. It is the franchise which is being used in both cases, only in one case it is used for the company, and substantially by it, by means of its board of directors, while in the other case the same franchise is being used and the road is operated under it by an officer of the court, until, by virtue of the legal proceedings connected with the receivership, the receiver is discharged and the road returned to its former possessors, or other proceedings taken under a reorganization, as provided by law."

In New York Terminal Co. v. Gaus, 204 N. Y. 512, 98 N. E. 11, where the corporation was in the hands of a receiver, who continued to operate the property, it was held that the corporation was not dissolved, but its franchise to conduct the ferry business was in existence, and any operation must have been by virtue of that franchise; that the receiver's operation of the ferry was under the corporate franchise, and he was bound to pay the franchise tax for such operation, which was a lien on the corporate assets paramount to all prior encumbrances. "Where a receiver is carrying on the business of a corporation as a going concern, he is, in effect, exercising its corporate franchise, and the state properly looks to him to pay the tax imposed upon it." State ex rel. Dawson v. Sessions, 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Atlantic Transp. Co. 62 N. J. Eq. 751, 48 Atl. 997; Re George Mather's Sons Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 607, 30 Atl. 321.

Section 102 of the act, which requires the report to be made to the secretary of state upon which the assessment of the franchise tax is to be based, provides, further, that, in case the corporation is in the hands of an assignee, receiver, or trustee, then such report shall be signed and verified by such assignee, receiver, or trustee, thus specifically indicating an intention that the franchises of corporations whose property might be in the hands of assignees, receivers, or trustees should be subject to the franchise tax.

It was held in Wabash R. Co. v. Board of Review, 288 Ill. 159, 123 N. E. 259, that the act of Congress providing for the operation and control of railroads by the Federal government should not deprive the states of the power of taxation of railroads which they possessed and exercised prior to the passage of the act. By § 1 of the act (Comp. Stat. § 3115½a, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 757) it was provided that taxes assessed "either on the property used under such Federal control, or on the right to operate as a carrier," should be paid out of the revenues derived from railway operation while under Federal control, thus expressly providing for the payment of franchise taxes.

The appellees, by way of cross error, also contend that the tax imposes a burden upon interstate commerce; but this question was determined adversely to their contention in American Can Co. v. Emmerson, and Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co. v. Emmerson, supra. Those cases involve a license fee required to be paid by foreign corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state of Illinois, based upon the proportion of their capital stock represented by their property and business in this state, and it was held that the tax, though measured by capital used in part in the conduct of interstate commerce, was within the authority of the state, since the circumstances indicate no purpose to impose a burden on interstate commerce, or that such will be the effect. This principle is sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 163; Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 48 L. ed. 229, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v.

—effect of
Federal control.

Commerce—tax on interstate railroad.

—on railroad in hands of receiver.

Stiles, 242 U. S. 111, 61 L. ed. 176, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58.

The decree of the Circuit Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill.

Petition for rehearing denied December 9, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Imposition of franchise or excise tax on corporation in hands of receiver.

- I. Introductory, 700.
- II. Where receiver carries on ordinary business of corporation:
 - a. General rule, 700.
 - b. Contrary view, 703.
- III. Where receiver does not carry on ordinary business:
 - a. Theory that corporation is practically dissolved, 704.
 - b. Where tax is on doing business, 704.
- IV. New Jersey doctrine, 705.
- V. Ohio, 705.

I. Introductory.

It is difficult to reconcile or to classify the cases on this subject. One class of cases seems to be decided on the theory that the corporation at the time of the assessment was practically, if not actually, dissolved, and so there was no taxable franchise. In another class of cases, where the tax has been regarded as one upon doing business, it is held that if the receiver does not carry on the ordinary business of the corporation there is no ground for the tax. The United States Supreme Court, while stating that the statute involved did not impose a tax upon corporate franchises as such, takes the view that a corporation carried on by receivers is not itself operating anything, while the courts of New York and of several other jurisdictions, in effect, consider that the operation by the receiver is a use of the franchise.

The New Jersey cases go upon the theory that the tax, while in terms a franchise tax, was not really such, but an imposition upon corporate existence, and so is rightly imposed during such corporate existence, whether the receiver carries on business or not. The Ohio cases (which are separately grouped) are not always clear as to whether or not the receiver carried on the ordinary business of the corporation.

II. Where receiver carries on ordinary business of corporation.

a. General rule.

Where the ordinary business of the corporation is continued by the receiver, it would seem reasonable that the franchise tax should accrue.

Arkansas.—Bright v. Arkansas (1918) 162 C. C. A. 148, 249 Fed. 950.

Illinois.—ARMSTRONG v. EMMERSON (reported herewith) ante, 693.

Kansas.—See State ex rel. Dawson v. Sessions (1915) 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789.

Massachusetts.—Harvey v. Bay State Street R. Co. (1920) 234 Mass. 336, 125 N. E. 614.

New Jersey.—Re George Mather's Sons Co. (1894) 52 N. J. Eq. 607, 30 Atl. 321.

New York.—Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. (1888) 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A. 260, 18 N. E. 92; People ex rel. Joline v. Williams (1910) 200 N. Y. 528, 94 N. E. 1097; New York Terminal Co. v. Gaus (1912) 204 N. Y. 512, 98 N. E. 11. See also Spencer v. Babylon R. Co. (1916) 233 Fed. 803; People ex rel. Kalbach v. State (1919) 189 App. Div. 347, 178 N. Y. Supp. 486, affirmed in (1920) 229 N. Y. 630, 129 N. E. 936.

Ohio.—Gerke Brewing Co. v. Kuerze (1916) 7 Ohio App. 37. See also the obiter remarks in Ohio v. Harris (1916) 144 C. C. A. 174, 229 Fed. 892, infra, V.

In Bright v. Arkansas (1918) 162 C. C. A. 148, 249 Fed. 950, supra, it was held that receivers of the property of a railroad company, which would have been liable to pay taxes accruing during the receivership for the privilege of exercising its corporate powers, should be directed by the courts of equity controlling such receivers to pay such taxes as accrued while they were operating the property and before they surrendered it to purchasers or others, and it was also held that the receivers should pay the penalties on such unpaid taxes out of earnings or property received, the state having applied promptly for payment of the taxes.

It was held in the reported case (ARMSTRONG v. EMMERSON, ante, 693) that the annual license fee or franchise tax was properly imposed by the state on the capital stock of a railroad corporation of which a receiver had been appointed by the Federal court, and which railroad was in operation. The receiver paid the tax to the state secretary of state under protest, and a bill was filed in the name of the company and the receiver to restrain the secretary of state from paying the money over to the state treasurer, and to require him to repay it to such receiver, and the court directed that the bill be dismissed.

In State ex rel. Dawson v. Sessions (1915) 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789, supra, where it seems that the tax in question was a tax on a foreign corporation to pay an annual fee as a condition to doing business in the state, it was held that, where a receiver is carrying on the business of a corporation as a going concern, he is in effect exercising its corporate franchise, and the state properly looks to him to pay the tax imposed upon it, the court citing the first and third of the preceding New York cases. It does not appear, however, whether the receiver was appointed before or after the tax had been assessed.

In Harvey v. Bay State Street R. Co. (1920) 234 Mass. 336, 125 N. E. 614, supra, it was held that the commutation excise tax, to be based upon receipts from actual operation, assessed upon a street railway corporation under the Massachusetts Statute of 1909, chap. 490, pt. 3, §§ 47, 48, & 50, was "an excise upon the operation of the street railway in public ways," that it was not a property tax upon the physical assets of the corporation, or an excise tax upon the franchise as a corporation and the right to do business and exist as such; that such tax was properly assessed as a unit upon a street railway corporation for the entire period between October 1, 1917, and September 30, 1918, although on December 12, 1917, a receiver appointed by the Federal court took possession, and operated the corporation for the remainder of the period. The action was by the tax collector against both the corporation and the receiver, and was brought by leave of the Federal court, and the state court entered judgment for the taxes against the corporation only, stating that it was the duty of the receiver to pay the tax when assessed, and that, "under the decree whereby he was appointed, the receiver was authorized 'to pay all taxes due or to become due from the said Bay State Street Railway Company, or any part thereof.'"

A tax to be computed on the gross earnings in the state of a railroad, "as a tax upon its corporate franchise or business in" the state, is payable by the receiver who is operating the road and collecting such gross earnings, notwithstanding he is receiver in a suit to foreclose mortgages which antedate the taxes. Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. (1888) 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A. 260, 18 N. E. 92, supra. The court said: "Under this order of the court he takes possession of all the property of the corporation, and proceeds to operate—that is, to run—its trains, and to do all that was formerly done under the direction of the board of directors. In this way he uses the franchise which has been conferred by the state upon the company, and he uses it as an officer of the court which is administering the affairs of the company, and, through the court, he acts as the company to the same extent, pro hac vice, as if the board of directors were operating the railroad. It is the franchise which is being used in both cases, only in one case it is used for the company, and substantially by it, by means of its board of directors; while in the other case the same franchise is being used, and the road is operated under it, by an officer of the court." The court distinguished Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank (1878) 123 Mass. 493, infra, III. b, stating that there the corporation was practically dissolved, but that in the New York case it was not dissolved in form or in substance.

Upon the authority of this case, the court in People ex rel. Joline v. Williams (1910) 200 N. Y. 528, 94 N. E. 1097, sustained a tax imposed as a tax on franchise or business, based on the gross earnings of a street railroad company operated by receivers appointed by the United States court, which court had decreed that the corporation was insolvent and that its property constituted a fund in which its creditors were interested, and the receivers claimed that the corporation was, for all practical purposes, dissolved. The tax was imposed under § 185 of the tax law, providing that a corporation of this class "shall pay to the state for the privilege of exercising its corporate franchise or carrying on its business in such corporate or organized capacity within this state, an annual tax which shall be 1 per centum upon its gross earnings," etc. (This was one of the corporations involved in the United States tax case, infra, II. b.)

So it was held that, where the receiver appointed in an action to foreclose a mortgage on a ferry company continues to operate the ferry, the annual franchise tax upon the corporation levied during the receivership is a lien upon its property prior to encumbrances of record, and that where all the property of the ferry company, save its franchise to be a corporation, is sold subject to all taxes which might be liens thereon at the time of the sale, the purchaser takes the property subject to such lien. New York Terminal Co. v. Gaus (1912) 204 N. Y. 512, 98 N. E. 11. The judges of the court stood four to three on the question whether the franchise tax was superior or not to a prior mortgage. The statute provided that "for the privilege of doing business or exercising its corporate franchises in this state every corporation, joint stock company or association, doing business in this state, shall pay to the state treasurer annually, in advance, an annual tax to be computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital stock, employed during the preceding year within this state," and that this tax "shall be due and payable on or before the 15th day of January in each year," and "such tax shall be a lien upon and bind all the real and personal property" of the corporation, "from the time when it is payable until the same is paid in full." The court overruled the contention that the provisions for a franchise tax did not apply where the corporation was in the hands of a receiver, and had ceased itself to operate, and said: "I think the fallacy of the contention is in an evident assumption that, in his conduct of the business of the corporation, the corporate franchise is not being used by the receiver. . . . The receiver who was appointed of this corporation continued to operate its ferry business. . . . As he had no individual interest, but only the official possession of the property, the receiver could only have operated under the corporate franchise. That he was not a general receiver, as in sequestration proceedings, but only a receiver of the mortgaged property pendente lite, however marked the distinction, is not material to our consideration. By virtue of his appointment this receiver took possession of the mortgaged property and received the earnings as the officer of the court. The title to the property was not changed, but remained in the company, the mortgagor, until the sale under the decree in the action. . . . The corporation was not dissolved; its franchise to conduct the ferry business was in existence, and any operation must have been by virtue of that franchise. The right of its officers to operate was taken away, for the time, by the court, and was conferred upon the receiver, as its officer. Operation, therefore, could only have been under the corporate franchise."

Although the statute imposing franchise taxes on a certain class of railroad companies provided a less tax upon railroad corporations whose property was leased to another corporation, it was held that the tax must be assessed as if there had been no lease, in a case where both the lessor and lessee railroad corporations were insolvent and in the hands of different receivers, and the lessor corporation was operated by its own receiver. People ex rel. Kalbach v. State Tax Commission (1919) 189 App. Div. 347, 178 N. Y. Supp. 486, affirmed in (1920) 229 N. Y. 630, 129 N. E. 936.

In Spencer v. Babylon R. Co. (1916) 233 Fed. 803, it was held that the Federal court which appointed the receiver might reduce the assessment on which was based the franchise taxes assessed during the receivership of a railroad company, to what it deems reasonable, although the corporation never, during the receivership, appeared before the grievance committee of the assessors to protest against the assessment.

It may be noted that the "franchise tax accruing, during the receivership," on a railway company was paid by the receiver in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 41 S. W. 113, but the court does not discuss the general question.

In Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Com. (1883) 104 Pa. 80, where it was held that, when a railroad is being operated by receivers of the company appointed by a United States court, the gross receipts of such receivers are taxable under the act taxing gross receipts of railroads, and the assessment is properly made against the railroad, as the order appointing the receivers did not change the title of the road. The state argued that the tax was a tax on the franchise of the corporation, but the court did not, it seems, decide this question.

b. Contrary view.

It has been held by the United States Supreme Court that the income derived from the management of a street railway line by a receiver authorized and required by the order for his appointment to manage and operate such railway, and to discharge his public duties subject to the supervision of the court, is not subject to the excise or privilege tax imposed by the United States Corporation Tax Law of 1909, upon the carrying on or doing business by a corporation, as the receivers were acting as officers of the court, and not as officers of the corporation, and the possession and control of the receivers constituted an ouster of corporate management. United States v. Whitridge (1913) 231 U. S. 144, 58 L. ed. 159, 84 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24. The statute provided: "That every corporation . . . organized for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares . . . organized under the laws of the United States or of any state . . . shall be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation." The court said: "A reference to the language of the act is sufficient to show that it does not, in terms, impose a tax upon corporate property or franchises as such, nor upon the income arising from the conduct of business unless it be carried on by the corporation. Nor does it, in terms, impose any duty upon the receivers of corporations or of corporate property, with respect to paying taxes upon the income arising from their management of the corporate assets, or with respect to making any return of such income. And we are unable to perceive that such receivers are within the spirit and purpose of the act, any more than they are within its letter. True, they may hold, for the time, all the franchises and property of the corporation, excepting its primary franchise of corporate existence. In the present cases, the receivers were authorized and required to manage and operate the railroads, and to discharge the public obligations of the corporations in this behalf. But they did this as officers of the court, and subject to the orders of the court; not as officers of the respective corporations, nor with the advantages that inhere in corporate organization as such. The possession and control of the receivers constituted, on the contrary, an ouster of corporate management and control, with the accompanying advantages and privileges."

III. Where receiver does not carry on ordinary business.

a. Theory that corporation is practically dissolved.

An annual license or franchise tax assessed as of July 1st, 1910, and for the year beginning on that date, is not a good claim against a corporation which passed into the hands of receivers by order of the court made in April, 1910, under proceedings to force a dissolution, although the statute makes the franchise tax a preferred debt in case of insolvency. Johnson v. Monson Consol. Slate Co. (1911) 108 Me. 296, 80 Atl. 750; Johnson v. Johnson Bros. (1911) 108 Me. 272, 80 Atl. 741, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1303. In the case last cited the court said: "This so-called tax is not levied on property, but is imposed on the corporation in the nature of an annual license fee for the right to continue to exercise the privileges conferred upon it by the state. . . . The defendant corporation had passed into the hands of receivers by order of court in April, 1910, under proceedings for its dissolution. The defendant thereafter had no right to exercise for itself any of the privileges conferred upon it by the state. Its franchise—its right to do business for itself—had ceased, and the state had taken possession of its assets for distribution among its then-existing creditors."

And this seems to be the theory of the Federal court in Ohio v. Harris (1916) 144 C. C. A. 174, 229 Fed. 892, writ of certiorari denied in (1916) 242 U. S. 634, 61 L. ed. 538, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18 (infra, V.), where the receiver, while authorized to continue the ordinary corporate business, did not do so, and where the court said: "As we understand the facts of the present case, however, the receiver was, during those years, no more engaged in exercising the corporate franchises than the trustees in bankruptcy were, during the tax years for which recoveries are sought against them. The corporations were, and so far as appears still are, to all intents and purposes, extinct, and so could not then, any more than they can now, exercise their franchises."

See also Keeney v. Dominion Coal Co. (1915) 225 Fed. 625, infra, V.

b. Where tax is on doing business.

There is another class of cases where the franchise tax is regarded as one upon doing business, and in which it is held that, if the receiver does not carry on the ordinary business of the corporation, there is no ground for the tax. Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank (1878) 123 Mass. 493; Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Com. (1912) 211 Mass. 207, 97 N. E. 927; State v. Bradford Sav. Bank & T. Co. (1899) 71 Vt. 234, 44 Atl. 349.

Thus, where an insolvent savings bank is placed in the hands of a receiver on February 1st, by order enjoining it from doing business, and has since done no business, and the receiver has done none except to proceed in the winding up of its affairs, such bank has ceased to be doing business within the meaning of the statute, and consequently ceased to be liable to pay the franchise tax imposed by such statute, which provided that "a state tax . . . is hereby assessed upon the property, business, or corporate franchises of this state, of . . . savings banks. . . . Every . . . savings bank . . . incorporated by this state, and doing business herein, shall pay a tax," at a certain rate, upon deposits, which "shall be paid semiannually, one half in the month of February and one half in the month of August, and shall be based upon the returns for the six months terminating with the last day of December, and June next preceding." The court stated that it was clear that this was a franchise tax. State v. Bradford Sav. Bank & T. Co. (Vt.) supra.

A savings bank corporation which, in the latter part of December, had been placed in the hands of a receiver and prohibited perpetually from transacting the business for which it was incorporated, is not liable for taxes on its deposits, to be assessed one half on the average amount for the six months preceding the 1st day of the following May, the court considering the tax as one on the franchise to do business, and that it was to be assessed as of the 1st of May. Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank (Mass.) supra.

A similar tax for the six months preceding November 1, 1910, was held illegal against a savings bank, restrained in 1909 from receiving deposits, etc., and, since sometime in June, 1910, in the hands of the state bank examiner, although the bank still existed and might, perhaps, be allowed to resume business. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Com. (1912) 211 Mass. 207, 97 N. E. 927, supra.

IV. New Jersey doctrine.

A corporation in the hands of a receiver is liable to the "annual license fee or franchise tax" on the amount issued of its capital stock. Re United States Car Co. (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 514, 43 Atl. 673, reversing (1899) 57 N. J. Eq. 357, 42 Atl. 272, and holding that, although the statute designated an imposition of this kind as a license fee or franchise tax, it certainly was not a tax on the corporate franchises, and not a tax at all, but really an arbitrary imposition laid upon the corporation, without regard to the value of its property or its franchises, and without regard to whether it was exercising the latter or not, solely as a condition of its continued existence, and that, as the statute provided that such tax should be a preferred debt in case of insolvency, it must be paid, the statute also providing that all the real and personal property of an insolvent corporation, and all its franchises, rights, privileges, and effects, shall, upon the appointment of a receiver, forthwith vest in him, and the corporation shall be divested of the title thereto.

This case was followed in Duryea v. American Woodworking Mach. Co. (1904) 133 Fed. 329, and in Conkling v. United States Shipbuilding Co. (1906) 148 Fed. 129, holding that the receiver should pay as a preferred claim the annual (New Jersey) license fee or franchise tax imposed during his receivership.

18 A.L.R.—45.

It was also followed in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Atlantic Transp. Co. (1901) 62 N. J. Eq. 751, 48 Atl. 997, where it was held that the franchise tax was to be paid, and was preferred over other liabilities, but not over the allowance to the receiver and the expenses of winding up the corporation.

Where the return of a corporation, on which the assessment for a franchise tax was computed, was made May 3, and the assessment was made June 5, and between the two dates a receiver was appointed, it was held that this did not interfere with the taxability of the corporation, the court observing that putting a corporation in charge of a receiver does not work a dissolution. Kirkpatrick v. State Assessors (1894) 57 N. J. L. 53, 29 Atl. 442, where, however, the court ordered that testimony should be taken for the purpose of seeing whether the corporation was taxable on other grounds or not.

In view of the later cases, probably the obiter observations in Re George Mather's Sons Co. (1894) 52 N. J. Eq. 607, 30 Atl. 321, are no longer of interest.

V. Ohio.

In Ohio, where the cases are not always clear as to whether or not the receiver carried on the ordinary business of the corporation, it seems somewhat doubtful whether there is full harmony between the state and Federal courts on the subject.

In Morley v. Cleveland Hippodrome Co. (1914) 23 Ohio C. C. N. S. 295, it was held that, in Ohio, the annual franchise tax upon the subscribed or issued and outstanding stock of a corporation, accruing after the appointment of a receiver, is entitled to a preference where the statute provides: "The fees, taxes and penalties required to be paid by this act shall be the first and best lien on all property of a public utility or corporation, whether such property is employed by the public utility or corporation in the prosecution of its business, or is in the hands of an assignee, trustee or receiver, for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders thereof." It does not appear whether or not the receiver carried on the corporation's business. The court said: "The result here reached is the same as that reached under a similar statute in the state of New Jersey, where the same questions were raised. Re West Car Co. (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 514, 43 Atl. 673."

This case was approved in Gerke Brewing Co. v. Kuerze (1916) 7 Ohio App. 37, where it was held that this franchise tax should operate at least as long as the receiver is in control of the corporate assets and conducting its corporate business, distinguishing the decision in Ohio v. Harris (1916) 144 C. C. A. 174, 229 Fed. 892, as there the business of the two corporations in question was not being carried on.

In Ohio v. Harris (1916) 144 C. C. A. 174, 229 Fed. 892, writ of certiorari denied in (1916) 242 U. S. 634, 61 L. ed. 538, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18, it was held that the Ohio corporation franchise tax was not to be imposed upon an insolvent corporation in the hands of a receiver, who, as the court states it, "though empowered to continue the business, such as that of mining and selling coal, is not shown or claimed to have continued the business except only so far as this may have been involved in his admitted collection of claims and discharge of debts of the corporation." The court states that if the receiver had, during the tax years in question, conducted the corporation business in the regular way, "he would have been chargeable with having exercised the franchises. Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. (1888) 110 N. Y. 257, 1 L.R.A. 260, 18 N. E. 92." The court said of Morley v. Cleveland Hippodrome Co. (1914) 23 Ohio C. C. N. S. 295, supra, in part: "The facts stated in the report of the decision do not distinctly show whether they are in all essential respects like the facts of the present receivership case, though we regret that the decision in that case, and the present decision, seem in some particulars not to be in accord."

In Keeney v. Dominion Coal Co. (1915; Dist. Ct. S. D. Ohio) 225 Fed. 625, it seems to be a similar tax which was held, as against an insolvent corporation in the hands of a receiver, to be invalid on many grounds; but the court does not inform us whether or not the receiver carried on the business of the corporation. (This case does not seem to be referred to in subsequent decisions.) B. B. B.

EX PARTE ROBERT J. LANCASTER.

Alabama Supreme Court—April 21, 1921.

(— Ala. —, 89 So. 721.)

Venue — effect of entry of nolle pros.

1. Where by statute a trial can be removed but once, the venue of a criminal action cannot be restored to the county where the crime was committed by the entry of a nolle pros. after mistrial by the court of the county to which the venue was changed.

[See note on this question beginning on page 714.]

—action of grand jury—right to change.

2. Under a constitutional provision that the local jurisdiction of all public offenses is in the county where the offense was committed, there can be no change of venue for the action of a grand jury.

—verification of application for change.

3. Under constitutional and statutory provisions that the legislature may provide for change of venue on application of defendant, and that any person charged may have his trial removed to another county on making application setting forth the reasons, which application must be sworn to by him, the state cannot, after consenting to a change on application sworn to by the attorney for accused, attack the trial pursuant to such change as illegal.

(— Ala. —, 89 So. 781.)

Courts — jurisdiction — change of venue — when complete.

4. Upon order for change of venue in a criminal case, the jurisdiction of the court in the case where the indictment was found ceases, and that of the court of the county to which the case is removed begins.

[See 27 R. C. L. 825.]

Maxim — indirect action.

5. What cannot be done directly by law, the law does not permit to be done indirectly.

Grand jury — effect of removal of case for trial.

6. The removal of an indictment to another county for trial does not deprive the grand jury of the county where the crime was committed of jurisdiction to find a new indictment in case the first one is dismissed for any cause.

APPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to restrain the judges of the Circuit Court of Walker County from putting petitioner on trial in that county, on an indictment charging him with murder in the first degree. Writ granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Foster, Verner, & Rice, Harwood, McKinley, McQueen, & Aldridge, L. D. Gray, A. H. Carmichael, E. B. Fite, K. B. Fite, and Charles E. Rice, for petitioner:

If change of venue is made by consent, neither party can afterward object.

40 Cyc. 182; Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 249, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 126 N. W. 787.

At common law courts possess the inherent right to change venue in order to secure fair and impartial trial of the accused.

16 C. J. p. 201, § 302 (notes 30 and 31). State v. Albee, 61 N. H. 423, 60 Am. Rep. 325.

An order made and entered for change of venue on motion of the accused by his attorney, the solicitor being present, is valid.

Ex parte Reeves, 52 Ala. 394; Rosenbaum v. State, 33 Ala. 354.

If the order changing the venue is regular on its face, and shows that the change was made at the instance of the accused, it cannot be attacked by showing that no ground was shown to exist, or that the petition was not properly made.

40 Cyc. 177; Lewis v. State, 49 Ala. 1; State v. McLendon, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 195.

The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction cannot be collaterally attacked unless it is void on its face. Matters de hors the record cannot be considered for the purpose of impeach-ing its validity. Nor does the silence of its records create a presumption of a want of jurisdiction.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tally, 203 Ala. 370, 83 So. 114; 15 R. C. L. §§ 358, 373, p. 839; White v. Simpson, 124 Ala. 238, 27 So. 297; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 139 Ga. 224, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, 76 S. E. 1001, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 996; Barclift v. Treece, 77 Ala. 528; Breeding v. Breeding, 128 Ala. 412, 30 So. 881; Winter v. London, 99 Ala. 263, 12 So. 438; Max J. Winkler Brokerage Co. v. Courson, 160 Ala. 374, 49 So. 341; Falkner v. Christian, 51 Ala. 495; Drinkard v. Oden, 150 Ala. 475, 43 So. 578; Carr v. Illinois C. R. Co. 180 Ala. 159, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 634, 60 So. 277; Conniff v. McFarlin, 178 Ala. 160, 59 So. 472; Burke v. Mutch, 66 Ala. 568; Bromberg v. Sands, 127 Ala. 411, 30 So. 510; Wood v. Wood, 134 Ala. 557, 33 So. 847; Peavy v. Griffin, 152 Ala. 256, 44 So. 400.

Upon a change of venue, the court from which the case is transferred loses all jurisdiction to try the accused upon the indictment preferred at the time of the change, or upon any other indictment charging the same offense.

16 C. J. 220; Johnston v. State, 118 Ga. 310, 45 S. E. 381, 46 S. E. 488; Smith v. Com. 95 Ky. 322, 25 S. W. 106; Keefe v. District Ct. 16 Wyo. 381, 94 Pac. 459; 12 Cyc. 253; Woodring v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 26, 24 S. W. 293; Bowles v. State, 5 Sneed, 360;

State v. Swepson, 81 N. C. 571; State v. Twiggs, 60 N. C. (1 Winst. L.) 142.

When an order for change of venue is made by the court at the instance of the accused, all jurisdiction over the prisoner is out of that court, and the same is vested, eo instanti, in the court to which the case is transferred.

Bramlett v. State, 31 Ala. 376.

Where successive indictments are found for the same felony, an order for the change of venue of the last applies to the others, as they are merely different counts in the same proceeding.

16 C. J. p. 217; State v. Johnson, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 221.

Jurisdiction once acquired on change of venue cannot be divested.

Gay v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 106 Ala. 615, 17 So. 618; 40 Cyc. 176.

Venue can be changed only once, and cannot be remanded to the court where the indictment was returned.

Ex parte Dennis, 48 Ala. 304; Aikin v. State, 35 Ala. 399.

The court making order for change of venue loses jurisdiction as soon as the order is made, and before the transcript of the papers in the case is forwarded to the county to which the case is sent.

16 C. J. p. 218; Re Terrill, 75 C. C. A. 418, 144 Fed. 616; Ex parte Rivers, 40 Ala. 712; Goodhue v. People, 94 Ill. 37; State v. Weddington, 103 N. C. 364, 9 S. E. 577; Bramlett v. State, 31 Ala. 376.

Messrs. Harwell G. Davis, Attorney General, Horace C. Wilkinson, Special Assistant Attorney General, J. M. Pennington, and W. C. Davis, for respondents:

An affidavit made by an attorney is insufficient, and, without an affidavit of the defendant himself in support of the application for change of venue, the court is without jurisdiction or authority to order the case tried in some other jurisdiction.

Young v. People, 54 Colo. 293, 130 Pac. 1011; Smith v. Clarke, 70 Wis. 137, 35 N. W. 318; Winn v. State, 82 Wis. 571, 52 N. W. 775; Brouillette v. Judge of Tenth Dist. Ct. 45 La. Ann. 243, 12 So. 134; Stevens v. Burr, 61 Ind. 464; Western Bank v. Tallman, 15 Wis. 92; Crowell v. Maughs, 7 Ill. 419, 43 Am. Dec. 63; Hedge v. Gibson, 58 Iowa, 656, 12 N. W. 713; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Carroll, 186 Ind. 633, 117 N. E. 858; State v. Buck, 108 Mo. 622, 18 S. W. 1113; Ex parte Dennis, 48 Ala.

304; Huckabee v. State, 168 Ala. 27, 53 So. 251; Goodloe v. State, 60 Ala. 93; 8 R. C. L. 96, § 55; Ex parte Payne, 130 Ala. 189, 29 So. 622.

When the state enters a nolle pros. to an indictment, it has the effect of entirely destroying the indictment, and to leave the proceedings as if the grand jury had never preferred an indictment.

Walker v. State, 61 Ala. 30.

A nolle prosequi does not absolve the defendant from liability from further prosecution for the same offense. Its only effect is to end the then prosecution.

O'Brien v. State, 91 Ala. 25, 8 So. 560.

The finding of a new indictment is the beginning of a new prosecution.

Bazell v. State, 89 Ala. 14, 8 So. 22.

The presence of a defendant is not required when the nolle pros. is entered.

Lizotte v. Dloska, 200 Mass. 327, 86 N. E. 774.

A nolle prosequi may be entered after a mistrial.

People v. Pline, 61 Mich. 247, 28 N. W. 83; State v. Main, 31 Conn. 572; State v. Shirer, 20 S. C. 392.

A nolle prosequi ends the then-pending case, and authorizes a new indictment and a subsequent trial in the county of original jurisdiction.

State v. Patterson, 73 Mo. 695; State v. Billings, 140 Mo. 193, 41 S. W. 778; State v. Goddard, 162 Mo. 198, 62 S. W. 697.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for writ of prohibition, filed by Robert Lancaster, to prevent the judges of the circuit court of Walker county from putting him on trial in that county on a certain indictment charging him with murder in the first degree.

On the night of January 13, 1921, Will Baird was forcibly taken from the jail of Walker county and killed. The petitioner was, on the 19th of January, 1921, arrested under warrant charging him with the offense of unlawfully and with malice aforethought killing said Will Baird in Walker county. On the same day the grand jury of the circuit court of Walker county returned an indictment into said court, charging petitioner with said offense in the form of murder in the first degree.

On January 21, 1921, the petitioner-defendant in said case, by his attorneys, filed in writing in said circuit court an application for, and "moves the court to grant him, a change of venue, and that this court make an order removing the trial of the above-stated cause from Walker county, Alabama, to some other county in the state of Alabama, which is free from exception." This application set forth specifically the reasons why he could not have a fair and impartial trial in the county in which the indictment was found. It was signed by his attorneys, and it was verified by the affidavit of L. D. Gray, one of his attorneys. In the minutes of the court of January 21, 1921, we find on ruling on this application the following: "On the hearing of the petition in this case for change of venue, come the state of Alabama by its solicitors and the defendant by his attorneys and the solicitors stating in open court that the application for a change of venue will not be resisted. . . . It is, therefore, the order and judgment of the court that the motion be granted, and the case is removed to the county of Marion and state of Alabama for trial."

The petitioner was tried on that charge under an indictment on the 1st day of February, 1921, in the circuit court of Marion county, Alabama. The jury could not agree in the case, and a mistrial was entered on February 7, 1921. On the 22d day of February, 1921, an order of nolle prosequi in said case was made in the circuit court of Marion county, and on the same day a similar order was made in the circuit court of Walker county. The defendant, Robert Lancaster, was immediately arrested under affidavit and warrant charging him with the same offense as was alleged in the said indictment. On February 25, 1921, the grand jury of Walker county, Alabama, returned into the circuit court another indictment against the petitioner, charging him with the same offense, murder in the first degree. This second indictment charged the same offense, the same degree of the offense, as the first indictment. To all legal intents and purposes it was an exact copy of the first indictment, the only practical difference being, one was filed in the circuit court of Walker county on February 25, 1921, and the other on January 19, 1921. The same grand jury found and returned both true bills. The defendant is now under arrest and in prison under the last indictment.

The record shows that the deceased, Will Baird, was killed in Walker county, Alabama, on January 13, 1921.

The county of Walker had jurisdiction of the offense. The circuit court of that county had exclusive jurisdiction. If he was killed unlawfully, the grand jury of that county alone could indict the person charged with the offense. There may be a change of venue for his trial, but there can be no change of venue for a grand jury to investigate and return a true bill. Const. 1901, §§ 6, 8; Code 1907, §§ 7851, 7130, 7140. "The local jurisdiction of all public offenses, unless it is otherwise provided by law, is in the county in which the offense was committed." Code 1907, § 7225.

The Constitution of Alabama gives the defendant "in all prosecutions, by an indictment," the right to "a speedy, public trial, by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense was committed." Const. 1901, § 6. When the defendant thinks he cannot secure a fair and impartial trial in the county where the alleged offense is committed and the indictment is found, then he has the right to apply to the court for a change of venue. An application was made in the circuit court of Walker county for a change of venue. The court granted the application, and ordered the trial removed from Walker county to the circuit court of Marion county.

Venue—action of
grand jury—
right to change.

The state contends that this was error; that the order of the circuit court of Walker county, granting the petition for change of venue and removing the trial to the circuit court of Marion county, was null and void, because the Constitution requires the change of venue to be applied for by the defendant, and the statute requires the application for change of venue to be sworn to by the defendant, neither of which, he claims, was done in this case.

Section 6 of the Constitution of 1901, germane to the question, reads: "The legislature may, by a general law, provide for a change of venue at the instance of the defendant in all prosecutions by indictment, and such change of venue, on application of the defendant, may be heard and determined without the personal presence of the defendant so applying therefor; provided, that at the time of the application for the change of venue, the defendant is imprisoned in jail or some legal place of confinement."

This does not require the application to be in writing. It does not require it to be verified by affidavit or sworn to by the defendant. It must be made by defendant. This does not require the defendant should personally sign the application, or personally rise up in court and make the motion; he may, but the Constitution does not require it. This same section of the Constitution gives the accused "the right to be heard by himself and counsel, or either." In cases of this kind—charged with a capital offense—the defendant must have counsel, if able to employ one, and, if unable to employ one, it is the duty of the court to appoint counsel for him, not exceeding two. Code 1907, § 7839; Ex parte Bryan, 44 Ala. 402; Slocovitch v. State, 46 Ala. 227.

Section 7851 of the Code of 1907, as amended in Acts 1909, p. 212, reads as follows: "Change of Venue: Trial Removed on Defendant's Application, etc. — Any person charged with an indictable offense may have his trial removed to another county, on making application to the court, setting forth specifically the reasons why he cannot have a fair and impartial trial in the county in which the indictment is found; which application must be sworn to by him, and must be made as early as practicable before the trial, or may be made after conviction, on new trial being granted. The refusal of such application may, after final judgment, be reviewed and revised on appeal, and the Supreme Court shall reverse and remand or render such judgment on said application, as it may deem right, without any presumption in favor of the judgment of ruling of the lower court on said application. If the defendant is in confinement, the application may be heard and determined without the personal presence of the defendant in court."

There is nothing in this act to prevent the attorneys for defendant, in his name, making the application. The application in this case is in writing. It is signed by attorneys for the defendant. It is verified by the affidavit of one of his attorneys.

On direct appeal to this court by the defendant in the case of Lewis v. State, 49 Ala. 1, "the transcript did not contain any affidavit stating the reasons for changing the venue in said cause," and the minutes of the court showed that on motion of the defendant, and for cause shown, etc., the trial was removed from the circuit court of Dallas county to the city court of Montgomery. On these facts this court decided: "As the trial was removed from Dallas county, at the instance and on the motion of the defendant, and as the record states that cause for the removal was shown, we will presume it was an affidavit, and that the cause shown was sufficient; we will also presume that Montgomery county was the nearest adjoining county free from exception, as it is so stated in the order. At any rate, it did not lie in defendant's mouth to complain that the order was irregularly made, as it was made at his instance, and in his favor, and without objection on his part; and, besides, it does not appear that he was prejudiced by the alleged irregularity."

See also Paris v. State, 36 Ala. 232; Ex parte Rice, 102 Ala. 675, 15 So. 450.

In said case of Lewis v. State, on direct attack on appeal, the order granting change of venue was presumed to be correct, when the minutes of the court recited on motion of defendant and for cause shown the order of removal was granted. The court presumed it was on affidavit, and the cause shown was sufficient; and, "at any rate, it did not lie in defendant's mouth to complain." Lewis v. State, supra.

The state in this case did not question the sufficiency of the application for change of venue by demurrer because not sworn to, or verified by affidavit of defendant. Hence, Huckabee v. State, 168 Ala. 27, 53 So. 251, has no application to facts of this case. The state did not move to strike it from the file because not sworn to by the defendant personally. The state did not object to the court granting the petition because the facts alleged in it were not sworn to personally by the defendant. What did the state do? The state, by its solicitors, "on the hearing of the petition in this case for a change of venue," stated "in open court that the application for a change of venue will not be resisted." From this it would appear that the evidence and facts were so clear and convincing that the defendant could not have a fair and impartial trial by a jury in Walker county that the solicitors for the state were even convinced thereof; and they informed the court, openly in court, before the decision was rendered, "that the application for change of venue will not be resisted by the state."

The defendant, Robert Lancaster, by his attorneys, made the application, on the hearing the solicitors for the state did not resist it, the court was convinced that it should be granted, and made proper order of removal. Neither the state nor the defendant can complain at the action of the court. The attorneys for the state are eminently correct when in their brief they state: "The whole purpose of the statute providing for a change of venue is to insure a fair and impartial trial."

The law never intended for this purpose to be defeated by formal pleadings. State v. McLendon, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 195; Lewis v. State, 49 Ala. 1; Paris v. State, 36 Ala. 232; Ex parte Rice, 102 Ala. 675, 15 So. 450; Ex parte Reeves, 52 Ala. 394.

Under the facts of this case the order of the circuit court of Walker county, removing the trial of Robert Lancaster for the offense charged in the indictment from the circuit court of Walker county to ^{—verification of application for change.} the circuit court of Marion county, was legal and valid. It is binding on the defendant and on the state of Alabama. Lewis v. State, 49 Ala. 1; State v. McLendon, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 195; Const. 1901, § 6; Code 1907, § 7851.

The design of the Constitution and the purpose of the statute are for the court, on application of a defendant under an indictment, for change of venue, to ascertain by sworn evidence, by affidavits of defendant and others, or examination of them orally in court, whether the defendant can get a fair and impartial trial by a jury in the county where the alleged offense is committed. If the sworn evidence convinces the court that he cannot, then the defendant is entitled to have, as a matter of law, with a constitutional right, his trial for the offense removed by the court to the nearest county free from exception. Const. 1901, § 6; Code 1907, § 7851; Lewis v. State, 49 Ala. 1; State v. McLendon, supra.

This court in Bramlett v. State, 31 Ala. 381, writes: "We maintain that when the circuit court of Cherokee county, at the instance of the prisoner, made the order for the change of venue, and adjourned the court without revoking or qualifying that order, all jurisdiction over the prisoner was out of that court, and the same vested eo instanti in the circuit court of Benton county. The jurisdiction was not, and could not be, in abeyance."

By this order of the court the jurisdiction to try Robert Lancaster for said offense was changed from Walker county to Marion county.

Courts—jurisdiction—change of venue—when complete. The jurisdiction in Walker county to try him ceased, and the jurisdiction in Marion county commenced, when the order of removal was made by the circuit court of Walker county. Bramlett v. State, supra; 16 C. J. p. 218, § 330; 27 R. C. L. ¶ 46, p. 825.

Can this jurisdiction of the circuit court of Marion county to try this defendant for this offense be taken away? This is the next and final question to be decided. The state of Alabama contends that it can, by dismissing, with consent of the court, the prosecution in the circuit court of Marion county. The defendant was tried under the indictment in the circuit court of Marion county. There was a mistrial. The solicitor then, with consent of the court, had a nolle prosequi entered in the case. The defendant was immediately arrested for the same offense under affidavit and warrant. The grand jury of Walker county within a few days returned another indictment—just exactly like the first one—against this defendant for the same offense. He was arrested under it, and it is now on the circuit court docket of Walker county.

Did these proceedings divest the jurisdiction to try this defendant for this offense out of the circuit court of Marion county, and restore jurisdiction to the circuit court of Walker county? The state of Alabama insists that Walker county circuit court now has the jurisdiction, and if the defendant desires his trial removed into another county, he must make another application therefor to the circuit court of Walker county. The defendant contends that the Marion county circuit court still has jurisdiction of the trial of defendant for the offense charged.

The general rule of law under the above facts, as gathered in C. J. vol. 16, § 335, p. 220, reads: "Upon a change of venue, the county from which the case is transferred loses all jurisdiction to try accused upon the indictment transferred at the time of change, or upon any other indictment charging the same offense." Johnson v. State, 118 Ga. 310, 45 S. E. 381, 46 S. E. 488; Smith v. Com. 95 Ky. 322, 25 S. W. 106; Keefe v. District Ct. 16 Wyo. 381, 94 Ky. 459; State v. Milano, 138 La. 989, 71 So. 131; Coleman v. State, 83 Miss. 290, 64 L.R.A. 807, 35 So. 937, 7 Ann. Cas. 406; State v. Chinault, 55 Kan. 326, 40 Pac. 662.

A different rule prevails in the state of Missouri. It is as follows: "Loss of jurisdiction in the new court does not occur by reason of defendant withdrawing his application after it has been granted; but it is otherwise where the district attorney enters a nolle prosequi." 16 C. J. p. 221 (headnotes 26, 27); State v. Hayes, 88 Mo. 344; State v. Patterson, 73 Mo. 695.

What is the rule in Alabama? We have a statute. It settles the rule, if not on its face, by the clear intent and purpose of the legislature. It reads as follows: "Section 7852. Removal to Nearest County, and but Once.—The trial must be removed to the nearest county free from exception, and can be removed but once."

What does this mean? It means the trial of the accused for this offense charged in the indictment must be removed to the nearest county free from exception, and can be removed but once. In Ex parte Dennis, 48 Ala. 304, this court held, after order granting removal of the case, it could not be returned to the original county where the offense was committed, for trial by agreement of defendant and solicitor for the state; and said that § 4207 (now 7852) "declares that the trial can be removed but once." In Aikin v. State, 35 Ala. 399, the defendant made application in Lowndes county circuit for change of venue. The court granted it, and removed the trial to the circuit court of Autauga county. Before the trial commenced in Autauga county the prisoner made application for change of venue from that county. The court overruled the application. The defendant excepted. This court, in reviewing the case on appeal, said: "In refusing to change the venue from Autauga county, the court simply followed the express direction of the Code, which provides that 'the trial can be removed but once.'"

If the defendant, on application and proof, cannot have the court remove the trial, after a change of venue has once been granted, then can the state do so by a nolle prosequi, with consent of the court? The trial can be removed but once. The court removed it, on application of the defendant, from Walker to Marion county. The trial of what was removed? The trial of Robert Lancaster for the offense of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment.

Neither the Constitution nor the statutes of Alabama authorize the state to apply for, or to secure, a change of venue in any criminal case. Will the courts allow the state to secure a change of venue indirectly, when it is not permitted directly to do so? What cannot be done directly by law, the law does not permit to be done indirectly. No change of venue can be granted by a court in a criminal case, except on application, petition, or motion of the defendant. The defendant must be the moving party for the change of venue, and not the state.

Maxim—indirect action.

It is clear that, when the order of removal of the trial of this defendant from Walker to Marion county was granted, jurisdiction in Walker county circuit court to try this defendant for this offense ended, and jurisdiction was given to Marion county circuit court. It is clear that the state cannot have the court grant a change of venue. It is clear that the trial can be removed but once. Now can the state deprive the circuit court of Marion county of this jurisdiction to try this defendant for this offense, by entering, with the consent of the court, a nolle prosequi in the case, and thereby transfer the trial back to Walker county? If so, it would permit the state to have a change of venue by entering a nolle prosequi with the consent of the court, and without the consent even of the defendant. It would permit the state, without the consent of defendant, with the consent of the court, by entering a nolle prosequi, to remove the trial to another county, Walker, which the statute expressly forbids. The trial can be removed but once.

The state, with the permission of the court, may dismiss a prosecution. Code 1907, § 7159. But the law did not intend, and does not allow thereby, directly or indirectly, a change of venue of the trial of a case. Section 7852. There can be no change of venue by the state. To allow the trial of this defendant for this offense to be removed from Marion to Walker county, by a dismissal of the case on motion of the state, with consent of the court, would permit, in practical effect, a change again of the venue. To give the state this right would thereby nullify § 7852 of the Code, which states there can be but one removal of the trial. To give the state this right to have the trial returned to Walker county would deprive the defendant of his right to be tried in Marion county for this offense. This would allow the state a change of venue, if permitted. The defendant cannot be deprived of this right to be tried in Marion county by motion of the state for a nolle prosequi to be entered, which is granted by the court. Neither the

Venue—effect of entry of nolle pros.

Constitution nor the statutes of Alabama ever contemplated that the defendant could in that way be deprived of his right of trial for the offense charged in Marion county. To permit it, the state, with the approval of the court, by entering a nolle prosequi, could accomplish indirectly what the statute directly forbids; namely, a change of the trial of the defendant, on the offense charged, from Marion back to Walker county,—or some other county, perhaps.

This court cannot approve, or encourage, or permit such practice. It will set up no such precedent. It cannot permit a defendant to be liable to be harassed in that way. The offense charged in each indictment is the same. It matters not whether one is a continuation of the other, or not, or a renewal thereof. The statute provides, when he stands indicted for said offense, the trial thereof may be removed, and can be removed, only one time. When the change of venue was granted for the trial of the defendant for this offense to Marion county, the statute contemplates that Marion county is the only one in which the trial of the defendant for that offense may be had, regardless of the number of the indictments that may afterwards be preferred against him for the same offense.

This section of the Code (7852) deprives Walker county, where the offense was committed, of the right to try the defendant for this offense; but it does not deprive it of the jurisdictional right to indict for the offense. The order of removal confers on Marion county jurisdiction to try the defendant for the offense charged, but no right to indict for the offense, if the case is dismissed by the state with the consent of the court for any defect in the indictment or other cause. If a new indictment for the same offense is desired by the state, it would have to be returned by a grand jury of the circuit court of Walker county, and a certified copy of it sent to the circuit court of Marion county, where the jurisdiction to try the defendant for that offense has been placed by the court on the order of removal. Const. 1901, § 6; Code 1907, §§ 7130, 7140, 7851, and 7852; 16 C. J. § 335, p. 220, headnotes 9, 10, and authorities there cited; Bramlett v. State, 31 Ala. 376.

Let the new indictment for the same offense in the Circuit Court of Walker County be certified, with transcript of all the entries, orders, and proceedings in the case before and since the nolle prosequi was entered, to the Circuit Court of Marion County, as the law requires, where the trial of the defendant under the second indictment, for the same offense as the first, can proceed as the law directs. Code 1907, §§ 7130, 7140, 7854, 7857.

The writ of prohibition is granted.

Anderson, Ch. J., and Sayre and Gardner, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied May 12, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Dismissal, nolle prosequi, or mistrial after change of venue in criminal case, as affecting jurisdiction or power of courts of respective districts as to subsequent proceedings.

Jurisdiction to find new indictment.

It has been held that, where an indictment which has been transferred for trial to another court by a change of venue is for some reason quashed or dismissed, a new indictment for the same offense may be found by the grand jury of the county to which the trial was transferred. Watkins v. United States (1900) 3 Ind. Terr. 281, 54 S. W. 819, wherein the place of trial of the accused, who was indicted for murder, was changed from Ardmore to Pauls Valley. Because of a defect in the indictment, the grand jury at Pauls

Grand jury—
effect of removal of case for trial.

Valley returned an indictment against the accused, charging him with murder under the same state of facts and circumstances as alleged in the original indictment. On appeal, the accused contended that the grand jury at Pauls Valley had no power to find and return an indictment for the same offense, but that the indictment should have been returned from the place where the original proceedings began, and where the alleged murder was committed. The court said: "Where a change of venue is taken from one court to another, the latter one has full jurisdiction of the case. If it comes to it with an imperfect indictment, it may use its own grand jury to correct it, or do any other thing that the court from which it came could do, incident to the trial, if the case were pending there. The latter court is substantially the one of the defendant's choosing. By taking the change of venue he has waived every objection to the territorial jurisdiction of the court, if it be within the district."

In such a case the new indictment should state the county in which the offense was committed. Parker v. Com. (1876) 12 Bush (Ky.) 191.

But the new indictment need not allege the order of removal giving jurisdiction to the court to which the removal was made. Kelley v. Com. (1920) 189 Ky. 778, 225 S. W. 739.

And see Ruffin v. State (1921) — Ga. App. —, 110 S. E. 311, infra.

However, a contrary rule was laid down in State v. Billings (1897) 140 Mo. 193, 41 S. W. 778, wherein it was held that where the defendant, after indictment, obtained a change of venue, and the trial resulted in a disagreement, the grand jury of the county where the indictment was found, and where the crime was committed, had jurisdiction to find a new indictment. See to the same effect, State v. Patterson (1881) 73 Mo. 695, and State v. Goddard (1901) 162 Mo. 198, 62 S. W. 697.

And in the reported case (EX PARTE LANCASTER, ante, 706) it is held that, where the venue has changed in a criminal case, the grand jury of the original county has exclusive jurisdiction to return a new indictment for the same offense.

Jurisdiction to try on new indictment.

It has been held that the court to which an indictment has been transferred on a change of venue is not divested of jurisdiction by a dismissal, nolle prosequi, or mistrial, and retains exclusive jurisdiction to try the case after a new indictment for the same offense.

Thus, in Johnston v. State (1903) 118 Ga. 310, 45 S. E. 381, 46 S. E. 488, it appeared that the accused, who had been indicted for murder in Dade county, obtained a change of venue to Whitfield county where he was placed on trial, and a mistrial resulted. Subsequently the grand jury of Dade county returned a presentment against the accused, based on the same transaction as the indictment under which he had been tried, and charging him with the same offense. On being arraigned in Dade county on this presentment, the accused contended that the court was without jurisdiction to try him, under any indictment or presentment, for the offense charged in the indictment which had been transferred to Whitfield county. The court, in holding that the court of Dade county had no jurisdiction of the accused under the presentment, said: "The grand jury of Dade county may have authority to prefer as many indictments as it sees proper against the accused, but the superior court of that county cannot legally place the accused upon trial upon any of these indictments. The superior court of Whitfield county has the exclusive right to try the accused, as long as the order changing venue to that county stands unrevoked and unchanged."

But in Ruffin v. State (1921) — Ga. App. —, 110 S. E. 311, where, after the return of two indictments against the defendant for the murder of different persons on the same date, a change of venue was ordered and both cases were duly transferred to the superior court of another county, and, after the acquittal under both indictments in that county, the defendant was again indicted in the county from which the other cases had been transferred, for a third murder alleged to have been committed on the same date charged in the other indictments; it was held that, even upon the assumption, for the purposes of the point, that the last indictment charged the same offense and related to the same transaction as the other two, the judge of the court to which the other cases had been transferred did not err in directing the defendant to proceed before the judge of the other court, and in refusing to assume jurisdiction himself over the subject-matter of defendant's petition for an order directing a like transfer of the subsequent indictment. The court said that, while the county from which the case is transferred loses at the time of the change all jurisdiction to try the accused, either upon the transferred indictment, or upon any other indictment charging the same offense, the power of that court to compel obedience to its judgment changing the venue is neither lost nor impaired. The court, however, did not undertake to decide whether or not it would have been error for the judge of the court to which the venue in the other cases was changed, to assume jurisdiction of the petition, but merely that the refusal to do so was not error, as its jurisdiction, in any event, was not exclusive of that of the court of the other county.

And in the reported case (EX PARTE LANCASTER) it is held that the court to which a change of venue has been made in a murder case cannot be, divested of its jurisdiction by the entering of a nolle prosequi and the indictment of the accused again, for the same offense, in the original county. This holding is founded on the argument that, as the state is not authorized to obtain a change of venue, and the Statute (Code 1907, § 7852) provides that the trial can be removed but once, therefore, the changing of the place of trial back to the original county, by the entering of a nolle prosequi by the state, would be allowing the state to procure something indirectly which it could not procure directly.

But it has been held that where there has been a change of venue, and on the trial the jury fails to agree, and the case is, on motion of the accused, remanded to the court of original jurisdiction, he cannot, after being tried and convicted in that court, complain that it had no jurisdiction. Hourigan v. Com. (1893) 94 Ky. 520, 23 S. W. 355.

In Missouri, it has been held that where an indictment was sent to another county for trial on a change of venue, and a nolle prosequi was entered before trial, a second indictment returned by the grand jury of the county of original jurisdiction became triable in the county where it was found, and it was not the duty of that court to send the indictment to the court of the county to which the first indictment was transferred. State v. Patterson (Mo.) supra. See to the same effect, State v. Goddard (Mo.) supra. Likewise, where a change of venue has been granted in a criminal case, and a new indictment is found for the same offense by the grand jury of the county where the first indictment was found, and as a result the court to which the venue was removed quashes the indictment pending in it, mandamus will not lie to compel the former court to certify the second indictment to the court to which the change of venue was taken. State ex rel. English v. Normile (1891) 108 Mo. 121, 18 S. W. 975.

L. W. B.

MALLEABLE COAL COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

JAMES POTTER et al.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — October 11, 1921.

(— W. Va. —, 108 S. E. 900.)

Injunction — removing sidetracks — dissolution.

1. Uncontradicted testimony of the owner of land on which a railroad sidetrack is located and the operators of such railroad, to the effect that such track or facility was not constructed and operated within the limits of a lease executed by the former to the latter, which is very general and indefinite as to the land covered by it, aided by conduct amounting to a practical construction of the lease excluding the location in question from it, warrants the dissolution of an injunction inhibiting the landowner from tearing up such track and commanding the railway company to resume the use of it.

[See note on this question beginning on page 722.]

Pleading — demurrer with answer.

2. A demurrer incorporated in a paper with an answer, but not in any way filed or acted upon as a demurrer, is disregarded and treated as a fugitive paper, because not shown to have been brought to the attention of the court, notwithstanding the filing of the paper as an answer to be used as an affidavit, on a motion to dissolve an injunction.

Railroad — reconstruction of sidetracks.

3. A common carrier railroad cannot be required, by any judicial process, to reconstruct and operate a sidetrack or other facility temporarily constructed and operated on land adjoining its right of way, under a verbal and gratuitous permission of the owner of the land, and an agreement between him and the owner of the railroad that the privilege so granted should be terminable at the will and option of the owner of the land.

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Lincoln County dissolving an injunction prohibiting interference with a certain railway, and requiring restoration of its tracks, and resumption and continuance of the hauling of plaintiff's coal. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, for appellant:

Plaintiff is entitled to enforce the obligation of the Cobbs Creek Railway to serve it as a common carrier, either by mandamus or by mandatory injunction.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stineman Coal Min. Co. 242 U. S. 298, 61 L. ed. 316, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118; United Fuel Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 73 W. Va. 571, 80 S. E. 931; State ex rel. Mt. Hope Coal Co. v. White Oak R. Co. 65 W. Va. 15, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1013, 64 S. E. 630; Rex v. Severn & W. R. Co. 2 Barn. & Ald. 646, 106 Eng.

Reprint, 501, 7 Eng. Rul. Cas. 445; Union P. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. ed. 428; State ex rel. Grinsfelder v. Spokane Street R. Co. 19 Wash. 518, 41 L.R.A. 515, 67 Am. St. Rep. 739, 53 Pac. 719; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sufferin, 129 Ill. 282, 21 N. E. 824; State ex rel. Bridgeton v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 62 N. J. L. 592, 45 L.R.A. 837, 43 Atl. 715; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 96 C. C. A. 322, 172 Fed. 117; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425; Zanesville Gaslight Co. v. Zanesville, 47 Ohio St. 35, 23 N. E. 60; Washington v. Washington

Water Co. 70 N. J. Eq. 254, 62 Atl. 390; 1 Michie, Carr. § 378; 10 C. J. 69; Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works v. Erie R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 379.

The tipple and tipple track are included in the lease to Potter & Company as a part of the "terminal" of the Cobbs Creek Railway.

Mary Helen Coal Co. v. Hatfield, 75 W. Va. 148, 83 S. E. 292; Crosby v. Bradbury, 20 Me. 61; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 1946.

The lessor's reservation of certain rights connected with the tipple and the part of the tract where it is situated prove conclusively that the tipple and tipple track were leased.

Small v. Wright, 74 Me. 428; Starr v. Child, 5 Denio, 599; Clayton v. County Ct. 58 W. Va. 253, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 52 S. E. 103.

The inaccurate and inconsistent reference to the former lease to Mohler will not control as against the description clearly including the tipple track.

Melvin v. Locks & Canals, 5 Met. 15, 38 Am. Dec. 384; Crosby v. Bradbury, 20 Me. 61; 8 R. C. L. 1088; 18 C. J. 281.

A license to build this track for the necessary use and enjoyment of the tipple, which was undoubtedly leased, is coupled with an interest and irrevocable.

Baker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 265; 33 Cyc. 157.

Mr. D. E. Wilkinson also for appellant.

Mr. Murray Briggs, for appellees:

The remedy by injunction should be allowed only in cases of extreme necessity.

Michie, Carr. § 378; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425.

The track actually torn up was on the private property of defendant Pickens, not leased to James Potter & Company, but constructed some months after the date of said lease, and in no way a part of it. This track was built under a mere license, without consideration paid or promised, and was specifically revocable at the pleasure of Pickens.

Stratton's Independence v. Midland Terminal R. Co. 32 Colo. 493, 77 Pac. 247; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Marble, 112 Mich. 4, 70 N. W. 319; Wood v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 334, 51 N. W. 263; Baker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 265; Johanson v. Atlantic City R. Co. 73

N. J. L. 767, 64 Atl. 1061; Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. v. Reed, 130 Mich. 661, 90 N. W. 658.

The railroad company could not deny defendant Pickens the right reserved in the lease, nor can this plaintiff.

Porter v. Kansas City, & N. Connecting R. Co. 103 Mo. App. 422, 77 S. W. 582.

A court of equity will not lend its aid to a party plainly seeking to acquire a monopoly of the coal-shipping facilities of the railroad.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pittsburg & K. Coal Co. 111 Ky. 960, 55 L.R.A. 601, 98 Am. St. Rep. 447, 64 S. W. 969; 16 Cyc. 144; Poling v. Williams, 55 W. Va. 69, 46 S. E. 704; Craig v. Craig, 54 W. Va. 183, 46 S. E. 371.

The plaintiff must always be ready to sustain the allegations of a bill of injunction.

Steelsmith v. Fisher Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 391, 35 S. E. 15; Crossland v. Crossland, 53 W. Va. 108, 44 S. E. 424; Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, the Malleable Coal Company, complains of an order of the circuit court of Lincoln county, entered in vacation, dissolving an injunction inhibiting the appellee Roman Pickens from interfering with the operation of what is called the tipple track of the Cobbs Creek Railway, and especially from tearing up that track, and commanding the appellees James Potter and Charles Morgan, alleged owners and operators of said railway, without discrimination against said Malleable Coal Company, to haul its coal over said tipple track, for dumping into railway cars on a side-track of the Coal River branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.

The theory of the bill and of the injunction order awarded thereon is that the Cobbs Creek Railway is a common carrier, and, as such, wrongfully ceased and refused, on or about September 18, 1920, further to haul coal of the plaintiff from its mine, situated somewhere on the main line of the railway in the Cobbs Creek valley, over said tipple track, at the instance and by reason of the protest of the defendant Roman Pickens, on whose land said tipple track is located; and that, soon after September 27, 1920, the public service commission of this state having ordered said railway company to resume the hauling of the plaintiff's coal, Pickens and his employees wrongfully tore up portions of that track and thus prevented obedience to the order.

The temporary injunction inhibited Pickens from further molestation of the track and required the railway company to restore the portion of it that had been torn up, and resume and continue the hauling of the coal.

If the facts disclosed by the pleadings and the depositions taken and filed justified dissolution of the injunction, it will be unnecessary to enter upon any inquiry as to the propriety of the remedy invoked by the plaintiff. Sufficiency of the bill was not tested by any demurrer thereto. In a paper filed by him, the defendant Pickens demurred to the bill and answered it, but that paper was not filed as a demurrer. On the hearing of the motion, it was filed as an answer, together with the answer of Charles Morgan filed in the same way, and treated as an affidavit. A demurrer incorporated in the body of an answer, but not mentioned or referred to in the caption thereof, or in any decree or order in the cause, is disregarded and treated as a fugitive paper, because it does not appear to have been brought to the attention of the court.

Pleading—demurrer with answer.

Pheasant v. Hanna, 63 W. Va. 613, 60 S. E. 618. It is not perceived that mention of the demurrer in the caption can make any difference. The paper was never filed as a demurrer and the caption is not material. Nothing in the order suggests consideration of the bill as to its sufficiency.

The Cobbs Creek Railway is a narrow-gauge road, built primarily for the hauling of logs and lumber, about the year 1906, by the Mohler Lumber Company, in conjunction with one W. W. Smoot; the former furnishing the materials and the latter doing the construction work, with the understanding that he should have 45 per cent of the profits arising from the operation of the road, and the lumber company 55 per cent. Near the mouth of Cobbs creek, it connected with what was then the Coal River Railroad, now the Coal River branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. At that point, it was necessary to pass over the land of Pickens for some distance, and the Mohler Lumber Company procured a lease of about 2 acres of the Pickens land, within which the main line, and a sidetrack called the loading track, and some other terminal facilities were located. The track now in controversy—the tipple track—was not built at that time, nor until the year 1917. Nor is the Mohler Lumber Company lease very important now, since it expired in the year 1913. Lumber and timber transportation over the road, by the Mohler Lumber Company, seems to have terminated about the year 1909, and early in that year the operators of the road began to transport oil-well supplies over it up into the Cobbs Creek region of country. Thereupon a controversy is said to have arisen between Pickens and the lumber company, as to right in the latter to transport anything other than timber and timbering supplies over the land. Smoot says he became the sole owner of it in July, 1918, and operated it until September 1, 1919, on which date it passed into the hands of James Potter & Company, under a contract of purchase made about July 1, 1919. Smoot may have owned the road individually at an earlier date.

He operated it under the arrangement between himself and the Mohler Lumber Company, or as his own, and constructed what is known as the tipple track in 1917, when he was paying Pickens rent at the rate of $75 per month. It seems to be about 500 feet long, and turns off from the main line near the point at which that line emerges from the Cobbs Creek valley, and, crossing level land between that line and the hill, runs up along the hillside to a point at which the tipple used by the Malleable Coal Company stands, apparently on the right of way of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, in part, and on the land of Pickens, in part. The ownership of the tipple seems to be conceded to the Malleable Coal Company, but by whom it was erected is not clearly disclosed. This track was never used for any purpose other than the transportation of the Malleable Coal Company's coal from its mine somewhere up Cobbs creek to this tipple. Both Smoot and Pickens testify that it was constructed under a verbal permit given by the latter, and without charge for the use and occupation of the land. Smoot says he hauled coal for the Malleable Coal Company until December, 1918, at which time that company closed its mine, but that Pickens had interrupted his use of it, on two occasions, before he ceased to use it by reason of the closing of the mine. Pickens says he gave Smoot permission to use the land for that track until he should need it himself. Under the impression that he would have no further use for the track, Smoot took up the rails from it in March, 1919. Between that date and July 1, 1919, he entered into negotiations with James Potter & Company for sale of the railway to them for use in connection with their oil and gas operations in the Cobbs Creek country, in which they had a lease of 12,900 acres of oil territory. The sale seems to have been made as of July 1, 1919, but late in June of that year a flood damaged the railway, and Smoot had to repair it before the purchasers would consummate their contract. In doing so, he used the rails taken from the tipple track.

On July 1, 1919, the date of the purchase of the railway, and after the rails had been taken from the tipple track, and while the mine of the Malleable Coal Company was closed, James Potter & Company leased from Pickens, for a period of five years, at a rental of $100 per month, what is described as about a quarter of an acre of land, as being the same tract of land which was occupied by the terminal of the Cobbs Creek Railway, as having one office building, one hoisting house, one small freight house, and one sand house on it, and as being then under lease by the month to the Cobbs Creek Railway Company. Under this lease the lessee has the privilege of renewal for an additional five years, and also the privilege of termination, upon three months' notice and the payment of all rentals, at any time within the term. Having coal in the land of the leased premises, Pickens made this reservation: "Right to load coal on and over the eastern part of the property hereby leased, where the coal dumps are now located"—if he should desire to do so. The only dumps disclosed by the evidence as being located on the eastern part of the leased property are the loading tipple of the Malleable Coal Company and what is called the Jarrett & Wright coal chute. At a date not disclosed, Pickens had leased his coal to Jarrett & Wright, and they had opened a mine in the hillside, near the right of way of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, and constructed a chute leading to a side-track. Finding the dip of the coal to be in the direction of their mining, they discontinued their operation. At a date not given, Pickens leased his land to Smoot & Carter for mining, and they opened a mine and erected a tipple near the main line of the Cobbs Creek Railway, with intent to load the coal into the narrow-gauge cars of that road, for transportation over the main line and the tipple track, and transfer thereof, by means of the Malleable Coal Company's tipple, into the standard-gauge cars of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company.

In August, 1919, under a verbal permission given by Pickens to James Potter & Company, operators of the Cobbs Creek Railway, the Malleable Coal Company replaced the rails on the tipple track, and began the shipment of coal over it to their tipple. At about the same time, Smoot & Carter endeavored to obtain permission of the Malleable Coal Company to land their coal into Chesapeake & Ohio cars from the same tipple. Their request having been refused, they endeavored to obtain permission for the placing of box cars on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company sidetrack, apparently owned or controlled by the Malleable Coal Company. This privilege having been denied, Pickens notified James Potter & Company not to haul any more coal over the tipple track for the Malleable Coal Company, and, in obedience to this order, they ceased to do so. Thereupon the Malleable Coal Company applied to the public service commission of this state for an order requiring the railway to transport its coal. A temporary order was awarded, and then Pickens took up some of the rails from the track and thus prevented resumption of transportation. In this state of affairs, the Malleable Coal Company applied for and obtained said injunction.

It is manifestly unnecessary to determine whether or not the Cobbs

Railroad—
reconstruction of sidetracks. Creek Railway is a common carrier. If it is, it does not follow that the tipple track is permanently or irrevocably located upon the land of Pickens. Whether the track in question belongs to that company, or not, is left in doubt by the evidence. It desired to haul the coal, and the producer of the coal wanted it hauled. It obtained permission for restoration of the track, and the coal-producing company restored it under that permission. It was originally built by the railway company as a tenant at will of Pickens, and restored and the use thereof resumed in the same manner, except as to the reconstruction. The contention that Pickens leased the tipple to James Potter & Company is not well founded. The argument is that he must have leased it, because he reserved the right to use it, and that the lease of the tipple impliedly included a lease of the means of using it, namely, the tipple track. The terms of the reservation in the lease do not warrant this conclusion. Pickens reserved the right to load coal on and over the eastern part of the property at the point where the coal dumps were located. There are no words in the reservation fairly indicative of intention to reserve right to use the Malleable Coal Company's tipple. The reserved right was to load coal over the eastern part of the property. The mention of the dumps was mere matter of description of the portion of the land the lessor reserved the right to use.

The indefinite lease, giving no boundary lines interpreted by the evidence bearing upon its meaning, found in the record, does not include the land on which the tipple is located. If the terms, "Now under lease by the month to the said Cobbs Creek Railway Co.," could be treated as a reference to the lease given the Mohler Lumber Company, the land on which part of the tipple track is located is not within that lease, and that track was no part of the Cobbs Creek Railway terminal while the lease was in force, or between the year 1913, in which it expired, and the year 1917. If the lease was continued as a verbal holding over from year to year, on payment of rental, it still cannot be regarded as embracing all of the land on which the tipple track is located. If the payments of rental from 1913 until 1917 were made merely for terminal facilities, and did not continue the lease, the terminal facilities did not then include the tipple track. They included only the main track, the loading track, sand house, freight house, office, and hoist. In the new lease taken July 1, 1919, the area of the leased land is described as being about a quarter of an acre. In the Mohler Lumber Company lease of 1906, the area is described as embracing about 2 acres. Hence, it is clear that there was no intention to lease, on July 1, 1919, all of the land that was in the former lease. Moreover, in 1919, the tipple track was not one of the terminal facilities of the railway. It was not then in operation. The rails had been taken from it and used for repair of the main line. Besides, it was not used for general railway purposes, but only for the hauling of the Malleable Coal Company's coal to its tipple. According to the evidence of Smoot and Pickens, it was not constructed under the monthly lease referred to in the later lease. It was a mere privilege outside of the lease, gratuitously and temporarily conferred. No witness expressly contradicts this testimony, nor do any established facts or circumstances overthrow it. The grant and acceptance of this privilege amounted to a practical construction of the monthly lease by the parties thereto. Likewise, the conduct and circumstances attending the restoration of the track practically construed both the monthly lease and the new lease of July 1, 1919.

Upon this view of the evidence, including the situation, purposes, and relations of the parties, we are of the opinion that the court below did not err in its dissolution of the injunction. The order under review is an interlocutory one, entered upon proof that is very incomplete as to some of the vital issues involved. It does not appreciably tend to sustain the contention of the appellant. Additional evidence to be taken for the final hearing and disposition of the cause may be sufficient to establish right to the relief sought, if the remedy adopted is appropriate.

*Injunction—
removing side-tracks—dissolution.*

For the reasons stated, the decree complained of will be affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Duty of railroad to operate side and switch tracks and spurs.

A railroad company may abandon a sidetrack or spur at which it has been accustomed to receive freight, where not prohibited by its charter, special contract, statute, or rule or order of the railroad commission. Durden v. Southern R. Co. (1907) 2 Ga. App. 66, 58 S. E. 299. The court said that the safety of public travel frequently demands the abolition of sidetracks or spurs, and the discretion of the railway company in removing them will rarely be interfered with by the courts.

So, in Mercantile Trust Co. v. Columbus, S. & H. R. Co. (1898) 90 Fed. 148, it was held, citing Jones v. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. (1895) 13 C. C. A. 95, 31 U. S. App. 92, 65 Fed. 736, infra, as authority, that, in the absence of an express obligation to continue its operation for a definite time, or forever, a mine owner cannot compel a railroad company, or the receiver exercising its franchises for the time, to continue operation at a loss, or when it cannot be rendered safe except by the expenditure of a considerable sum of money, of a spur or switch track built by the railroad company for the purpose of bringing business to its road.

And in Twin City Separator Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1912) 118 Minn. 491, 137 N. W. 193, an action to restrain a railway company from depressing its main track, on the ground that such depression involved the abandonment of a sidetrack to a business plant, it was held that the right to sidetrack connections, from whatsoever source they may have been derived, is subject to the police power of the city.

So, too, in Detroit v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1909) 156 Mich. 121, 120 N. W. 593, in dismissing the petition of a foundry company for damages claimed for the expense it was compelled to incur in changing its plant and building to correspond with the elevation of a railroad, so as to preserve its connection with the railroad company on change of grade of street, the court, after referring to the fact that there was no evidence of any contract as to the construction of this switch, said: "In the construction of these switch or side tracks to manufacturing plants, three parties are interested: The manufacturer desiring the most inexpensive way to get his wares to market, the railroad company in obtaining business and profit by transporting such wares, and the public, who consume or use the product of the manufacturer. If the railroad company considers that the transportation of the product of the manufacturer will compensate it and yield it a profit, it usually, upon request, puts in the necessary sidetracks and switches. By the construction of such a track, at the request of one and the assent of the other, no contract is implied binding either to the continuance of such arrangement for any specified time. Clearly, the manufacturer has made no contract by which he is liable to the railroad company in damages for discontinuing its shipment, at any time, or for any reason. He may move his plant within a month after the construction of the sidetrack. He may conclude to ship his goods to market by other railroads, or by other routes. I am not aware that any claim was ever made that the manufacturer is bound by such an arrangement to ship his goods over the one railroad. Neither can a contract be implied on the part of the railroad company to maintain the sidetrack and ship the goods of the manufacturer at a loss, or without profit."

Under an agreement between a railroad company and a coal company for the construction by the former of a spur track, which contained a provision "that, whenever said first party may find it necessary for the accommodation of its business to remove said spur track," it may remove the same, the railroad company is the sole judge as to the necessity for removing such spur track. Whittemore v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1906) 191 Mass. 392, 77 N. E. 717.

So, too, a spur track, which has been put in under an agreement that it may be removed on sixty days' notice, may be removed in accordance with the terms of the contract. Southern R. Co. v. Byrum & King (1910) 135 Ga. 426, 69 S. E. 550. The court stated that the plaintiffs, having contracted that the spur track might be removed, cannot complain that the railroad company is proceeding to avail itself of its contractual right to remove it. Also, parties other than those who entered into the contract with the railroad sought to restrain the removal of the spur track, but the court said that they had no right to interfere, as their only claim was that of convenience, and not of loss.

In Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. v. Railroad Commission (1918) 143 La. 660, 79 So. 212, it was held that a railroad company was not required to maintain at its own expense a spur which it had constructed on a plantation, under an agreement with the owner thereof, where such spur was for the private benefit, virtually, of the plantation, and especially, where there was in the neighborhood two regular public traffic stations, either one less than 2 miles distant from the spur. The court said: "No good reason can be given why, if the plaintiff railroad is to maintain this spur at its sole expense, it should not do the same with all the plantation spurs along its line, and all the other railroads do the same with all the private spurs along their lines."

And see the reported case (MALLEABLE COAL CO. v. POTTER, ante, 717) to the effect that a railroad company will not be required to reconstruct and operate a sidetrack built on private land, under an agreement that the privilege to operate may be terminated at the landowner's will.

The contract between a railroad company and a coal dealer that the former "shall and may have the right to maintain" a switch through the coal yards does not obligate the railroad company to operate and maintain such switch permanently. Brown v. Southern R. Co. (1911) 109 C. C. A. 333, 187 Fed. 481. The court stated that the phrase, "shall and may have the right to maintain," should be interpreted as "shall have the right to maintain and may have the right to maintain," and not, as contended, as meaning "shall maintain and may have the right to maintain."

In New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. General Electric Co. (1914) 83 Misc. 529, 146 N. Y. Supp. 322, the court said: "The private siding is a siding on private land outside the common carrier's property. The shipper cannot compel the common carrier to make and maintain a private siding, though switch connections with a constructed private siding may be compelled. The Act to Regulate Commerce (§ 1) provides: Any common carrier 'shall construct, maintain and operate upon reasonable terms a switch connection with any such . . . private sidetrack which may be constructed to connect with its railroad, where such connection is reasonable, practicable,' etc. The Public Service Commissions Law (§ 27) provides: 'A railroad corporation upon the application of any shipper tendering traffic for transportation shall construct, maintain and operate upon reasonable terms a switch connection . . . with a private sidetrack owned, operated or controlled by such shipper, and shall upon the application of any shipper provide upon its own property a sidetrack and switch connection with its line of road whenever such sidetrack and switch connection is reasonably practicable, can be put in with safety, and the business thereof is sufficient to justify the same.' Laws 1907, chap. 429. The meaning of these two sections is substantially the same. There is no requirement that a common carrier shall carry freight over the private siding, or any requirement that it shall construct any part of the track off its own lands. In the state statute the carrier is required to construct and operate a switch and a sidetrack upon its own lands, to connect with a private sidetrack owned, operated, or controlled by said shipper. It seems to me there could be no inference from this that the common carrier is required to convey freight over the private sidetrack, any more than it is required to carry freight over another common carrier's line with which it is compelled to make connections; but the inference is that it must receive freight from the private sidetrack, and deliver freight to it and upon it. A private siding off the carrier's property is not a part of the main line, nor the property of the carrier."

The establishment and maintenance of a switch connection of the main line with a private warehouse for any length of time does not create a duty of the railroad company, at common law, forever to maintain it. Jones v. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. (1895) 13 C. C. A. 95, 31 U. S. App. 92, 65 Fed. 736. The court stated: "The switch connection, and transportation over it, may seriously interfere with the convenience and safety of the public in its use of the road. It may much embarrass the general business of the company. It is peculiarly within the discretion of the directors to determine whether it does or not. At one time in the life of the company it may be useful and consistent with all the legitimate purposes of the company. A change of conditions, an increase in business, a necessity for travel at higher speed, may make such a connection either inconvenient, or dangerous, or both."

Nor, in the absence of an express agreement, will there be implied into a contract for a private switch connection, a term that it shall be perpetual, and thus forever limit the discretion of the directors to deal with a subject which may seriously affect the convenience or safety of the public in the use of its road. Ibid.

So, also, where by its charter and by statute a railroad company has the duty of elevating its tracks whenever public safety requires it, a railroad company will not be required specifically to perform an agreement with private parties to maintain switching connections with their warehouse, when in furtherance of such obligation it does elevate its tracks. Swift v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co.

(1904) 66 N. J. Eq. 34, 57 Atl. 456, affirmed in (1904) 66 N. J. Eq. 452, 58 Atl. 939. The court stated that, in its view, a contract made by a railroad company for such private use or interest in its lands used by its railway, or any of its appurtenances, as would prevent its performance of these public obligations to arrange for the public safety by the removal of grade crossings in cities, would be either altogether void, or it must be considered as made and taken subject to any contract subsequently made to remove its grade crossings; that a contract of this character for the permanent location or use of its road or works has been held to be subject to termination whenever the interest of the road itself requires it; and quoted as follows from a United States Supreme Court case, Eckington & Soldiers' Home R. Co. v. McDevitt (1903) 191 U. S. 103, 48 L. ed. 112, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36: "Railroad companies, while private corporations, are quasi public agencies engaged in the performance of public duties, and contracts which prevent them from the discharge of these duties cannot be sustained."

And a railroad company may sever connections at any time, under a contract for switch connections, made with a coal company, which reserves to the railroad company the right to disconnect the switch at any time without let or hindrance from the company. Queen City Coal Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1898) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1628, 44 S. W. 103.

But, where a railroad company entered into an agreement that if one would locate a cotton gin at a certain place it would maintain and operate a spur track thereto, as long as the cotton gin was operated, such spur track could not be removed. Graham v. Jonesboro, L. C. & E. R. Co. (1914) 111 Ark. 598, 164 S. W. 729. The contract in this case, though verbal, was held not to be within the Statute of Frauds, nor, it was held, was it too indefinite to be enforced. The court distinguished this case from Jones v. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. (1895) 13 C. C. A. 95, 31 U. S.

App. 92, 65 Fed. 736, and the Mercantile Trust Co. v. Columbus, S. & H. R. Co. (1898) 90 Fed. 148, cited supra, stating that in each of those cases the point was made that there was no contract for any time at all. Nor, the court added, does this case fall within the decisions which have held that it is against public policy to permit a railway company to make a contract which would restrict or impair the performance of its duty to the public, the court stating that in this case no question of public policy or duty to the public is involved, because the contract covers only a private arrangement for service furnished to one patron of the road; that a different question might be presented if the railroad company should see fit to change its tracks in order to serve the public, and thus render itself unable to connect with a spur track, but that no such state of affairs is shown in the case; that the agreement permanently to maintain the spur track is merely a private matter with the shipper, and does not involve its duty to the public.

So, too, where one railroad enters into an agreement with another that, if an electric light company will do the necessary grading and furnish any additional right of way necessary, it will construct a spur track to such electric light works, and allow the other railroad to use such spur for switching cars to the electric light works, the electric light company, although not a party to the original agreement, has such an interest therein that, before the railroad company constructing the spur track can remove the same to the disadvantage of the other railroad company, it must give the electric light company the thirty days' notice provided therein. Cedar Rapids & I. City R. & Light Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1910) 145 Iowa, 528, 124 N. W. 323.

And under the constitutional provision that "all railroad companies shall permit connections to be made with their tracks so that . . . any public warehouse, coal bank, or coal yard may be reached by the cars on said railroad," a railroad company, which has permitted a mine owner to make switch connections with its track which have been used for several years, will be compelled to restore such connections if they have been removed without right or authority. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern (1889) 129 Ill. 274, 21 N. E. 824.

And an improper use of a switch for a sidetrack, to the injury of the railroad company, will not justify the company in severing the connections. Ibid. The court stated that the courts will furnish a remedy for any wrong it may suffer, and that it has no right to take the law into its own hands, and to refuse to do what the Constitution requires it to do.

A contract by a railway company to construct and operate a switch or spur track, no time when the contract should end being stated, was interpreted in Payne v. Mt. Franklin Fuel & Feed Co. (1921) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 234 S. W. 595, to obligate the railway company to operate the switch permanently, and so the railway company would have no right to discontinue its operation unless the public interest so required.

A railway company, having wrongfully taken up and removed the rails forming a connection between its line and the siding belonging to the applicant, was ordered, at its own expense, forthwith to restore the communication, in Portway v. Colne Valley R. Co. 7 Eng. Ry. & C. Traffic Cas. 102.

A railroad company, having permitted a lighting company to reconstruct a trestle at a considerable expense, cannot arbitrarily impose upon the lighting company the condition that a sidetrack be discontinued at the will of the railroad company on thirty days' notice, and so the public service commission is clearly within its statutory power in declining to make the lighting company subject to such a condition. People ex rel. New York C. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission (1916) 173 App. Div. 407, 159 N. Y. Supp. 997, affirmed in (1916) 219 N. Y. 584, 114 N. E. 1078.

Under the Missouri Public Service Commission Act of 1918, a railroad cannot abandon the operation of a spur or branch line without permission of the commission, notwithstanding such operation is not included in its franchise. State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Missouri Southern R. Co. (1919) 279 Mo. 455, P.U.R. 1919F, 575, 214 S. W. 381.

And an order requiring the operation of a spur track is not necessarily unconstitutional because it may result in some financial loss. Ibid.

Since, under the Public Utility Act, a railroad may be compelled to build a spur track to an industry if such connection is reasonable, practicable, and can be installed and used without materially increasing the hazard or expense of the railroad with which such connection is sought, and the business which may reasonably be expected to be received by such railroad company over such connection is sufficient to justify the expense of such connection to such railroad company, the court, in State Public Utilities Commission ex rel. Cameron v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. (1917) 277 Ill. 574, 115 N. E. 519, upheld an order of the public utilities commission requiring restoration of a sidetrack operated to a grain elevator and coal yard, the elevator standing partly on the right of way under the lease, and which sidetrack had been torn up by the railroad company, against the protest of the owner of the elevator, upon the railroad company exercising its reserved option to cancel the lease. In affirming this decision in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. State Public Utilities Commission (1918) 249 U. S. 422, 63 L. ed. 684, P.U.R. 1919D, 459, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345, the United States Supreme Court held that an order of a state public utilities commission, upheld by the highest court of the state, requiring the restoration of a sidetrack by a railway company, being legislative in its nature, and made by an instrumentality of the state, is a state law within the meaning of the Federal Constitution and the laws of Congress regulating the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over state courts.

And it was further held by that court that an order of a state public utilities commission, made after notice and hearing, and upheld by the highest court of the state, requiring a railroad company to restore a sidetrack which, before its removal, had served a grain elevator and coal yard, does not deny due process of law as taking its property either for private use or for public use without compensation, where, under the laws of the state such a sidetrack was open to use by the public and subject to public control like other parts of the company's road, and the statute under which its restoration was ordered contains express provisions whereby it will retain its public character, and be open to use by other shippers as well as by the elevator owner. Ibid. The court said: "The shipments for which the track has been used have yielded the company a revenue of about $20,000 each year, for several years. What the cost of restoration will be, the record does not disclose, but the commission, with knowledge of such matters, has found that it is justified by the business reasonably to be expected; and the supreme court of the state, besides sustaining that and other findings of the commission, aptly points out that, but for the hasty and improper removal of the track, the company 'would not be at the expense of replacing it.' When the track is restored the company will own it and be entitled to a reasonable charge for its use, just as is the case with other property employed in the company's transportation service."

And in Canadian Northern R. Co. v. Robinson (1906) 37 Can. S. C. 541, where the board of railroad commissioners had ordered the railway company to restore spur track facilities, the discontinuance of which, the board said, was unreasonable, it was held that the commissioners had, in the circumstances, jurisdiction to make the order complained of.

However, in People ex rel. Erie R. Co. v. Public Service Commission (1916) 176 App. Div. 28, 162 N. Y. Supp. 520, affirmed without opinion in (1917) 220 N. Y. 674, 116 N. E. 1066, it was held that the public service commission is without authority to compel a railroad company to operate a sidetrack constructed on the private property of a shipper. The court said: "The power of the commission to make such an order must be found in the statute, and the only statute which it is claimed confers such power is § 27 of the Public Service Commissions Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 48; Laws 1910, chap. 480), which provides as follows: 'A railroad corporation, upon the application of any shipper tendering traffic for transportation, shall construct, maintain and operate upon reasonable terms a switch connection or connections with a lateral line of railroad or private sidetrack owned, operated or controlled by such shipper, and shall, upon the application of any shipper, provide upon its own property a sidetrack and switch connection with its line of railroad, whenever such sidetrack and switch connection is reasonably practicable, can be put in with safety and the business therefor is sufficient to justify the same.' Under this statute all that a railroad company can be required to do, with reference to a private sidetrack of a shipper, is to construct, maintain, and operate a proper switch connection or connections therewith. The operation of such sidetrack cannot be exacted of the railroad. This is emphasized by the subsequent provision in the statute that a sidetrack for the benefit of a shipper may be required under certain circumstances to be constructed by a railroad company 'upon its own property.' The reason for the distinction between the sidetrack of a shipper and one of a railroad is a sound one, and was manifestly intended by the legislature, for reasons to it satisfactory. This controversy illustrates the ground of the distinction and emphasizes its importance. A railroad company cannot control the property of the shipper, and, if it operates a railroad on the property of the latter, it is powerless to take such precautionary measures, or establish such rules and regulations, as it may think advisable to minimize the possibility of accident and lessen its liability therefor. This sidetrack in question, being on the property of the machine and knife works, is not within the control of the railroad company, and accidents and liabilities may arise which could be obviated if the railroad company had the sole control and possession thereof."

The discontinuance of a siding constructed for a shipper's convenience is initially a matter between the shipper and the carrier, and the intervention of the public service commission is not authorized unless the parties have been unable to agree. Adikes v. Long Island R. Co. (1914) 165 App. Div. 221, 151 N. Y. Supp. 49.

J. H. B.

OLD NATIONAL BANK OF WAUPACA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PEOPLE'S BANK OF HARRISVILLE.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — September 27, 1921.

(— W. Va. —, 108 S. E. 716.)

Draft — against bill of lading — right to inspect goods.

1. A consignee of goods, who is required to pay for the same before delivery, is entitled to inspect the goods before receiving the same and paying therefor. He may waive this right, however, by paying for the goods and receiving them before such inspection, and, in case he does so, he cannot, upon later deciding to reject the goods, require repayment of his money to him from a bank which is the assignee in good faith of a draft for the purchase money with bill of lading attached. His remedy, after paying the draft and receiving the goods, is an action against the seller for damages.

[See note on this question beginning on page 732.]

— against bill of lading — interest in goods.

2. A party discounting a sight draft and receiving therewith a bill of lading for the goods, against the purchase price of which the draft is drawn, acquires a special property in such goods, and has a complete right to have them held as security for the payment of the draft.

Bank — discounting draft — liability for default of consignor.

3. A bank which discounts a draft with bill of lading attached is not, in the absence of bad faith, answerable to the drawee for the performance of the consignor's contract.

— right to proceeds of draft as against collecting bank — surrender of goods for inspection.

4. A bank which discounts a sight draft for the purchase price of goods, with a bill of lading attached, is entitled to recover the amount of such draft from a correspondent bank to which it is sent for collection, where it is shown that such correspondent bank delivers such draft and bill of lading to the consignee upon deposit with it of the amount of the draft, who, in turn, surrenders such bill of lading to the carrier and receives the goods, even though it appear that the correspondent bank delivered the bill of lading with the understanding that the consignee might have his money back if he determined to reject the goods. Such correspondent bank has no authority to deliver such bill of lading upon such conditions, unless it is specifically authorized to do so by the assignee bank.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ritchie County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a suit brought to recover the amount of a draft with a bill of lading attached, indorsed to plaintiff and sent by it to defendant for collection. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Merrick & Smith, for plaintiff in error:

The bill of lading was rightfully issued and was purchased by the plaintiff for a valuable consideration, and the burden of proving the contrary is upon him who denies it.

Buckeye Nat. Bank v. Huff, 114 Va. 1, 75 S. E. 769; Thomas v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 157 Wis. 635, 147 N. W. 1005; Aebi v. Bank of Evansville, 124 Wis. 73, 68 L.R.A. 964, 109 Am. St. Rep. 925, 102 N. W. 329; Northfield Nat. Bank v. Arndt, 132 Wis. 383, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 82, 112 N. W. 451.

A party discounting a draft, and receiving therewith, and deliverable to his order, a bill of lading of the goods against which the draft was drawn, acquires a special property in them, and has a complete right to hold them as security for the acceptance and payment of the draft.

Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co. 41 W. Va. 37, 23 S. E. 702; 2 Michie, Bkg. p. 1400, note 75; American Thresherman v. De Tamble Motors Co. 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 644, and note, 154 Wis. 366, 141 N. W. 210; 4 R. C. L. 32; Marsh Mill. & Grain Co. v. Guaranty State Bank, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1918D, 704, 171 Pac. 1122.

Delivery and possession are essential to a pledge, but they may be symbolical, and are effected by delivery of the bill of lading.

Jones, Pledges, § 37; First Nat. Bank v. Harkness, 42 W. Va. 167, 32 L.R.A. 408, 24 S. E. 548; Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co. supra; Means v. Bank of Randall, 146 U. S. 620, 36 L. ed. 1107, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; Dows v. National Exch. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 214; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 384, 12 L. ed. 1123; 4 R. C. L. 32, 33; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 546; Cosmos Cotton Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 171 Ala. 392, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1173, 54 So. 621, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 42.

Even if the potatoes were in fact defective, this would not release Marshall from returning the bill of lading to the defendant, and would not release the defendant from paying to the plaintiff $856.64, the amount of the draft.

Mason v. A. E. Nelson Cotton Co. 148 N. C. 492, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 635, 62 S. E. 625; Cosmos Cotton Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 171 Ala. 392, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1173, 54 So. 621, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 42; Hawkins v. Alfalfa Products Co. 152 Ky. 152, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 600, 153 S. W. 201; Central Mercantile Co. v. Oklahoma State Bank, 83 Kan. 504, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954, 112 Pac. 114; Springs v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 209 N. Y. 224, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 241, 103 N. E. 156.

The bank receiving a sight draft for collection should not surrender the accompanying bill of lading until the draft has been paid.

2 Michie, Bkg. p. 400, note 75; 3 R. C. L. 613; Minneapolis Sash & Door Co. v. Metropolitan Bank, 77 Am. St. Rep. 617, note; Hobbs v. Chicago Packing & Provision Co. 98 Ga. 576, 58 Am. St. Rep. 320, 25 S. E. 584; Second Nat. Bank v. Cummings, 89 Tenn. 609, 24 Am. St. Rep. 618, 18 S. W. 115.

Messrs. Adams & Cooper and S. O. Prunty for defendant in error.

Ritz, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this suit for the purpose of recovering the amount of a draft drawn by Leonard, Crossett, & Riley upon R. C. Marshall, to which was attached a bill of lading for a carload of potatoes, which draft had been indorsed, together with the bill of lading, to the plaintiff, and by it sent to the defendant for collection. A trial in the court below resulted in a directed verdict in favor of the defendant, and a judgment of nil capiat thereon, to review which this writ of error is prosecuted.

The facts out of which this controversy grew are that, on the 4th day of October, 1918, Leonard, Crossett, & Riley, pursuant to an order received by them from R. C. Marshall, shipped from Waupaca, Wisconsin, a carload of potatoes to Cairo, West Virginia, consigned to their own order, with instructions to notify R. C. Marshall, and at the time of shipment of this carload of potatoes received from the carrier a bill of lading showing the consignment aforesaid. On the 7th of October Leonard, Crossett, & Riley drew a sight draft on the said R. C. Marshall for the sum of $856.64, the purchase price of the potatoes, and attached to this draft the said bill of lading. This draft, with the bill of lading attached, was transferred or assigned to the plaintiff bank upon full payment therefor, and it forwarded the same, with the bill of lading attached, through the Marine Bank of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to the defendant bank at Harrisville for collection. Not having received a remittance from the defendant bank to cover this draft, the plaintiff bank, on the 24th day of October, telegraphed to the defendant, stating that it was advised that the draft had been paid, and requested that the amount be remitted. To this telegram the defendant replied by a letter dated the 24th day of October, in which it made a statement at some length as to the facts as represented to it. It advised the plaintiff bank that, upon the arrival of the carload of potatoes at Cairo, Mr. Marshall telephoned to it that the railroad agent would not permit inspection except upon production of the bill of lading, and that he, Marshall, accordingly remitted to it the amount of the draft, and had the bill of lading forwarded to him by mail, together with the draft, in order that he might inspect the potatoes; that after inspecting them he returned the draft with a letter dated October 15th, stating that the potatoes were refused for the reason that the same were not satisfactory. The railroad agent declined to return the bill of lading, it having been surrendered to the carrier by Marshall, so that he was unable to return it to the bank. The defendant advised that, under the circumstances, it had decided to keep the money which was in its possession until the rights of the parties thereto were determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, and this suit resulted. What became of the carload of potatoes does not appear. As to whether or not the potatoes were of inferior quality, and were for that reason rejected, does not appear in the record, except from statements contained in the letter from the cashier of the defendant to the plaintiff, and these statements purport to be made by him upon information derived from the purchaser and the county food administrator, and the rejection of the potatoes appears only in the same way. The court below, however, evidently treated this as proof, and the parties upon this hearing likewise considered these facts as sufficiently proven by the introduction of the aforesaid letter by the plaintiff. The question thus presented is purely one of law.

It is very well established that, where the consignor of goods discounts a sight draft representing the purchase price thereof, to which draft is attached a bill of lading, the holder of this draft has a property in the goods, and is entitled to have the same held by the carrier until he surrenders the bill of lading. Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co. 41 W. Va. 37, 23 S. E. 702. The bill of lading is in the nature of a muniment of title, the holder of it being entitled to demand possession of the goods shipped when they reach their destination, and the carrier being relieved of liability on account of the carriage of said goods, when it delivers the same to the holder of such bill of lading.

That Marshall had a right to inspect these goods before receiving them is true. The bill of lading provided for this inspection, and, whether it did or not, he would be entitled to make it before receiving the goods. 10 C. J. 253. The railroad company did not have the right to require the surrender of this bill of lading before permitting inspection of the goods. It might be proper for the carrier's agent to require that the bank holding the bill of lading direct him to

Draft—against bill of lading—interest in goods.

—against bill of lading—right to inspect goods.

permit inspection, simply for the purpose of knowing that the party making such inspection was authorized thereto by the holder of the bill of lading. The defendant bank, when it received this draft, was acting as an agent of the plaintiff. Its authority in the premises was limited to collecting the draft, and delivering it with the bill of lading attached to Marshall, or returning it, with the bill of lading attached, upon refusal of the purchaser to pay the same. It could not deliver the bill of lading to him upon any conditions, or under any agreement that it should be returned and the money repaid, should he thereafter be dissatisfied with the goods. To hold that Marshall could pay this draft as he did, and, upon discovering that the goods did not comply with the seller's warranty, demand his money back, would be, in effect, holding that the assignee of the draft with the bill of lading attached was liable to answer for the quality of the goods, while it is held with practical uniformity in this country that under such circumstances the purchaser's remedy is against the seller, and the assignee of the draft with the bill of lading attached cannot be held for a failure in quality or breach of warranty. Cosmos Cotton Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 171 Ala. 392, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 54 So. 621, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 42; Central Mercantile Co. v. Oklahoma State Bank, 83 Kan. 504, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 954, 112 Pac. 114; Hawkins v. Alfalfa Products Co. 152 Ky. 152, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 600, 153 S. W. 201; Springs v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 209 N. Y. 224, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 241, 103 N. E. 156.

These authorities clearly establish the doctrine in this country that the bank which discounts a draft with a bill of lading attached is not, in the absence of bad faith on its part, answerable to the drawee for the performance by the assignor of the contract. It is quite true, as before stated, that Marshall was entitled to inspect these goods before receiving them. This is a right, however, that he was not required to exercise. He could pay the draft and take up the bill of lading if he desired, and rely upon the seller's warranty to protect him. This right of inspection he must exercise seasonably. He could not pay off the draft and deliver the bill of lading to the carrier, and then demand his money back upon finding that the goods did not meet his expectations. When the defendant bank delivered the bill of lading to him, it passed the title to the goods, and the title to the money passed to the plaintiff bank, and when Marshall delivered this draft to the carrier's agent, and accepted the carload of goods, he cannot be said to have accepted it for any qualified purpose, for, by delivering the bill of lading to the carrier, he discharged the carrier of liability in connection with the carriage of the shipment, and received to himself not only the title, but the possession of the property. When a bank receives a draft with a bill of lading attached, as did the defendant bank in this case, it makes itself liable to the owner of the draft, if it delivers the bill of lading to the assignee without requiring payment of the draft; and likewise, if it does require such payment before delivery of the bill of lading, it cannot withhold the money it thus collects from the party for whom it undertook to collect it.

The stability of commercial transactions of this character requires that the rights of the parties thereto be definitely and certainly fixed at each stage of the proceeding, and not dependent on any whim or caprice of either party. Every act done must have attached to it a definite and certain meaning and effect, regardless of what may have been the intention of either party. When Marshall, upon the refusal of the railway company's agent to permit him to examine the goods, paid this draft and surrendered the bill of lading to the carrier's agent, he became vested with the full title in counting draft—liability for default of consignor.

Bank—dis-

the property. He waived his right to have an inspection of the goods before acceptance, and he cannot, after having waived the same, subsequently rely upon it. The doctrine of the liability of a bank, standing in the position of the defendant in this case, to the holder of a draft, for an unauthorized delivery of a bill of lading attached thereto, is fully recognized by the authorities. Michie, Banks & Bkg. § 161, p. 1401; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. North Texas Grain Co. 32

—right to proceeds of draft as against collecting bank —surrender of goods for inspection.

Tex. Civ. App. 93, 74 S. W. 567; Second Bank v. Cummings, 89 Tenn. 609, 24 Am. St. Rep. 618, 18 S. W. 115; Hobbs v. Chicago Packing & Provision Co. 98 Ga. 576, 58 Am. St. Rep. 320, 25 S. E. 584. We are of opinion that the money now in possession of the defendant bank is the property of the plaintiff, and that it had the right to maintain this suit to recover the same, upon refusal of the defendant to pay it over.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ANNOTATION.

Right of bank which receives for collection draft with bill of lading attached, to deliver bill of lading conditionally to consignee to enable him to inspect the goods.

The position is taken in the reported case (OLD NAT. BANK v. PEOPLE'S BANK, ante, 728) that, unless specifically authorized to do so, a correspondent bank which receives for collection a sight draft with bill of lading attached has no authority to deliver the draft and bill of lading to the consignee, upon deposit of the amount of the draft, for the purpose merely of enabling him to inspect the goods, and with the understanding that the consignee may have his money back if he determines to reject them. In this case the correspondent bank had retained the money, the railroad company to which the consignee had surrendered the bill of lading having refused to return it. It was held that the correspondent bank should be compelled to pay the same over to the assignee bank.

No other case presenting the precise question indicated in the above title has been found. The consignee, of course, has ordinarily a right to an inspection of the goods before delivery, without a surrender of the bill of lading, and, therefore, a bank which receives for collection a draft with bill of lading attached would be under no practical necessity of turning over the bill of lading, either to the carrier, or to the drawee of the draft, in order to obtain for the latter the right of inspection. The court in the OLD NAT. BANK CASE points out that the railroad company did not have the right to require the surrender of the bill of lading before permitting inspection of the goods, although it might be proper for the carrier's agent to require that the bank holding the bill of lading direct him to permit inspection, simply for the purpose of knowing that the party making such inspection was authorized to do so by the holder of the bill of lading.

One or two other cases may be referred to, because of their analogy on the facts, although they turn on different principles.

In Second Nat. Bank v. Bank of Alma (1911) 99 Ark. 386, 138 N. W. 472, 2 N. C. C. A. 737, the defendant bank, which had received from the plaintiff bank a draft with bill of lading attached, with instructions to deliver the bill of lading only upon payment of the draft, which was for the rental value of a machine shipped to the drawee, delivered the same to the latter to enable it to test the machine before acceptance and payment. It thus appears that the defendant violated its instructions in the delivery. The plaintiff, however, had not discounted the draft, but had received it from the lessor for collection only. The court laid down the rule that, when a bank receives a bill or draft for collection from a forwarding bank, it is liable for any loss occurring through any neglect of duty or unauthorized act, and, where it surrenders the bill of lading accompanying a draft contrary to instructions, it is liable as for conversion, for any damages which have been sustained by reason thereof. But recovery was denied in this instance, because the plaintiff did not show actual loss, since the lessor, whose representative had assisted in installing and making the test of the machine, had ratified the act of the defendant in turning over to the drawee the bill of lading without payment of the draft, and the plaintiff, being only the agent of the lessor in making the collection, had therefore not sustained any damage.

Attention is called, also to People's Nat. Bank v. Freeman's Nat. Bank (1897) 169 Mass. 129, 61 Am. St. Rep. 279, 47 N. E. 588, where the defendant bank, which had received by mail a sight draft from the plaintiff, attached to a sealed package addressed to the drawee of the draft, with instructions to deliver the papers only on payment by the drawee, who was a broker, was held not liable on the ground of violation of instructions, in permitting the drawee to open the package at the bank and examine its contents, after which he returned the same and refused to pay the draft, since there was no delivery. The package, unknown to the defendant, contained a report on mines which the drawee desired, and the plaintiff contended that the defendant, through its negligence, had destroyed the money value of the draft and of the report, and that but for such negligence the defendant could have collected the draft in full.

There are many cases, of course, on the question—which is beyond the scope of the annotation—as to the rights and liabilities, of the assignee of a bill of lading with draft attached, as against a consignee who does not get the goods, or who finds them defective. As illustrative of cases involving that question, attention is called to Mason v. A. E. Nelson Cotton Co. (1908) 148 N. C. 492, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 635, 62 S. E. 625, in which it was held that the fact that the holder of a bill of lading, taken as collateral security for a draft on the consignee of the property which he has discounted, refuses to permit the consignee to examine the goods without paying the draft, does not bring him under the obligations of the contract, so as to render him liable for breach of warranty in the sale.

Although, on its facts, not within the scope of the annotation, attention is called in this connection to Monongahela Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank (1910) 226 Pa. 270, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1098, 75 Atl. 359, stating that "it is never a defense to an action by a principal for money collected by the agent, for the latter to show that, in equity and good conscience, the money belonged to a third person." R. E. H.

CHARLES POWER, Respt.,

v.

AUGUST NORDSTROM et al., Appts.

Minnesota Supreme Court — November 4, 1921.

(— Minn. —, 184 N. W. 967.)

Municipal corporation — prohibition of Sunday shows.

1. In the exercise of the discretion delegated to village councils by §§

Headnotes by LEES, C.

1268, 1269, Gen. Stat. 1913, they may ordain that there shall be no public exhibitions of motion pictures within the village on Sundays.

[See note on this question beginning on page 738.]

Theater — regulation of motion pictures.

2. Though a lawful business, the exhibition of motion pictures may be licensed and regulated by the state and the political subdivisions thereof in the exercise of the police power.

[See 26 R. C. L. 696.]

Municipal corporation — purpose of ordinance.

3. Such an ordinance is not aimed to secure the observance of the Sabbath day, but to regulate a business, and is not in conflict with the general law or public policy of the state.

[See 25 R. C. L. 1426.]

(Hallam, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the District Court for Chisago County (Searles, J.) overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to restrain the enforcement of an alleged illegal city ordinance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Alfred P. Stolberg, for appellants:

Defendants have authority to pass and enforce an ordinance prohibiting the exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday.

Higgins v. Lacroix, 119 Minn. 148, 41 L.R.A. 737, 137 N. W. 417; Duluth v. Marsh, 71 Minn. 248, 73 N. W. 962; Mankato v. Fowler, 32 Minn. 364, 20 N. W. 361; Re Wilson, 32 Minn. 145, 19 N. W. 723; State v. Pamperim, 42 Minn. 320, 44 N. W. 251; State v. Barge, 82 Minn. 256, 53 L.R.A. 428, 84 N. W. 911; Ex parte Florence, 78 Ala. 419; State v. Ludwig, 21 Minn. 202; Economopoulos v. Bingham, 109 N. Y. Supp. 728; Hamlin v. Bender, 92 Misc. 16, 155 N. Y. Supp. 963; Smith v. Wilcox, 24 N. Y. 354, 82 Am. Dec. 302; People ex rel. Bender v. Joyce, 174 App. Div. 574, 161 N. Y. Supp. 771; People v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 214, 35 N. E. 499; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L.R.A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, 43 N. E. 541; People v. Dunford, 207 N. Y. 17, 100 N. E. 433; Dillard v. State, 104 Neb. 209, 175 N. W. 668; Myers v. State, 5 Ohio App. 156; Ex parte Brewer, 68 Tex. Crim. Rep. 387, 152 S. W. 1068; Capital Theater Co. v. Com. 178 Ky. 781, 199 S. W. 1076; Re Sumida, 177 Cal. 388, 170 Pac. 823.

Messrs. Moore, Oppenheimer, & Peterson, for respondent:

The ordinance in question is simply and solely Sunday legislation, and in direct conflict with the general statutes and well-settled public policy of the state; it is an attempt by the village to override and render ineffective the general law of the state, and because of such fact is void.

St. Paul v. Laidler, 2 Minn. 190, Gil. 159, 72 Am. Dec. 89; St. Paul v. Briggs, 85 Minn. 290, 89 Am. St. Rep. 554, 88 N. W. 984; State v. Priester, 43 Minn. 373, 45 N. W. 712.

The act does not prohibit the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday.

State v. Chamberlain, 112 Minn. 52, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 127 N. W. 444, 21 Ann. Cas. 679; Houck v. Ingles, 126 Minn. 257, 148 N. W. 100.

The legislature is the sole judge of what shall be permitted and what shall be prohibited on the Sabbath day.

Block v. Crockett, 61 W. Va. 421, 56 S. E. 826; Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548; Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 25 Am. Rep. 235; People v. Dunford, 207 N. Y. 17, 100 N. E. 433; People ex rel. Kieley v. Lent, 166 App. Div. 550, 152 N. Y. Supp. 18, 215 N. Y. 626, 109 N. E. 1088; Klinger v. Ryan, 91 Misc. 71, 153 N. Y. Supp. 937.

The power to prohibit the motion picture business is limited to such means as are necessary to prevent it becoming a nuisance.

State ex rel. Luria v. Wagener, 69 Minn. 206, 38 L.R.A. 677, 65 Am. St. Rep. 565, 72 N. W. 67; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 94 Miss. 34, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 637, 47 So. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 103; State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105; Denver v. Bach, 26 Colo. 530, 46 L.R.A. 848, 58 Pac. 1089; State v. Barge, 82 Minn. 256, 53 L.R.A. 428, 84 N. W. 911.

Lees, C., filed the following opinion:

The village of North Branch was incorporated under the provisions of chapter 9, Rev. Laws 1905. It has less than 1,000 inhabitants.

Section 727, Rev. Laws 1905, now § 1268, Gen. Stat. 1913, grants power to village councils to adopt such ordinances as they deem expedient for certain enumerated purposes. Among such purposes is preventing, or licensing and regulating, the exhibition of circuses, theatrical performances, or shows of any kind. Section 1269, Gen. Stat. 1913, contains a similar grant of power, coupled with a proviso authorizing village councils to refuse to grant a license "where, in their opinion, the public interests of the citizens of the village require it."

In October, 1920, the village council of North Branch adopted an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance to Regulate and License Peddlers, Hawkers, Auctioneers, Transient Merchants, Amusements and Shows." It required one following such an occupation or engaged in such a business within the village to take out a license and pay a specified license fee. Section 9 of the ordinance reads: "The exhibition or attempt to exhibit in said village of any moving picture show, show, circus, menagerie, vaudeville or theatrical entertainment for the amusement of the public on Sunday is prohibited and forbidden."

Plaintiff applied for and was granted a license to operate a motion picture theater, and paid the required license fee. The village officers threatened to arrest and prosecute him under the ordinance if he exhibited motion pictures on Sunday, and he has accordingly desisted, thereby sustaining a financial loss. He is the owner of a modern and well-equipped theater where he exhibits motion pictures in an orderly manner to respectable audiences. The pictures are of moral character, and tickets are sold only in the vestibule of the theater, without any calling out or announcement of the exhibition or of their sale.

Setting out these facts in his complaint, plaintiff brought this action to restrain the village officers from enforcing § 9 of the ordinance, on the ground that it is illegal and void. The defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, the demurrer was overruled, the court certifying that the question presented was doubtful, and defendants appealed from the order.

No question is or could be raised about the meaning of the word "shows," as used in the statute. Clearly enough, it is sufficiently broad to include exhibitions of moving pictures. 38 Cyc. 258. It must be conceded that the motion picture business is a lawful business. Nevertheless it is a business which is subject to regulation by the state by virtue of its police power, and by the political subdivisions of the state to which the power has been delegated by the legislature. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 664; 38 Cyc. 255, 258; Mutual Film Corp. v. Ohio Industrial Commission, 236 U. S. 230, 244, 59 L. ed. 552, 559, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 296; Greenberg v. Western Twp. Asso. 148 Cal. 126, 113 Am. St. Rep. 216, 82 Pac. 684, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 72; note to Zucarro v. State, L.R.A.1918B, 361.

This court has twice declared that places of public amusement, such as theaters and motion picture houses, are proper subjects for police regulation and control. State v. Scaffer, 95 Minn. 311, 104 N. W. 139; Higgins v. La Croix, 119 Minn. 145, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 737, 137 N. W. 417. The reasons leading to that conclusion are convincingly stated in the latter case, and need not be repeated.

Possibly the power to license and regulate shows includes the power to prohibit them. State ex rel. Labovich v. Redington, 119 Minn. 402, 138 N. W. 430. But, assuming it does not, can it be said that to

Theater—regulation of
motion pictures.

forbid the carrying on of the business at specified times, as on Sundays or between certain hours of the day, is beyond the power of a municipal corporation? Under a grant of police power to license and regulate a business, the municipal authorities have power to determine where and within what limits the business may be conducted. Re Wilson, 32 Minn. 145, 19 N. W. 723. They may impose reasonable restrictions as to the time, place, and manner of conducting the business. State v. Barge, 82 Minn. 256, 53 L.R.A. 428, 84 N. W. 911. They may prohibit exhibitions of motion pictures in portions of a city in which for reasons of public welfare it is undesirable to have them. State v. Redington, supra. An ordinance enacted under a grant of power to license billiard and pool halls may impose any reasonable conditions or terms to make the license efficacious as a police regulation. The licensee may be required to keep an orderly house, or to keep it closed on certain days and during certain hours at night. State v. Pamperin, 42 Minn. 320, 44 N. W. 251. That was a case where the ordinance required billiard and pool halls to be kept closed on Sundays and after certain hours at night. Generally speaking, a city, under its authorized police power, may regulate any business the unrestrained pursuit of which might affect injuriously the public health, morals, safety, or comfort. St. Paul v. Kessler, 146 Minn. 124, 178 N. W. 171. And in respect to theatrical exhibitions and amusements of a similar character, a larger discretion is recognized than in the case of ordinary trades, because they are liable to degenerate into nuisances, and also because they require more police surveillance. Duluth v. Marsh, 71 Minn. 248, 73 N. W. 962. It is our opinion that, in the exercise of such discretion pursuant to the powers granted by §§ 1268 and 1269, Gen. Stat. 1913, a village may ordain that motion picture exhibitions shall not be given on Sundays, unless such a provision in an ordinance is inconsistent with the Municipal corporation—prohibition of Sunday shows.

Constitution or general laws of the state, or is unreasonable. The legislature, in the exercise of the police power, may prohibit all manner of labor and business on Sundays, except works of necessity or charity, and may delegate authority to municipal corporations to enact ordinances with like prohibitions. State v. Ludwig, 21 Minn. 202. Sunday laws are generally sustained on the theory that there should be one day of rest in each week to promote the moral and physical well-being of society, and hence the enactment of such laws falls within the scope of the police power of the state. State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225; State ex rel. Hoffman v. Justus, 91 Minn. 447, 64 L.R.A. 510, 103 Am. St. Rep. 521, 98 N. W. 325, 1 Ann. Cas. 91; State v. Weiss, 97 Minn. 125, 105 N. W. 1127, 7 Ann. Cas. 932; State v. Dean, — Minn. —, 184 N. W. 275. But it is urged that an ordinance requiring motion picture houses to close on Sundays is inconsistent with the general laws of the state. Section 8753; Gen. Stat. 1913, as construed in State v. Chamberlain, 112 Minn. 52, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 127 N. W. 444, 21 Ann. Cas. 679, and followed in Houck v. Ingles, 126 Minn. 257, 148 N. W. 100.

Counsel for respondent say that, stripped of all camouflage, the ordinance is simply and solely Sunday legislation, in direct conflict with, and an attempt to override, the general statutes and the well-settled public policy of the state. We do not regard it as legislation of that character. It is not the aim of the ordinance to compel the observance of the Sabbath day by the people of North Branch. Its only aim is to regulate the several occupations and kinds of business to which it refers. It is no more Sunday legislation than is § 3141, Gen. Stat. 1913, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays, or the same provision commonly found in city and village ordinances regulating the liquor traffic.

—purpose of ordinance.

The contention that § 9 conflicts with the general law and public policy of the state is supported by a skilful and plausible argument, in substance this: Section 8753, Gen. Stat. 1913, is a legislative declaration of public policy relative to Sunday observance which prohibits the doing of certain things on Sunday, but not the indoor exhibition in an orderly manner of motion pictures. By failing to prohibit such exhibitions the legislature has impliedly sanctioned them, while § 9 of the ordinance expressly prohibits them.

We have examined all the cases cited in support of this contention, as well as others dealing with the vexed question of when a local ordinance must be held inconsistent with the general law. The conclusion we have reached is that the contention should not be sustained. It is elementary that an ordinance must not be repugnant to, but in harmony with, the laws enacted by the legislature for the government of the state. It cannot authorize what a statute forbids, or forbid what a statute expressly permits, but it may supplement a statute, or cover an authorized field of local legislation unoccupied by general legislation. Every business and occupation is subject to the reasonable exercise of the police power of the municipality where it is carried on, and in the exercise of the power a city or village may regulate that which the state has failed to regulate. There can be no conflict between a statute and an ordinance where there is no statute covering the subject-matter of the ordinance. Such is the case here. The statute is silent upon the subject of the exhibition of motion pictures on Sundays. It does not prohibit their exhibition. Neither does it expressly permit it, as it does the playing of baseball on Sunday between certain hours.' By refraining from legislating on the subject, and by authorizing villages not only to regulate the business, but to refuse to grant licenses and so prevent such exhibitions, the legislature has treated the whole matter as one properly within the domain of the police power of villages. The public policy of the state should be determined by the legislature, and not by the courts. We see no reason why reasonable local regulations, adapted to local conditions and in harmony with the wishes of a majority of the inhabitants of a village, should not be permitted to stand, and such has been the opinion of the attorney general. Opinion 637, Rep. of Atty. Gen. 1916. Previous decisions of this court, cases in other states, and the textwriters have expressed views which support the conclusion we have reached. State v. Ludwig, supra; Evans v. Redwood Falls, 103 Minn. 314, 115 N. W. 200; Mankato v. Olger, 126 Minn. 521, 148 N. W. 471; State ex rel. Zien v. Duluth, 134 Minn. 355, 159 N. W. 792, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 683; McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857, 28 N. E. 454; Clinton v. Wilson, 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. §§ 647, 878; 19 R. C. L. 803; 25 R. C. L. 1419. Whether it is wise or unwise to prohibit theatrical and other like performances on Sundays is a question with which we are not concerned. North Branch has local self-government. If its people want an ordinance of this kind, they may have it. If they no longer want it, they can have it repealed.

For the reasons stated, we are constrained to hold that the learned trial judge erred in overruling the demurrer, and therefore the order appealed from must be and is reversed.

Hallam, J., dissenting:

In my opinion, the ordinance in question, so far as it relates to picture shows, is not regulation, but Sunday legislation, and is repugnant to the statutes of the state as construed in State v. Chamberlain, 112 Minn. 52, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 127 N. W. 444, 21 Ann. Cas. 679; and that it is, therefore, invalid. This is in accordance with the New York decisions on similar legislation. People ex rel. Kieley v. Lent, 166 App. Div. 550, 152 N. Y. Supp. 18; People ex rel. Kieley v. Lent, 215 N. Y. 626, 109 N. E. 1088.

ANNOTATION.

Power of municipality to require closing on Sunday of amusements not forbidden on that day by state law.

This annotation is confined to cases involving the power of a municipality to require the closing on Sunday of places of amusement which are not forbidden by the state laws to be kept open upon that day.

Municipal ordinances must be in harmony with the general laws of the state, and with its public policy. Clinton v. Wilson (1913) 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192; POWER v. NORDSTROM (reported herewith) ante, 733.

And an ordinance cannot authorize what a statute forbids, or forbid what a statute expressly permits. The reported case (POWER v. NORDSTROM).

Nor can an ordinance be passed under a general grant of authority which infringes the spirit of the state laws. Clinton v. Wilson (Ill.) supra.

But an ordinance may supplement a statute, or cover an authorized field of local legislation unoccupied by general legislation. The reported case (POWER v. NORDSTROM).

And the police regulations of a city may differ from those of a state upon the same subject, if they are not repugnant thereto. Clinton v. Wilson (Ill.) supra.

In general, a municipal corporation may, by ordinance, require places of amusement to be kept closed upon Sunday, although they are not forbidden by the state laws from being kept open on that day. Siddons v. Edmonston (1914) 42 App. D. C. 459; Clinton v. Wilson (Ill.) supra; POWER v. NORDSTROM (reported herewith) ante, 733; Re Ferguson (1914) 80 Wash. 102, 141 Pac. 322.

In some of the cases a distinction is made between implied and express permission by the state statute, in passing upon the validity of ordinances compelling the closing of places of amusement permitted by the state laws to be kept open.

Thus, in Re Ferguson (Wash.) supra, an ordinance of a municipality requiring the closing on Sunday of moving picture shows is held not to be void upon the ground that it is in conflict and inconsistent with a state statute which does not prohibit, but impliedly permits, moving picture shows to keep open and to run upon Sunday, unless they disturb the peace or quiet of the day, the court saying that if the state, by statute, had expressly permitted moving picture shows upon Sunday, it would be clear that the city could not pass an ordinance which prohibits such shows upon Sunday, but where the statute only impliedly permits such shows upon Sunday, and does not expressly permit them, it is within the power of the city to pass an ordinance prohibiting such shows, and such ordinance clearly would not be in conflict with the state law.

An ordinance requiring motion picture houses to close on Sundays was held, in the reported case (POWER v. NORDSTROM, ante, 733), not to be open to the objection that it was Sunday legislation in direct conflict with, and an attempt to override, the general state law and the well-settled public policy of the state, upon the ground that the state law, which prohibited certain sports and shows, but did not prohibit indoor exhibitions of moving pictures, was a legislative declaration of the public policy of the state relative to Sunday observance, and, by failing to prohibit motion picture exhibitions, impliedly sanctioned them, and the court stated that there could be no conflict between an ordinance and a statute, where the statute did not cover the subject-matter of the ordinance, as in the case at bar, the statute in question being silent upon the subject of the exhibition of motion pictures on Sundays, neither prohibiting nor expressly permitting them; and further stating that the public policy of the state should be determined by the legislature, and not by the courts.

It was unsuccessfully argued in Re Ferguson (1914) 80 Wash. 102, 141 Pac. 322, that a municipal ordinance forbidding the keeping open on Sunday of theaters was void as against the public policy of the state, upon the ground that the policy of the state in favor of permitting theaters to be open upon Sunday was shown by the repeal of a statute prohibiting the opening of theaters upon Sunday, and the subsequent enactment of statutes prohibiting persons from promoting upon Sunday any noisy or boisterous sport or amusement, disturbing the peace of the day; and prohibiting persons from wilfully disturbing, interrupting, or disquieting any assemblage of people met for religious worship, by exhibiting shows or plays, the court saying that, while it is no doubt true that the repeal of the statute prohibiting the opening of theaters on Sunday was an implied permission to keep theaters open on Sunday, an implied permission did not create the policy of the state; but that the policy of the state was declared by express statutes, and not by implication, and that, if the state had expressly, by statute, authorized theaters and shows to be conducted upon Sunday, that would, no doubt, be a declaration of a policy upon the part of the state to permit shows on Sunday; but that, where the statute only impliedly permits theaters to be kept open on Sunday, no policy is declared.

An ordinance subjecting to fine any person who shall, on Sunday, keep open, or permit to be kept open, his place of business, or shall pursue his daily labor or occupation within the city, which was construed to embrace motion picture theaters, was held in Clinton v. Wilson (1918) 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192, not to contravene the public policy of the state, as shown by the legislative enactments with reference to Sunday laws, the court stating that it was bound by the decision to the same effect in McPherson v. Chebanse (1885) 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857, 28 N. E. 454, since the statutes bearing on the question have not been changed since that decision was rendered.

In the McPherson Case, referred to in the preceding paragraph, a village ordinance prohibiting persons from keeping open their places of business in the village, for the purpose of vending goods, on Sunday, was held not inconsistent with the state law, which went only to the extent of forbidding such labor on Sunday as disturbs the peace and good order of society. The court, in answer to the contention that the ordinance went beyond the state legislation upon the subject, said that there was no repugnancy between the ordinance and the statute, but that both might consist together, as the ordinance did not prohibit what the statute permitted, and differed from it only in being more specific. The court, however, stated that it did not admit that the keeping open of the stores in the village on Sunday was allowable under the statute—that it would not disturb the peace and good order of society.

A police regulation of the District of Columbia, prohibiting the conducting of baseball games on Sunday, was held in Siddons v. Edmonston (1914) 42 App. D. C. 459, not to be in conflict with, but rather in aid of, the laws of Congress in force in the District, the laws in force being an act forbidding the shooting or carrying of guns on Sunday, an act imposing a fine for disturbing a religious congregation, an act requiring billiard and pool rooms to be closed on Sunday, an act forbidding the sale of liquor on Sunday, and an act classing Sunday with legal holidays. The court said that it thus appears that Congress has recognized what all other legislative bodies have recognized, namely, that Sunday is a day of rest.

But it was held in People ex rel. Kieley v. Lent (1915) 166 App. Div. 550, 33 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 90, 152 N. Y.

Supp. 18, affirmed without opinion in (1915) 215 N. Y. 626, 109 N. E. 1088, that, as the legislature alone might command how Sunday should be kept, a city could not independently compel and enforce Sunday closing of movies, by means of fines or imprisonment, unless such prohibition was part of the law and policy as declared by the legislature. In this case the city, under its charter, had the power to regulate amusements and common shows, including a right to license an exhibition of moving pictures; but the ordinance in question prohibited movies on Sunday, and made every person violating it liable to a penalty, and the court said: "A license may be conditionally granted. It may be given subject to certain reasonable hours of opening, and other limits upon its exercise. But the derivative power of a municipality to fine and imprison can only exist under and in due enforcement of authority clearly committed to the municipality. The intent that municipal corporations by ordinance can supersede the state law will not be inferred from general grants of power, nor will such authority be held to exist as an implied or incidental right. Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 632. As all municipal authority comes from the legislature, the provisions of municipal charters, however broad, are subject to such restrictions as may be imposed by general laws. . . . The additional powers by chapter 247, Laws of 1913, amending the General City Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 21), giving authority to enforce ordinances by affixing penalties, forfeitures, and imprisonment (§ 20, subd. 22), did not, and could not, surrender the general power to legislate against criminal offenses, which remains in the legislature.

. . . . The legislature alone may command how Sunday shall be kept.

. . . . Hence the city of Yonkers cannot independently compel and enforce Sunday closing by means of fine or imprisonment, unless such prohibition is part of the law and policy as declared by the legislature."

And in Klinger v. Ryan (1915) 91 Misc. 71, 33 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 382, 153

N. Y. Supp. 937, denying, upon the ground that the plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law, a motion to continue a temporary injunction restraining the defendant, as chief of police of the city, from arresting the plaintiff for opening his moving picture show on Sunday contrary to the conditions of the mayor's license, the court said: "It now seems to be established (a) that the Penal Law of the state of New York does not prohibit the exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday (People v. Hemleb (1908) 127 App. Div. 356, 111 N. Y. Supp. 690), and (b) that a municipality cannot, independently of express legislative authority, by ordinance, compel and enforce Sunday closing of moving picture shows (People ex rel. Kieley v. Lent (N. Y.) supra). I am unable to distinguish between the inherent power of the city to prohibit Sunday shows by ordinance, and the inherent power of the mayor to prohibit them by the conditions of a license. The legislature alone may command how Sunday may be kept, and it has not delegated the power to the mayor of North Tonawanda by giving to that official the mere general power to license entertainments."

The case of People v. Hemleb (N. Y.) supra, cited in the preceding quotation, holds that § 265 of the New York Penal Code, prohibiting public sports, exercises, or shows upon Sunday, did not prohibit an indoor exhibition of moving pictures, as it applied only to out-of-door shows.

But in an earlier New York case, Moore v. Owen (1908) 58 Misc. 332, 109 N. Y. Supp. 585, denying a motion for a temporary injunction to restrain the chief executive officers of the city police department from closing or attempting to close the plaintiff's theater on Sunday, and from interfering with his presenting in such theater, on Sunday, exhibitions of moving pictures, it was held that such § 265 of the Penal Code, and other Sunday laws, prohibited movies upon Sunday, and that the public policy of the state as disclosed by its legislation was against the exhibition of moving pictures upon Sunday. The court, however, said that, if he was wrong in his views to the effect that movies were prohibited by the state law, the plaintiff had no right to exhibit moving pictures in his theater upon Sunday, because it was prohibited by city ordinances, saying: "Under the city charter, the common council has adopted ordinances in reference to the licensing of showmen. Article 1 of these ordinances is as follows: 'Without having procured a license as required by this ordinance, no person shall carry on any business herein named within the city of Rochester.' Then follow several sections in reference to different classes of licensed occupations, followed by § 10, which is as follows: 'Of showmen, which shall be construed to cover the exhibition of any circus, theatrical representation, or public show of any kind or permitting any place to be used for such purposes.' Then follow provisions for the issuing of licenses to showmen, and the fees to be paid therefor, and by article 5, § 39, it is provided that showmen shall not give any theatrical representation, circus, or other show on Sunday, and by article 6 are provided the penalties for violation. It appears from the complaint that the plaintiff is operating as a showman under a license granted pursuant to those ordinances. It is competent for the common council to regulate and control the licensing of theaters and public shows. Its ordinance, within the corporate limits of the city, has the same force as a statute. . . . It cannot, of course, permit, under its ordinances or license, any performance prohibited by the public statutes of the state; but it may impose further restrictions and limitations upon the character of the performance to be licensed, or to be authorized in licensed places. The plaintiff cannot lawfully carry on his business without a license under the city ordinances, and he is bound to comply with those ordinances or forfeit his license and right to do business. It follows that he cannot, under his license, violate the ordinance in respect to giving a show on Sunday, nor has he any right to restrain the police department from enforcing the ordinance in that respect." The court, however, gave as another sufficient answer to the application for the injunction that the plaintiff's proper remedy was in the courts of law. (It may be noted here that, subsequently to the foregoing decisions in 1919, a form of local option on the subject was adopted by the legislature in New York.)

The preceding New York cases, and, more particularly, the following case, apparently discuss this question from the angle suggested by the contention of the counsel in the reported case (POWER v. NORDSTROM, ante, 733), opposing the municipality's power, which is upheld by the dissenting opinion therein, to the effect that such an ordinance, when stripped of all camouflage, is not a business regulation, but simply and solely Sunday legislation, aimed to compel the observance of the Sabbath day by the people of the community.

A municipal by-law requiring pool rooms or billiard rooms to be closed from Saturday evening until Monday morning was held in Re Fisher (1905) 16 Manitoba L. R. 560; not to be ultra vires, as against the contention that it was so because it related to Sabbath observance—counsel citing in support of such contention the case of Atty. Gen. v. Hamilton Street R. Co. [1903] A. C. (Eng.) 524, 72 L. J. P. C. N. S. 105, 89 L. T. N. S. 107, 19 Times L. R. 612, which held that a Lord's Day Observance Act, which imposed penalties for infringement of its provisions, was a matter of criminal law reserved by § 91, subsection 27, of the British North America Act 1867, for exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, and that it was, therefore, ultra vires of a provincial legislature to pass such an act, the court saying: "Neither the by-law nor the provision of the municipal act [subsequently referred to in the quotation] makes any reference to the Lord's Day observance; but it is argued that the provision of the by-law requiring pool and billiard rooms to be closed from Saturday evening until Monday morning is intended for Sunday observance. This may be true, but it would be so only by intendment, and not by express enactment. Considered in that light, the argument raises a constitutional point of great moment; and, as it might affect other legislation on cognate subjects, I do not think it would be advisable to determine that important question, without giving the attorney general of the province an opportunity of having the matter looked into, and of presenting the views of the government on the constitutional aspect of the case. But I do not deem it incumbent upon me to decide that point in the present application. The by-law was passed under a provision of the municipal act for 'licensing, regulating, and governing' pool and billiard rooms. To the power of licensing is added the power to regulate, namely, to determine the mode and method by which the license is to be enjoyed; and these include, I should think, the conditions, as to time and otherwise, under which the licensee is to have the benefit of the license. It does not appear to me to be necessary to investigate and consider the particular reasons which may have induced the municipal council to impose upon the licensee the condition that his pool or billiard room shall not be opened during a certain day of the week, any more than during certain hours of the day. The reason may be surmised; but that is not sufficient to declare that the by-law is bad and should be quashed, when there is nothing on its face expressing or indicating what the reason may be. Taking this view of the case, I am not prepared to hold that the by-law is ultra vires." G. V. L.

FRANK HICKMAN, Respt.,

v.

LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION et al., Appts.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—December 21, 1920.

(184 Cal. 524, 195 Pac. 45.)

Witness — constitutional immunity — application to examination under contract.

1. Constitutional immunity from being a witness against oneself does not absolve one who has suffered a loss under a fire insurance policy from complying with the provisions of the contract requiring him to submit to examination, although he is under indictment for arson for burning the property.

[See note on this question beginning on page 749.]

Insurance — right to enforce — refusal to submit to examination.

2. Refusal of the holder of a fire insurance policy to submit to examination, as required by the terms of the contract, on the ground that he has been indicted for burning the property and his testimony might be to his prejudice, deprives him of his right of action on the policy.

[See 14 R. C. L. 1342, 1343.]

—demand after dismissal of indictment.

3. An offer by the holder of a fire insurance policy who has been indicted for burning the property, to submit to examination according to the terms of the policy when the indictment is dismissed, which he refuses to do when called upon by the company pending the indictment, does not place any obligation upon the insurer to make a new demand upon him after dismissal of the indictment in order to place him in default.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Kings County (Short, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on defendants' respective fire insurance policies. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Miller, Thornton, Miller, & Watt for appellants.

Messrs. Earl Rogers and H. P. Brown for respondent.

Lawlor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Frank Hickman, brought this action against the defendants, London Assurance Corporation, New Zealand Insurance Company, Limited, British & Federal Fire Underwriters of Norwich, England, Law Union & Rock Insurance Company, Limited, Yorkshire Insurance Company, Limited, Providence Washington Insurance Company, Sterling Fire Insurance Company, the Home Insurance Company of New York, and North British & Mercantile Insurance Company of London and Edinburgh, to recover for loss by fire on their respective policies. Judgment went for the plaintiff, and the several defendants appeal. The record is presented in typewriting.

Prior to November 21, 1915, the said policies were issued to respondent to cover his stock of general merchandise kept and used by him in his "clothing and gents' furnishing goods store," in a two-story brick building at 1922-1924 Mariposa street in the city of Fresno.

On the night of November 28, 1915, practically the entire stock of goods insured was destroyed by fire, and it is this loss which is the basis of respondent's asserted cause of action. Each of the policies was in the standard form prescribed by the legislature (Stat. 1909, p. 404), and contained a warranty that gasoline or benzine in excess of 1 quart would not be kept, used, or allowed on the premises. To the allegation of the complaint that the fire originated from causes unknown, the defendants set up in their answer that the fire was started with the knowledge, connivance, and design of the respondent, and that in violation of the above warranty gasoline in excess of 1 quart was kept, used, and allowed on the premises.

In the employ of respondent at the time of the fire, and for some years previously, was W. H. Jenks, who testified in detail that in July, 1915, a portion of respondent's stock was destroyed, and that the latter was dissatisfied with the settlement made by him with the companies then carrying his insurance; that thereafter the policies in suit were issued; that respondent had planned with him "to have the stock totally destroyed," and had told him to bring oil and gasoline upon the premises "and make all the arrangements for burning the store;" that between the 5th and the 15th of October he purchased 5 gallons of gasoline in a tin container, which he placed in the basement of the store, and told respondent of this; that subsequently respondent gave him "a gallon jug and a black grip or handbag," in which he brought 5 or more gallons of kerosene and a number of gallons of gasoline into the store; that prior to November 28 he distributed gasoline around the basement, in vessels, and used shavings and different articles to absorb it, so that by seepage the gasoline would be ignited by the gas "pilot lights;" that about 4 or 5 o'clock on the afternoon of November 28 he raised a trapdoor in the basement, so that the draft thereby created would cause the gasoline to ignite, and went home, where he remained until notified by telephone that evening there was a fire in the store; and that thereupon, pursuant to the instructions of respondent, who had gone to San Francisco "to throw off all suspicion from him," he sent in his own name the following telegram to respondent: "Frank Hickman, care Washington Hotel, San Francisco. Don't buy more goods. Your store is burning."

The respondent testified that he went to San Francisco "to visit the fair" and admitted having received the telegram while there, but denied that he induced Jenks to burn the property, or that he had any knowledge that it was to be done; that he had ever spoken to Jenks about burning the store or bringing gasoline or oil on the premises, or that he knew of any gasoline or oil being on the premises.

On December 2, 1915, a complaint was sworn to by J. G. Goehring, chief of police of Fresno, and filed on the following day, charging respondent and Jenks with the crime of arson, alleged to have been committed in the burning of the store. December 22 they were held to answer. The district attorney filed an information on December 31, upon which the accused were arraigned January 8, 1916, when respondent was released on bail. An amended information was filed January 13. February 14 respondent pleaded not guilty. The trial opened on April 18, and on April 24, while it was still in progress, the district attorney moved the court for an order dismissing the information on the ground "that the people have not sufficient evidence on which to warrant a conviction." The motion was granted, the information dismissed, and the bail exonerated.

On May 22 Jenks pleaded guilty and applied for probation. The application was referred to the probation officer, who reported on June 9, recommending that probation be denied, and it was so ordered. Jenks thereupon withdrew his plea of guilty, and pleaded not guilty. He was tried, convicted on October 11, 1916, and released on probation for the term of five years.

This action was commenced on February 27, 1917. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. It was found in effect that Jenks set fire to the store, and that at the time he was insane; that the gasoline was carried upon the premises by him, without the knowledge or connivance of respondent; that respondent did not know there was any gasoline in the store; and that the fire occurred without any complicity on his part.

Each of the policies also contained the following warranty: "The insured shall exhibit to any person designated in writing by this company all that remains of any property herein described and shall submit to examination under oath, as often as required, by any such person, and subscribe to the testimony so given, and shall produce to such person for examination all books of account, bills, invoices and other vouchers, and permit extracts and copies thereof to be made. . . . No suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained until full compliance by the insured with all of the foregoing requirements."

On February 5 appellants made a written demand upon respondent that he appear before Leon Levy, a notary public, on February 11, and, pursuant to the above warranty, submit to examination and produce "all original invoices, bills, and vouchers of goods . . . claimed by him to have been damaged or destroyed, . . . and all books of account pertaining to the business." On the last-mentioned date the hearing was continued by consent to the following day, when respondent appeared. The following took place:

Respondent's counsel read into the record of the proceedings each of the letters in which the respective appellants had designated H. M. Farrar as their representative or adjuster "in any matters pertaining to the loss."

Respondent was then sworn and this colloquy ensued:

Farrar: Q. Your name in full?

A. Frank Hickman.

Q. Your age?

A. Forty-four.

Q. Your residence?

A. 430 Neilson avenue.

Q. Business location?

A. 1922 Mariposa.

Q. How long have you been in your present business location?

A. I refuse to answer on the advice of counsel.

Q. Now, Mr. Hickman, you refuse to answer any more questions?

A. For the same reason, at this time.

Thereupon respondent served and filed "a written statement" to the effect that he had been accused of arson, and was about to be tried upon that charge; "that any material testimony which he might give at said examination would relate either to the amount, value, cost of, or extent of damage to the goods . . . or to the cause of the fire, . . . both of which questions are at issue in said criminal proceeding;" that the criminal charge had been initiated and was being prosecuted by H. M. Farrar, appellants' adjuster; that he (respondent) had been advised by counsel that any testimony given by him at any examination could and would be used against him on his trial for arson; that, by virtue of article 1, § 13, of the Constitution, he refused to submit to examination, or to produce any books or papers at that time; that he was ready "to stipulate and agree that he will" submit to examination "immediately after the conclusion of the said criminal prosecution, and immediately after the trial of said cause and verdict and judgment therein;" and that, if appellants or Farrar would cause the arson charge to be dismissed, he would submit to examination at any time. In reply the following statement was made by Farrar: "The insurance companies . . . refuse to accept Mr. Hickman's offer, . . . and further demand that he now submit to examination and furnish the books, bills, invoices, etc., heretofore demanded."

Whereupon respondent said: "I stand by my reasons given this morning and the course adopted this morning."

No other demand by appellants, or offer by respondents to submit to examination and produce the required books and papers, was made at any time.

The court found "that the examination of said plaintiff at said time [February 12] . . . would have had for its purpose inquiry into matters necessarily involved in a criminal prosecution; . . . that the course and conduct of said plaintiff in the matter of said hearing . . . were proper and right, and that he was justified in said course and conduct; that the plaintiff did comply with all . . . the terms and conditions of said policies; . . . and that he was justified in refusing to submit to an examination under oath at said time when said information and trial were pending."

The court justified respondent's refusal solely on the ground of his claim of privilege.

Appellants contend that respondent cannot recover because he "refused to submit to examination under oath, or to permit his books, or vouchers, or bills, or other papers concerning the property . . . to be inspected by the defendants herein, which refusal was in violation of the provisions of said policies;" further, "that the excuse given by plaintiff . . . has no merit, for the reason that in . . . § 1324 of the Penal Code it is expressly declared that no information which might be obtained from him on his examination . . . could be used against him in any criminal proceedings;" and that "the provision of the policies . . . is equivalent to a positive unconditional promise on the part of plaintiff that he will comply therewith, irrespective of how such compliance may affect him, and . . . his refusal would constitute such a violation . . . of the provision as would preclude him from instituting any action thereon."

Respondent's claim of privilege is thus stated in his brief: "A defendant on trial for his liberty has the right to refuse to submit to a private inquisition."

It is a fact, as already appears, that two days after respondent's refusal issue was joined on the criminal charge, and thereafter, until April 24, it was pending against him.

The validity of provisions of the character here under consideration has been frequently upheld. Gross v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 22 Fed. 74; Fleisch v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 58 Mo. App. 596; Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Sims, 115 Ga. 939, 42 S. E. 269; Pearlstone v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 70 S. C. 75, 49 S. E. 4; Southern Home Ins. Co. v. Putnal, 57 Fla. 199, 49 So. 922; Liverpool L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Cargill, 44 Okla. 735, 145 Pac. 1134; National F. Ins. Co. v. Humphreys, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 211 S. W. 811; Richards, Ins. Law, 416; 1 Clement, Fire Ins. 251; 5 Joyce, Ins. § 3330; 19 Cyc. 853; 4 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. 3395.

This rule is thus expressed in 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 358: "As the facts with respect to the amount and circumstances of a loss are almost entirely within the sole knowledge of the insured, and the opportunity and temptation to perpetrate a fraud upon the insurer is often great, it is necessary that it have some means of cross-examining, as it were, upon the written statements and proofs of the insured, for the purpose of getting at the exact facts before paying the sum claimed of it. Such considerations justify the provision universally to be met with in policies, requiring the insured, as often as demanded, to submit to an examination under oath touching all matters material to the adjustment of the loss, and provisions of that character are held to be reasonable and valid."

And in Ostrander on Fire Insurance, § 172, it is said: "The right to require the insured to submit to an examination under oath concerning all proper subjects of inquiry is clearly stipulated for in the form of policies now in general use. The intent of this provision is to prevent fraudulent concealment, and to enable the insurer to obtain material information in regard to the origin and circumstances of the fire, the value of the property, and the claimant's interest therein. The requirement is a reasonable one, and will often, no doubt, be useful in securing important and truthful disclosures that would otherwise be withheld, to the injury of the insurer. When the assured refuses to be examined under oath, he will forfeit all right to recover."

In Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. George, 52 Okla. 432, 153 Pac. 116, the court held: "There may be logic in plaintiff's argument that defendant was not conducting the examination in good faith, but the fact still remains that defendant was acting within the terms of an expressed stipulation found in the policy, which gave it the right to demand such an examination, and it is not for the insured to inquire into the motive actuating the company in exacting the examination, but on his part to comply therewith, and to answer all material questions, notwithstanding he might believe that the principal object of the company is to find a loophole whereby it might evade payment of the policy."

It was in Bonner v. Home Ins. Co. 13 Wis. 677, that the court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Dixon, said: "This action should have been dismissed because prematurely commenced; for, until examination was had, the losses were not, by the terms of the policy, due and payable."

And it was declared in Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594, that "to excuse nonperformance it must appear that the act to be done could not by any means have been accomplished."

It is to be noted that under the policies a loss was not payable until ninety days after the receipt by appellants of respondent's preliminary proofs of loss, and that no action on the policies should be sustained "unless begun within fifteen months next after the commencement of the fire." The latter period would have expired on February 28, 1917, and the action, as we have stated, was commenced the day before.

No case has been cited, and we are aware of none, where the constitutional immunity of an insured was urged as a ground for refusing to submit to examination, or to produce books and papers. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, and Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 Pac. 230, however, are cited by respondent in support of his failure to comply with the demand. In the first of these cases Counselman had been subpoenaed to appear before a Federal grand jury and give testimony concerning certain alleged violations of the Interstate Commerce Act (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, Comp. Stat. § 8563, 4 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 337). He refused to testify on the ground that any testimony he might give could be made the basis for a criminal prosecution against him under said act. Upon his continued refusal to testify he was committed for contempt, and he sued out a writ of habeas corpus. The supreme court, in discharging the petitioner, said: "It is impossible that the meaning of the constitutional provision can only be that a person shall not be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal prosecution against himself. It would doubtless cover such cases; but it is not limited to them. The object was to insure that a person should not be compelled, when acting as a witness in any investigation, to give testimony which might tend to show that he himself had committed a crime. . . . It is an ancient principle of the law of evidence that a witness shall not be compelled, in any proceeding, to make disclosures or to give testimony which will tend to criminate him or subject him to fines, penalties, or forfeitures." (Italics ours.)

The Clarke Case was also a proceeding in habeas corpus. The petitioner had been adjudicated an insolvent, and he was cited to appear before the superior court to be examined concerning his assignee's charge that he had fraudulently concealed property which should have been turned over to such assignee for the benefit of his creditors. Clark declined to testify "upon the ground that his answers might be made the foundation of a criminal action against him." He was committed for contempt, and in discharging him from custody this court, speaking through the late Chief Justice Beatty, said: "To bring a person within the immunity of this [the constitutional] provision, it is not necessary that the examination should be attempted in a criminal prosecution against the witness, or that such a prosecution should have been commenced and actually pending. It is sufficient if there is a law creating the offense under which the witness may be prosecuted. If there is such a law under which the witness may be indicted or otherwise prosecuted for a public offense arising out of the acts to which the examination relates, he cannot be compelled to answer in any collateral proceeding unless the law absolutely secures him against any use in a criminal prosecution of the evidence he may give."

And the court followed Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra.

But those and other authorities of similar import refer only to the attempted compulsion of a witness in a trial, either civil or criminal, a hearing or other lawful inquiry of a public nature. The compulsion secured against by the Constitution is a compulsion exercised by the state in its sovereign capacity in some manner known to the law. Constitutional immunity has no application to a private examination arising out of a contractual relationship. The examination to which appellants demanded respondent should submit was an extrajudicial proceeding, not authorized by any constitutional or statutory provision, but purely by virtue of a contract between the parties. To bring a case within the constitutional immunity, it must appear that compulsion was sought under public process of some kind. This being so, respondent's refusal to undergo examination and produce his books and papers acquires no sanctity because he urged his constitutional right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself. The demand was made upon him by virtue of the stipulation in the contract, and by the stipulation alone must his refusal be judged. The stipulation constituted a promissory warranty under which appellants had the right to demand compliance by respondent "as often as required," and the performance of such stipulation was a condition precedent to any right of action. No question was raised as to the sufficiency of the demand, or, aside from the claim of privilege, as to the reasonableness of the time and place designated in the demand. The obligation to perform the warranty was as binding on respondent as his obligation to pay the premiums on the policies. The respondent did not fulfil his obligation, and stands here as having recovered a judgment upon an express contract one of the conditions of which he has failed to perform; in other words, when he commenced this suit he was without a cause of action.

Witness—constitutional immunity—application to examination
under contract.

Insurance—right to enforce —refusal to submit to examination.

a cause of action.

Respondent cites certain cases holding that the right to demand the performance of the condition precedent must be exercised in a reasonable manner. Thus, in Thomas v. Burlington Ins. Co. 47 Mo. App. 169, and Gordon v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 197 Mich. 226, L.R.A. 1918E, 402, 163 N. W. 956, it was held under a similar stipulation that the insured was justified in insisting that his counsel be present at his examination and in refusing to be examined unless he were permitted to be present. In Phillips v. Protection Ins. Co. 14 Mo. 220, the court declared that the prevalence of a cholera epidemic at the place designated excused the nonattendance of the insured. Under a stipulation to submit to examination as often as required, and a special promise to reappear after the original examination, which the insured, after notice, failed to do, it was held in Porter v. Trades' Ins. Co. 164 N. Y. 504, 52 L.R.A. 424, 58 N. E. 641, that, because he was sufficiently examined at the first hearing, the insured was not in default. In all of these cases, however, the question was merely as to the reasonableness of the time, place, or mode of examination. No objection to the examination on any such ground was made here.

Respondent's offer of February 12, as we have seen, is twofold—an offer to comply with the demand after the charge of arson was dismissed, or at any time if appellants would cause such charge to be dismissed. The point is made that in view of this offer, which was a part of the respondent's refusal to submit to examination, the appellants, after the dismissal of the charge of arson, should have made a new demand upon the respondent for his examination, and that, such demand not having been made, he was not in default. But the respondent was already in default, as he had no right to refuse, on the ground stated, to submit to examination in the first instance. It may be that, if he himself had made an offer, after the criminal charge against him had been dismissed, to then and there submit to an examination, and such offer had been refused, his default would have been removed. But he did not so offer, and, since he was in default, the appellants were under no obligation themselves to reopen the matter.

It may be conceded that the position in which respondent found himself between February 12 and April —demand after dismissal of indictment.

(184 Cal. 524, 195 Pac. 45.)

24 was one of difficulty, but it was a difficulty created by the contract he made. It has been said that "mere hardship or difficulty will not excuse a party from carrying out a contract; and, where one contracts to do any act which is possible, he is liable for a breach, even though circumstances arise, without his fault, making it difficult, or even impossible, for him to perform. Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527, 8 Mor. Min. Rep. 672; Ballance v. Vanuxem, 191 Ill. 319, 61 N. E. 85; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L.R.A. 33, 38 N. E. 773. The breach of this contract by appellants relieved the other parties from performance on their part. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 150, and cases there cited." Ptacek v. Pisa, 231 Ill. 522, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 537, 83 N. E. 221.

And it was declared in Bastian v. British American Assur. Co. 143 Cal. 287, 66 L.R.A. 255, 77 Pac. 63: "If the insured cannot bring himself within the terms and conditions of the policy, he cannot recover. The terms of the policy constitute the measure of the insurer's liability. If it appears that the contract has been violated, and thus terminated by the assured, he cannot recover. He seeks to recover by reason of a contract, and he must show that he has complied with such contract on his part."

See also Smoot's Case, 15 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 107. Also Roses's U. S. Notes.

It follows that the conclusion of law that respondent's refusal to submit to examination and produce his books and papers, on the ground of his constitutional immunity, was "justified, . . . proper, and right," is erroneous, and that upon the findings of fact as to his refusal judgment should have gone for the appellants. This renders it unnecessary to consider appellants' other contentions that the evidence is not sufficient to support either the finding that respondent was not implicated in causing the fire, or the finding that the gasoline was brought on the premises without his knowledge or consent, or to pass on their assignments of error to numerous rulings on evidence.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of the defendants.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Shaw, J.; Wilbur, J.; Lennon, J.; Olney, J.; Sloane, J.

ANNOTATION.

Constitutional immunity against giving incriminating testimony as affecting contractual stipulation to submit to examination.

The reported case (HICKMAN v. LONDON ASSUR. CORP. ante, 742), apparently, is the only one to have passed upon the question under consideration herein, but the holding to the effect that the constitutional immunity from being a witness against oneself does not absolve one who has suffered a loss under a fire insurance policy from complying with the provisions of the contract requiring him to submit to examination, although he is under indictment for arson for burning the property, based as it is upon the theory that the constitutional immunity only applies to hearings or inquisitions of a public nature, and that he could not, in an extrajudicial proceeding, be excused from complying with his contract—seems to be in accord with the better reasoning.

A somewhat analogous situation as regards facts is found in Aachen & M. F. Ins. Co. v. Arabian Toilet Goods Co. (1914) 10 Ala. App. 395, 64 So. 635. This was an action on a fire insurance policy, in which the insurer claimed that the insured had burned the property, and also set up that he had refused to submit to examination, as required by the provisions of the policy. The case, however, does not show the ground for refusal to submit to examination, but the conclusion of the court was that the refusal necessarily suspended any right of recovery until compliance with the terms of the policy.

And, as a matter of fact, there would seem to be no question that the holding in the HICKMAN CASE, to the effect that the insured cannot recover unless his constitutional immunity from giving incriminating evidence excused his refusal to be examined, is correct, since it is well settled that, as a general rule, such a requirement in a policy of insurance is valid, and that a refusal to comply with the condition precludes recovery. As illustrative of the class of cases which so hold, see Gordon v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1917) 197 Mich. 226, L.R.A. 1918E, 402, 163 N. W. 956 (especially if the refusal is without cause); Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. George (1915) 52 Okla. 432, 153 Pac. 116 (refusal to answer was on the ground that the questions did not pertain to the matter under consideration);

Tucker v. Colonial F. Ins. Co. (1905) 58 W. Va. 30, 51 S. E. 86 (holding that compliance with the condition is a condition precedent to suit); and Riley v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1917) 80 W. Va. 236, L.R.A.1917E, 983, 92 S. E. 417 (holding same as precedent case). And see 19 Cyc. 853, and cases cited in the opinion in the reported case (HICKMAN v. LONDON ASSUR. CORP.).

A case which, perhaps, goes as far as any in extending the constitutional immunity from giving incriminating testimony, is Kanter v. Clerk of Circuit Ct. (1908) 108 Ill. App. 287, wherein the court said: "The constitutional exemption from compulsion in this regard extends to all proceedings sanctioned by law. Neither civil nor criminal courts, quasi judicial tribunals, grand juries, commissioners, courts-martial, or inquisitors of any kind, can compel a person to give evidence which may tend to convict him of a criminal offense." It will be noted, however, that even this decision does not reach the question presented in the HICKMAN CASE. G. J. C.

WALTER P. STORY

v.

FRIEND WILLIAM RICHARDSON, State Treasurer.

California Supreme Court (In Banc)—June 15, 1921.

(— Cal. —, 198 Pac. 1057.)

Public utility — what is — statutory definition.

1. The supplying by the owner of an office building of electric energy to his tenants and to a few occupants of neighboring buildings does not render his plant a public utility under a statute providing that anyone who generates and distributes electricity to the public, or any portion thereof, for any compensation or payment whatsoever, is a public utility.

[See note on this question beginning on page 764.]

Constitutional law — construction — meaning of terms.

2. Where terms of a constitutional provision are not entirely free from doubt, they must be interpreted as nearly as possible in consonance with the objects and purposes in contemplation at the time of their adoption.

[See 6 R. C. L. 50; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 10.]

— matters to be considered.

3. In construing the provisions of a Constitution the court may consider conditions existing prior to and at the time of the adoption of the provision under consideration, the debates in the constitutional convention, and the printed arguments for and against the provision submitted to the people at the polls.

[See 6 R. C. L. 51, 67; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 14, 15.]

Tax — gross receipts — public utility.

4. A constitutional provision for the taxation of the gross receipts of carriers, gas and electric companies, insurance companies, banks, and trust companies is limited to public utilities.

— public utility — electric plant in office building.

5. The owner of an office building maintaining within it a plant to furnish electricity to its occupants, and selling a small surplus to occupants of neighboring property, is not operating a public utility within the meaning of a constitutional provision providing for taxation of the gross receipts of such utility.

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sacramento County (Shields, J.) in favor of plaintiff, in part only, in an action brought to have a certain assessment declared null and void, and to recover the amount of a tax paid by plaintiff under protest, pursuant to said assessment; plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as taxed him as a public utility, and defendant appealing from the judgment in favor of plaintiff. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Amend & Amend for plaintiff.

Messrs. U. S. Webb, Attorney General, and Frank L. Guereña for defendant.

Lennon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought for the purpose of having an assessment declared null and void, and to recover from the treasurer of the state of California the amount of tax paid by plaintiff pursuant to said assessment, and under protest.

The plaintiff, Walter P. Story, is the owner of a twelve-story office building in the city of Los Angeles, in the sub-basement of which are located three 125 horse-power boilers, pumping engines, lighting engines, vacuum-sweeper engines, a hot-water heater, filtering machinery, house pumps, etc. This machinery and equipment were placed in the building at the time of its construction, for the purpose of supplying the tenants occupying the building with light, heat, hot water, and elevator and cleaning service, and have ever since been so used. During the year 1916, in addition to furnishing such service to the tenants of the building, plaintiff supplied electrical energy and steam to certain individuals, some of whom were not tenants of the Walter P. Story building, but occupied property in the vicinity of that building.

The terms of these sales were arranged by private contract between plaintiff and purchasers; plaintiff possessed no franchise, and neither the operation of the plant nor the sales in question were regulated in any manner by any public utility commission or body. The state board of equalization levied a tax upon the said machinery and equipment in plaintiff's building equal to 5.6 per cent of the gross sums received from the special sales of electrical energy and steam for the year 1916, which gross returns amounted to $6,040.13 and $7,618.77, respectively. Plaintiff claims that this taxation was unauthorized, and that he is entitled to recover the amount thereof. The trial court held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the tax based upon the gross sales of electrical energy, but that the tax based upon the gross sales of steam was without authority, and void. Plaintiff and defendant have each appealed from those portions of the judgment which are adverse to them.

Section 14 of article 13 of the Constitution of California provides: "Taxes levied, assessed and collected as hereinafter provided upon railroads, . . . car companies, . . . companies doing express business on any railroad, steamboat, vessel or stage line in this state; telegraph companies; telephone companies; companies engaged in the transmission or sale of gas or electricity; insurance companies; banks, banking associations, savings and loan societies, and trust companies; and taxes upon all franchises of every kind and nature, shall be entirely and exclusively for state purposes, and shall be levied, assessed and collected in the manner hereinafter provided. The word 'companies' as used in this section shall include persons. . . .

Subdivision "a" of this section of the Constitution provides that the railroads, car companies, express companies, telegraph companies, and gas and electric companies previously mentioned shall annually pay a tax upon the property used exclusively in the operation of their business in this state; the amount of which tax shall equal certain percentages of the gross receipts of said companies; and that "such taxes shall be in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, state, county and municipal, upon the property above enumerated of such companies except as otherwise in this section provided."

Defendant claims that this section of the Constitution confers upon the state the power to levy upon plaintiff's property the tax assailed in the instant case. Controverting this contention, plaintiff asserts that the section permits the state to tax the property of only those companies or persons engaged in the transmission or sale of electricity, operating as public utilities, and that plaintiff is not a public utility, and therefore not taxable under the section.

Where terms of a constitutional provision are not entirely free from doubt, they must be interpreted as nearly as possible in consonance with the objects and purposes in contemplation at the time of their adoption.

Accordingly it has been held, in aid of the interpretation of such terms, that the court may consider conditions existing prior to and at the time of the adoption of the provision under consideration, the debates in a constitutional convention, and the printed arguments for and against the provision submitted to the people at the polls. Re Russell, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152; Older v. Superior Ct. 157 Cal. 770, 109 Pac. 478; Pacific Gas & E. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 180 Cal. 497, 501, 181 Pac. 788, 19 N. C. C. A. 298. The provision of the Constitution here under consideration was adopted by the people of the state at the election of November, 1910, as the result of a movement to separate state and local taxation. In 1905 a commission was authorized to investigate the system of revenue and taxation in force in this state, and recommended a revision thereof. Stat. 1905, p. 390. The commission appointed proposed an amendment to the Constitution. Report of the Commission on Revenue and Taxation of the State of California, 1906, vol. II., Appendix to Journals of Senate and Assembly of California, Session 1907. In 1910, after some alterations the Amendment was submitted to the people, and adopted by them. The Amendment as adopted was fundamentally the same as that proposed by the commission in its report in 1906, and that report may, therefore, be considered in determining the meaning of doubtful provisions. The commission recommended a separation of the sources of state and county revenue, and that the property of certain "public utilities" and certain "other corporations," namely, banks and insurance companies, be taxed solely for the benefit of the state.

The theory of the report was that an ad valorem system of taxation was unsatisfactory, in that it failed to distribute equally the burden of taxation, particularly in view of the fact that, in certain cases, such as public utilities, banks, and insurance companies, the greatest value lay in the extent and nature of opera-

Constitutional law—construction—meaning of terms.

(— Cal. —, 198 Pac. 1057.)

tion rather than in the intrinsic worth of separate items of property. Accordingly, a uniform scheme was proposed for the taxation of certain enumerated public utilities, including electrical companies, and that system was that the tax should equal a certain percentage of gross receipts; special methods were prescribed for the taxation of banks and insurance companies. Throughout the report electrical companies were classified and discussed as one group of "public utilities" to be taxed upon gross receipts. In the printed arguments submitted to the voters in 1910, at the time the constitutional Amendment was voted upon, the "gross receipts" method of taxation was advocated solely for public utilities. It is clear, both from the report of the commission proposing the Amendment, and the arguments advanced to those voting upon the adoption of the Amendment, as well as from the nature of the Amendment, that the provision for taxation in proportion to gross receipts is applicable only to public utilities. In discussing the Amendment, the cases have generally assumed that the tax upon Tax—gross receipts—public utility. gross receipts was limited to public utilities, although the precise question has never before been presented for decision. San Francisco v. Pacific Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 166 Cal. 244, 247, 135 Pac. 971; Pacific Gas & E. Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 420, 143 Pac. 700.

Plaintiff is also correct in his contention that he is not a public utility "engaged in the transmission or sale of . . . electricity," within the —public utility—electric plant in office building. meaning of said § 14 of article 13 of the state Constitution.

He is not engaged in the sale and distribution of electricity to the public at large, or any portion thereof, as such. It appears that plaintiff furnished electrical energy under special contract to certain occupants of his own building, and to the occupants of an adjoining building.

18 A.L.R.—48.

This was the extent of his special sales of electrical energy.

"The test . . . is . . . whether the public has a legal right to the use, which cannot be gainsaid, or denied, or withdrawn, at the pleasure of the owner." Farmers' Market Co. v. Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 142 Pa. 580, 21 Atl. 990.

"The essential feature of a public use is that it is not confined to privileged individuals, but is open to the indefinite public. It is this indefiniteness or unrestricted quality that gives it its public character." Thayer v. California Development Co. 164 Cal. 117, 127, 128 Pac. 25.

There was no such general offer on the part of plaintiff. Plaintiff's plant was designed primarily and pre-eminently for supplying service to the tenants of his own building, and the special sales of electrical energy and steam were wholly subsidiary and ancillary to this main purpose. The surplus electrical energy at plaintiff's disposal was therefore so limited as to restrict the sale thereof to exceptional cases, and prevent the indefinite offer of service essential to a public use.

Defendant claims that, notwithstanding plaintiff's restricted operation, he comes within the term "public utility" as defined by the "Public Utilities Act" of this state. That act provides that anyone who generates or distributes electricity to the public, or any portion thereof, for any compensation or payment whatsoever, is a public utility, subject to the provisions of that act. The same act defines "public, or any portion thereof," as "the public generally, or any limited portion of the public, including a person." Stat. 1915, pp. 115, 118, 119.

"Even a constitutional declaration cannot transform a private enterprise, or a part thereof, into a public utility, and thus take property for public use without condemnation and payment." Del Mar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 680, 140 Pac. 596.

Consequently, it has been held that the definitions of public utilities contained in the Public Utilities Act must be construed as applying only to such properties as have, in fact, been devoted to a public use, and not as an effort to impress with a public use properties which have not been devoted thereto. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 88, 8 A.L.R. 249, P.U.R.1919A, 398, 175 Pac. 466. Inasmuch as plain-

Public utility—what is—statutory definition.

tiff's property was employed solely in a private enterprise, the consummation of the special sales did not bring him within the scope of the definition contained in the act.

Since § 14, article 13, of the Constitution, was designed to authorize state taxation in proportion to gross receipts only in the case of public utilities, and plaintiff is not operating as a "public utility," his property is not taxable thereunder. It follows that the tax based upon gross sales of electricity was without authority, and void. It therefore becomes unnecessary to pass upon the point raised by the state treasurer in his appeal, namely, that the sales of steam were taxable as a by-product of the business in electricity, and that the trial court erred in holding void the tax based upon gross receipts from sales of steam.

The trial court found that plaintiff was not furnishing the commodities of electricity and steam as a public service concern. Therefore, with the exception of the single conclusion of law to the effect that the tax based upon plaintiff's gross sales of electrical energy for the year 1916 was valid, the findings of the trial court are in accordance with the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and will support the judgment wholly in his favor. That portion of the judgment which declares that plaintiff recover nothing from defendant on account of the tax based upon the sales of electrical energy is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring the said tax void, and that plaintiff recover the amount thereof. That portion of the judgment which grants plaintiff a recovery on account of the tax based upon the sales of steam is affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Sloane, J.; Lawlor, J.; Olney, J.; Shaw, J.; Wilbur, J.

NOTE.

The effect of rendering incidental service to members of the public to render an individual or corporation, whose principal business is of a different nature, a public utility, is the subject of the annotation following STATE EX REL. M. O. DANCINGER & Co. v. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, post, 764.

STATE OF MISSOURI EX REL. M. O. DANCIGER & COMPANY, Respt.,

v.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION of Missouri et al., Appts.

Missouri Supreme Court (Division No. 2)—July 10, 1918.

(275 Mo. 483, 205 S. W. 86.)

Public service corporation — what is — sale of by-product.

1. A president of a corporation which undertakes to furnish surplus electric current generated by the corporation for use in its plant, to the owners of neighboring property, who string their own wires, and to the city for a few lights, is not, where the corporation has no charter authority or franchise to sell electricity, a public utility, subject to regulation by the public service commission.

[See note on this question beginning on page 764.]

— discontinuance of service — reason.

2. The reason for discontinuance of a supply of electricity to a customer is immaterial in a proceeding to compel its restoration because furnished by a public utility.

— absence of charter authority — effect.

3. Absence of charter authority to furnish public service is immaterial in a proceeding to enforce service by a corporation as a public utility.

APPEAL by the Public Service Commission and complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County (Burney, J.) annulling an order of the Commission for restoration by relator of electrical current to complainant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. A. Z. Patterson, James D. Lindsay, and B. Denny Davis, for appellant Commission:

The nature and extent of the business done by relator constitute it a public service company.

Terminal Taxicab Co. v. Kutz, 241 U. S. 252, 60 L. ed. 984, P.U.R.1916D, 972, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 765; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L.R.A.1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Ratcliff v. Wichita Union Stock Yards Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, and note, 74 Kan. 1, 118 Am. St. Rep. 298, 86 Pac. 150, 10 Ann. Cas. 1016; VanDyke v. Geary, 244 U. S. 39, 61 L. ed. 978, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; Del Mar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948; State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 575, 42 L.R.A. 113, 46 S. W. 981; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; 1 Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. § 50.

It is not necessary that a company should serve all of the public to give it the character of a public utility.

Terminal Taxicab Co. v. Kutz, 241 U. S. 255, 60 L. ed. 986, P.U.R.1916D, 972, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 975; Peck v. Tribune Co. 214 U. S. 185, 190, 53 L. ed. 960, 963, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554, 16 Ann. Cas. 1075; Cawker v. Meyer, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W. 157.

The business of furnishing electric current for light and power within a city is one of that large class of concerns which has always been held to be a business clothed with a public interest, and to be subject to regulation by the public.

Ratcliff v. Wichita Union Stockyards Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, note.

Messrs. I. J. Ringolsky and M. L. Friedman, for respondent:

Under the facts and the law relator is not a public utility.

State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 89 Wash. 599, L.R.A.1918C, 675, P.U.R.1916D, 469, 154 Pac. 1110; State Pub. Utilities Commission ex rel. Wabash R. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 274 Ill. 36, 113 N. E. 162; Cawker v. Meyer, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W. 157; Delmar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948.

Assuming, arguendo, that relator is a public utility, the Public Service Commission had no jurisdiction in instant cases.

Lusk v. Atkinson, 268 Mo. 109, 186 S. W. 703; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, — Mo. —, P.U.R.1917C, 1005, 192 S. W. 460; Sessinghaus v. St. Louis Merchants Bridge Terminal Co. 2 Mo. P. S. C. 690, P.U.R.1916B, 1004; Missouri Valley Realty Co. v. Cupples Station Light, Heat & P. Co. 2 Mo. P. S. C. 1; State ex rel. Payne v. Kinloch Teleph. Co. 98 Mo. App. 349, 67 S. W. 684; State ex rel. Shewalter v. Jones, 141 Mo. App. 299, 125 S. W. 1169; State ex rel. Jacobs v. Water, Light & Transit Co. 249 Mo. 649, 155 S. W. 826, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 452; Public Service Electric Co. v. Public Utility Comrs. 88 N. J. L. 603, P.U.R.1916D, 107, 96 Atl. 1013.

Faris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the Public Service Commission and others from a judgment of the circuit court of Jackson county, annulling an order of the Public Service Commission (hereinafter called for brevity simply "Commission") in a case wherein one W. H. Roach was complainant. After the conventional motions, the Commission and the complainant appealed.

This case is one of three of similar character and bottomed upon identically similar facts. The relief severally sought was an order upon M. O. Danciger (trading as M. O. Danciger & Company), to compel him to restore electric service to the complainants, which service, it was alleged, had been by said Danciger cut off without any legal excuse therefor. The complaints filed before the Commission by the three several complainants were similar in all substantial respects, and wholly similar, except that the complaint filed in the instant case averred as a motive for the cutting off of the service that discontinuance was due to ill feeling engendered by the attitude of complainant in a local option election.

It was shown by the testimony adduced upon the hearing before the Commission that the Royal Brewing Company, situate at Weston, Missouri, is a corporation the stock of which is largely, if not wholly, owned by respondent, M. O. Danciger, and his brothers. The Royal Brewing Company is engaged in the brewing of beer and in the manufacture of so-called soft drinks. The town of Weston contained, according to the last census, a population of 1,019 persons, though the evidence adduced tends to show roughly that it now contains about 1,500 population. Some six years before the hearing, the Royal Brewing Company (hereinafter called for brevity the "Company") installed in its brewing plant the necessary machinery for producing electric light solely for its own use in lighting its property. During the last three or four years preceding the hearing before the Commission, the Company has also been using the electric current so generated for the purpose of operating by electricity a large part of the machinery used in its brewing business. Shortly after the Company put in its private electric plant, it discovered that it was able to produce more electricity than was necessary for its own use in lighting and running its plant. It thereupon began to make special private contracts to furnish, under the conditions and circumstances below named, electricity for lighting and power purposes to certain private citizens of the town of Weston, located within a radius of three blocks of the Company's plant. Subsequently it began furnishing to the town of Weston lights for some of the streets and alleys thereof. At the time of the filing of this complaint, between twenty and thirty of the business houses and some ten residences, within the area mentioned, were being lighted, or partially lighted, by electricity from the Company's plant.

At this time the city was being furnished thirty or thirty-two lights, for which it paid, for only five or six of these, the sum of $19.50 per month. The remainder of the lights were furnished gratuitously. All of the electrical energy sold is delivered to consumers at the Company's plant, for, says one of the complainants, "we were told if we would run the line we could have the service." The Company has no distribution system for supplying any of these private persons, nor is it incorporated for this purpose, nor is this purpose mentioned among the things which as a corporation it may do, nor has it a franchise from the town of Weston as an electric lighting company, or any other permission to enter or cross the streets and alleys thereof. It does not itself place or construct any poles or wires upon the streets, alleys, or public places of the city, nor does it own any poles or wires. The consumer desiring the surplus light or power furnishes his wire and poles, and bears all cost of constructing the line for transmitting the electric current from the Company's plant to the place of consumption, or he "taps in" on some other private owner's wire. The actual work of construction and installation is usually done, if not always, by employees of the Company, in which case the Company is reimbursed by the private consumer. In some instances the contracts for this installation were made directly with the employees themselves, and the work was done after working hours. In some cases the amount of current consumed is measured by a meter, which meter belongs to the consumer; and in others—the greater number of cases—the amount paid is governed by a flat rate.

The sale of the surplus current, although it is generated by the Company and with the Company's machinery, is conducted with consumers by respondent, under the said tradename of "M. O. Danciger & Company." The reason for this arrangement was, upon the hearing, without any contradiction thereof, thus explained by respondent: "The brewery didn't have a right to go into the lighting business, and I took it up with my brothers, and they said, 'If you have got any friends you want to serve, you had better [not] serve them from the brewery company as a corporation; and that is how I happened to start this M. O. Danciger & Company. I got a little set of books at that time. I didn't really know what they were paying for their lights. Some of them were on flat rates, and every time a man would go around to collect, they would say their next door neighbor's bill wasn't as big as theirs, and you must not be charging him as much per kilowatt as you are me. Then I had this form printed they offered in evidence, and gave them around a time or two as receipts. That is how that form happened to be printed, to keep down arguments."

The complainant Roach is the owner of a weekly newspaper published in Weston, called the "Weston Herald." About a year or a year and a half before the matters here in controversy arose, complainant bought this paper and printing plant from one Taylor. Power and lights were then being furnished by the Company through respondent, upon the arrangement above set out, to Taylor, and after complainant's purchase of the newspaper the service was continued until June 7, 1916, when the wires were suddenly cut by Danciger, without prior notice, and the service discontinued. Upon demand made for reinstatement of the service, and upon refusal thereof, this proceeding was brought.

The printed form of receipt, mentioned by respondent as having been given by him "a time or two as receipts" to his customers, contained on the reverse thereof a statement of the rates to be charged customers for current furnished for lights. No reference was made in definite kilowatts to rates for motor service, but the printed form of receipt contained on the back thereof the statement, "Special rates for motors upon application." We mention this specifically, because much importance is attached to it by appellants. So far as the record shows, these rates were not contained on any receipt after October 15, 1915, and were given out only once or twice, to customers only, prior to that time. No receipt issued after October 15, 1915, contained mention anywhere of the rates charged, or of any special rate for motors.

The area of three blocks from the Company's plant is all of the town of Weston which was given any service, and not nearly all of the residences and businesses in this area have this service. The district within three blocks of the plant comprises only about one fifth of the town of Weston, since the Company's plant is situate on the extreme edge of the town. The record discloses that a number of persons, both within the area of three blocks, and without the same, made requests for service, and were refused, because respondent was, he says, unable to furnish this service by reason of lack of surplus current.

There are no contracts in writing with any of the customers of respondent. The arrangement for furnishing the five or six lights to the city, for which the city pays, was made verbally, and is thus related by a witness who was a member of the board of aldermen when this arrangement was made: "I spoke to Mr. Danciger about it, and he said he had no franchise or anything, and I asked him, as a favor, if he would not permit us to put a few lights down town. Our lights were bad. He said, 'Well, if you stretch your own wires and be responsible for the upkeep'—that he was not to be responsible for any damage or anything—that he would furnish a few lights. . . . Said, 'Of course, sometimes they go out.' So we put in at that time about three lights, and then, after we got by the fire department, he put a light on the bridge. He wired the fire department gratis. . . . The final arrangement was just made between me and Mr. Danciger. Then I took it up with the council, and told him we were willing. . . . I asked him if he would come down to the council, and he did. . . . He said he could not guarantee us any service, any more than he would do the best he could. He could not guarantee us any service for any length of time, or anything. He said, and I knew it to be a fact, that his generator was there for his own use for lighting."

Fairly construed, the testimony of Danciger corroborates this witness, and no one contradicts him. Upon the trial, respondent, testifying for himself, was asked to state his reason for cutting off the service from the complainant. His answer was this: "The first reason was that I wasn't holding myself out as a light company; that I was ruining my machinery; that I was running at a loss at the plant. I have electric-driven machinery that I wasn't able to use, using steam machinery that cost twice or three times the amount of money to operate; and another reason was that these men who were using the current were the last men that got the service. That was another reason. The third reason was that I was furnishing these people current at a loss, doing it as a favor, and they were abusing me personally, and trying to destroy the business I had,—all I had in the world,—and I didn't feel any too friendly. Those are the different reasons for cutting off that current."

The Commission, after taking voluminous testimony in the case, made a report in which it held that respondent was conducting a public utility, that he owed the duty of serving complainant, and that the discontinuance of the service was without reasonable excuse, and thereupon entered an order that the service be restored. From this order respondent herein took the case, by the statutory writ of review or certiorari, to the circuit court of Jackson county, wherein, upon a hearing de novo, the order of the Commission was annulled. Thereupon the Commission and the complainant, Roach, appealed.

Much of the record in the case is taken up in an effort to prove and disprove the wholly irrelevant matter of motive. It was strenuously contended at the hearing, in the briefs, and upon argument, that the cutting off of service to this complainant was wholly due to ill feeling, arising from the arid attitude of the complainant and his newspaper in a local option election. It is too plain for argument that we are not to determine this matter on a consideration of the antecedent reasons which brought about this proceeding. Whether the action complained of was brought about by reasons which, in morals, are just or unjust, good or bad, is no concern of the courts, and cannot in the remotest way affect the law of this case. This is so because, if complainant is entitled to service, he is entitled to it as a matter of law; and, if he is not under the law entitled to it, no motive, however reprehensible, for discontinuing the service, will serve as a reason for any court to compel the restoration thereof. It is but remotely apposite on the point whether the local option question, or a lack of facilities to furnish the service, constituted the dominating motive; for, if respondent is a "public utility," neither excuse will serve, because the Commission has power to compel him to provide reasonable and adequate facilities. If he is not such utility, no excuse is necessary. It is, therefore, but to pad the case with immaterial irrelevancies, to take up the time of counsel, and of this court, with such questions.

Public service corporation—discontinuance of service—reason.

There is but one question in the case. That is a question of law, and is, to wit: Is M. O. Danciger, trading as M. O. Danciger & Company, engaged in doing such business as by law permits the regulation thereof by the Public Service Commission Act?

In this connection we may mention, in passing, respondent contends that M. O. Danciger & Company cannot be compelled to furnish the service in question, because, since the electric current used is obtained from the brewery company, which is a corporation, the result of such an order would be tantamount to, and result in, forcing the company to do an ultra vires act. Upon this contention, even if it were vital here, it is enough to say that, in determining whether a corporation is or is not a public utility, the important thing is not what its charter says it may do, but what it actually does. Terminal Taxicab Co. v. Kutz, 241 U. S. 252, 60 L. ed. 984, P.U.R.1916D, 972, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 765. In short, if the things done constitute the corporation a public service company, it ought not to be, and will not be, heard to urge its own wrongful aggressions in order to escape regulation.

Moreover, the corporation is not a party to this proceeding. Complainant saw fit to concede, in electing to sue M. O. Danciger & Company, that the latter, and not the brewery company, constitutes the alleged public service entity, and that the explanation of Danciger as to the relations between the Brewery Company and M. O. Danciger & Company is true.

It is contended by appellants that the whole question is settled by subdivisions 12 and 13 of § 2 of the Public Service Commission Act, which define an "electric plant" and an "electric corporation," over which plants and aggregations, as defined, other appropriate provisions of this act (subdivision 25, § 2, p. 560, Laws 1913), confer plenary powers of regulation. The above clauses read thus:

"The term 'electric plant,' when used in this act, includes all real estate, fixtures and personal property operated, controlled, owned, used or to be used for or in connection with or to facilitate the generation, transmission, distribution, sale or furnishing of electricity for light, heat or power; and any conduits, ducts or other devices, materials, apparatus or property for containing, holding or carrying conductors used or to be used for the transmission of electricity for light, heat or power."

"The term 'electrical corporation,' when used in this act, includes every corporation, company, association, joint stock company or association, partnership and person, their lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever (other than a railroad or street railroad corporation generating electricity solely for railroad or street railroad purposes or for the use of its tenants and not for sale to others) owning, operating, controlling or managing any electric plant except where electricity is generated or distributed by the producer solely on or through private property for railroad or street railroad purposes or for its own use or the use of its tenants and not for sale to others."

While the definitions quoted supra —absence of charter

authority—effect.

express therein no word of public use, or necessity that the sale of the electricity be to the public, it is apparent that the words "for public use" are to be understood and to be read therein. State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 89 Wash. 599, L.R.A. 1918C, 675, P.U.R.1916D, 469, 154 Pac. 1110. For the operation of the electric plant must of necessity be for a public use, and therefore be coupled with a public interest; otherwise the Commission can have no authority whatever over it. The electric plant must, in short, be devoted to a public use before it is subject to public regulation. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. Since the sole right of regulation depends upon the public interest, the subdivisions quoted above, and which define an electric plant and an electric corporation, mean the same, whether the idea of a public use is expressly written therein or not; it is, nevertheless, of necessity, connoted and to be understood therein. We are not to be understood as saying that an electric plant constructed solely for private use could not, by professing public service, become by such profession, and by the furnishing of general public service, a public utility.

There is in this case no explicit professing of public service, or undertaking to furnish lights or power to the whole public, or even to all persons in that restricted portion thereof who reside within three blocks of the Company's plant; for there is in the case neither existence nor assertion of the right of eminent domain. Nor does there exist any franchise or license, nor has there been obtained from the town of Weston any right or privilege to cross the streets, alleys, or other public places therein, nor are there any charter powers authorizing the Company, or the respondent, to engage in the public service. The fact of professing public service—that is, of holding himself or the Company out as ready and willing to serve the public—must, therefore, in order to hold respondent, be deduced implicitly, if it is to be found in this record at all.

It is certainly fundamental that the business done by respondent either constitutes him a "public utility," or it does not. If he is a public utility, he is such within the whole purview, and for all inquisitorial and regulatory purposes of the Public Service Commission Act. If, therefore, what respondent did constitutes him a public utility, other apposite sections of the law confer upon the Commission the power of compelling him to furnish and provide such "instrumentalities and facilities as shall be safe and adequate to furnish service." Laws 1913, § 68, p. 602. Still other provisions would seem to confer upon the Commission the power to compel service as to all residences, businesses, and purposes within a radius of three blocks from the Company's plant. Certainly so much could be compelled by orders of the Commission. Absent the matter of franchise, it is possible, we suggest arguendo, that plenary authority exists, if respondent be a public utility, to compel the furnishing of the service to the entire town of Weston. The plant is now running at its full capacity, and if any considerable extension of the service thereof were ordered, extensive and expensive additions of machinery to the plant must likewise be ordered. In order to afford such service to the whole town, or even to all persons within the three-block area, the respondent would be compelled to obtain from the town of Weston a franchise permitting him to erect poles and wires along and across the public streets and alleys thereof. In an analogous case we have said that the Commission cannot compel a public utility to do a thing wherein the obtaining of a franchise is a condition precedent. State ex rel. United R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 270 Mo. loc. cit. 442, P.U.R. 1917D, 752, 192 S. W. 958, 198 S. W. 872.

In the light of these considerations, does the business of respondent constitute him a public utility, within the meaning of the Public Service Commission Act? We are of opinion that it does not; for, as forecast above, state regulation of private property can be had only

*—what is—sale of
by-product.*

pursuant to the police power, which power is bottomed on, and wholly dependent upon, the devotion of private property to a public use. If the requirement that the private property shall be devoted to a public use before it can be regulated, and before inquisitorial authority be exercised over it, is not to be read into the applicatory law, then that law is obviously unconstitutional, because it takes private property for public use without compensation.

The precise question before us is one of first impression in this jurisdiction. It has been up before the courts but few times in any jurisdiction. It has been up recently before the public service commissions of the several states a number of times. The holdings of the courts thereon, while not absolutely unanimous, have been usually against the contentions of the appellants here (Cawker v. Meyer, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W. 157; Del Mar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshelman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948; State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 89 Wash. 599, L.R.A.1918C, 675, P.U.R.1916D, 469, 154 Pac. 1110; Brown v. Gerald, 100 Me. 351, 70 L.R.A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526, 61 Atl. 785; Minnesota Canal & P. Co. v. Koochiching Co. 97 Minn. 429, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 638, 107 N. W. 405, 7 Ann. Cas. 1182; Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. 75 Vt. 235, 59 L.R.A. 817, 98 Am. St. Rep. 818, 54 Atl. 179; Fallsburg Power & Mfg. Co. v. Alexander, 101 Va. 98, 61 L.R.A. 129, 99 Am. St. Rep. 855, 43 S. E. 194; 1 Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. § 243), while a very few of the courts, and the public service commissions rather unanimously, have held to the contrary (Wingrove v. Public Service Commission, 74 W. Va. 190, 81 S. E. 734, and cases cited in L.R.A. 1918A, 210). After a careful examination of the cases, Mr. Wyman, in his excellent work on Public Service Corporations, at the section cited supra, says: "That the business of supplying gas is public in character is now universally recognized, provided that the company supplying is committed to supplying gas to the community in general. But the case can be imagined of an institution with a generating plant for its own supply, which might even supply one neighbor, without being obliged to sell to all others. In the same way the business of supplying electrical energy has generally been recognized as public in character. There are, however, several cases where the company supplying electricity has not professed to sell to the public indiscriminately at regular rates, but has from the beginning adopted the policy of entering into special contracts upon its own terms; such companies are plainly engaged in private business."

In the late case of Cawker v. Meyer, supra, the supreme court of Wisconsin said: "The state claims that by furnishing heat, light, and power to the tenants of their own building the plaintiffs became a public utility; that the furnishing of such commodities to anyone else than to oneself is furnishing it to the public within the meaning of the statute. It is obvious that such a construction is too narrow, for it would constitute the owner of every building furnishing heat or light to tenants, as well as every householder who rents a heated or lighted room, a public utility. The legislature never contemplated such a construction to be given the words 'public utility.' They must receive a construction that will effectuate the evident intent of the legislature, and not one that will lead to a manifest absurdity. It was not the furnishing of heat, light, or power to tenants, or, incidentally, to a few neighbors, that the legislature sought to regulate, but the furnishing of those commodities to the public;" that is, to whoever might require the same. Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Pier, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 538, 118 N. W. 857.

In the case of Del Mar Water, Light, & P. Co. v. Eshelman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948, it was held that even a water company, which was organized to furnish water to certain owners of town lots, which had been theretofore sold to such owners by a land company to which the Del Mar Company was an ancillary corporation, had the right to restrict its service to such lot owners, and to a few others of the public whose former water supply had been taken over by the Del Mar Company. Apposite to the facts and questions here it was said in the Del Mar Case: "The serving of water to the seventeen inhabitants of the 'old town' of Del Mar was not sufficient to make the water company a public utility, offering its water to the general public. When the land company bought all the unsold lots of the town site, its property surrounded the places of residence of these inhabitants of the 'old town.' It bought and abandoned the old wells from which these people derived their supply, and its arrangement with the water company to serve water to them no more constituted the latter a public service corporation, than did that contract by which the Santa Fé Land Improvement Company was to receive a certain quantity of the water which might be developed. The sales to contractors who were engaged in road building were no more significant than would be similar accommodations by a farmer from his wells, and the same thing may be said of the trifling amounts of water sometimes sold to neighbors, and by them hauled away in barrels. That the water company had refused to furnish persons who had not purchased land from the South Coast Land Company was shown without contradiction; and, while the reason assigned was sometimes the scarcity of water, the fact of refusal remains. The fact is highly significant. It is also significant that, under the arrangement which the water company had with the land company, the latter was furnished with a large amount of water through unmetered pipes for the use of its hotel and other buildings. All of these facts and circumstances indicate that the Del Mar Water, Light, & Power Company was merely the incorporated water department of the South Coast Land Company."

The case of State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. supra, which was decided by the supreme court of Washington, is practically on all fours with the case at bar upon the ultimate facts. Not only is this true, but the definitions in our own Public Service Commission Act (and largely the act itself) were obviously taken, with mere slight verbal changes, from the prior Washington enactment on the same subject. Wash. Laws 1911, pp. 538-612. Construing this act in 1916, in a case involving, as here, the question whether the acts done constituted the actor therein a public utility, within the purview of the Public Service Commission Law of that state, the Washington supreme court, in an able opinion by Mount, J., said: "We understand the law in this state to be that companies furnishing electrical energy may or may not be public service corporations, depending upon the objects for which they were organized and the business in which they are engaged; the logic of the cases being that we will judicially inquire whether the sale of power is a selling to the public generally, or is only an incident to the business in which the company is engaged. . . . The character of such companies and their relation to the public have been frequently considered by this court. We find no departure from our first holding that a sale of electrical energy or power for private enterprises is not an engaging in a public business, and gives such companies no right to assert the sovereignty of the state (citing authorities). . . . It is argued that the present act (Laws 1911, p. 538; 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 8626-1 et seq.) furnishes ample authority for holding that public necessity, as evidenced by the legislative declaration, now requires that such companies be held subject to regulation in their private affairs, and that the right of the public to the enjoyment and use of such property is regulated, guaranteed, and safeguarded by appropriate legislation. But we think the act does not go so far. . . . Granting for the sake of argument the right of the legislature to exercise the police power to the extent of regulating and controlling the price to be charged for power sold to private individuals or to others, such right should not be declared by the courts in the absence of express legislation. The regulation and control of business of a private nature is sustained by reference to the police power, and even then it is sustained only when the courts have been able to say that a business is, in character and extent of operation, such that it touches the whole people and affects their general welfare. It is upon this principle that Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, and German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L.R.A. 1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, rest. Until the legislature brings a business within the police power by clear intent, courts will not do so. . . . Neither has the business of selling surplus power been so notoriously beset by abuses that we can judicially notice it as having an outlaw character. The right to regulate under the present law must be measured by the public interest. It will hardly be contended that appellant's contracts with those to whom it sells its surplus is of any interest or concern to anyone other than the immediate parties. It is not alleged that it is neglecting its public duty because of them. No one has a right to compel appellant to sell its surplus. The act of sale is purely voluntary. Like the merchant, it can sell at one price to one man, and at another price to another. . . . If either is not content with the offering of the other, he does not have to contract. He can go his way. But it is not so with appellant, when exercising its public function; that is, furnishing something—a necessity—that all are entitled to receive upon equal terms, under equal circumstances, and without exclusive conditions. Beale & W. Rate Regulation, § 1."

The case of Van Dyke v. Geary, 244 U. S. 39, 61 L. ed. 973, 982, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486, is strongly relied on by appellants as upholding their contentions. We do not regard it as doing so, and we have no quarrel with the law announced, upon the facts existing in that case. The facts, which in our view differentiate that case from this one, are, at page 48, thus stated by the court in the opinion: "Counsel contend that the use is not public, because water is furnished only to particular individuals in fulfillment of private contracts made with the purchasers of town-site lots. But there is nothing in the record to indicate that such is the fact." (Italics ours.)

The rule by which profession of public employment is to be tested, where, as here, such profession arises, if at all, implicitly, is thus laid down by Mr. Wyman: "The fundamental characteristic of a public calling is indiscriminate dealing with the general public. As Baron Alderson said in the leading case: 'Everybody who undertakes to carry for anyone who asks him is a common carrier. The criterion is whether he carries for particular persons only, or whether he carries for everyone. If a man holds himself out to do it for everyone who asks him, he is a common carrier; but if he does not do it for everyone, but carries for you and me only, that is a matter of special contract.'

This regular course of public service without respect of persons makes out a plain case of public profession, by reason of the inevitable inference which the general public will put upon it. 'One transporting goods from place to place for hire, for such as see fit to employ him, whether usually or occasionally, whether as a principal or an incidental occupation, is a common carrier.'" 1 Wyman, Pub. Service Corp. § 227.

Testing the facts of the instant case by this rule, and by the rule announced by the majority of the courts, as well as by the reason of the thing, and the far-reaching results of any other view, rather than by the view taken by a majority of the public service commissions of the several states, we are constrained to hold that, as to complainant, the respondent owed him no continuing public duty of service, and that the view taken nisi is correct.

It follows that the case ought to be affirmed. Let this be done.

All concur.

ANNOTATION.

Effect of rendering incidental service to members of the public to constitute an individual or corporation whose principal business is of a different nature a public utility.

The question whether an irrigation company is a public utility is treated in the annotations in 8 A.L.R. 268, and 15 A.L.R. 1227. In those notes cases are collected where, for example, a landowner supplied his neighbors with water for irrigation, from a spring owned by him, and the question arose whether in so doing he was rendering a public service. For purposes of convenience, reference is made in the present annotation to cases in the notes above referred to, which appear to be of value herein.

It is impossible to lay down any general rule on the present subject. The cases, as to results, are in conflict. Whether a manufacturing corporation, for example, which supplies electricity incidentally to others, is rendering, with respect to the latter, a public service, depends on such factors as the extent of the service, whether the company has held itself out as ready to serve the public generally,—at least, within a certain area,—and whether, perhaps, in other ways, it has conducted itself as a public utility. Of course, the incidental service only may become subject to public regulation on the ground that the company, in rendering it, is to that extent a public utility, without subjecting the company's main business to public supervision.

In several cases, some of which were decided by state utilities commissions, it has been held that the incidental service rendered to others was not of such a nature that the corporation or person rendering it was subject to public supervision as a public utility. STORY v. RICHARDSON (reported herewith) ante, 750; Del Mar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshleman (1914) 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948; Stoehr v. Natatorium Co. (1921) — Idaho, —, 200 Pac. 132; Washington Water Power Co. v. Montana Power Co. (1916; Idaho) P.U.R.1916E, 144; STATE EX REL. DANCIGER v. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION (reported herewith) ante, 754; Union Electric Light & P. Co. v. Tibbe Power Co. (1919; Mo.) P.U.R.1920B, 20; Cawker v. Meyer (1911) 147 Wis. 320, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W. 157. See also Pastorino v. Lang (1921; Cal.) P.U.R.1921C, 347; Kennedy v. Abbott (1921; Cal.) P.U.R.1921C, 354; and Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (1918; Idaho) P.U.R. 1918B, 535.

It was held in STATE EX REL. DANCIGER v. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION (reported herewith) ante, 754, in reversing an order of the Public Service Commission of Missouri, that a president of a brewing company, who undertook to furnish surplus electric current generated by the corporation for use in its plant to the owners of neighboring property, who strung their own wires, and to the city for its new lights, was not, where the corporation had no charter authority or franchise to sell electricity, engaged in the business of a public utility subject to regulation by the Public Service Commission.

And in STORY v. RICHARDSON (reported herewith) ante, 750, it was held that the owner of an office building maintaining within it a plant to furnish electricity to its occupants, and selling a small surplus to occupants of neighboring property, was not operating a public utility, within the meaning of the constitutional provision providing for taxation of the gross receipts of such utilities.

In Del Mar Water, Light & P. Co. v. Eshleman (1914) 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948, which is set out in the DANCIGER CASE, supra, it was held that the mere fact that a company organized to furnish water to certain lot owners also furnished water to seventeen other inhabitants of the town was not sufficient to render it a public utility.

Under the ruling in the court in the DANCIGER CASE, supra, the Missouri commission, in Union Electric Light & P. Co. v. Tibbe Power Co. (1919; Mo.) P.U.R.1920B, 20, held that the owner of a manufacturing business and power plant which supplied electricity from his plant to two other manufacturing companies, receiving from them their waste products for fuel, was not an electrical corporation, subject to the jurisdiction of the public service commission, there being no offer to supply electricity for sale to the public generally. It may be observed that in this case the commission regarded it as immaterial, or, at least, as not a controlling factor in the case, that the service to one of the industries was across a public street, permission to cross the street having been granted by the city.

There are several other decisions, also, in line with the above. Thus, in Cawker v. Meyer (1911) 147 Wis. 820, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W.

157, it was held that a building owner does not come within the meaning of a statute constituting a public utility everyone who furnishes heat, light, or power, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, by furnishing heat, light, and power to its own tenants and selling a surplus to three neighbors.

And the Idaho commission, in Washington Water Power Co. v. Montana Power Co. (1916; Idaho) P.U.R.1916E, 144, held that electricity from mining companies' transmission lines, delivered to lighting companies under an agreement for the exchange of surplus current, and to a miners' boarding house, will not be held to be devoted to a public use other than mining, since the use by the lighting companies and the boarding house is incidental to the mining operation.

The question passed on in Stoehr v. Natatorium Co. (1921) — Idaho, —, 200 Pac. 132, was whether a natatorium company was a public utility, or had dedicated to the public use a natural hot water supply owned by it, so that it could be compelled to furnish hot water to the petitioner for the purpose of heating his dwelling. It was stipulated that the hot water was not developed and acquired for the purpose of sale to the general public; that neither the defendant nor any of its predecessors in interest had ever held it open to use or purchase by the general public, but at all times since the original discovery it had been, and then was, intended for use primarily for the defendant's natatorium, for sanitary and bathing purposes; that the surplus hot water had never been offered for sale to any person, and was only supplied to additional consumers after they had made application therefor, and were ready and willing to pay such compensation as was requested by the owner, who on many occasions had refused to supply hot water to various persons desiring it; and that the said owners had always taken the position that the hot water in question was strictly a private, and not a public, use; and that they never at any time held out that such water was for sale to the public in general, and never at any time did or suffered anything to be done with the intention of dedicating the water to a public use. The court, in holding that on these stipulations the company was not a public utility, within the meaning of statutory provisions defining the term "public utility" as including every "water corporation"—defined by the statute as including every corporation "owning, controlling, operating or managing any water system or compensation within this state," said: "To hold that a water corporation is a public utility because it receives compensation for water owned by it and furnished to a limited number of the inhabitants of Boise, within a limited area, would be an unreasonable interpretation of the foregoing statutes. Such a construction may involve the question of the constitutionality of the statutes. . . . In determining whether a corporation is a public utility, we must not lose sight of the basic principles underlying governmental control of business, or fail to appreciate and respect constitutional limitations. . . . If the service is dedicated to the public or some portion thereof, or to persons within a given area, then any member of the public or of the given class, or any person within the given area, may demand such service without discrimination, and the public, or so much of it as has occasion to be served, is entitled to the service of the utility as a matter of right, and not of grace. . . . A corporation becomes a public service corporation, and therefore subject to regulation as a public utility, only when and to the extent that the business of such corporation becomes devoted to a public use. . . . In the present case the stipulation of facts clearly negatives any express or implied dedication by respondent of its hot-water service to the public, and justified the district court in finding that respondent was not a public utility."

The mere furnishing of water by a lumber company to a boarding house owned by it, but operated by a lessee in the interest of the lumber company, for the accommodation of its employees, no additional charge for water being made, was held in Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (1918; Idaho) P.U.R. 1918B, 535, to be only incidental to the operation of the lumber company's mills and yards, and not to render the company a public utility so as to subject such service to the jurisdiction of the utilities commission.

In Kennedy v. Abbott (1921; Cal.) P.U.R. 1921C, 354 (cited in note in 15 A.L.R. 1230), it was held that an individual who sold surplus water to his neighbors, with the express understanding that the service should continue only so long as he had water to spare, and who never held himself out as a water utility, was not a public utility.

And the California commission in Pastorino v. Lang (1921; Cal.) P.U.R. 1921C, 347 (cited in note in 15 A.L.R. 1230), held that evidence that the owner of a reservoir permitted two individuals to obtain water from it, which they conducted therefrom in a small ditch sustained by them, was not sufficient to show a dedication of the water to a public use.

It was held in Mound Water Co. v. Southern California Edison Co. (1921) — Cal. —, 194 Pac. 1014 (cited in annotation in 15 A.L.R. 1232), that a company organized for the purpose of supplying water for irrigation to stockholders for their own lands, with water rights appurtenant to the land, did not become, as to such water, a public utility, even if it devoted the surplus water to a public use, in supplying others after the demand of the stockholders was satisfied.

There are, however, other decisions in which the incidental service has been held to be of such a nature that it was subject to public regulation and control. Re Commonwealth Min. & Mill. Co. (1915; Ariz.) P.U.R. 1915B, 536; Nevada, C. & O. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Red River Lumber Co. (1920; Cal.) P.U.R. 1920E, 625; Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (1918; Idaho) P.U.R. 1918B, 535; Public Service Commission v. Valley Mercantile Co. (1921; Mont.) P.U.R. 1921D, 803; Public Serv- ice Commission v. J. J. Rogers Co. (1918) 184 App. Div. 705, P.U.R. 1919A, 876, 172 N. Y. Supp. 498; Wingrove v. Public Service Commission (1914) 74 W. Va. 190, L.R.A.1918A, 210, 81 S. E. 734; Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co. (1918) 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192. See also Hoff v. Montgomery (1916; Cal.) P.U.R.1916D, 880; Re Producers Warehouse (1919; Cal.) P.U.R.1920A, 919; Ticer v. Phillips (1920; Cal.) P.U.R.1920E, 582; Re Ontario Invest. Co. (1921; Cal.) P.U.R.1922A, 181; Bassett v. Frances-town Water Co. (1916; N. H.) P.U.R. 1916B, 815; Re Northern New York Power Co. (1915; N. Y. 2d Dist.) P.U.R.1915B, 70.

It was held in Wingrove v. Public Service Commission (1914) 74 W. Va. 190, L.R.A.1918A, 210, 81 S. E. 734, supra, that a corporation organized under a charter authorizing only the mining and sale of coal and the exercise of rights incidental to such a business, but nevertheless engaged in the task of supplying, from an electrical plant installed and maintained primarily for the operation by electric power of its mining machinery and the lighting of its stores, offices, and tenement houses, electricity for lighting purposes, to practically all such persons resident within the incorporated town in which its stores and offices were located, as applied for such service, at uniform rates of compensation, wiring their buildings for its use, and furnishing them fixtures therefor, was a public service corporation within the meaning of the West Virginia Public Service Corporation Act, and that so much of its business as was of such public nature was subject to control and regulation by the state public service commission.

The last case was approved and followed in Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co. (1918) 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192, where a lighting company, which, with a coal corporation, jointly owned coal lands and operated the same through lessees, to which the lighting company supplied light and power, furnished excess current to the plaintiff, a hotel owner, and others convenient to its lines. In an action against the lighting company for refusing to furnish service, the court held that, since it was shown that electric service had been rendered for compensation to six or eight private domestic consumers, the defendant was brought within the rule of the Wingrove Case; that whenever a corporation or natural person undertakes to render to others services which, by legislative enactment or judicial decision, have been declared to be of the nature of public service, such corporation or person thereby submits to be governed by the rules and principles applicable to a public service company; and so long as they continue to serve private consumers, they must submit to be governed by rules applicable to such public corporations.

And in Re Commonwealth Min. & Mill. Co. (1915; Ariz.) P.U.R.1915B, 536, it was held that a company, although primarily engaged in mining and milling, was nevertheless a public utility within the jurisdiction of the Arizona commission, where it carried on a water and electrical business for the purpose of serving its employees and other residents of the town.

So, a mercantile company which, it was alleged, had only one eighth of its capital invested in a heating plant, was nevertheless held by the Montana commission, in Public Service Commission v. Valley Mercantile Co. (1921; Mont.) P.U.R.1921D, 803, to be engaged as a public utility subject to regulation by the commission, where the company had acquired the mercantile business and the heating plant from a copper company at a time when the latter was supplying heat to several persons other than itself, and, in its articles of incorporation, included among its corporate powers that of supplying heat to the public; and it appeared that it had opened up a separate account for its steam heating plant, established a uniform rate basis, and from time to time had had added consumers until, although it billed only 12 or 13 consumers, approximately 150 persons, through them, received heat and were dependent for the same on the company, its service covering the most substantial and important portion of the town's business district; also, that the company installed and owned the mains whereby it carried its products to consumers, that it enlarged its plant beyond its own need to supply such consumers, and that this had continued through a series of years, although there had been no explicit profession of public service. The court quoted with approval the doctrine that the test to be applied is whether or not a company has held itself out, expressly or impliedly, as engaged in supplying the public as a class,—not necessarily all of the public, but a limited portion of it; such portion, for example, as could be served by its system,—as distinguished from holding itself out as serving, or ready to serve, merely particular individuals either as a matter of accommodation, or for other reasons peculiar and particular to them. Attention is called to the provision of the statute, although the commission regarded the statutory provision as applicable only in case there was a profession, at least by conduct, of public service. The statute defined a public utility as embracing "every corporation, both public and private . . . that now or hereafter may own, operate, or control any plant or equipment or any part of a plant or equipment within the state for the production, delivery or furnishing for or to other persons, firms, associations or corporations, private or municipal, heat . . . whether within the limits of municipalities, towns, and villages, or elsewhere."

And where a lumber company built several hundred houses for its employees, also boarding houses, hotels, stores, etc., all being owned by the company, and for the purpose of carrying on the business at its plant, and as a means of communication between it and the various mills, stores, and residences of employees, installed a telephone system, and connected it with the line of a long-distance telephone company, so that employees and others could have long-distance service as well as communication between their own houses, monthly rates being charged employees for telephone service, it was held in Nevada, C. & O. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Red River Lumber Co. (1920; Cal.) P.U.R.1920E, 625, that the lumber company carried on the business of a public utility as a telephone corporation, and was subject to the jurisdiction of the commission. The statute provided that the term "telephone corporation" should include every corporation or person owning, controlling, operating, or managing any telephone line for compensation within the state.

Where a cannery company which operated several warehouses in connection with its plants, organized a warehouse corporation, to which it leased its warehouses, the California commission in Re Producers Warehouse (1919; Cal.) P.U.R.1920A, 919, held that the warehouse corporation was a public utility, in view of the common practice to store in such warehouses, connected with canneries, goods for persons other than those of the canneries owning the warehouse facilities, and the evidence that the same practice would be indulged in in this instance.

A manufacturing company was held an "electrical corporation," in Public Service Commission v. J. & J. Rogers Co. (1918) 184 App. Div. 705, P.U.R. 1919A, 876, 172 N. Y. Supp. 498, within the meaning of the New York statute authorizing the public service commission, whenever it was of opinion that an electrical corporation was doing, or about to do, anything contrary to or in violation of law, to bring an action in the supreme court for the purpose of preventing such violation, where the company owned an electric plant, and was generating electricity not only for its own use, but was supplying the same to others for compensation, the statute defining an electrical corporation as including every company which owned, operated, or managed an electric plant, except where electricity was generated or distributed by the producer solely for its own use or the use of its tenants, and not for sale to others. From the opinion of the lower court in (1918) 103 Misc. 711, P.U.R.1918F, 832, 170

N. Y. Supp. 964, it appears that the company was supplying a small town and its inhabitants with electricity, and the court said the question was whether a manufacturing corporation, organized as such, and doing business as such in large volume, could assume in a small way to do an electrical business which was in violation, not only of the spirit, but of the terms of the statute.

In Re Northern New York Power Co. (1915; N. Y. 2d Dist.) P.U.R. 1915B, 70, it was held that a corporation generating electricity for its own manufacturing purposes, but distributing a limited amount of current for sale across a highway, under a franchise approved by the commission, was an "electrical corporation" within the definition of that term in the Public Service Commission Laws of New York, qualifying it, under § 70 of that act, to acquire and to hold the stock and bonds of any other electrical corporation.

And attention is called to People ex rel. New York Edison Co. v. Public Service Commission (1920) 191 App. Div. 237, 181 N. Y. Supp. 259, affirmed in (1920) 230 N. Y. 574, 130 N. E. 899, where a grocery company which owned a building and had a private electrical plant from which it supplied its own store and the tenants who occupied a part of its building, and also sold electricity to other customers in the same block, attempted, through petition to the public service commission, to compel an electric utility to supply it with "breakdown service," which is an emergency service used in case the service of the customer breaks down, and also used for auxiliary purposes when the maximum current is required, or when the demand is insufficient to make operation of the private plant profitable. The court held that it was unnecessary to decide whether such a company was an electrical corporation under the supervision of the public service commission, the decision being that it was, at least, a competitor of the electric utility which it was seeking to compel to furnish the emergency service, since it sold electricity to customers other than its own tenants for 15 per cent less than the scheduled rates of the public utility company; and that the latter, therefore, should not be compelled, in the absence of express statutory requirements, to furnish such "breakdown service" to its competitor. The annotation does not, of course, cover the question as to what corporations may compel the furnishing of this emergency service.

18 A.L.R.—49.

It was held in Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (1918; Idaho) P.U.R.1918B, 535, that under the Idaho statute requiring the securing of a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the utilities commission as a condition precedent to the furnishing of water to the public, or some portion thereof, for compensation, the furnishing of water by a lumber company to a railway company, for compensation, constituted such a public use as would bring the former within the definition of a public utility, where water was furnished by it to the railway company at two stations, not only for its locomotives, but for its roundhouse, stockyards, shops, and section house, and was used for drinking and domestic purposes.

And the fact that, in order to provide adequate fire protection, it was necessary for the lumber company to install pumps of greater capacity than would supply its ordinary needs, and that with this additional apparatus it was furnishing water to the railway company, it was held, would not enable it to avoid its responsibility as a public utility, on the theory that it was furnishing to others only the surplus water beyond its own needs, since its surplus was in the machinery merely, and to supply the railway company required special service, independent of any service or need of the lumber company. Ibid.

In Baker City Mut. Irrig. Co. v. Baker City (1910) 58 Or. 310, 110 Pac. 392, 113 Pac. 9 (cited in note in 8 A.L.R. 281), it was said that a mutual irrigation company, which furnished water generally for irrigation only when there was a surplus in its ditches after supplying the needs of its stockholders, was impressed with a public character.

And in Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission (1920) — Cal. —, 194 Pac. 1003 (cited in note in 15 A.L.R. 1228), the court held that one who built an irrigation plant to supply water for use on his own farm, and, as a matter of accommodation, supplied water to five of his neighbors, and finally attempted to discontinue the service because he had sold his farm, was a public utility, and could not discontinue the service without permission of the state railroad commission.

Also, in Ticer v. Phillips (1920; Cal.) P.U.R.1920E, 582 (cited in note in 15 A.L.R. 1229), where an owner of an orchard tract, irrigated from a well upon it, during the development period of the orchard, supplied surplus water to neighbors, but subsequently sought to discontinue the service, the court held that technically he was operating on a public utility basis, but under certain conditions should be allowed to discontinue the service.

In Bassett v. Francestown Water Co. (1916; N. H.) P.U.R.1916B, 815, a partnership which owned a spring and was formed for the purpose of furnishing water for domestic use to its own members only, but which later furnished water to neighbors who desired it, until nearly all the families in the vicinity received service, which laid its pipes in the highway, and made annual returns required of public utilities, was held to be a public utility and obliged to furnish water to a petitioner.

And it was held in Hoff v. Montgomery (1916; Cal.) P.U.R.1916D, 880, that individuals owning springs, and supplying water to neighbors for compensation, operated a water system, and such system constituted a public utility within the meaning of the California Public Utilities Act, although the original owners of the springs supplied the neighbors rather as an accommodation than anything else, and the practice was merely continued by the present owners.

A land company which, incidental to its land business, conducted a small water distribution system, obtaining its water supply through the ownership of stock in a mutual water company, was held to be engaged as a public utility by the California Commission, in Re Ontario Invest. Co. (1921; Cal.) P.U.R.1922A, 181. It appeared that the land company came into possession of the water system when it took over a certain tract of land from the mutual company, acquiring at the same time certain shares of stock in the latter company, and that the latter supplied water to a point on the tract where it was distributed by the land company to approximately twenty-eight consumers. The court said merely, in reply to the contention that the land company was not operating as a public utility, that the evidence clearly showed that for many years it had been, and was then, disposing of water for compensation, and in so doing was a public utility as defined by the Public Utilities Act.

Attention is called to several cases which have a bearing on the subject under annotation, although not strictly in point.

See, for instance, Syracuse & M. R. Co. v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (1917; Ind.) P.U.R.1917C, 962, where it appeared that a cement company was the owner of a railroad 7½ miles in length, having three locomotives and seventy or eighty cars of small capacity, the cement company being one of two industries located on the line, which together furnished the total business carried. The railroad was operated by a railroad company which was incorporated as such, held itself out as a common carrier, made reports to the public service commission, and was taxed by the state board of taxation as a carrier, and it was held that the railroad was not a mere plant facility, but was a common carrier.

Where a railroad company constructed a telephone line between two points for its own use in the operation of its railroad business, it was held in Colorado River Teleph. Co. v. California Southern R. Co. (1917; Cal.) P.U.R.1918A, 375, that in contracting with the Western Union Telegraph Company to transmit telegraphic messages over such private telephone lines, the railroad company was conducting a public telephone business, which could not be carried on without the consent of the state railroad commission.

In Citizens Electric Illuminating Co. v. Lackawanna & W. Valley R. Co. (1916) 255 Pa. 176, 99 Atl. 465, an electric railroad company was enjoined from furnishing electricity for power purposes through the operation of excess generating machinery, at the suit of an electric company chartered to furnish such service in that territory, upon the ground that the railroad company was exceeding its corporate powers in furnishing electric power service. The court said that the right of a corporation to sell and dispose of surplus material on hand, not required in the conduct of its chartered business, was not questioned; that it was a mistake to speak of the electric current which the appellant proposed to sell as surplus current; that this current had never been developed, and could be developed only as the appellant employed its surplus machinery to that end, and that it was the machinery that constituted the surplus, and not the electric current.

A somewhat different question than that which the present note purports to cover is involved in State ex rel. Public Service Commission v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. (1916) 89 Wash. 599, L.R.A.1918C, 675, P.U.R.1916D, 469, 154 Pac. 1110, which presents the question of the power of the public service commission to regulate the disposition by a public utility of surplus products. In this case a traction company operating a street railway system, and having a surplus of electrical energy, made a private contract with various customers, including a land company, several farmers, manufacturing plants, etc., for the use of its surplus electrical energy. The public service commission contended that it had jurisdiction over that part of the traction company's business which previously had been regarded as private, and that it could not make an adequate and intelligent survey of the rates charged by the company in its service to the public, unless it could compel a disclosure of these private contracts. The court, in overruling this contention, said: "We understand the law in this state to be that companies furnishing electrical energy may or may not be public service corporations depending upon the objects for which they were organized, and the business in which they are engaged, the logic of the cases being that we will judicially inquire whether the sale of power is a selling to the public generally, or is only an incident to the business in which the company is engaged; as, for instance, a sale pending a time when its surplus will be needed to accomplish its assumption of duty to the public; for it has been held that a public service corporation can anticipate its future needs, and develop energy reasonably in excess of present requirements. The character of such companies and their relation to the public have been frequently considered by this court. We find no departure from our first holding that a sale of electrical energy or power for private enterprises is not an engaging in a public business, and gives such companies no right to assert the sovereignty of the state."

By way of illustration, attention is called, also, to Brown v. Gerald (1905) 100 Me. 351, 70 L.R.A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526, 61 Atl. 785, in which it was held that the furnishing of electric power for manufacturing purposes does not become a public use, so as to justify the exercise of the power of eminent domain in its behalf, on the theory that the one generating it may, because of his franchises, be regarded as a public servant; especially, since the capacity for service is, of necessity, limited, and cannot extend to the general public, and therefore the service is a matter of grace, and not of right.

The annotation does not deal with the question whether a branch or spur railroad line owned by private companies, as a logging railroad owned by a lumber company, is a common carrier. See, for example, Tap Line Cases (United States v. Louisiana & P. R. Co.) (1913) 234 U. S. 1, 58 L. ed. 1135, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741.

R. E. H.

GLOBE FURNITURE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

CHARLES T. WRIGHT.

District of Columbia Court of Appeals — April 5, 1920.

(49 App. D. C. 315, 265 Fed. 873.)

Libel — privileged communication — publication to employees of corporation.

The exhibition by the general manager of a corporation to its collector and bookkeeper, of a letter relating to a customer's account with respect to which each has a duty, is privileged, although libelous, and no action will lie therefor against the corporation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 776.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Henry E. Davis and Edwin A. Swingle, for appellant:

The showing of the letter to, and the reading thereof by, its bookkeeper and collector, did not constitute publication thereof within the meaning of the law governing an action of libel.

Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton & Oil Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 262, 10 Best & S. 226, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 17 Week. Rep. 498; Boxsius v. Goblet Frères [1894] 1 Q. B. 842, 63 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 401, 9 Reports, 224, 70 L. T. N. S. 368, 42 Week. Rep. 392, 58 J. P. 670; Edmondson v. Birch & Co. [1907] 1 K. B. 371, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 346, 96 L. T. N. S. 415, 23 Times L. R. 234, 1 B. R. C. 444, 7 Ann. Cas. 192; Owen v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. 32 App. Div. 465, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1033; Puterbaugh v. Gold Medal Furniture Mfg. Co. 7 Ont. L. Rep. 582, 1 Ont. Week. Rep. 250, 24 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 205, 1 Ann. Cas. 100; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Jones, 18 Ga. App. 414, 89 S. E. 429; Cartwright-Caps Co. v. Fischel, 113 Miss. 359, L.R.A.1918F, 566, 74 So. 278, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 985; Nichols v. Eaton, 110 Iowa, 509, 47 L.R.A. 488, 80 Am. St. Rep. 319, 81

N. W. 792; Bohlinger v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 100 Ark. 477, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 449, 140 S. W. 257, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 613; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Casham, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 140, 81 C. C. A. 5, 149 Fed. 367, 9 Ann. Cas. 693.

Mr. Levi H. David, for appellee:

Corporations are allowed by law to transact practically every business that may be carried on by an individual, and it is no longer an open question that corporations may be responsible in an action of libel or slander.

Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 16 L. ed. 73; Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296.

The dictation of a libelous letter by the defendant to his private and confidential stenographer, typist, or amanuensis, by whom a typewritten or other copy is made and transmitted to the plaintiff, after being signed by the defendant, is in law a publication of the libel, although there is no communication of the letter by the defendant to any other person.

Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 529,

60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 299, 64 L. T. N. S. 691, 39 Week. Rep. 263; Puterbaugh v. Gold Medal Furniture Mfg. Co. 7 Ont. L. Rep. 582, 1 Ont. Week. Rep. 250, 24 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 205, 1 Ann. Cas. 100; Gambrell v. Schooley, 93 Md. 48, 52 L.R.A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414, 48 Atl. 730; Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey, 101 Va. 443, 44 S. E. 692; Ferdon v. Dickens, 161 Ala. 181, 49 So. 888; Howard v. Wilson, 195 Mo. App. 536, 192 S. W. 473; Moran v. O'Regan, 38 N. B. 189; Wilson v. Noonan, 27 Wis. 598; Monson v. Lathrop, 96 Wis. 386, 65 Am. St. Rep. 54, 71 N. W. 596; Williamson v. Freer, L. R. 9 C. P. 393, 43 L. J. C. P. N. S. 161, 30 L. T. N. S. 332, 22 Week. Rep. 878; Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 75 Minn. 368, 43 L.R.A. 581, 74 Am. St. Rep. 502, 77 N. W. 985, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 376, 72 Minn. 41, 40 L.R.A. 661, 71 Am. St. Rep. 461, 74 N. W. 1022, 65 Minn. 18, 33 L.R.A. 302, 67 N. W. 646; Kiene v. Ruff, 1 Iowa, 482; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Gratt. 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; Spence v. Burt, 18 Lanc. L. Rev. 251; Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 9 L.R.A. 86, 20 Am. St. Rep. 115, 46 N. W. 123; Bacon v. Michigan C. R. Co. 55 Mich. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 372; Ward v. Smith, 6 Bing. 749, 130 Eng. Reprint, 1469, 4 Moore & P. 595, 4 Car. & P. 302, 8 L. J. C. P. 294.

Smyth, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From a judgment in favor of Wright, who was the plaintiff below, the Globe Furniture Company, a corporation, prosecutes this appeal.

The company is engaged in the business of selling furniture on what is known as the instalment plan. On that plan it sold some furniture to Wright. The collector of the company called upon him to collect one of the instalments. A dispute arose with respect to the amount due. The collector, upon looking over Wright's receipts, came to the conclusion that some of them had been changed by raising the amounts for which they had been given. With Wright's permission he took possession of the questioned receipts, leaving copies in their place. Upon returning to the office of the company he made known his suspicions to the general manager. The bookkeeper of the company was consulted for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the receipts harmonized with the books. It was found that they did not. Thereupon a letter was prepared and mailed to Wright. The part embracing the alleged libel reads: "Beg to advise that our representative, Mr. Rogers, has turned over to the writer four receipts, which three of them do not correspond with our books, and show very plainly that they have been tampered with and raised from their original amounts, which is a serious offense on the part of someone."

There was testimony on the part of the plaintiff that the letter was written partly by the bookkeeper, and partly by the general manager, and, before being mailed, was shown to the bookkeeper and the collector. This was denied by the general manager, who said that he alone wrote it, and that it was mailed without having been shown to or read by anyone else. At the close of all the testimony the defendant moved for a directed verdict. The motion was overruled, and an exception taken. The action of the court in this regard is the only error assigned.

For the purpose of determining whether or not the defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction should have been granted, we must accept plaintiff's theory of the testimony as correct. The letter was written in the usual course of business. Each one of those who read it had a duty to perform for his employer in connection with it. By reading the letter he learned only what the three had talked about before the letter was drafted. The general manager had a right to advise with the bookkeeper and the collector touching the contents of the letter, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the statements therein were in conformity with the facts as they understood them. Under these circumstances, was the occasion privileged, and, if so, did the letter come within the privilege? We think the answer must be in the affirmative.

Libel—privileged communication—publication to employees of corporation.

Neither in this country nor in England are the authorities in harmony on the subject, but we think the better-reasoned cases approve the conclusion which we have reached. In Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 524, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 299, 46 L. T. N. S. 691, 39 Week. Rep. 263, it was held that the dictation of a libel by an officer of a mercantile company to a stenographer employed by it, and its delivery to an office boy to have letter-press copies made, were publications, and hence actionable. But Lord Esher, M. R., in Boxsius v. Goblet Frères [1894] 1 Q. B. 842, held that where a solicitor dictated to his stenographer a letter containing libelous statements, which was afterwards copied into a letter book by another clerk, the letter was not actionable, saying: "It is the duty of the solicitor to write and send this letter, and it is his duty to do that in the ordinary and reasonable way. The duties of a solicitor are not to one client only, but to all his clients, and he has to take measures to perform them with due diligence and according to the necessary and reasonable method of conducting business in a solicitor's office. If a solicitor is instructed to write defamatory matter on a privileged occasion on behalf of a client, he must do this business as he does other business of the office, in the ordinary way, and that involves his having the communication taken down or copied by a clerk in his office and copied into the letter book." He distinguished Pullman v. Hill on the ground that it was not within the ordinary business of the merchant in that case to write the defamatory matter complained of. One of the judges thought that the disclosure of the letter to the clerks was a publication, but evidently did not regard this as destroying the privilege of the occasion. The doctrine of the Boxsius Case was approved and applied in Edmondson v. Birch & Co. [1907] 1 K. B. 371. Commenting on the Boxsius and Pullman Cases, the court, speaking through Collins, M. R. held: "The result of the two cases to which I have alluded, taken together, appears to me to be that, where there is a duty, whether of perfect or imperfect obligation, as between two persons, which forms the ground of a privileged occasion, the person exercising the privilege is entitled to take all reasonable means of so doing, and those reasonable means may include the introduction of third persons, where that is reasonable and in the ordinary course of business; and, if so, it will not destroy the privilege." Again: "If the duty is such as to give rise to a privileged occasion, then the fact that it is only one of imperfect obligation cannot affect the mode in which the privilege may reasonably be exercised." Another one of the judges, concurring with the master of the rolls, said: "In my opinion the law on the subject, as laid down in the cases, amounts to this: If a business communication is privileged, as being made on a privileged occasion, the privilege covers all incidents of the transmission and treatment of that communication which are in accordance with the reasonable and usual course of business."

In Nichols v. Eaton, 110 Iowa, 509, 47 L.R.A. 483, 80 Am. St. Rep. 319, 81 N. W. 792, Judge Deemer, an experienced and learned jurist, speaking for the court, said that where the medical director of an insurance association wrote to an agent of the association that the plaintiff, a local medical examiner of the association, was guilty of forgery, the occasion was privileged. He said: "In determining whether or not the communication was qualifiedly privileged, regard must be had to the occasion, and to the relationship of the parties. One may make a publication to his servant or agent, without liability, which, if made to a stranger, would be actionable. In the protection of his own interests, one may make a communication to his agent or servant without subjecting himself to liability, unless he exceeds the privilege and does more than his duty or interest demands. Again, when one has an interest in the subject-matter of a communication, and the person to whom it is made has a corresponding interest, every communication honestly made in order to protect such common interest is privileged by reason of the occasion. Generally this interest must be a pecuniary one, but it may arise out of the relationship or status of the parties. The statement must be such as the occasion warrants, and must be made in good faith to protect the interests of the publisher and the person to whom it was addressed."

In another case we find this language: "It is inconceivable how the business of the country, under the present conditions, can be carried on, if a business man or corporation must be subject to litigation for every letter containing some statement too strong, where it is only sent to the person to whom directed, and only heard by a stenographer to whom the letter is dictated." Cartwright-Caps Co. v. Fischel, 113 Miss. 359, L.R.A.1918F, 566, 74 So. 278, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 985.

It was said in Phillips v. Bradshaw, 167 Ala. 199, 52 So. 662, that the reason for the rule that a defamatory communication from an employer to an employee is held conditionally privileged, where it relates to matters pertaining to the employment, and is made in good faith, is that in such case the law is said to withdraw the legal inference of malice which ordinarily arises from the mere making of a defamatory statement.

We have not overlooked the decision of the court of appeals of Maryland in Gambrill v. Schooley, 93 Md.

48, 52 L.R.A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414, 48 Atl. 730, which follows the doctrine of Pullman v. Hill, but, much as we respect the opinions of that court, we prefer the reasoning of the cases we have cited in support of our conclusion, as more in harmony with modern business requirements. What would be the effect of the unnecessary repetition of the libel by the stenographer or other person to whom the communication had been made, need not be determined now, although this observation is found in the Cartwright-Caps Co. Case, supra: "If the stenographer should, in violation of his or her duties, disclose such statement, there might be a liability because of the negligence of the person in employing an improper person as stenographer."

Some courts hold that communications such as the one we are considering are not actionable, because the stenographer or other employee, to whom the communication was made before it was mailed to the person for whom it was intended, is not a "third person," within the technical meaning of such term, but is merely an impersonal facility used in making and transmitting the communication. Owen v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. 32 App. Div. 465, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1033; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Jones, 18 Ga. App. 414, 89 S. E. 429. But we prefer to put our decision upon the ground that the occasion was conditionally privileged, that the letter was within the privilege, that there was no malice, and, therefore, that the letter is not actionable.

In view of the law as we find it, the judgment of the lower court must be reversed, at the cost of the appellee, and cause remanded with directions to grant a new trial.

ANNOTATION.

Libel and slander: communication or exhibition to employee or business associate of defendant as publication or privilege.

- I. Scope and introduction, 776.
- II. View that communication of defamatory matter constitutes a publication, and is not privileged, 776.
- III. View that defamatory communication does not constitute actionable libel, 778.

I. Scope and introduction.

The question of libelous communications between different offices of a corporation is treated in the annotation in 5 A.L.R. 455.

The present annotation is confined in the main to a discussion of the question whether or not the communication or exhibition to an employee or business associate of the defendant, of a libelous communication concerning a third person who is not connected with the defendant's business, constitutes actionable libel. In other words, whether or not such a communication or exhibition constitutes a publication of the libel, and, if it does constitute a publication, whether or not the occasion is privileged.

There seems to be considerable difference of opinion upon the subject indicated in the title. The courts do not always distinguish between the logically distinct questions of publication and privilege; doubtless for the reason, that in this instance the same considerations that control the conclusion on one question will determine the decision of the other.

II. View that communication of defamatory matter constitutes a publication, and is not privileged.

The rule laid down by some courts is that a communication or exhibition of a libelous communication to an employee—such for instance as a stenographer or copyist, in the usual course of conducting a correspondence—constitutes a publication which is not privileged, and therefore that in such a case there is sufficient to support an action for libel. The following cases support this rule:

United States.—Nelson v. Whitten (1921) 272 Fed. 135.

Alabama.—Ferdon v. Dickens (1909) 161 Ala. 181, 49 So. 888.

Iowa.—Kiene v. Ruff (1855) 1 Iowa, 482.

Maryland.—Gambrill v. Schooley (1901) 93 Md. 48, 52 L.R.A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414, 48 Atl. 730.

Virginia.—Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey (1903) 101 Va. 443, 44 S. E. 692 (dictum).

England.—Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 524, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 299, 64 L. T. N. S. 691, 39 Week. Rep. 263.

Canada.—Moran v. O'Regan (1907) 38 N. B. 189, on subsequent appeal in (1908) 38 N. B. 399; Puterbaugh v. Gold Medal Furniture Mfg. Co. (1904) 7 Ont. L. Rep. 582, 1 Ont. Week. Rep. 250, 24 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 205, 1 Ann. Cas. 100, reversing (1903) 5 Ont. L. Rep. 680, 23 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 193.

And this rule, it has been held, is especially applicable where the libelous communication relates to a matter independent of the business in which the servant was employed. Quillinan v. Stuart (1917) 38 Ont. L. Rep. 623, 35 D. L. R. 35, holding that, where the manager of a bank gave a letter to a stenographer to be copied, there was a publication thereof within the meaning of that term as used in the law of libel, it appearing that the letter in question did not relate to the bank's business, but was a personal and individual concern of the manager.

The rule that a defamatory communication to a stenographer or copyist is a publication thereof, and not privileged, based on the ground that such communications refer to business unconnected with the communicator's ordinary business, in that the writing of libelous matter is not ordinary business, seems to have been first laid down by the Queen's bench in Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 524, wherein it was held that both the dictation of a libel by an officer of a mercantile firm, to a stenographer employed by it, and its delivery to an office boy to have letter-press copies made, were publications. And it was further held that the communication was not privileged, not only upon the ground above stated, but on the additional ground that, as the stenographer had no interest in hearing or seeing the communication, he did not fall within the rule that an occasion is privileged where the person who makes a communication has a duty to make it to the person to whom he does make it, and such person has an interest in hearing it. In rendering this decision, Lord Esher, M. R., said that he did not think that the necessities or the luxuries of business could alter the law of England, and that if a merchant wished to write a letter containing defamatory matter, and keep a copy of the letter, he had better make it himself. Lopes, L. J., said: "It is said that business cannot be carried on if merchants may not employ their clerks to write letters for them in the ordinary course of business. I think the answer to this is very simple. I have never yet heard that it is in the usual course of a merchants' business to write letters containing defamatory statements. If a merchant has occasion to write such a letter, he must write it himself and make a copy of it himself, or he must take the consequences;" and Kay, L. J., said: "The consequence of such an alteration in the law of libel would be this—that any merchant or any solicitor who desires to write a libel concerning any person would be privileged to communicate the libel to any agent he pleased, if it was in the ordinary course of his business. That would be an extraordinary alteration of the law, and it would enable people to defame others to an alarming extent." It is also worthy of note that Lord Esher, M. R., also said: "If there was no publication, the question whether the occasion was privileged does not arise;" but some cases, as is subsequently shown, seem to have regarded the question of privilege independently of any question of publication; and still other cases have treated the question as one whether the dictation was such a publication as prevented the communication from being a privileged one.

And Pullman v. Hill (Eng.) supra, was followed in Moran v. O'Regan (1907) 38 N. B. 189, on subsequent appeal in (1908) 38 N. B. 399, it having been held that the giving by a merchant of a draft of a letter containing defamatory matter, to a confidential clerk and typewriter to copy, was a publication of the libel, and not privileged. In reaching this conclusion the majority of the court adopted the reasoning that it does not fall within the ordinary business of a merchant to write defamatory statements, so that it is not reasonably necessary that he should have it copied by a clerk, and this although the letter related to property which the plaintiff, while acting as a clerk for the defendant, was alleged to have appropriated to his own use. Here a part of the court regarded Pullman v. Hill as not controlling, basing such conclusion on the ground that the decision in the latter case had been so limited by a subsequent decision of the same court as to render it inapplicable.

And in Nelson v. Whitten (1921) 272 Fed. 135, in holding that the dictation to a stenographer of a libelous business letter constituted a publication of the libel, the court refuted the contention that inasmuch as the libel was communicated to defendant's stenographer only, there was no publication, because a stenographer has become such a common, if not necessary, part of the methods of communication in writing that the letter would be expected to be dictated, if written at all, and expressly adopted as convincing the reasoning of Lopes, J., in Pullman v. Hill (Eng.) supra, to the effect that it is not in the usual course of a merchant's business to write libelous letters, and that, if he does so, he must write them himself or take the consequences.

And the Pullman Case was followed in Puterbaugh v. Gold Medal Furniture Mfg. Co. (1904) 7 Ont. L. Rep. 582, 1 Ont. Week. Rep. 250, 24 Can.

L. T. Occ. N. 205, 1 Ann. Cas. 100, reversing (1903) 5 Ont. L. Rep. 680, 23 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 193, where it was held that a foreman of a company published a libelous letter, written in the interest of the company, but unconnected with its ordinary business, by giving a draft of same to a clerk to copy on a typewriter, and that such publication was not a privileged one. However, in this case a part of the court were seemingly reluctant so to hold, and did so only because they considered themselves bound by the Queen's bench decision.

And the narrow English view of Pullman v. Hill (Eng.) supra, to the effect that the dictating by the managing director of a firm to a stenographer employed by it, of a libelous letter, is a publication thereof, was again adopted in Gambrill v. Schooley (1901) 93 Md. 48, 52 L.R.A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414, 48 Atl. 730, wherein it was held that the dictation of a libelous letter, apparently in the due course of business, to a private and confidential stenographer, is in law a publication of the libel, the court expressly refusing to draw a distinction between cases where the libel is dictated in the ordinary course of business, and those where the communication is unreasonable because clearly outside of the usual course of business of the dictator. And, following the Gambrill Case, it was held in Ferdon v. Dickens (1909) 161 Ala. 181, 49 So. 888, that the dictation of a libelous letter to a stenographer, who transcribed his notes on a typewriter, and the subsequent signing thereof by the person who dictated it, is a publication of the contents of the letter sufficient to support libel, although there was no communication of its contents to any other person.

So, in Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey (1903) 101 Va. 443, 44 S. E. 692, the court seems to have been of the opinion that publication may be made by dictating a libelous business letter to a stenographer.

In Iowa it has been held that where a libelous letter, written in a foreign language, was given by the writer to a third person to transcribe, and the copy was forwarded to a foreign country, a publication was made in this country. Kiene v. Ruff (1855) 1 Iowa, 482.

In Adams v. Lawson (1867) 17 Gratt. (Va.) 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455, where it appeared that defendant had a third person write a libelous letter for him, which defendant signed and sent to plaintiff, it was held that there was a publication of the libel.

But that the mere delivery of a libelous message to an office boy for the purpose of having a letter-press copy made does not constitute a publication, at least, where there is no evidence that the boy read the message, see Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cashman (1906) 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 140, 81 C. C. A. 5, 149 Fed. 367, 9 Ann. Cas. 693. And that there is no proof of publication of a libelous letter by dictation to a third person, where it does not appear whether the sender wrote it himself, or dictated it, see Roberts v. English Mfg. Co. (1908) 155 Ala. 414, 46 So. 752.

In connection with the above-cited English and Canadian cases, see the qualifying decisions from those jurisdictions which are set out infra, III.

III.—View that defamatory communication does not constitute actionable libel.

The more liberal rule, and the one which seemingly has the support of the weight of modern authority, is that, where the communication is made to a servant or business associate in the ordinary and natural course of business, there is no actionable libel. This rule finds support in the following cases: GLOBE FURNITURE Co. v. WRIGHT (reported herewith) ante, 772; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Jones (1916) 18 Ga. App. 414, 89 S. E. 429; Cartwright-Caps Co. v. Fischel (1917) 118 Miss. 359, L.R.A. 1918F, 566, 74 So. 278, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 985; Owen v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. (1898) 32 App. Div. 465, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1033; Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton & Oil Co. (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. (Eng.) 262, 10 Best & S. 226, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 17 Week. Rep. 498; Boxsius v. Goblet Frères [1894] 1 Q. B. (Eng.)

842, 63 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 401, 9 Reports, 224, 70 L. T. N. S. 368, 42 Week. Rep. 392, 58 J. P. 670; Edmondson v. Birch & Co. [1907] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 371, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 346, 96 L. T. N. S. 415, 23 Times L. R. 234, 1 B. R. C. 444, 7 Ann. Cas. 192; Morgan v. Wallis (1917) 33 Times L. R. (Eng.) 495; Harper v. Hamilton Retail Grocers' Asso. (1900) 37 Can. L. J. 31, 32 Ont. Rep. 295. And see Roff v. British & French Chemical Mfg. Co. [1918] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 677, 9 B. R. C. 353, 87 L. J. K. B. N. S. 996, 119 L. T. N. S. 436, 34 Times L. R. 485, 62 Sol. Jo. 620. See also Quillinan v. Stuart (1917) 38 Ont. L. Rep. 623, 35 D. L. R. 35, as set out supra, II.

Seemingly the first case to lay down the principle that the communication of libelous matter, in the course of the discharge of an ordinary business duty, to a stenographer or copyist, is not a publication of such matter which will in itself render the communicator liable in libel, and that such communication does not destroy any privilege, is Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton & Oil Co. (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. (Eng.) 262, 10 Best & S. 226, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 17 Week. Rep. 498, it having been held in that case that the delivery of a report of the directors of a stock company, which contained a libelous reference to the company's manager, to a printer, to make copies for distribution among stockholders, was not such a publication as prevented the communication from being privileged, it not appearing that the directors had departed from the usual course employed in distributing such information, which it was their duty to furnish the stockholders.

And in Boxsius v. Goblet Frères [1894] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 842, the court of Queen's bench applied the rule that libelous matter is privileged when dictated to a stenographer in the course of the discharge of an ordinary business duty, holding that where a solicitor dictated to his stenographer a letter containing libelous statements, which letter was also copied into a letter book by another clerk, it was upon a privileged occasion, since the client would himself have been privileged in sending the letter direct, and this privilege extended to the solicitor, he having been directed to send it. Lord Esher, M. R., said: "It is the duty of the solicitor to write and send this letter, and it is his duty to do that in the ordinary and reasonable way. The duties of a solicitor are not to one client only, but to all his clients, and he has to take measures to perform them with due diligence and according to the necessary and reasonable method of conducting business in a solicitor's office. If a solicitor is instructed to write defamatory matter on a privileged occasion on behalf of a client, he must do this business as he does other business of the office, in the ordinary way, and that involves his having the communication taken down or copied by a clerk in his office and copied into the letter book." In reaching this conclusion, the court distinguished Pullman v. Hill (Eng.) supra, II., on the ground that in that case it was not within the ordinary business of the merchant to write the defamatory matter complained of. It is also of interest, in connection with the Boxsius Case, that at least one judge (Lopes, L. J.) was clearly of the opinion that there was evidence of publication by communicating the letter to the clerks, but the court evidently did not regard this as affecting the question of privilege, or, at least, as destroying the privilege of the occasion.

And following Boxsius v. Goblet Frères (Eng.) supra, the rule of Pullman v. Hill (Eng.) supra, II., was again limited in Edmondson v. Birch & Co. [1907] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 371, 1 B. R. C. 444, 7 Ann. Cas. 192, and the rule of privilege extended to dictation and delivery of defamatory matter for copying, where the duty is only one of imperfect obligation, and not absolute, as in the Boxsius Case. And, applying this more liberal rule, it was held that where business communications containing defamatory statements were dictated to a stenographer, and copied in a copy letter book by another clerk on a privileged occasion, the privileged occasion covered such a publication, so that the statements were not actionable. In reaching this conclusion, Collins, M. R., expressly stated that the decision in the Pullman Case was explained and qualified in the Boxsius Case, and summed up the result of the two cases as follows: "The result of the two cases to which I have alluded, taken together, appears to me to be that where there is a duty, whether of perfect or imperfect obligation, as between two persons, which forms the ground of a privileged occasion, the person exercising the privilege is entitled to take all reasonable means of so doing, and those reasonable means may include the introduction of third persons, where that is reasonable and in the ordinary course of business, and if so, it will not destroy the privilege. In the case of a solicitor, his duty in conducting the business of his client may be absolute, whereas in this case it may be said that the duty was only one of imperfect obligation; but the nature of the obligation which gives rise to the privilege cannot, I think, alter its effect in this respect. If the duty is such as to give rise to a privileged occasion, then the fact that it is only one of imperfect obligation cannot affect the mode in which the privilege may reasonably be exercised." And Cozens-Hardy, L. J., in expressing a concurring opinion, added this: "I think that, if we were to accede to the argument for the plaintiff, we should in effect be destroying the defense of privilege in cases of this kind, in which limited companies and large mercantile firms are concerned; for it would be idle in such cases to suppose that such documents as those here complained of could, as a matter of business, be written by, and pass through the hands of, one partner or person only. In the ordinary course of business, such a document must be copied and find its way into the copy-letter book or telegram book of the company or firm. The authorities appear to me to show that the privilege is not lost, so long as the occasion is used in a reasonable manner and in the ordinary course of business."

And Boxsius v. Goblet Frères (Eng.) supra, was again followed in Morgan v. Wallis (1917) 33 Times L. R. (Eng.) 495, where, in holding that the mere dictation by a solicitor to a typist, as a matter of office routine, of a bill of costs, in which he inserted, without malice, defamatory matter which was relevant and reasonably necessary for the information of the person to whom the bill was sent, was not actionable, the court said: "I think that this doctrine of publication of a libel by putting the thing before a typist verges on the absurd. . . . Publication of a libel may be a criminal offense for which a man may receive a very heavy sentence, and to say that submitting a draft to a typist, who will simply rattle it over on a typewriter, hardly comprehending what the thing says, is a publication which may involve a man in a criminal charge, is to my mind verging on the absurd. I do not say that it is absurd, because other judges have said that it is a publication, but I think that in the past the rule has been several times too widely stated, and that the court of appeal in the case of Boxsius v. Goblet Frères (Eng.) supra, and other cases, has seen that, and has limited it by such decisions as in that case and the other cases which Mr. Lewis Thomas mentioned; and that really there must be something much more substantial than publication to a typist in order to constitute publication—something much more substantial than is to be found in the mere fact that a business man, a solicitor, employs a typist to make out his bills of costs. It might easily be that a man who had written a libel and desired to make it known to somebody would put it before a typist, merely in order that somebody should see it. In that case it would be intentional publication; but, where it is done as a mere matter of routine, I cannot see that it is publication." And in discussing the question of privilege, the court further said: "Mr. Lewis Thomas contended that the occasion was absolutely privileged, which means that it is like the reports of what passes in these courts, or what is in a legal document issued by authority. I cannot see any reason to suppose that a solicitor is endowed with the right to publish whatever he likes about everybody, provided that it is in a bill of costs. Then, it is said that, if it is only privileged in the sense in which other documents are privileged, that is sufficient. It is said that communications must be made in order to carry on business, and I agree that there is a privilege in that sense. I think that a solicitor has a right, perfectly plainly, to put into his bill of costs matter which is derogatory to persons other than his client. . . . But I do not think that that gives him a right to say whatever he chooses about everybody concerned in the litigation, and I cannot agree that he has a right to do that, whether he is malicious or whether he is not. . . . I do not myself feel inclined to say that whatever a solicitor says in a bill of costs about somebody else is necessarily privileged, even although there may be malice. All statements in a bill of costs are not necessarily privileged. They must not only be relevant to the matter in hand—relevant in the widest sense—but they must be reasonably necessary for the information of the client to whom the bill of costs is sent, in order that he may know for what he is paying. And if there is evidence of malice, if a solicitor puts into his bill of costs matters not necessary for the information of the client in order that he may know for what he is paying, or that he may get the bill properly taxed,—if there is evidence that he puts them in out of malice,—then the privilege would be destroyed. . . . Here the statements were reasonably necessary for the information of the client."

And in Harper v. Hamilton Retail Grocers' Asso. (1900) 37 Can. L. J. 31, 32 Ont. Rep. 295, where the secretary of a grocers' association gave the alleged libelous matter, which apparently related to the defendant's business, to a typewriter not in the regular employment of the defendants, but occasionally employed and paid by the secretary, to copy, it was held that there was no publication to the typewriter such as would render the association liable for libel.

In Cartwright-Caps Co. v. Fischel

(1917) 113 Miss. 359, L.R.A. 1918F, 566, 74 So. 278, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 985, in holding that the dictation of a libelous letter by the president of a corporation to its stenographer, in the course of its business, did not constitute a publication of the libel, in the absence of any repetition by the stenographer to other persons, the court said: "We think that the letters were privileged, and that there was not, in a legal sense, a publication of the letters in question. The appellant in this case is a corporation, and, of course, can act only through agents, and the acts both of the president and the stenographer to whom the letter was dictated are the acts of the corporation. In our opinion, under the present conditions, the dictation of a letter to a stenographer, when employed by the person or corporation as a stenographer in the business, is not a sufficient publication, in the absence of any repetition by the person or stenographer to other persons."

And in Owen v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. (1898) 32 App. Div. 465, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1033, 6 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 76, the court again laid down the rule that the dictation by the manager of a corporation to a stenographer of the firm, of a libelous letter concerning firm business, does not constitute a publication of the letter, but much stress was laid upon the fact that the manager and the stenographer were servants of a common master, engaged in their respective employments; and the case was seemingly regarded as distinct from one where the person giving the dictation and the stenographer bore the relation of master and servant, rather than coemployees of a common master. For instance, in this connection, it was said: "It may be that the dictation to the stenographer, and her reading of the letter, would constitute a publication of the same by the person dictating it, if the relation existing between the manager and the copyist was that of master and servant, and the letter be held not to be privileged. Such, however, was not the relation of these persons. They were both employed by a common master, and were engaged in the performance of duties which their respective employments required. Under such circumstances we do not think that the stenographer is to be regarded as a third person, in the sense that either the dictation or the subsequent reading can be regarded as a publication by the corporation. It was a part of the manager's duty to write letters for the corporation, and it was the duty of the stenographer to take such letter in shorthand, copy it out, and read it for the purpose of correction. The manager could not write and publish a libel alone, and we think he could not charge the corporation with the consequences of this act, where the corporation, in the ordinary conduct of its business, required the action of the manager and the stenographer in the usual course of conducting its correspondence. The act of both was joint, for the corporation cannot be said to have completed the act which it required by the single act of the manager, as the act of both servants was necessary to make the thing complete. The writing and the copying were but parts of one act, i. e., the production of the letter. Under such conditions we think the dictation, copying, and mailing are to be treated as only one act of the corporation; and, as the two servants were required to participate in it, there was no publication of the letter, in the sense in which that term is understood, by delivering to and reading by a third person. There was in fact but one act by the corporation, and those engaged in the performance of it are not to be regarded as third parties, but as common servants engaged in the act."

And expressly following the rule laid down in Owen v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co. (N. Y.) supra, it was again held in Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Jones (1916) 18 Ga. App. 414, 89 S. E. 429, that the dictation by an officer of a corporation to his stenographer, in the prosecution of its business, of a libelous letter, does not constitute a publication, since in such a case the stenographer cannot be regarded as a third person for the purposes of publication.

And in the reported case (GLOBE FURNITURE CO. v. WRIGHT, ante, 772), the court takes the view that communications made in the usual course of business, to an employee who has a duty to perform with regard to it, is conditionally privileged so as not to be actionable in the absence of malice, it having been held that the exhibition by a general manager of a corporation to its collector and bookkeeper, of a letter relating to a customer's account, with respect to which each has a duty, is privileged, although libelous, and that no action would lie therefor against the corporation. It will be noted that this case, because of the fact that the communication was made to a business associate who, by reason of his duties, had an interest in the subject-matter thereof, is somewhat stronger than those where the communication was to an employee, such as a stenographer or copyist, who in a sense has a mere mechanical part in the conducting of a correspondence.

G. J. C.

MERRILL DAVIS

v.

JOHN L. WHITING & SON COMPANY.

SAME

v.

ABRAM F. GRANT.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court — February 24, 1909.

(201 Mass. 91, 87 N. E. 199.)

Master — independent contractor — work over sidewalk.

1. That there is such risk of injury to pedestrians from the negligence or want of skill of workmen engaged in painting a building abutting thereon, as necessarily to involve an appreciable danger to them, does not render the occupant of the building who employs an independent contractor to do the painting liable for an injury to a passer-by through such negligence.

[See note on this question beginning on page 801.]

— moving staging.

2. The occupant of a building abutting on a public street does not assume liability for injury to pedestrians through a fall of a shutter, by contracting to have the shutters painted on the building, which requires the raising and lowering of staging, carelessness in doing which may cause shutters to fall, if it is not impossible to move the staging without serious danger of interfering with the shutters.

[See 14 R. C. L. 87, 88.]

Negligence — highway — pedestrian.

3. A pedestrian on a sidewalk is not negligent per se in attempting to pass under a light staging suspended from the front of a building which workmen are engaged in painting, at a time when the workmen are standing in the street with the ropes in their hands engaged in shifting the position of the staging, so as to preclude his recovering for injuries caused by the fall of a shutter unhinged by the moving staging, where there is nothing to show that he knew or appreciated the risk of such an accident.

— violation of ordinance.

4. Upon the question of the negligence of a painter whose act in moving a staging on the front of a building abutting on a public street causes an injury to a pedestrian, it is admissible to show that he was acting in violation of an ordinance.

[See 20 R. C. L. 45.]

— proximate cause.

5. That one in using a staging on the front of a building is violating a municipal ordinance does not necessarily render him liable for injuries to a pedestrian through the fall of a shutter from the building, due to use of staging, since such use may not be the proximate cause of the accident.

[See 20 R. C. L. 43, 44; 22 R. C. L. 206, 207.]

Joint verdict — setting aside.

6. A verdict against a building owner and a contractor in an action for damages for negligent injuries to a passer-by must be set aside as to the latter, when the ground upon which the finding against the former was based was improper, where the court instructed the jury that if they found against the owner they must also find against the contractor.

EXCEPTIONS by defendants to instructions of the Superior Court for Suffolk County (Aiken, J.) given in the trial of an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in both cases. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Romney Spring and Woodbury Rand, with Messrs. Matthews, Thompson, & Spring, for defendant John L. Whiting & Son Company:

The test of the relation of master and servant is the right to control.

Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743; Linton v. Smith, 8 Gray, 147; Brackett v. Lubke, 4 Allen, 138, 81 Am. Dec. 694; Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; Wood v. Cobb, 13 Allen, 58; Coomes v. Houghton, 102 Mass. 211; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; Clapp v. Kemp, 122 Mass. 481; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Huff v.

Ford, 126 Mass. 24, 30 Am. Rep. 645; Sturges v. Theological Edu. Soc. 130 Mass. 414, 39 Am. Rep. 463; Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287; Patnoudé v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 119, 61 N. E. 813; Dutton v. Amesbury Nat. Bank, 181 Mass. 154, 63 N. E. 405; Driscoll v. Towle, 181 Mass. 416, 63 N. E. 922; Delory v. Blodgett, 185 Mass. 126, 64 L.R.A. 114, 102 Am. St. Rep. 328, 69 N. E. 1078, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 581; Hooe v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 70, 72 N. E. 341; Oulighan v. Butler, 189 Mass. 287, 75 N. E. 726.

The contractor is not responsible for the acts of the contractee or of his men.

Boomer v. Wilbur, 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246; Cork v. Blossom, 162 Mass. 330, 26 L.R.A. 256, 44 Am. St. Rep. 362, 38 N. E. 495; Patnoudé v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 119, 61 N. E. 813; Dutton v. Amesbury Nat. Bank, 181 Mass. 154, 63 N. E. 405; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; Harding v. Boston, 163 Mass. 14, 39 N. E. 411; Quinn v. Crimmings, 171 Mass. 255, 42 L.R.A. 101, 68 Am. St. Rep. 420, 50 N. E. 624; Allen v. Hayward, 7 Q. B. 960, 115 Eng. Reprint, 749, 4 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 104, 15 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 99, 10 Jur. 92; Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. 4 Exch. 244, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1201, 6 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 184, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 65, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 168; Knight v. Fox, 5 Exch. 721, 155 Eng. Reprint, 316, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 14 Jur. 963; Overton v. Freeman, 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 3 Car. & K. 52, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 16 Jur. 65; Peachey v. Rowland, 13 C. B. 182, 138 Eng. Reprint, 1167, 22 L. J. C. P. N. S. 81, 17 Jur. 764; Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co. 2 El. & Bl. 767, 118 Eng. Reprint, 955, 2 C. L. R. 249, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 42, 18 Jur. 146, 2 Week. Rep. 19, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 180; Cuthbertson v. Parsons, 12 C. B. 304, 138 Eng. Reprint, 924, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 165, 16 Jur. 860; Innocent v. Peto, 4 Fost. & F. 8; Brown v. Accrington Cotton Co. 13 L. T. N. S. 94, 3 Hurlst. & C. 511, 159 Eng. Reprint, 631, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 208; Pearson v. Cox, L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 369, 36 L. T. N. S. 495; Butler v. Hunter, 7 Hurlst. & N. 826, 158 Eng. Reprint, 702, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 214, 10 Week. Rep. 214; Welfare v. London & B. R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 693, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 241, 20 L. T. N. S. 743, 17 Week. Rep. 1065; Goslin v. Agricultural Hall Co. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 482, 45 L. J. C. P. N. S. 354n, 35 L. T. N. S. 92; Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 470, 142 Eng. Reprint, 535, 4 L. T. N. S. 470; Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week. Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196; Bower v. Peate, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 321, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 446, 35 L. T. N. S. 321; Hughes v. Percival, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 443, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 719, 49 L. T. N. S. 189, 31 Week. Rep. 725, 47 J. P. 772; Penny v. Wimbledon

Urban Dist. Council [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 754, 62 J. P. 582, 78 L. T. N. S. 748, 14 Times L. R. 477; McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692, 32 N. E. 1052; Brown v. McLeish, 71 Iowa, 381, 32 N. W. 385; Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush. 464; St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 485; Bibb v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163; Knowlton v. Hoit, 67 N. H. 155, 30 Atl. 346; DuPratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691; DeForest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; Hilsdorf v. St. Louis, 45 Mo. 94, 100 Am. Dec. 352; Deford v. State, 30 Md. 179; Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; Scammon v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334; Bailey v. Troy & B. R. Co. 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129; 1 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 621; Mechem, Agency, §§ 747, 748.

Mr. Robert B. Stone for defendant Grant.

Messrs. C. W. Bartlett, E. R. Anderson, and F. E. Jennings for plaintiff.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are two actions tried together in the superior court, brought to recover for an injury received by the plaintiff from the fall of a shutter from a building occupied and kept in repair by the defendant in the first action, the shutters of which were being painted by the defendant in the second action. The plaintiff contended that he was walking through Belcher lane, a public highway in the city of Boston, in the exercise of due care, and that the defendant Grant and his servants negligently suffered the shutter to fall upon him from the fifth story of the building, while they were drawing up a ladder used as a staging, with ropes and pulleys along the face of the wall, in such a way that the ladder lifted up the shutter from its hinges as it was open against the wall, and left it without support. He also contended that the defendant in the first case made a contract with the defendant in the second case for the painting of the shutters, the performance of which contract necessarily involved such danger to travelers upon the street below that it was legally bound to protect them from the danger. The jury found against both defendants, and the cases are here upon exceptions. We will consider first the case against the occupant of the building.

The jury were instructed to answer this question: "Was the work of painting the shutters on the building necessarily attended with danger to persons passing along Belcher lane?" They answered it in the affirmative. If the question meant, "Was there such risk of accident from the probable negligence or want of skill of some of the workmen as necessarily to involve an appreciable danger of injury to persons passing below?" there was evidence to warrant the finding. But independent contractor—work over sidewalk.

Master—

the finding of this fact would not create a liability on the part of the defendant in the first action. The evidence was undisputed that Grant made a contract to paint the shutters for an agreed price, and that the other defendant had no right of control over him in doing the work. There was no evidence of any attempt to exercise supervision or control of him in the performance of the contract, otherwise than to see that what he did and furnished was in accordance with the requirements of the contract. There was, therefore, no liability on the part of the defendant in the first action for the negligence of Grant or of his servants. The attempt to hold the corporation liable is on the ground recognized in Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L.R.A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, 21 N. E. 482, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 80; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421, and Wetherbee v. Partridge, 175 Mass. 185, 78 Am. St. Rep. 486, 55 N. E. 894. The cases in which this liability exists are generally where the defendant contracts for the creation of a condition of his property, or for a use of his property, which condition or use necessarily causes danger to others, unless precautions are taken to protect them from the consequences of such condition or use. One who brings into existence such a danger, even if he does it through an independent contractor, ought to guard against the probable effect of it. But the principle does not apply to cases where the danger does not come from the condition of the property or the use of it with proper skill and care, but comes only from an unskilful or negligent act of the contractor or his servants, even if a lack of skill or care on the part of some of the persons engaged in the business reasonably may be expected. The distinction is well stated in Boomer v. Wilbur, 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246, in which such instructions as were given in the present case were held to be erroneous, as applied to the facts then before the court. Mr. Justice Hammond said in the opinion: "The accident was caused by the act of the contractor in doing what it was not necessary for him to do and what he did not intend to do. If it had been necessary for him to topple the chimney over into the street, or remove the bricks by letting them fall into it, or the contract had contemplated such action, the instructions would not have been objectionable. But as this was not necessary or intended, the work could not be classed with work which, if properly done, was ordinarily attended with danger to the public." This may be said with equal truth in the present case. In the performance of the contract it was not necessary for the contractor to drop a shutter upon the walk below. It was not expected or intended that he should do it. His contract was to paint all the shutters on the building. The evidence tended to show that such shutters were always painted on the building, and that they would be expected to be painted there. The jury might well find that this contract was intended to be performed without a removal of the shutters. But painting the shutters upon the building did not necessarily make the building a nuisance, or put it into a dangerous condition, such as to make it an object of peril to travelers on the street.

—moving staging.

The only danger referred to in the testimony was connected with the movement of the staging on the side of the building, and the only particular in which the testimony tended to show that this was dangerous was in lifting the ladder when it was suffered to be so near the wall as to come under the shutters that were open on the side of the building. But the undisputed testimony was that the ropes by which the ladder was raised descended from pulleys near the eaves, and that these ropes came down behind the ladder, between it and the wall, and that it was easy, by pulling the ropes away from the building, to hold the ladder away from the shutters, so that it would not lift the shutter from its hinges. There was evidence not only that this building had been painted before with the shutters on it, but that buildings with such fire shutters were always so painted, and there was nothing to show that a shutter ever fell from such a cause before or afterwards. There was no evidence that the shutter was out of repair or improperly constructed. The only evidence as to the cause of the accident tended to show that there was a lack of skill, or a lack of care in moving the staging.

Even if there had been evidence that the moving of the staging in this way would have been a use of the building that made it dangerous to passers-by, there was no evidence that other methods might not have been adopted without taking the shutters from the building, which would not have been necessarily dangerous if proper skill and care were used. It is not to be assumed without evidence that it was impossible to move the staging without serious danger of dropping the shutters. The method of doing this was within the control of the contractor, and under his contract he had a right to do it in any reasonable way that safety demanded. If to do this safely and properly it was necessary temporarily to close the shutters at the point where the ladder was being lifted, while the staging passed by, he had a right, upon the evidence, to do it, and there is no reason to suppose that the company would have objected to his doing it. It seems that the danger which the jury were permitted to find sufficient to create a liability on the part of this defendant was that which is incident to doing difficult work, where an injury may result from the lack of the exercise of skill and care, or even from pure accident. This is a different kind of danger from that which was made a ground of recovery in the cases above cited. See also Ainsworth v. Lakin, 180 Mass. 397, 57 L.R.A. 132, 91 Am. St. Rep. 314, 62 N. E. 746; Cabot v. Kingman, 166 Mass. 403, 33 L.R.A. 45, 44 N. E. 344; Flynn v. Butler, 189 Mass. 377, 75 N. E. 730; Bower v. Peate, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 321, 326, 327, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 446, 35 L. T. N. S. 321; Hughes v. Percival, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 443, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 719, 49 L. T. N. S. 189, 31 Week. Rep. 725, 47 J. P. 772; Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Dist. Council [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 754, 62 J. P. 582, 78 L. T. N. S. 748, 14 Times L. R. 477, id. [1899] 2 Q. B. 72, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 704, 63 J. P. 406, 47 Week. Rep. 565, 80 L. T. N. S. 615, 15 Times L. R. 348; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100-104, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692, 32 N. E. 1052; St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566-576, 21 L. ed. 485-488; Bibb v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163. There was no evidence to show inherent danger to travelers on the street in painting shutters on the building.

This view of the case makes it unnecessary to consider other questions raised by the bill of exceptions. In the first case the defendant's first request should have been given.

In the second case an important question was whether there was evidence that the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. He was walking in a narrow street where there was no barrier or warning to indicate the presence of danger. By reason of obstructions upon the walk, on one side, he crossed to the other side where the walk was clear. All that was above him was a ladder staging of but little weight, sustained by ropes and pulleys, with men then holding the ropes in their hands as they stood in the street. He had no reason to expect the fall of the shutter, and there was no evidence that he knew or appreciated the risk of such an accident as befell him. The cases of Kilroy v. Foss, 161 Mass. 138, 36 N. E. 746; Slade v. Beattie, 186 Mass. 267, 71 N. E. 540, and Nye v. Dutton, 187 Mass. 549, 73 N. E. 654, relied on

Negligence—
highway—
pedestrian.

by the defendant, are very different in their facts, and not conclusive against a recovery by the present plaintiff. We are of opinion that there was no error in the judge's rulings and refusals to rule on this part of the case. That a person is acting in violation of a statute or ordinance is held some evidence of his negligence, and it was competent to show that the de-ordinance.

—violation of

fendant's permit did not authorize the use of the street where the accident happened, and that he was occupying the street in violation of an ordinance. Whether this evidence would be of much importance, in connection with the other facts in the case was not apparent in the beginning. When the evidence was closed, we think it was

—proximate cause.

plain that the violation of the ordinance was not the direct and proximate cause of the accident, and we think that, upon the defendant's request, the jury should have been so instructed. The violation of a statute, although ordinarily evidence of negligence, is not conclusive evidence. It has been held that it may be so remote as not to be material, and not to require a submission of the case to the jury. Glasse v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 185 Mass. 315, 70 N. E. 199, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 86; Farrell v. B. F. Sturtevant Co. 194 Mass. 431-434, 80 N. E. 469; Belleveau v. S. C. Low Supply Co. 200 Mass. 237, 86 N. E. 301. So, too, where a violation of a statute or ordinance is relied upon as evidence of negligence, the circumstances may be shown, if they have a tendency to explain the unlawful conduct and to diminish the effect that otherwise would be given to it as evidence of negligence. Hanlon v. South Boston Horse R. Co. 129 Mass. 310.

The judge gave the jury the following instructions: "If you find against the Whiting Company you must also find against the defendant Grant. If the Whiting Company is liable, Grant is also liable. . . . If the Whiting Company is found negligent, it follows that Grant is also negligent."

As we have already seen, the jury were permitted to find against the Whiting Company on the ground that the contract for painting the shutters was one which involved a necessary danger to the public passing on the street, and which, therefore, made it the legal duty of the Whiting Company to take measures for the protection of the public from the danger which was necessarily incident to the proper performance of the contract. The verdict of the plaintiff against the Whiting Company on this ground was erroneous, as there was no evidence to support it. On finding such a verdict the jury was obliged, under the instructions, to find against setting aside.

Joint verdict—

the defendant Grant, irrespective of the question whether they could find against him on any proper ground. The verdict against the Whiting Company being unfounded, it seems probable—at least, it is not impossible—that the same error entered into the verdict against Grant. On both cases the entry must be exceptions sustained.

NOTE.

The general rule of nonliability of employer in respect of injuries caused by an independent contractor is the subject of the annotation following PRESS v. PENNY, post, 801. As to the application of the doctrine to acts of the contractor productive of transitory occurrences, injurious to persons on adjacent highway, in connection with work performed with respect to a building, see subd, IV. c, 13 (b).

MRS. NELL SMITH, Plff. in Certiorari,
v.
BANK OF COMMERCE & TRUST COMPANY.

Tennessee Supreme Court—June 3, 1916.

(135 Tenn. 398, 186 S. W. 465.)

Master and servant — independent contractor — liability of owner — incidents of work.

1. The owner of a building in process of construction by an independent contractor is not liable for injury to a pedestrian on the adjoining street by a hot rivet which falls when thrown from one workman to another as a method of doing the work, where a protective cover had been placed over the sidewalk, since the workman's act was not a necessary detail of the work so as to render it inherently dangerous and charge the owner with liability.

[See note on this question beginning on page 801.]

— taking bond from contractor — effect.

2. The taking of a bond by the building owner from one contracting for its construction, to protect him from liability for injuries to strangers during the progress of the work, is not sufficient to charge the owner with liability for such injuries on the ground that he knew that the work was inherently dangerous.

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Shelby County (Young, J.) in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. H. H. Bonner and Bell, Terry, & Bell for plaintiff in certiorari.

Messrs. R. P. Cary and William M. Hall, for defendant in certiorari:

The work of riveting steel beams, if properly done, does not create a peril, and the negligence of the contractor, if any, is a mere detail of the work, not contemplated by the contract.

Boomer v. Wilbur, 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246; Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep.

879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378.

The owner is not liable for the negligence of an independent contractor, unless the work contracted for is intrinsically dangerous, or involves a duty to the public incumbent upon the owner, and the injury is a direct result of a violation of that duty.

McHarge v. Newcomer, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, 100 S. W. 700; Straus v. Louisville, 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075; Pye v. Faxon, 156 Mass. 471, 31 N. E. 640; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exch. 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041.

Gholson, Sp. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the plaintiff, Mrs. Nell Smith, against the Consolidated Engineering Company, the E. W. Minter Company, and the Bank of Commerce & Trust Company, hereinafter called the bank, for damages sustained by her on May 9, 1913, while on the street in front of a building that was being erected for the bank. On March 20, 1913, a contract was made between the said engineering company and the bank, as owner, by which the former agreed to construct an annex for the latter, and to repair and remodel the old building, on the lot of said bank in the city of Memphis. The defendant engineering company sublet to the defendant E. W. Minter Company a portion of the construction work. The new building was to be fifteen stories high, and to be erected on the north side of and adjoining the large bank and office building then owned and occupied by the defendant bank. It was on the most-traveled business street in the city of Memphis. Section 9 of said contract is as follows:

"The contractor will, at his own expense, protect, in a suitable manner, the work and ground, so as to avoid any injury to the property of adjacent owners or of others and damage to their persons or employees or any other persons. The contractor will be responsible for all damage of every nature whatsoever done to persons or property during the progress of the work, and occasioned by its own acts or neglect, or that of any of its subcontractors, foremen, laborers, or other employees, or agents, and shall have executed and maintained in force bonds as provided in the specifications.

"Should there be any unsatisfied claims for damages to persons or property at the time when final estimate for doing the work is made and returned, the owner shall have the right to retain an amount sufficient to cover any such claims for its own indemnity until the same has been fully disposed of or adjusted by the contractor."

Another provision of the contract was that the work should be done under the personal supervision of the contractor, and the contract should not be assigned without the written consent of the owner; and should any portion of the work be let to subcontractors the contractor covenanted that such subcontractors should be responsible, capable, and reputable persons, and the contractor should remain responsible for the performance of the work, notwithstanding any subcontract.

It was agreed that the defendant, E. W. Minter Company, did all the steel framework under said contract. Therefore the act which caused the injury to plaintiff was that of the said E. W. Minter Company, or some of its employees.

A shed, 10 or 15 feet wide, covered with heavy solid timber, was erected extending entirely over the sidewalk, all the way in front of the building that was in process of erection. The plaintiff had previously passed under this shed nearly every day. On May 9, 1913, while she was walking on the street in front of the building, and not under the shed, she was struck on the head by a red-hot bolt or rivet, severely, and apparently permanently, injured, from which she has suffered great pain.

The declaration, among other things, averred that while said engineering company and said Minter company were engaged in erecting the steel framework of the building, it was their habit and custom to have the bolts or rivets heated to a red or white heat, and thrown by one employee of said defendants to another employee, who was expected to catch them in a bucket or receptacle, and then to be used. That said work, and the manner in which it was done, was unusual, extremely and intrinsically dangerous to pedestrians on the street below; that the defendants failed to take necessary and reasonable precautions to prevent accidents; that the manner of doing the work was exceedingly dangerous; and that it was the duty of the bank as owner to protect the traveling public from injury by reason thereof. The declaration does not contain any specific averment that the bank knew of the alleged dangerous manner in which this work was being conducted, or wherein or how it had failed to take the necessary precautions, or was derelict, or what could have been done that was not actually done.

Said engineering company and the Bank filed a joint plea of the general issue, and the E. W. Minter Company filed two pleas consisting of the general issue and contributory negligence.

On February 20, 1914, the action was dismissed as to the Minter company. It seems that plaintiff settled with the latter under a contract with covenants not to sue. On February 25, 1914, a verdict was rendered in favor of the Consolidated Engineering Company upon its motion for peremptory instructions. There was no exception taken by the plaintiff to this. There was a mistrial as to the defendant bank. Upon the second trial peremptory instructions were given by the court in favor of the Bank, to which the plaintiff excepted, prayed, and was granted an appeal to the court of civil appeals. That court, in a well-considered and able opinion by Mr. Justice Moore, affirmed the action of the circuit judge. The petition for certiorari was heretofore granted. It was argued, and able and elaborate briefs have been filed for both sides.

It is seriously and earnestly insisted by counsel for the plaintiff that the Bank as owner of the property is liable, and that it was error in the court of civil appeals in not reversing and remanding the case. The several assignments of error, in substance, are that the erection of this high building upon the most populous, most used, and most important business street in the city of Memphis, immediately abutting and adjoining the sidewalk, was intrinsically dangerous to users of the highway unless due care to prevent injury was used, and that it was the duty of the Bank to the public, as the owner of the property, to have the work done in a cautious, careful, and prudent manner, to minimize as much as possible the inconvenience, annoyance, and danger, and this duty it could not delegate to an independent contractor so as to relieve itself of liability.

It appears that on the day plaintiff was injured, the steel framework of the new building was up to the eleventh or twelfth floor; that two or three men at a little forge would heat the rivets to a red or white heat, and by means of a pair of tongs would throw them to a man with an air hammer, and the latter would catch them in a bucket; they would throw rivets from 5 to possibly 25 feet. The rivets were then being heated on the eighth floor and the man catching them was on the sixth or seventh floor at the northwest corner. The forge was situated back from the front about 25 feet, near the middle of the building, which was 25 or 30 feet wide. They would use an ordinary tin bucket in catching the rivets, putting a piece of wood in the bottom of the bucket about 3 inches wide to stop the rivets and to keep the bottom of the bucket from being knocked out. Sometimes a rivet would strike the tin in the bottom of the bucket and bounce out. Sometimes the bucket would be old and the rivets would go through it, and sometimes the man with the bucket would miss the rivets. The witness who detailed this method of handling the rivets stated that on the afternoon plaintiff was hurt he noticed that the man who was catching the rivets in the bucket missed one of them, and that it fell down in the street; that he afterwards looked out of the front window and saw a great crowd gathering in the street; that before he got down there, the lady, who was evidently the plaintiff, was carried to the elevator and taken to a doctor's office. While this witness did not state that this method of handling the rivets was usual and customary, yet it is fairly inferable from his testimony. It is not shown that at any other time had a rivet gone into the street, or had even fallen outside the walls of the building in front and upon the covering over the sidewalk. It is not controverted that the instance detailed above, when the man failed to catch the rivet and it went out into the street, was the occasion when the plaintiff was injured.

It is not disputed that the E. W. Minter Company was an independent contractor at the time the injury to plaintiff occurred. But it is insisted that the rule to be applied comes within one of the exceptions, and therefore the employer is liable.

While the general rule of law is that the proprietor or employer is not liable for the negligence of his contractor and the servants and assistants of the latter, yet there are well-established exceptions and limitations to it.

In the case of McHarge v. Newcomer, 117 Tenn. at page 604, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, 100 S. W. 702, these exceptions in general are "where the act contracted to be done is wrongful or tortious in itself; where the injury is the direct or necessary consequence of the work to be done; where the thing to be done or the manner of its execution involves a duty to the public incumbent upon the proprietor or employer; when the work contracted for is intrinsically dangerous, and the performance of the contract will probably result in injury to third persons or the public; and where the proprietor interferes with the contractor in the performance of the work."

We think Mr. Justice Moore of the court of civil appeals, in his opinion in this case, stated the rule to be applied in this case correctly, as follows:

"If an injury might have been anticipated as a direct or probable consequence of the performance of the work contracted for, if reasonable care is omitted in the course of the employment, then in every such case the owner, or the person having the work performed, is liable for an injury sustained during its execution or performance.

"That is, if the owner of a lot contracts with another to erect a building upon it, and if such owner at the time of the execution or the making of such contract might have anticipated, or foreseen, that an injury would result to third persons properly and lawfully upon the streets or sidewalks adjacent to the building, as a direct and probable consequence of the performance of work on the building, if reasonable care was not taken to avoid such injury, then the owner in such case is liable for such injury, and he must see that reasonable and proper care is used to prevent an injury to persons lawfully upon the streets adjacent to the building being erected."

We find in the case of Anderson v. Fleming, 160 Ind. 597, 66 L.R.A. 119, 67 N. E. 443, a quotation approving the text of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, in discussing the duty of such a corporation to maintain its streets in a safe condition for public travel, the following: "But the employer is not liable where the obstruction or defect in the street causing the injury is wholly collateral to the contract work, and entirely the result of the negligence or wrongful acts of the contractor, subcontractor, or his servants. In such a case the immediate author of the injury is alone liable."

In the case of Boomer v. Wilbur (1900) 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246, the injury was caused by a brick which a mason employed to repair a chimney, let fall in the street, and the plaintiff was injured thereby. The defendant owner employed a contractor to repair chimneys on his building adjoining a highway. The contractor was an independent one, but the plaintiff invoked the same exception to the general rule of nonliability in such cases as is relied upon by the plaintiff here. Judge Hammond in delivering the opinion in that case, among other things, said: "The work which was to be done was not such as would necessarily endanger persons in the street. It did not involve throwing the brick into the street, or causing or allowing them to fall so as to endanger persons traveling therein. It is plain that unless there was negligence in the actual handling of the brick, there could be no injury to the passing traveler. . . . This is not a case where the work, even if properly done, creates a peril unless guarded against, as in the cases relied upon by the plaintiff. The accident was caused by the act of the contractor in doing what it was not necessary for him to do, what he was not expected to do, and what he did not intend to do. If it had been necessary for him to topple the chimney over into the street, or to remove the bricks by letting them fall into it, or the contract had contemplated such action, the instructions would not have been objectionable; but as this was not necessary or intended, the work could not be classed as work which, if properly done, was ordinarily attended with danger to the public. The negligence, if any, was in a mere detail of the work. The contract did not contemplate such negligence, and the negligent party is the only one to be held."

In the case of Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exch. 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041, where the work was being done by an independent contractor, the plaintiff was hit on the head by a falling brick and severely injured. The court said: "It is evident that the falling of the brick was collateral to the contract, and was, if negligence at all, the result of negligent acts on the part of some of the workmen employed by the contractors, and was not the necessary or natural result of any act which the contractors were employed to do. In this situation the owner is not liable, at least in the absence of some other distinct ground of liability—citing Hundhausen v. Bond, 36 Wis. 29; Hackett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822."

In the last case cited, however, the owner was held liable because of the violation of an ordinance which required the owner or contractor, before erecting any building abutting on a public sidewalk, to cause a roof passageway to be built in front of the building upon the sidewalk, under pain of a certain fine or imprisonment.

It clearly appears that in the instant case a roofed passageway had been erected to protect the traveling public, just as required by the municipal ordinance, referred to in the Wisconsin case, supra. This is pertinent to show that such precautions had been taken as were deemed reasonable by the city authorities who passed that ordinance, notwithstanding none is shown to have been required by the city of Memphis.

In the case of Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616, it was said: "It cannot be successfully maintained that building a house on a lot abutting upon a street is inherently and necessarily dangerous, or that danger and hazard must necessarily attend its erection. It is a lawful work, and of necessity engaged in by thousands every day, and if carefully and properly done involves no danger to anyone. The negligence of the employees of the brick contractor in leaving their plank walkway extended upon the sidewalk after night was not a necessary incident of the work, or even to be anticipated by anyone. . . . The erection of buildings adjacent to a highway, with the usual and necessary excavations, and the consequent obstructions to the sidewalk and street, is held not to be within the exception to the general rule which attaches liability to employers where the work in hand is inherently dangerous, or will necessarily create a nuisance."

(135 Tenn. 398, 186 S. W. 465.)

The case under consideration is different from that of McHarge v. Newcomer, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 298, 100 S. W. 700, for in that case an awning over a public street in front of the building owned by the defendant was being repaired, and no precautions were taken to prevent portions of the awning, material, or tools from falling on those below. The work being done for the Bank in this case was on its own lot. Anything that would have fallen within the walls of the building would necessarily have been upon the property of the defendant Bank, where none but those employed in the construction of the building had the right to be, and, as heretofore shown, the public were protected by a shed all the way over the sidewalk, and this shed was covered over with heavy solid timber. It was argued, and we think successfully, that the city authorities would not have permitted the entire street to have been covered. Indeed, it appears not to have been necessary at any other time than on the occasion when plaintiff was injured.

There is an exhaustive note on the subject of the liability of the employer of an independent contractor, under the case of Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. 65 L.R.A. 620, at pages 643 and 644, under the head of "Work on buildings," where a number of cases that are pertinent are collated. Among them we quote: "The right to maintain an action was also denied, where a person walking along the street was injured by the negligence of a servant of a contractor, who threw a piece of lime into a mortar bed in the street. Strauss v. Louisville (1900) 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075. . . .

"A jury is properly charged that one for whom a brick wall is being erected is not liable for damages sustained by the adjoining owner by the dropping of brick and mortar on his premises, if such occurrences were not necessarily involved in the building of the wall, but were due to the negligence of the contractor or his servants." Pye v. Faxon (1892) 156 Mass. 471, 31 N. E. 640."

There was a concurrent finding of the trial judge and the court of civil appeals that the defendant Bank did not know of the alleged dangerous method of handling the rivets. The plaintiff neither alleged nor proved what precautions could have been taken that would have prevented the injury. It is urged that the rivets should not have been thrown and caught in the manner shown; that they were liable to be missed in catching, and fall into the street. Yet plaintiff has failed to prove that a single rivet had ever previously fallen into the street, or in such a manner as would likely endanger one using the street. How could the owner be held to have anticipated what had never happened before? The negligence complained of independent contractor—

Master and servant—
liability of owner—incidents of work.

was but a mere detail of the work that could not have been foreseen or forestalled by the owner. It did not necessarily follow the execution of the work contracted for. It was not a necessary detail of the work.

We think Judge Moore has been done an injustice in the copying of his opinion, where he is purported to have said that this was merely one of the details necessary to be performed in the execution of this contract. We think that he intended to say not necessary, because this statement is not in accord with the remainder of his opinion.

It was insisted by learned counsel for the plaintiff that the Bank realized that the work was intrinsically dangerous because it took a bond from the engineering company for the faithful performance of the work and to protect it from the results of injuries to other persons, and for that reason it should be held liable. This does not in any way affect the liability. We quote the following, appearing on page 506 of 65 L.R.A., under the annotated case of Central Coal & I. Co. v. Grider: "It is well settled that the fact of the contractor's having undertaken, as between himself and the employer, to be responsible for injuries occasioned by any tortious conduct, on the part of himself and his servants, does not in any way affect or qualify the position of third parties in regard to the recovery of damages from the employer. Such a stipulation inures to the benefit of the employer alone, and confers no right of action upon anyone else. French v. Vix (1894) 143 N. Y. 90, 37 N. E. 612; Wolf v. American Tract Soc. (1898) 25 App. Div. 98, 49 N. Y. Supp. 236."

—taking bond from contractor—
—effect.

See also Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378,—an opinion by Judge Lurton.

We are clearly of opinion that the circuit judge and the Court of Civil Appeals were correct, and, the writ of certiorari having heretofore been granted, the action of said courts is in all things affirmed.

NOTE.

The general rule which relieves an employer from liability for injuries caused by the torts of an independent contractor is the subject of the annotation following PRESS v. PENNY, post, 801.

As to acts productive of transitory occurrences, in connection with work performed with respect to a building, injuring a person on the adjacent highway, see subd. IV. c, 13 (b).

OTTO PRESS, Respt.,

v.

ALEXANDER PENNY et al., Appts.

Missouri Supreme Court — February 29, 1912.

(242 Mo. 98, 145 S. W. 458.)

Master — removal of sign — independent contractor — injury to pedestrian — liability.

1. The removal of a sign from a building standing flush with the sidewalk is not so inherently dangerous that the property owner cannot relieve himself from liability for injury negligently inflicted by workmen upon persons passing along the street, by letting the work to an independent contractor.

[See note on this question beginning on page 801.]

Highway — placing ladder on sidewalk — nuisance.

2. The placing by an abutting owner of a ladder upon the sidewalk, to enable him to reach a sign on the front of the building, is not a nuisance which will render him liable for injury which may thereby result to a person passing along the walk.

[See 13 R. C. L. 211.]

CERTIFICATION by the St. Louis Court of Appeals for the opinion of the Supreme Court after reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis (Allen, J.), of questions which arose upon appeal by defendants from a judgment of that court in plaintiff's favor, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Brown, C.:

This cause is certified to this court from the St. Louis court of appeals, because one of the judges of that court, sitting therein, deems its decision contrary to the decision of this court in the case of Loth v. Columbia Theater Co. 197 Mo. 328, 94 S. W. 847. The opinion of the St. Louis court of appeals, as well as the dissenting opinion of Norton, J., in Press v. Penny & Gentles, is found in 134 Mo. App. 121, 114 S. W. 74, and following. The judgment at the trial was for the plaintiff. It was reversed by the decision of the court of appeals.

The action is for damages suffered by plaintiff on account of personal injuries. The defendants were partners, doing a large retail dry goods business in a building of which they were tenants in possession, situated at the southwest corner of Washington avenue and Broadway, two of the most traveled streets in the city of St. Louis. Scott & Wolff Painting Company had a contract to paint, put up, and remove all signs used by them. At the time of the accident, January 12, 1907, there was a muslin sign, stretched on a wooden frame, about 12 feet long and 5 feet wide, tacked over the water table above the first story of the defendants' building, on which was painted some advertisement relating to their business. It having served its purpose, they had telephoned the Scott & Wolff Painting Company to take it down. The company sent two men for that purpose with two ladders, one of them 14 feet and the other 16 feet in length, which they set up against the building, so that they stood on the sidewalk about 5 feet from the wall, and went up to draw the nails from the sign, so that it could be handed down. One of the men, in extracting a nail, misjudged the amount of force necessary for that purpose, and the nail unexpectedly gave way, causing him to lose his balance, and he fell upon the plaintiff, who was then passing along the sidewalk, near the foot of the ladder, inflicting the injuries for which this suit is brought. The method adopted for removing the sign, by the use of the ladder resting upon the sidewalk, was a usual one.

The petition upon which the case was tried contains two counts upon the same injury. The first alleges that the ladder was, by the men working upon it, negligently permitted to fall, and that either the ladder or the man who was working on it fell onto and against the plaintiff. The second count charges that the "use of said street and sidewalk by the defendants, under the circumstances mentioned, was negligent and wrongful, and constituted a nuisance, and that it was defendants' duty to have protected plaintiff in his rightful use of said public sidewalk at the time in question, and that by reason of such negligent and wrongful use of the public sidewalk and street, and the breach of said duty by the defendants at the time and place in question, plaintiff sustained the injuries mentioned." The trial court, being very properly of the opinion that, upon the facts stated, there was no question to submit to the jury other than the assessment of damages, peremptorily instructed them that their finding must be for the plaintiff and against the defendants. The propriety of this instruction and the refusal of a peremptory instruction in their favor, asked by defendants, fully present the only questions in the case.

Messrs. Watts, Williams, & Dines, William R. Gentry, and James P. McBaine, for appellants:

The defendants are not liable for the acts of Rule, even if the court should find that Rule's negligence injured the plaintiff. Rule was employed by an independent contractor, and the defendants had no control whatever over him.

Independence v. Slack, 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094; Loth v. Columbia Theater Co. 197 Mo. 354, 94 S. W. 847; Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W.

1077; Williamson v. Fischer, 50 Mo. 198; Horner v. Nicholson, 56 Mo. 220; Benjamin v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590; Long v. Moon, 107 Mo. 334, 17 S. W. 810; Strauss v. Louisville, 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075; McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. 4 Exch. 244, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1201, 6 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 184, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 65, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 168; Forstyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755; Johnson v. Helbing, 6 Cal. App. 424, 92 Pac. 360; Geist v. Rothschild, 90 Ill. App. 324; Boomer v. Wilbur, 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exch. 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041; Symons v. Allegany County, 105 Md. 254, 65 Atl. 1067; DeForrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; McNulty v. Ludwig, 125 App. Div. 291, 109 N. Y. Supp. 703; Massey v. Oates, 143 Ala. 248, 39 So. 142; Neumeister v. Eggers, 29 App. Div. 385, 51 N. Y. Supp. 481; Francis v. Johnson, 127 Iowa, 391, 101 N. W. 878, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 507; Sanford v. Pawtucket Street R. Co. 19 R. I. 537, 33 L.R.A. 564, 35 Atl. 67; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743; Scammon v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334.

Mr. Percy Werner and A. C. Dobie, for respondent:

The rule that one employing an independent contractor is not himself liable for an injury to a third person is subject to the qualification that the work which the independent contractor is to do is neither unlawful in itself nor dangerous to others.

Independence v. Slack, 134 Mo. 75, 34 S. W. 1094; Peters v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 150 Mo. App. 721, 131 S. W. 921; Thomp. Neg. § 621; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421.

Defendant was liable for injuries caused by the servants of the Scott & Wolf Painting Company in removing the sign from in front of the building in question.

Loth v. Columbia Theater Co. 197 Mo. 328, 94 S. W. 847; O'Hara v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 131 Mo. App. 428, 110 S. W. 644; French v. Boston Coal Co. 195 Mass. 334, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993, 122 Am. St. Rep. 257, 81 N. E. 265; McHarge v. Newcomer, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, 100 S. W.

700; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Steinbrock, 61 Ohio St. 215, 76 Am. St. Rep. 375, 55 N. E. 618, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 154.

It being necessary to place the ladders on a public sidewalk in the busiest part of the city, defendants' contract with the painting company was to do that which was not only dangerous to the public, but also unlawful.

Pollock, Torts, Webb's Am. ed. 624; Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co. 2 El. & Bl. 767, 118 Eng. Reprint, 955, 2 C. L. R. 249, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 42, 18 Jur. 146, 2 Week. Rep. 19, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 180; 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 1088-93; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 196, 197; Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co. 152 Cal. 500, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 913, 93 Pac. 82, 14 Ann. Cas. 1159; St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 574, 21 L. ed. 485, 488.

Setting up two ladders on a sidewalk in midday on a busy thoroughfare, and allowing two men to mount these ladders and attempt to handle a large, cumbersome, unwieldy, muslin sign, in windy weather, constituted a nuisance.

Waller v. Ross, 100 Minn. 7, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 721, 117 Am. St. Rep. 661, 110 N. W. 252, 10 Ann. Cas. 715, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 166.

Brown, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff, in the two counts of his petition, presents two separate phases, upon either of which he might predicate his right to recover: (1) Negligence of the workman who fell upon him in causing the ladder to fall; and (2) negligence of the defendants in causing or permitting the work in question to be done in the time and manner indicated in the statement. We will for convenience present these questions in inverse order to that in which we have stated them.

1. It being admitted that "the work of removing the sign necessitated the occupancy of the sidewalk with ladders," the question is presented whether or not the defendants, in directing the work to be done, violated or infringed upon any right of the plaintiff as a traveler upon the street. The abutting proprietor has a right in the use of the street entirely distinct from that of the public. This is usually denominated "the easement of access," and constitutes the real foundation and consideration for those special burdens imposed upon them for the construction and improvement of such highways. This right is as much property as the land to which it pertains, and the legislature can no more deprive a man of one than the other without compensation. Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 180. It has its foundation in a universal necessity; for of what public benefit would highways be, unless in connection with the right of ingress and egress for the purpose of the traffic for which they are designed? It is true that the exercise of this right is, like the exercise of the right of the public to travel on the same highways, subject to the reasonable control of the legislature, applied either directly or through its municipal agencies; but each of these rights is subject to those modifications and restrictions necessary to the exercise of the other. Judge Dillon, in his excellent work on Municipal Corporations, 4th ed. § 730, says: "But it is not every obstruction, irrespective of its character or purpose, that is illegal, even although not sanctioned by any express legislative or municipal authority. On the contrary, the right of the public to the free and unobstructed use of a street or way is subject to reasonable and necessary limitations and restrictions. The carriage and delivery of fuel, grain, goods, etc., are legitimate uses of a street, and may result in a temporary obstruction to the right of public transit. . . . Temporary obstructions of this kind are not invasions of the public easement, but simply incidents to or limitations of it. They can be justified when, and only so long as they are, reasonably necessary. There need be no absolute necessity; it suffices that the necessity is a reasonable one." This passage is quoted with approval by this court in Gerdes v. Christopher

& S. Architectural Iron & Foundry Co. 124 Mo. 347, 354, 25 S. W. 557, 27 S. W. 615, and Corby v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 150 Mo. 457, 467, 52 S. W. 282.

There is no more useful purpose to which a street may be put, in behalf of the abutting proprietor, than that which contributes to the growth and material development of the communities which it serves. While the public requires and demands the best facilities for travel, the necessity for these facilities is founded largely in the material growth and prosperity of the communities which maintain them. For this reason, it has always been considered that the abutting proprietor was of right entitled not only to transfer his materials for improving his premises from the street, but to hold it on the street or sidewalk for a reasonable time to enable it to be transferred directly to his structures. John A. Tolman & Co. v. Chicago, 240 Ill. 275, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 97, 88 N. E. 488, 16 Ann. Cas. 142, and cases cited. The two classes of rights being co-existent, each must be exercised with reference to the existence of the other. In this case, the use in question was one directly arising from the prudent and profitable use of the premises. The evidence does not show that any special or peculiar danger was connected with it. That an accident resulted in this case is perfectly true; but if that alone constitutes evidence of the dangerous character of the work, that question would cease to be an element in any judicial controversy of this character, because the happening of the accident would furnish the rule for its determination. We must hold, then, that there was nothing in the character of the work out of which this accident grew, or in the character of the place in which it was being done, that fixed upon the defendants liability on account of any accident growing out of its proper performance.

Highway—
placing ladder on sidewalk—
nuisance.

2. It is stipulated by the parties, for the purposes of the trial and determination of this case, that the muslin sign, which was being removed from the front of the defendants' store at the time and place of the accident, belonged to them, and was being removed on their behalf by the Scott & Wolff Painting Company, which had a contract to paint, put up, and remove all signs used by the defendants. This evidently means that with reference to this work the painting company was an independent contractor, employing its own servants and doing the work in its own way, being bound to the defendants only for the result, and that the servants engaged in the work were not the servants of defendants, and that therefore the rule respondeat superior does not apply between them, unless there is something in the circumstances of this case to take it out of the general and well-established rule. We have seen that in contracting to have this work done the defendants were clearly within their rights, because the use to which the street would be put in the proper performance of the contract was one to which it was lawfully subject, and was not particularly dangerous in its character.

The plaintiff, however, insists that there is something in its nature which calls for the personal supervision of the owner for whose benefit it is being done, so that he cannot relieve himself of personal responsibility for the acts of workmen with whom he has no contract relation whatever. This principle, carried to its logical conclusion, would probably extend to all classes of work involving the use of the streets, and we should be slow to adopt it, unless under the compelling influence of a settled judicial policy of our own state.

It is true that an owner who contracts for the creation of a condition on his own property which is dangerous to third persons will be liable for injuries resulting therefrom; for it is evident that one has no more right by contract to set traps for his neighbors, than to set them with his own hand. Therefore one who digs or causes to be dug upon his own premises a pitfall, so near to the street that travelers, in the exercise of their right to pass along it, are liable to fall in and be injured, must take care at his own peril to see that it is protected. This he may do personally or by contract, as best suits his convenience; if by contract, however, he is still responsible for the result. But if the contractor, while building a fence to protect it, should carelessly throw a stick or board upon a passer-by, or negligently fall upon him himself, the owner would not be liable for a resulting injury, because it would not be caused by the pitfall, nor by the contract to protect it, but by a collateral act, done in performance of a contract which does not contemplate, and gives no sanction to, carelessness.

This principle, with its limitations, is well illustrated by the late Massachusetts case of Davis v. John L. Whiting & Son Co. 201 Mass. 91, ante, 782, 87 N. E. 199. In that case the defendant, who, like these defendants, was the owner of a large store, contracted with a painter to paint the iron shutters. In the doing of this job, a light ladder scaffold was used, and while this was being raised by tackle, hung from the cornice, it came in contact with the bottom of a shutter, which had been carelessly left open, and raised it off its hinges, so that it fell upon the plaintiff, a passer-by in the street. This case, in its facts, as well as in the principles involved, bore a striking resemblance to the one we are considering. On the trial, the following question was asked the jury and answered by them affirmatively in the verdict: "Was the work of painting the shutters . . . necessarily attended with danger to persons passing along Belcher lane?" There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and in its opinion reversing it the supreme judicial court said: "If the question meant, 'Was there such risk of accident from the probable negligence or want of skill of some of the workmen as necessarily to involve an appreciable danger of injury to persons passing below?' there was evidence to warrant the finding. But the finding of this fact would not create a liability on the part of the defendant." Referring to the same line of Massachusetts cases cited in the plaintiff's brief in this case, the court said: "It seems that the danger which the jury were permitted to find sufficient to create a liability on the part of this defendant was that which is incident to doing difficult work, where an injury may result from the lack of the exercise of skill and care, or even from pure accident. This is a different kind of danger from that which was made a ground of recovery in the cases above cited." The light shed by this opinion upon the very question we are now considering will have to be our excuse for quoting a synopsis of the decision upon this point, from the syllabus, as follows: "Where the owner of a building, who employed an independent contractor to paint the shutters thereon, had no right to, and did not, exercise control over the contractor, the mere fact that the probable negligence or want of skill of the workmen might result in injury to persons passing below, by the falling of the shutters, did not render the owner liable for injuries so received, as the danger did not come from the condition of the property, or the use to which it must necessarily be put in doing the work, but from the unskilful and negligent act of the contractor and his servants."

One phase of this question is illustrated by the decision of this court in Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528. A traveler fell into an unprotected excavation along the margin of the street, which had been dug as a cellar by a contractor, in the performance of a contract to erect a building for the owner. This court reversed a judgment, founded on a directed verdict for the owner, on the sole ground that her contract required the contractor to dig a cellar in that place, and that, having caused the dangerous condition, the duty was upon her to protect it. In Independence v. Slack, 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094, the other phase of the same question is illustrated. In that case, also, there was a directed verdict for the owners, the judgment upon which was sustained by this court. They were engaged in the construction of buildings abutting on the street, and of a stone sidewalk on the street in front of the building, and had made an excavation and prepared the street for laying the sidewalk. The excavation was guarded, so as to prevent persons from falling therein, and large stones were brought for use in the construction of the sidewalk. For the purpose of fitting and dressing these stones, they were placed upon the street, leaving a passway 3 or 4 feet wide between them and the curbing, where they remained for two weeks or more. The owners had contracts with one Stewart to furnish the stones and construct the sidewalks in front of their respective buildings. In holding that the owners were not liable, this court said: "There are some old English cases which hold generally and broadly that 'the person from whom the whole authority is originally derived is the person who ought to be answerable,' whether the person who did the work was the servant or an independent contractor of the employer. Bush v. Steinman, 1 Bos. & P. 404, 126 Eng. Reprint, 978. This rule was followed for a time in Massachusetts. Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33. But it is now well settled in this country, as well as in England, as a general rule, that one person is only liable for the act or negligence of another when the relation of master and servant exists between them. 1 Beven, Neg. 2d ed. pp. 718 et seq. The facts bring this case within no recognized exception to this rule."

The general rule, together with exceptions to its universal application, is well illustrated by the three cases from which we have already quoted. These so-called exceptions, it will be noted, refer to cases in which a primary duty rests upon the owner which he fails to perform. The foundation of his liability is his own failure to perform this duty, and not the negligence of the independent contractor or his servants. Different aspects of the same question are also interestingly discussed in the following cases: Long v. Moon, 107 Mo. 334, 17 S. W. 810; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 1077; Benjamin v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590; Williamson v. Fischer, 50 Mo. 198; Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755.

Holding, then, as we do, that the use to which the street was being put in removing the sign in question was a lawful one, founded upon the easement of access incident to the removal of sign —independent contractor—injury to pedestrian—

Master—
liability.

abutting property, it necessarily follows that such use and the general use of the public are mutual and interdependent. Had the plaintiff negligently knocked down the ladder and thus injured the man working on it, he would have been liable to respond in damages for the injury; and we can see no reason why a distinction should be made with respect to such liability, other than that arising from the applicability in this case of the doctrine respondent superior, because the injury arose from the act of a servant of the Scott & Wolff Painting Company in the performance of the work for his master. If the doctrine contended for by plaintiff is to be followed in this case, it will logically lead to the liability of the tenant for any accident that may happen through the negligence of the driver in delivering a load of coal into his premises, although it may have been purchased for delivery at that place.

We do not think Loth v. Columbia Theater Company, 197 Mo. 328, 94 S. W. 847, is an authority against the view we have taken. The judgment against the defendant in that case was reversed, and the case remanded by this court, on the sole ground that it had been submitted upon the theory that the electric sign there in question was a nuisance per se, when in fact and in law it was not. It is true that the court, in its opinion, stated that under the pleadings and evidence the defendant would, had the case been properly submitted upon that issue, have been liable; but this statement was founded upon the record in that case, and should be disregarded in this.

It follows that upon the stipulation in this case the finding and judgment of the trial court should have been for the defendants; and its judgment for the plaintiff is accordingly reversed, and the decision of the St. Louis Court of Appeals affirmed.

Bond, C., concurs in the result for the sole reason that the work in question is not such as is ordinarily "attended with danger;" and hence the owner incurred no liability by letting it to a competent contractor.

Per Curiam:

The foregoing opinion of Brown, C., is adopted as the opinion of the court.

All the Judges concur.

Woodson, J., concurring:

I concur with the opinion in this case for two additional reasons to those stated therein: First, because the record fails to show that the respondent was injured in consequence of negligence on the part of anyone. His injuries were the result of an accident, pure and simple (Zeis v. St. Louis Brewing Asso. 205 Mo. 638, 104 S. W. 99); and, second, even though it be conceded that his injury was the result of negligently pulling the nail, yet it cannot be said that the appellants or the contractors could have reasonably foreseen the result thereof; namely, that the employee pulling the nail would fall from the ladder and upon the respondent. If the result could not have been reasonably foreseen, then there is no liability. Ibid.; Dean v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. 199 Mo. 386, 97 S. W. 910. Petition for rehearing denied March 29, 1912.

ANNOTATION.

Nonliability of an employer in respect of injuries caused by the torts of an independent contractor.

I. Doctrine applied in common-law jurisdictions:

- § 1. Various forms in which the doctrine has been enunciated, 802.
- § 2. Same subject further considered, 804.
- § 3. Rationale of the doctrine, 806.
- § 4. Qualifications of the doctrine, 810.
- § 5. Applicability of doctrine as regards torts of sub-contractors, 810.
- § 6. Extent of the employer's duty with respect to the supervision and control of work intrusted to an independent contractor, 811.
- § 7. Extent of employer's duty to guard against possible accidents, 816.
- § 8. Invalidity of contract, effect of, 818.
- § 9. Stipulation obligating the contractor to indemnify the employer, 820.
- § 10. Stipulation forbidding the use of the employer's name by the contractor, 820.
- § 11. Effect of statutory provisions, 820.

II. Evolution of the common-law doctrine:

- § 12. Effect of the English case, Bush v. Steinman, 821.
- § 13. Doctrine applied in later English cases, 824.
- § 14. General review of the American cases, 831.
- § 15. Concluding remarks, 836.

III. Doctrine applied in civil-law jurisdictions:

- § 16. Louisiana, 837,
- 18 A.L.R.—51.

III.—continued.

- § 17. Scotland, 838.
- § 18. France, 838.
- § 19. Province of Quebec, 838.

IV. Torts of contractors for which employers are not answerable:

- § 20. Introductory, 839.

a. Acts productive of more or less permanent conditions injurious to persons:

- § 21. Work performed for a railroad company, 843.
- § 22. Work performed with respect to building. Conditions on the employer's premises:
 - (a) Injuries to persons in the building or elsewhere on the premises, 844.
 - (b) Injuries to persons on adjoining premises, 845.
 - (c) Injuries to persons on adjacent highway, 845.
 - (d) Injuries to property on adjacent premises, 846.

- § 23. Same subject. Conditions on highway adjacent to employer's premises, 846.

- § 24. Work performed on a highway, 849.

- § 25. Other descriptions of work, 850.

b. Acts productive of more or less permanent conditions injurious to property:

- § 26. Work performed for a railroad company, 850.

IV. b—continued.

- § 27. Work performed with respect to a building, 851
- § 28. Work performed on a highway, 852.
- § 29. Work performed by means of explosives, 853.
- § 30. Other descriptions of work, 854.
- c. Acts productive of transitory occurrences injurious to persons or property:
 - § 31. Work performed for a railroad company, 855.
 - § 32. Work performed with respect to a building:
 - (a) Injuries to persons in the building, 857.
 - (b) Injuries to persons on adjacent highway, 857.

I. Doctrine applied in common-law jurisdictions.§ 1. Various forms in which the doctrine has been enunciated.

In some of the judicial statements embodying the doctrine as to the nonliability of an employer for injuries resulting from the tortious acts of an independent contractor, it is ¹ "If, in rendering the service, the person whose negligence caused the injury was in the course of accomplishing a given end for his employer, by means and methods over which the latter had no control, but which were subject to the exclusive control of the person employed, then such person was exercising an independent employment, and the employer is not liable." Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver (1887) 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296.

"It seems to be settled law that where one person lets a contract to another to do a particular work, reserving to himself no control over the manner in which the work shall be performed, except that it shall conform to a particular standard when completed, he is not liable for any injury which may occur to others by reason of any negligence of the person to whom the contract is let." Vincennes Water Supply Co. v. White (1890) 124 Ind. 376, 24 N. E. 747,

IV. c—continued.

- (c) Injuries to property on adjacent premises, 858.
- § 33. Work performed by means of or with respect to explosives, 858.
- § 34. Other descriptions of work, 859.
- d. Acts constituting a trespass as regards the property of third persons:
 - § 35. Work performed for a railroad company, 862.
 - § 36. Work with respect to a building, 863.
 - § 37. Work performed on a highway:
 - (a) Employer a private party, 863.
 - (b) Employer a municipal corporation, 863.

enunciated in the general form exemplified in the passages quoted below.¹

The particular conception reflected in other statements is that, in any case in which the injury complained of is shown to have been occasioned by the act of an independent contractor, a situation is presented which excludes the application both of the principle quoted in Marion Shoe Co. v. Eppley (1914) 181 Ind. 219, 104 N. E. 65, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 220.

"Where the agreement provides for a result to be accomplished by the employee, and leaves to the employee the means and methods by which the result is to be accomplished, then the relation is that of employer and contractor, and not that of master and servant. Where the arrangement is that some person, representing the owner or architect, is simply to give directions as to the work to be done, and is not to give, or has no authority to give, directions as to the manner in which it should be performed, or as to the means to be used in performing it, then the owner would not be liable for injury resulting from the method of its performance, as there would be no relation of master and servant." Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Skeel (1914) 182 Ind. 593, 106 N. E. 365, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 474, 7 N. C. C. A. 724.

which is embodied in the maxim, "qui facit per alium facit per se,"² and of the principle which is embodied in the maxim "respondeat superior."³

The rule is "that where the person employed is in the exercise of an independent and distinct employment, and not under the immediate control, direction, or supervision of the employer, the latter is not responsible for the negligence or misdoings of the former." De Forrest v. Wright (1852) 2 Mich. 368, adopted in Pickens v. Diecker (1871) 21 Ohio St. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 53.

"The general principle to be extracted from them [i. e., the authorities] is that a person, either natural or artificial, is not liable for the acts or negligence of another, unless the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent, exists between them; that, when an injury is done by a party exercising an independent employment, the party employing him is not responsible to the person injured." Painter v. Pittsburgh (1863) 46 Pa. 213.

² Quarman v. Burnett (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 509, 151 Eng. Reprint, 513, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 308, 4 Jur. 969, per Parke, B.; Wiswall v. Brinson (1849) 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 554.

The following remarks in a Scotch case are noteworthy in this connection: "The most general rule is 'culpa tenet suos auctores,' which is a rule deeply founded in justice, that he who is in fault should alone be liable for the consequences. But then there has been clearly established an exception to this general rule, indicated by the maxims 'qui facit per alium facit per se,' and 'respondeat superior,' . . . In order to the application of the exception, there must be such a dependence of the one party on the other as amounts to such a control as a master has over his servant. No such control exists between a contractor and his employer. This comparative independence, whilst it excludes the exception, by relieving the employer, brings into play the general rule. The contractor has an independent character, and is answerable for his own or his own servant's fault. There is a limitation on the exception thus established,—a limitation of a very artificial kind,—namely, that the master shall not be answerable when the party injured is a fellow servant engaged in common employment with

The phraseology of other statements directs attention to the fact that the employer's immunity is predicated only in respect of these acts of an in-the party in fault." Lord Glenholme in Gregory v. Hill (1869) 8 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 282.

³ "The rule of respondeat superior does not apply where the party employed to do the work in the course of which the injury occurs is a contractor, pursuing an independent employment, and by the terms of the contract is free to exercise his own judgment and discretion as to the means and assistants that he may think proper to employ about the work, exclusive of the control and direction, in this respect, of the party for whom the work is being done." Deford v. State (1868) 30 Md. 179.

"The only principle upon which one man can be made liable for the wrongful acts of another is that such a relation exists between them that the former, whether he be called principal or master, is bound to control the conduct of the latter, whether he be agent or servant. The maxim of the law is 'respondeat superior.' It is only applicable in cases where the party sought to be charged stands in the relation of superior to the person whose wrongful act is the ground of complaint." Blackwell v. Wiswall (1855) 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 355.

"This rule [i. e., 'respondeat superior'] does not apply, and the liability does not exist, where it can be shown that those engaged in executing the work, and by whose carelessness or want of skill the injury was occasioned, are not the servants or subordinates of him for whose use and benefit the work is being performed, but are acting under a contract or employment which leaves the contractor or employee free to exercise his own judgment as to the means and assistants to be employed in accomplishing the work, without being subject to control in these respects by the party for whom the work is being done." McCamus v. Citizens' Gas-light Co. (1863) 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 380.

Similar phraseology is found in Stephens v. Thurso Police Comrs. (1876) 3 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 542; Bibb v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1891) 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163; Cincinnati v. Stone (1855) 5 Ohio St. 38; Du Pratt v. Lick (1869) 38 Cal. 691, and Hilsdorf v. St. Louis (1869) 45 Mo. 94, 100 Am. Dec. 352.

dependent contractor which are "collateral" or "casual" in their nature.⁴

Other statements include a specific reference to one or more of the various exceptions to which the doctrine is subject.⁵

The common-law doctrine has been embodied in Georgia Civil Code 1911, § 4414 (3818) by which it is provided: The employer generally is not responsible for torts committed by his employee when the latter exercises an independent business, and in it is not subject to the immediate direction and control of the employer.

§ 2. Same subject further considered.

The doctrine is ordinarily enunciated in one or other of the forms specified in the preceding section. But

⁴ "No one can be made liable for an act or breach of duty, unless it be traceable to himself, or his servant or servants, in the course of his or their employment. Consequently, if an independent contractor is employed to do a lawful act, and in the course of the work he or his servants commit some casual act of wrong or negligence, the employer is not answerable." Pickard v. Smith (1861) 10 C. B. N. S. 470, 142 Eng. Reprint, 535.

⁵ In Bower v. Peate (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 321, Cockburn, Ch. J., referred to the general rule "that when a person employs a contractor to do a work lawful in itself, and involving no injurious consequences to others, and damage arises to another party from the negligence of the contractor or his servants, the contractor, and not the employer, is liable."

"It is now settled in that country [i. e., England] that defendants, not personally interfering or giving directions respecting the progress of a work, but contracting with a third person to do it, are not responsible for a wrongful act done, or negligence in the performance of the contract, if the act agreed to be done is legal." Painter v. Pittsburgh (1863) 46 Pa. 213; Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. (1885) 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404.

The doctrine as to the nonliability of an employer for the acts of an independent contractor "has regard to cases where the contract is entirely lawful, and where the owner of the property upon which the contract is to be executed, can lawfully commit its performance to others." Allen v. Willard (1868) 57 Pa. 374.

"Where work which does not necessarily create a nuisance, but is in itself harmless and lawful when carefully conducted, is let by an employer who merely prescribes the end, to another who undertakes to accomplish the end prescribed by means which he is to employ at his discretion, the latter is, in respect to the means employed, the master. If, during the progress of the work, a third person sustains injury by the negligent use of the means employed and controlled by the contractor, the employer is not answerable." Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver (1887) 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296.

"When a contractor takes entire control of a work, the employer having no right of supervision or interference, the employer, if he is not negligent in his selection, is not liable to third parties for the contractor's want of care in the performance of it." Lancaster Ave. Improv. Co. v. Rhoads (1887) 116 Pa. 377, 2 Am. St. Rep. 608, 9 Atl. 852.

"If damage result from the manner in which a contractor chooses to execute a perfectly valid contract, without the proprietor's interference or direction, the latter is not responsible." Davie v. Levy (1887) 39 La. Ann. 551, 4 Am. St. Rep. 225, 2 So. 395.

"It is well settled that where the independent contractor and the contractee contract for the performance of work that is lawful in itself, and the work is performed in an unlawful manner, either by the wrongful or negligent execution of the work, and resulting in injury to others, the contractee is not liable in damages to such persons for the injury." James v. McMinimy (1892) 93 Ky. 471, 40 Am. St. Rep. 200, 20 S. W. 435.

"The great weight of the modern decisions upon this question establishes the rule that where the relation of independent contractor exists as to the use of real property, and the party employed is skilled in the performance of the duty he undertakes, and the thing directed to be done is not in itself a nuisance, or will not necessarily result in a nuisance, the injury resulting, not from the fact that the

for the purpose of further elucidating the subject, it will be advisable to draw attention to some others, viz.:

1. Those in which the broad principle that a person is "liable for the act which he ultimately originates" is viewed as being subject to an exception in respect of cases in which "the person by whom the act is done is an independent contractor."¹

2. Those which reflect the notion work is done, but from the negligent manner of doing it by the contractor or his servants, the owner cannot be made to respond in damages." Robinson v. Webb (1875) 11 Bush (Ky.) 464.

"If the work to be done is committed to a contractor to be done in his own way, and is one from which, if properly done, no injurious consequences to third persons can arise, then the contractor is liable for the negligent performance of the work." Bailey v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1883) 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129.

"The employer is not liable either for the fault or for the negligence of the independent contractor, unless he expressly directed the wrongful or improper act." Lord Gifford in Stephens v. Thurso Police Comrs. (1876) 3 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 535.

Where parties enter into a contract which is in itself lawful, and the contractor, in carrying on his work, does anything injurious to another, he alone is responsible. Woodhill v. Great Western R. Co. (1855) 4 U. C. C. P. 449.

"The general rule is that one who has contracted with a competent and fit person, exercising an independent employment, to do a piece of work, not in itself unlawful or attended with danger to others, according to the contractor's own methods and without his being subject to control except as to the results of his work, will not be answerable for the wrongs of such contractor, his subcontractors, or his servants, committed in the prosecution of such work." 1 Thomp. Neg. 1st ed. § 22, p. 899, 2d ed. § 621, quoted or cited with approval in several cases, e. g., Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co. (1884) 82 Mo. 276, 52 Am. Rep. 376.

"Where the contract is for something that may lawfully be done and is proper in its terms, and there has been no negligence in selecting a suitable person to contract with in that the doctrine constitutes one phase of a broader principle, the essence of which is that, where a person procures work to be done for his own benefit, his duty with regard to protecting other persons against injury from conditions supervening by reason of the performance of the work is restricted to the exercise of reasonable care in selecting the persons to whom he intrusts it."

respect to it, and no general control reserved, either as respects the manner of doing the work or the agents to be employed in doing it, and the person for whom the work is to be done is interested only in the ultimate result of the work, and not in the several steps as it progresses, the latter is neither liable to third persons for the negligence of the contractor as his master, nor is he master of the persons employed by the contractor, so as to be responsible to third persons for their negligence." Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 646, 3d ed. p. 1092—quoted in Boardman v. Creighton (1901) 95 Me. 154, 49 Atl. 663, and in Craft v. Albemarle Timber Co. (1903) 132 N. C. 158, 43 S. E. 597.

Under the plea of the general issue alone, there is no error in charging to the effect that "where one has a lawful work to do, and employs another, who has an independent business of his own including work of that class, to do it, and where the employer does not himself exercise any direction as to how it shall be done, he is not responsible for any wrongs that the employee may commit in the course of the work." Harrison v. Kiser (1887) 79 Ga. 588, 4 S. E. 320.

¹ See remarks of Williams, J., in Milligan v. Wedge (1840) 12 Ad. & El. 737, 113 Eng. Reprint, 993, 4 Perry & D. 714, 10 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 19.

² In Walton v. Bryn Mawr Hotel Co. (1894) 160 Pa. 3, 28 Atl. 438, where the plaintiff was injured while working as a carpenter on a building then in course of erection, his claim for compensation was disallowed on the ground that "the case comes clearly within the principle, settled in many cases, that one who is erecting a building or other structure is not liable for accidents happening in the course of the erection, if he exercises ordinary care in selecting competent persons to do the work." Three of the cases cited in support of this statement pro-

3. Those in which the phraseology is expressive of the proposition that the servants of an independent contractor are not the servants of the principal employer in such a sense as to render him responsible for their acts.³ The practical importance of this form of statement is apparent from the fact that, in nearly all the cases in which the doctrine under discussion has been invoked as a defense, the actual tortfeasors were servants of the party alleged to be an independent contractor. The liability of the principal employer becomes, of course, a necessary conclusion whenever the evidence shows that the injury complained of was occasioned by the negligence of his own servant or agent,⁴ or that the relationship of master and servant existed between him and the tortfeasor at the time when the tort was committed.⁵ On the other hand, the contractee cannot be held liable for a tort committed by his servant while temporarily under the control and direction of the contractor.⁶

§ 3. Rationale of the doctrine.

The doctrine enunciated in the preceding sections is frequently put upon the ground that the characteristic incident of the relation created by an ceeded upon the doctrine concerning the nonliability of an employer for the negligence of an independent contractor: Mansfield Coal Co. v. McEnery (1879) 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662; Walden v. Finch (1872) 70 Pa. 460; Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson (1869) 63 Pa. 146, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 669.

³"If the general employer enters into a contract to do the work of another as an independent contractor, his servants do not become the servants of the person with whom he thus contracts, and the latter is not liable for their negligence." Hartell v. T. H. Simonson & Son Co. (1916) 218 N. Y. 345, 113 N. E. 255, reversing (1914) 164 App. Div. 873, 148 N. Y. Supp. 433.

"A master is liable for the negligence of his servant engaged in his business, because he selects his servant and controls him. He should not be answerable for acts done by the servant of another, or by that other, who is not subject to his control." Abbott v. Sumter Lumber Co. (1912) 93 S. C. 131, 76 S. E. 146.

For other authorities illustrative of the same point of view, see Burke v. Norwich & W. R. Co. (1867) 34 Conn. 474, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 662 (the rationale of which was that the plaintiff, a servant of an independent contractor employed by the defendant, was not a fellow servant of the defendant's servants); Hooe v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. (1904) 187 Mass. 67, 72 N. E. 341; Healey v. American Tool & Mach. Co. (1915) 220 Mass. 238, 107 N. E. 977; and the cases cited passim in Labatt's Master & Servant, §§ 34 & 39.

⁴See, for example, Philadelphia & H. DeG. Steam Tow-Boat Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (1857) Fed.

Cas. No. 11,085 (ship collided with "sight pile" placed in river by engineers of principal employer); Flori v. Dolph (1917) — Mo. —, 192 S. W. 949 (servant of company engaged to repair elevator injured by negligence of operator in employ of owner of building).

⁵*Harmon v. Ferguson Contracting Co.* (1912) 159 N. C. 22, 74 S. E. 632 (where the liability of the defendant for an injury occasioned to one servant of the contractor by the negligence of another was predicated—with reference to a statute abolishing the fellow-servant rule—on the ground that the contractor had been engaged on terms which rendered him a servant of the defendant); Nelson v. American Cement Plaster Co. (1911) 84 Kan. 797, 115 Pac. 578 (where it was laid down that "the mere fact of nominal employment by an independent contractor will not relieve the master [i. e., principal employer] of liability, where the servant is in fact in his employ"). The Kansas case was cited in Dibert v. Giebisch (1914) 74 Or. 64, 144 Pac. 1184.

The situation adverted to in the text would clearly exist, also, in any case in which the tortfeasor was a person normally in the service of the contractor, but who was working under the control of the principal employer at the time when the act which caused the injury was done.

⁶*Arkansas Natural Gas Co. v. Gallagher* (1914) 111 Ark. 247, 163 S. W. 791, former appeal in (1912) 105 Ark. 477, 152 S. W. 147. For earlier cases involving this situation, see Labatt, Mast. & S. § 40.

independent contract is that the employer has not the power of controlling the person employed, in respect of the details of the stipulated work, and that it is a necessary juridical consequence of this situation that the former should not be answerable for an injury resulting from the manner in which those details may be carried out by the latter.¹

The doctrine has also been said to rest upon "the ground that a contractor, as between him and his employer, is responsible only for the fulfilment of his agreement, and pending the performance of the work is, to a certain extent, substituted for the party for whom the work is to be performed."² In this point of view, any mischief which may have resulted from the performance of the work may be regarded as having been "done in the course, not of the employer's, but of the contractor's, business."³

The doctrine has also been referred to as an application of the general principle that, where an independent responsible cause is interposed between an alleged cause and the injury, the juridical connection between that alleged cause and the injury is broken.⁴

None of these explanations, however, is adequate for the purposes of a fundamental inquiry, since they presuppose that an affirmative answer should be given to what is really the ultimate question to be decided, viz., the permissibility of allowing one person to depute to another a particular piece of work, on terms which will have the effect of relieving the former

¹ The employer is not liable, "because he has employed an independent person, and has not retained any control over processes or details, or even interfered in any way with the work at any stage." Wills, J., in Holliday v. National Teleph. Co. [1899] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 227.

"The rule that prescribes the responsibility of principals, whether private persons or corporations, for the acts of others, is based upon their power of control. If the master cannot command the servant, the acts of the servant are clearly not his. He is not master, for the relation implied by that term is one of power, of command; and if a principal cannot control his agent, he is not an agent, but holds some other or additional relation." Hilsdorf v. St. Louis (1869) 45 Mo. 94, 100 Am. Dec. 352.

"The liability of one person for the negligent acts and omissions of another rests upon the relation of superior and subordinate as master and servant, and the consequent control which the superior has over the acts of the subordinate in the performance of his duties. There can be no liability, therefore, unless such relation and such right of control exist, either by force of the contract between the parties, or the duty to assume control is imposed, as a matter of law, by reason of some peculiar relation the person for whom the work is being performed bears to third persons, with respect to the time, place, and manner of performance." Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741.

"The liability of one person for damages arising from the negligence or misfeasance of another, on the principle of respondeat superior, is confined in its application to the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent, and does not extend to cases of independent contracts not creating the relation of principal and agent, and where the employer does not retain the control over the mode and manner of the performance of the work under the contract." Cincinnati v. Stone (1855) 5 Ohio St. 38.

"It seems to us that the doctrine would be productive of great wrong to hold that when owners of real estate, who contract with reliable, competent, and skilful builders, and deliver the premises into the actual exclusive possession of the contractors for a definite period, and when neither the contractors nor their servants are under the control of the owners, that they must be liable for all of the negligent acts of the contractors and their servants." Scammon v. Chicago (1861) 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334.

² Reynolds v. Braithwaite (1889) 131 Pa. 416, 18 Atl. 1110.

³ See the remarks of Lord Denman in Milligan v. Wedge (1840) 12 Ad. & El. 737, 113 Eng. Reprint, 993, 4 Perry & D. 714, 10 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 19.

⁴ Wharton, Neg. § 482.

from the obligation of seeing that that work is executed with reasonable care and skill. It seems clear from the not very numerous authorities which bear directly upon this question that the real, and in fact only available, basis for the doctrine which declares such a delegation of functions to be, under certain circumstances, allowable, is public policy.⁵ The juridical situation, therefore, would seem to be simply this: that the considerations of expediency which, according to what appears to be the most satisfactory theory, constitute the foundation of the rule which declares a master to be ⁵ In the opinion delivered by Parke, B., for the whole court in Quarman v. Burnett (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 499, 151 Eng. Reprint, 509, we find this passage: "The liability, by virtue of the principle of relation of master and servant, must cease where the relation itself ceases to exist; and no other person than the master of such servant can be liable, on the simple ground that the servant is the servant of another, and his act the act of another; consequently, a third person, entering into a contract with the master which does not raise the relation of master and servant at all, is not thereby rendered liable; and to make such person liable recourse must be had to a different and more extended principle—namely, that a person is liable not only for the acts of his own servant, but for any injury which arises by the act of another person in carrying into execution that which that other person has contracted to do for his benefit. That, however, is too large a position, as Eyre, Ld. Ch. J., says in the case of Bush v. Steinman (1799) 1 Bos. & P. 404, 126 Eng. Reprint, 978, and cannot be maintained to its full extent without overturning some decisions, and producing consequences which would, as Lord Tenterden observes, 'shock the common sense of all men:' not merely would the hirer of a post chaise, hackney coach, or wherry on the Thames, be liable for the acts of the owners of those vehicles if they had the management of them, or their servants if they were managed by servants, but the purchaser of an article at a shop, which he had ordered the shopman to bring home for him, might be made responsible for an injury committed by the shopman's carelessness, whilst passing along the street." The remark of Lord Tenterden here referred to was made in his judgment in Laugher v. Pointer (1826) 5 Barn. & C. 547, 108 Eng. Reprint, 204, 8 Dowl. & R. 550, 4 L. J. K. B. 309.

In Daniel v. Metropolitan R. Co.

(1871) L. R. 5 H. L. 61, 18 Eng. Rul. Cas. 669, Lord Westbury made the following remarks: "It would create confusion in all things if you were to say that the man who employs others for the execution of such a work, or the man who is a party to the employment, has no right whatever to believe that the thing will be done carefully and well, having selected, with all prudence, proper persons to perform the work, but that he is still under an obligation . . . to interpose from time to time, in order to ascertain that that was done correctly and properly, the business of doing which he had rightfully and properly committed to other persons."

In Wiswall v. Brinson (1849) 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 554, the nonliability of an employer for the torts of an independent contractor was said to constitute "an exception to the generality of the rule [i. e., 'qui facit per alium facit per se'] made necessary by public convenience and general usage, and when the reason of the rule does not so fully apply." The opinion then proceeds as follows: "When one enters a railroad car, the engineer and hands serve him, do work for him, carry him and his goods. But he is not liable for their negligence or want of skill. So far from it, the company is liable to him. This is an exception to the rule, for two reasons; he did not make the selection, and although in a large sense they are his servants, yet they are the servants of the company. It carries on a distinct, independent business, and is liable for their negligence or want of skill. The reason of the rule fails; and public convenience demands that the party injured should be content with his remedy against the company or the individual whose fault caused the injury. If passengers were liable, no one would travel upon railroads. This is the principle upon which the exception is based. It extends to an infinite variety of cases. The one given is 'ex grege'—it includes all who carry on independent trades or callings recog-liable for the torts of his servant,⁶ are deemed to be inoperative, or to be superseded and overridden by other and antagonistic considerations of expediency, in some classes of cases where the person employed is exercising an independent business.⁷

It has been strongly intimated in a recent New York case that if a person is not competent to plan or carry out a piece of work, and yet attempts to do one of these things, he should be held responsible for an injury result-nized as such by law or by common usage."

"To hold that a person is liable for all the damages resulting from the carelessness or negligence of all the servants or employees engaged in working for his benefit, although employed by contractors without his knowledge or consent, and without any right or ability on his part to control or discharge them, might ruin any man in the world." Kellogg v. Payne (1866) 21 Iowa, 575.

In Painter v. Pittsburgh (1863) 46 Pa. 213, the court reasoned thus: "The verdict determines that the fault was all that of the contractors. Over them the defendants had no more control than the plaintiff's husband had. They were not in a subordinate relation to the defendants, neither servants nor agents. They were in an independent employment. And sound policy demands that in such a case the contractor alone should be held liable. In making a sewer he has, necessarily, the temporary occupancy of the street in which the work is done, and it must be exclusive. His servants and agents are upon the ground, and he can more conveniently and certainly protect the public against injury from the work than can the officers of the municipal corporation. The public will be better protected if it be held that the contractor alone is responsible for his negligence, and that the city does not stand between him and any person injured. Thus he will be taught caution, while a sufferer by the negligence of his servants will not be compelled to resort for compensation to the insolvent servants." It must be admitted, however, that the presumption, entertained in this passage, that the protection of that part of the public which will be exposed to danger by the progress of a given piece of work will be more effectively secured by ing from his having undertaken the charge of the work, and that it is his duty to devolve the planning and execution of the work upon persons possessing sufficient knowledge and skill to accomplish what is contemplated, without endangering the workmen and the public.⁸ Such a doctrine is doubtless in harmony with the general conception of legal negligence, as being "the absence of care according to the circumstances."⁹ But it cannot be said to supply an casting the responsibility on the contractor, is far from being axiomatic in its nature. If the maximum of protection is the object to be considered, it is, to say the least, probable that this end will be better attained by imposing liability both upon the employer and the contractor. It seems clear, however, that the rule as to the nonliability of employers has been formulated rather with reference to their interests than with reference to those of possible sufferers from the torts of the contractors.

⁶See Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 2248, 2249; Gregory v. Hill (1869) 8 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 282; Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. (1842) 4 Met. (Mass.) 55, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda (1879) 93 Ill. 314, 34 Am. Rep. 168; Camp v. Church of St. Louis (1852) 7 La. Ann. 321; Coon v. Syracuse & U. R. Co. (1849) 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 231; Carman v. Steubenville & I. R. Co. (1854) 4 Ohio St. 399; Pollock's Essays in Jurisprudence, p. 116.

⁷There would seem to be plausible grounds for arguing that the exemption of an employer from liability for the torts of a contractor should not be conceded without some restrictions, in a case where the contractor himself is domiciled in a foreign jurisdiction. The inconvenience which is sometimes caused by compelling injured persons to obtain redress by following the contractor into another state is a serious evil. But the matter is one which can be dealt with only by the legislature. See the remarks of the court in Sanford v. Pawtucket Street R. Co. (1896) 19 R. I. 537, 33 L.R.A. 564, 35 Atl. 67.

⁸*Burke v. Ireland* (1901) 166 N. Y. 305, 59 N. E. 914.

⁹*Vaughan v. Taff Vale R. Co.* (1860) 5 Hurlst. & N. 688, 157 Eng. Reprint, 355, 6 Jur. N. S. 899, 2 L. T. N. S. 394, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 296, 8 Week. Rep. 549, 29 L. J. Exch. N. S. 247, per Willes, J.

adequate reason for exempting the employer from liability for the torts of the person whom he engages to perform the work. The existence of an obligation to appoint a substitute under the supposed circumstances is by no means incompatible with the existence of an obligation to answer for the acts and omissions of that substitute.

§ 4. Qualifications of the doctrine.

The general doctrine manifestly affords no protection to the contractee, if it appears that the plaintiff's injury was sustained before the contract in question had been duly executed, and at a time when the work to which that contract had reference was being performed under the direction of the contractee.¹

In one case it was urged that the general doctrine is inapplicable where the employer is a corporation invested with the right of eminent domain. But this contention did not prevail.²

¹ Hepburn v. Philadelphia (1892) 149 Pa. 335, 24 Atl. 279.

² Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. (1885) 111 Pa. 320, 2 Atl. 404. The argument of counsel that the 8th section of the 16th article of the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1874 operated so as to create the alleged distinction between natural and artificial persons was held to be unsound, for the reason that the words "injured or destroyed," as found in that section, were not designed to change, alter, or limit the nature or effect of corporate contracts, but to impose upon those having the right of eminent domain a liability for consequential damages from which they had been previously exempt.

³ In Planters' Oil Mill v. Monroe Waterworks & Light Co. (1899) 52 La. Ann. 1243, 27 So. 684, it was held that where a city "has undertaken to provide a water supply . . . by a contract with a private company, and there is a failure on the part of the company to meet in full its obligations in this respect, and, because of this, loss by fire results to citizens, the city is not liable. And this is so, even though an annual tax be levied for the purpose."

In Kilts v. Kent County (1910) 162 Mich. 646, — A.L.R. —, 127 N. W.

The rule under which a municipal corporation is exempted from liability in respect of injuries resulting from tortious acts incidental to the performance of work which involves the exercise of its governmental functions has sometimes been relied upon as a ground for disallowing a claim founded on the negligence of an independent contractor intrusted with the execution of such work.³ In any case to which that rule is applicable, the question whether recovery could have been had, if it were not a determinative factor, is plainly immaterial.

§ 5. Applicability of doctrine as regards torts of subcontractors.

The doctrine explained in the preceding sections protects a principal contractor in any case where the sole cause of the injury complained of was the negligent or otherwise wrongful act of a subcontractor.¹ A fortiori is the employer of the principal con-

821, the board of supervisors of a county was held not to be liable for the negligence of a contractor engaged to construct a water tower on the county farm.

In Sedalia Gaslight Co. v. Mercer (1892) 48 Mo. App. 644 (construction of sewer), the authority cited was Blumb v. Kansas City (1884) 84 Mo. 112, 54 Am. Rep. 87, where the distinction between governmental and ministerial functions was recognized, arguendo.

¹ Rapson v. Cubitt (1842) 9 Mees. & W. 710, 152 Eng. Reprint, 301, Car. & M. 64, 11 L. J. Exch. N. S. 271, 6 Jur. 606; Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 3 Car. & K. 52, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 16 Jur. 65; Pearson v. Cox (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 369, 36 L. T. N. S. 495; Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. (1903) 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378, certiorari denied in (1903) 191 U. S. 569, 48 L. ed. 306, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841; Carey v. Baxter (1909) 201 Mass. 522, 87 N. E. 901; Kettleman v. Atkins (1918) 229 Mass. 89, 118 N. E. 249; Wray v. Evans (1876) 80 Pa. 102; Slater v. Mersereau (1876) 64 N. Y. 138; Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co. (1890) 88 Tenn. 692, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925, 13 S. W. 691; Schutte v. United Electric Co. (1902) 68 N. J. L. 435, 53 Atl. 204, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 522; Ken-

tractor not liable for the torts of a subcontractor.²

§ 6. Extent of the employer's duty with respect to the supervision and control of work intrusted to an independent contractor.

That an employer is not bound to dall v. Johnson (1907) 51 Wash. 477, 99 Pac. 310.

² M'Lean v. Russell (1850) 12 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d series, 887, 22 Scot. Jur. 394; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. (1870) 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205 (opinion of Depue, J., adopted in (1871) 35 N. J. L. 574); Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Knott (1891) 54 Ark. 424, 16 S. W. 9; Moore v. Sanborne (1853) 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209.

¹ Where the owner of a building contracts with a stair builder for the reconstruction of his stairway therein, and such stair builder has entire control of the stairway for the purpose of the work, it is not the duty of the owner to see that cleats placed on the stairs, to protect them from injury before being painted, are properly placed there by the contractor's servant. Louthan v. Hewes (1902) 138 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 1065.

A church society engaging a contractor to repair its church tower is not under the positive duty to see that such contractor leaves a shutter in the tower in an apparently safe condition, where he has loosened and rendered it insecure in the erection or removal of a scaffold erected for such repairs. Woods v. Trinity Parish (1893) 21 D. C. 540.

In Smith v. Wilkes & M. Counties (1887) 79 Ga. 125, 4 S. E. 20, the doctrine stated in the text was invoked as a reason for denying recovery, in a case where a person whose property had been damaged by the faulty execution of a contract for the building of a bridge, let out to a contractor in the manner prescribed by statute, based his claim upon a constitutional provision to the effect that property could not be damaged for public use without compensation to the owner. The court took the position that, under such circumstances, the defendants did not "cause" the plaintiff's damage, since "it was neither the duty nor the right of the counties in their corporate capacity to dictate to the contractor how he supervise the progress of contract work, for the purpose of preventing the commission of collateral torts by the contractor, is well settled.¹ This doctrine may be regarded as one which is deducible directly from the legal conception of an independent contracshould execute his work, provided he obtained the results called for by the plan of the bridge." A second ground assigned for the decision was that there was no statutory provision for any such action as the one brought by the plaintiff.

A railway company which contracts for the erection of a train shed is not under a duty to see that the workmen in the employ of the contractor and subcontractors handle their tools with reasonable care. Fitzpatrick v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. (1888) 31 Ill. App. 649, writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction in (1891) 139 Ill. 248, 28 N. E. 837 (tool fell on trainman).

In a case where water flowed into plaintiff's cellar in consequence of the manner in which a subcontractor constructed a vault and sidewalk in front of a building, the court concurred with the finding of a referee that the principal contractor was not liable for the resulting damage, as he was under no obligation by his contract to give any direction as to this portion of the work, and had no control or authority over the mode or manner of its performance, but only a right to insist generally that the work be done according to the terms of the contract. Slater v. Mersereau (1876) 64 N. Y. 138.

In Hawke v. Brown (1898) 28 App. Div. 37, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1032, the court said: "There is no authority for the proposition that the employment of an architect to make plans and specifications for work of this character, and to supervise the work in its progress to completion, is a legal duty owing by the employer either to the contractor or to third persons. We are not aware of any such rule of law. An architect is usually retained for the protection of the proprietor. If there was no negligence imputable to the proprietor in the employment of the contractor, or negligence in other respects, the failure to employ an architect does not constitute a breach of duty owing to the public, and is no evidence of negligence in the execution of the work." The following passage from 2 Thomptor as being essentially a person who, ex hypothesi, is entitled to exercise his own discretion with regard to the manner in which the results which he has undertaken to produce shall be son, Negligence § 41, was quoted with approval: "The proprietor usually retains control by a skilled architect, not for the purpose of controlling the contractor in his methods, but for the purpose of assuring himself that the results enumerated in the specifications of the contract are reached by the contractor, step by step, as the work progresses."

In Burke v. Ireland (1901) 166 N. Y. 305, 39 N. E. 914, reversing (1900) 47 App. Div. 428, 62 N. Y. Supp. 453, it was shown that the defendant employed a competent architect to draw the plans and specifications for a building, which were approved by that department of the city government which had charge of the matter, and there was no ground for affirming that he interfered with the plans, or reserved or exercised any right to change them. The work of constructing the building, including the foundations, he also committed to a competent contractor. But the foreman made the mistake of placing the central column, which supported the upper part of the building, upon an insecure foundation, not constructed in accordance with the specifications, the result being that the building collapsed and the plaintiff's intestate lost his life. The court explained as follows its reasons for denying the liability of the defendant: "If it be true that the owner was bound at his peril to see to it that the foundation of the iron column was laid upon solid ground, then it would be difficult to avoid the conclusion that the result of the accident could be attributed to the omission of the defendant in that respect. But we think that this was an obligation which the owner could devolve upon an independent contractor, and it requires only a fair construction of the contract to show that it was placed upon the builder, for whose omissions or mistakes the defendant is not responsible. There is no proof in the case from which the jury could find that the accident resulted from any defect in the plan. The death of the plaintiff's intestate was caused by a defective execution of the plan which the contractor agreed to carry out.

achieved. Or it may be put upon the ground that the employer is entitled to act upon the presumption that a contractor who has been carefully selected will exercise reasonable skill

The central column, which was intended to support the building, was placed upon an unsafe foundation, and this was the direct or proximate cause of the calamity. If the architect, who had general supervision, had insisted upon a careful inspection of every detail of the work and had been present when the concrete was about to be laid upon the disturbed ground outside the old cistern wall, he might have discovered the departure from the terms of the contract in that respect, and prevented it. But the architect was not the agent or servant of the owner. He was in the exercise of an independent calling, and held the same legal relations to the defendant that the builder did, and, for the omissions of either in the execution of the plans, personal negligence cannot be imputed to the defendant." The view thus taken of the evidence was radically different from that which was adopted by the supreme court, which proceeded upon the theory that the architect was the defendant's agent, and that, as one of the two contracts which it was necessary to consider in relation to the incidence of the liability did not require anything further than not to lay the concrete in the trenches until they had been inspected by the architect; while the other contract made no provision with respect to the depth of any excavation required to procure a good bottom, if further excavation was necessary beyond that for which the plans called, the duty of determining the depth to which the excavation should extend devolved upon the defendant, or his agents. First appeal (1898) 26 App. Div. 487, 50 N. Y. Supp. 369; second appeal (1900) 47 App. Div. 428, 62 N. Y. Supp. 453. The following passage contains the gist of the opinion delivered on the second appeal: "Behrens [the architect] not only prepared the plans, but he superintended the construction. When a point was reached where it became necessary to determine what should be the proper depth of the excavation for a secure foundation, such question must be held to have been work within the owner's control, for the performance of which, by the agent selected and prudence in executing the stipulated work.²

In those classes of cases which exemplify the theory of an absolute responsibility on the employer's part in respect of injuries resulting from the torts of the contractor, the former is in effect regarded as being bound, at by him, he was responsible. Vogel v. New York (1883) 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349. The primary duty resting upon the defendant, Ireland, was to secure a sure foundation for his building, and he ought to have known—at least, he is chargeable with the knowledge essential for him to perform the duty properly [sic]. As he did not contract with any contractor for a specific depth to which the foundation should be carried, and as the architect had no power or authority to change or modify his plans, the duty of determining what should be done on account of the infirmity of the soil was one which devolved directly upon the defendant, Ireland, and the architect in this respect occupied the relation to Ireland of an ordinary agent. For his failure to properly perform his duty in that regard, the defendant, Ireland, is chargeable.³

A complaint which shows by its averments that the tortious act which was the immediate cause of the injury was collateral in its nature, and was committed by a person who bore to the defendant the relation of an independent contractor, cannot be made proof against a demurrer by inserting an allegation that it was the legal duty of the defendant to examine from time to time the condition of the place where the work was being done, and to provide suitable material for making that examination. Boardman v. Creighton (1901) 95 Me. 154, 49 Atl. 663, affirming (1899) 93 Me. 17, 44 Atl. 121.

In Giaconi v. Astoria (1911) 60 Or. 12, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1150, 118 Pac. 855, 118 Pac. 180, where the plaintiff's premises were injured by a landslide from an embankment in a street which a contractor was grading, the evidence showed that, before the accident occurred, the city surveyor and other municipal officers knew that injury might result from a continuance of the work, but no effort was made to suspend operations until it was too late to be of any service. It was held that, "as no power to superintend the making of the improvement was reserved, the defendant was not liable on the ground of estoppel." But it is submitted that the general power always reserved, either expressly or by implication, to see that the work is done in such a manner as to secure the results contemplated, would have warranted interference by the city under such circumstances. If this right existed, there was plainly a correlative duty on its part to take steps to prevent the dangerous conditions from eventuating in injury.

See also City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores (1894) 80 Md. 348, 45 Am. St. Rep. 345, 30 Atl. 643, § 7, note 1, infra, 816.

In Braidwoods v. Bonnington Sugar Ref. Co. (1866; Ct. of Sess.) 2 Scot. L. R. 152, where a factory building fell, owing to the weakness of the foundations which supported the iron columns, and killed an engineer who was engaged in installing machinery, it was argued, as a ground for imputing liability to the defenders, that "they did not so far separate themselves from those whom they employed, and that they had an inspector looking after their interests." The reply made to this contention was as follows: "That makes no difference; the inspector failed in no duty which he was bound, as the defenders' representative, to discharge to the deceased. He was not there to attend to the interests of the deceased, or to any duty of the defenders to the deceased. The company was not bound to have an inspector there, and it did not send him there to protect his interests. Anything he failed to do he was answerable for to the company, and to no one else. He might be liable personally, no doubt, for his own delinquency, but he could not bind the defenders." This decision, it is apprehended, would not be approved at the present day by any English or American court. It seems to have been clearly a case which at common law would be deemed to be governed by the doctrine regarding the absolute duty which the owner of fixed property owes to invitees.

² The justifiability of this presumption is adverted to by Lord Westbury in the passage quoted in § 3, note 5, supra, 808, from his judgment in Daniel v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1871) L. R. 5 H. L. 61, 40 L. J. C. P. N. S. 121, 24 L. T. N. S. 815, 20 Week. Rep., 37, 18 Eng. Rul. Cas. 659.

his peril, to see that the stipulated work is performed by the latter with reasonable care. This aspect of the theory has sometimes been adverted to by the courts.³

Whether the remedial rights of the injured person should be determined with reference to the notion of a non-delegable duty, or to the general rule stated at the beginning of this section, is often a difficult question. The cases reviewed below, in which the non-liability of the defendants was explicitly based upon the ground that they

In Butler v. Hunter (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 826, 158 Eng. Reprint, 702, plaintiff's counsel argued, in substance, that, where a person employs a tradesman to do work which may be dangerous to another (here, the making of an excavation on land adjacent to a house), he is bound to show that he directed all care to be taken, and specifically pointed out what the danger was to be guarded against, or, at all events, to show that he did enough to exempt himself from responsibility. But Pollock, Ch. B., rejected this contention, saying: "It must be assumed that directions were given to do the work in the ordinary way, and to take all the proper precautions not to cause any mischief." Wilde, B., also observed: "It is said that the defendant ought to have given orders to do the work in a tradesman-like way, or ought to have pointed out what was requisite. But it seems to me that it would be unreasonable to require an unskilled person to point out to a skilled person in what way the work should be done. I think that, as a matter of fact, if a man gives an order to a tradesman to do some work, he means him to do it in the ordinary and tradesmanlike way." This case is referred to as an illustration of the general principle embodied in the above quotation. The decision itself has been virtually overruled.

"When the contract is to do an act in itself lawful, it is presumed that it is to be done in a lawful manner." Eaton v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1871) 59 Me. 520, 8 Am. Rep. 430; Carter v. Berlin Mills Co. (1876) 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572.

³ In Hole v. Sittingbourne & S. R. Co. (1861) 6 Hurlst. & N. 488, 158 Eng. Reprint, 201, which was decided on the ground of personal fault, Pollock, C. B., in the following passage, noticed an alternative conception to which the liability of the defendant might be referred: "I suggested, in the course of the argument, that where a man employs a contractor to build a house, who builds it so as to darken another person's windows, the remedy is not against the builder, but the owner of the house. It may be that the same principle applies to cases where a man is employed by another to do an act which it is the duty of the latter to do. In such cases it is the duty of the owner of the soil to inquire what is in the course of being done, to know what is the plan, to see that the materials are good, and to take care that no mischief ensues. So, here, it was the duty of the company to see how the contractor was about to construct the bridge. They ought to have taken care to ascertain what he was about to do,—what materials he would use,—and to have seen that the specifications and the materials were such as would insure the construction of a proper and efficient bridge."

In Dalton v. Angus (1881) L. R. 6 App. Cas. 829, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 769, Lord Blackburn said in the course of his opinion: "A person causing something to be done, the doing of which casts on him a duty, cannot escape from the responsibility attaching on him of seeing that duty performed by delegating it to a contractor."

According to Lindley, L. J., in Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 342, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196, the effect of what was said by Lords Blackburn and Watson in Hughes v. Percival (1883) L. R. 8 App. Cas. (Eng.) 446, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 719, 49 L. T. N. S. 189, 31 Week Rep. 725, 47 J. P. 772, was that, where the work is of a dangerous character, the employer's duty is to see that the contractor does his work properly.

For other cases in which the duty of exercising supervision is predicated specifically with respect to work which involved the performance of absolute duties which were incumbent on the employer, see O'Brien v. Board of Land & Works (1880) 6 Vict. L. Rep. (L.) 204, 2 Australian Law Times, 22; Williams v. Tripp (1878) 11 R. L. 447; Logansport v. Dick (1880) 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166.

were not subject to any duty of supervision, would, it is apprehended, be disapproved by many courts.⁴

⁴In PRESS v. PENNY (reported herewith) ante, 794, where a contractor's servant fell, while working on a building, and struck a traveler, it was urged by his counsel that there was something in the nature of the work "which called for the personal supervision of the owner for whose benefit it was being done, so that he could not relieve himself of personal responsibility for the acts of workmen with whom he had no contract relation whatever." But this contention did not prevail. The court said: "This principle, carried to its logical conclusion, would probably extend to all classes of work involving the use of the streets, and we should be slow to adopt it unless under the compelling influence of a settled judicial policy of our own state."

That a person for whom a building is being erected by a contractor is not under any duty or obligation to see that a subcontractor does not deposit materials in the public street was laid down in Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741.

In Independence v. Slack (1895) 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094, where it was held that landowners who make a contract with another person to provide the materials and construct a sidewalk in front of their premises are not liable for an injury caused by stones and other obstructions negligently left in the street by the contractor, the court reasoned thus: "We know of no principle of law that imposes a legal obligation upon the owner of property adjacent to a public street to see that no obstructions to travel are placed or suffered to remain thereon, nor is there evidence of a contract with, or license from, the city which placed defendants under any peculiar obligation to keep the street secure while they were improving their property. Defendants were, of course, responsible for what they did themselves, or directed others to do, but the contract in question did not necessarily, or probably, involve the commission of a nuisance, and cannot, therefore, be construed as a direction by defendants to commit the negligent acts of which complaint is made. They had the right to make the contract, and to believe that the work would be done

The existence of a duty of supervision is occasionally inferred from the terms of some statutory provision carefully in all respects, and after they had committed it to Stewart, duty did not require them to interpose, and see that the methods adopted were careful and proper."

In Reisman v. Public Service Corp. (1911) 82 N. J. L. 466, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 922, 81 Atl. 838, where a misdirected rocket struck one of the spectators at an exhibition of fireworks, the court refused to accept the theory that "it should have been left to the jury to say whether defendants were not negligent in so fixing the place for the exhibition and to place for the spectators, with reference to each other, as that a rocket set off in the former could injure a spectator in the latter."

In Von Langerke v. New York (1912) 150 App. Div. 98, 134 N. Y. Supp. 832, affirmed without opinion in (1914) 211 N. Y. 558, 105 N. E. 1101, where the plaintiff's premises were damaged by water from a main which burst, owing to the negligence of a subcontractor engaged to construct a tunnel for the sewer connection with a building, the liability of the defendant city was denied for reasons thus stated: "There was no duty resting upon the city to supervise the work. It is true the city, through the bureau of sewers, issued a permit to make the excavation, but the permit was to construct a tunnel running parallel to and about 4 feet westerly from the easterly curb of the avenue, and that the work was to be done under the direction of the chief engineer of sewers. But this did not obligate the city to see to it that due care was used in the prosecution of the work itself, or render it liable for the negligence of the contractor. The thing authorized by the city was not a nuisance, nor was it dangerous per se. Had the plan been followed, the pipe would not have been broken, and the damages which resulted were by reason of the contractor's failure to follow it, of which the city had no notice. Had the city issued a permit for a nuisance, or for the doing of a thing eminently dangerous in itself, such as an obstruction in the street, or setting of fireworks in a public place where a large number of people were assembled, then it might be held liable by reason of damages resulting therefrom. . . . But the rule fixing which regulates the performance of the work in question,⁵ or from some explicit stipulation in the contract.⁶

§ 7. Extent of employer's duty to guard against possible accidents.

It is sufficiently manifest that the virtual abrogation of the doctrine under discussion in the present monoliability in such cases has no application where the act for which the city gives a permit is, in itself, entirely proper and safe, and from which no injury could result except for the negligence of the person doing it."

⁵ Where the charter of a city requires the board of public works to take charge of the erection of public buildings, it is their duty to see, through their architect or otherwise, that the work on every building of that description is performed according to the plans and specifications adopted by the common council. Chicago v. Dermody (1871) 61 Ill. 431. The court said: "If those having charge of the construction or repair of streets, bridges, etc., permit obstructions, pits, or other dangerous places, to be made in the streets by the contractor, without being properly guarded, the city is liable for injury that may ensue, because the work is in the charge of the proper city officer, and is being done by authority of the city. Nor is it an answer in such a case to say the contractor departed from his contract or violated the city ordinances in performing the work, as it is the duty of the officer having charge of the improvement to see that the plans are pursued and the proper precautions taken to secure the safety of the public; and it is negligence on the part of such officers in failing to see that they are adopted. And the same rule must prevail where the city or its officers have charge of the erection of a public building for the use of the city." It should be noted that, under such circumstances as those, which were involved in this case the work is assumed to be under the employer's control while it is in progress, and the liability which he incurs by reason of a failure to perform the duty of supervision might equally well be referred to the conception that the contractor is, in point of law, his servant, or to the conception that he is constructively, if not actually, directing the operations.

graph would result, if the law were to predicate, under all circumstances, the existence of an absolute duty on the employer's part to guard against all accidents, probable as well as improbable, that may happen to the damage of third persons, while the stipulated work is being performed by an independent contractor.¹ If, there-

⁶ In Slater v. Mersereau (1876) 64 N. Y. 138, a referee had found that the water which flowed into the cellar of a building, and injured the plaintiffs, came from the roof, by reason of the failure of the defendant to direct the subcontractors to make the necessary cuttings in the wall for a waste pipe which was intended to connect with the sewer, and without which it could not be connected, so that he failed to provide means to carry off the rain water. Discussing the effect of this finding, in connection with a clause in the contract with the subcontractors which provided that they should do all the cutting away for repairing after plumbing, etc., as "they should be directed," the court said: "It necessarily follows from the terms of the contract that the defendant was bound to give such directions as were required to prepare the same, and, upon a failure to do so, that he should be held responsible for the damages which ensued by reason of his neglect in this respect. According to this condition, the defendant exercised a supervisory control over the progress of the work, and it was a part of his duty to see that it was conducted properly and with the exercise of ordinary care and skill, so as to prevent injuries to other parties."

In a case where it was provided in a contract for the erection of a building that partitions, etc., were to be taken down or filled up as might be required, and anchored where directed, it was held that the directions were to be given by the owners. Lancaster v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 460, 1 Am. St. Rep. 739, 5 S. W. 23.

¹ In City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores (1894) 80 Md. 348, 43 Am. St. Rep. 345, 30 Atl. 643, where a horse was frightened by the whistle of a steam engine, used for the purpose of hauling along the defendant's track cars belonging to a contractor, and loaded with materials which were to be used by him for the repair of a fore, recovery is sought on the ground that the employer ought to have adopted certain precautionary measures for the purpose of preventing the injury complained of, the action will fail, unless the plaintiff can at least show that, in view of the nature of the work and the conditions under which it was to be executed, the defendant should have foreseen that the actual catastrophe which occurred was likely to happen, if those precautionary measures were omitted.²

An employer cannot be charged with turnpike road, the court reasoned as follows: "It would be carrying the obligation of the turnpike company beyond that required or authorized by the authorities, to hold that its duty to the public required it to see that the servants of White [the contractor] were not thus negligent, although the use of the steam engine was not a nuisance per se and could be operated so as not likely to do any injury to anyone using the road. It would be requiring too much of it to make it take such precautions against accidents, when letting out lawful work to an independent contractor. It must be admitted that the work to be done was lawful, and the company had the right to assume that there would not be such negligence as that complained of, which was entirely collateral to, and not a probable consequence of, the work contracted for. To hold the company to such a strict liability would practically forbid it from having such work done by contractors, as it would have to keep its own agents on engines to see that there was no negligence on the part of the contractors or their servants."

²In Pearson v. Cox (1877; C. A.) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 369, the defendants were builders and contractors who, after the outside of a house was finished, had removed the outer hoarding and had employed a subcontractor to do the internal plastering. One of the men employed by the subcontractor, in walking, shook a plank, which caused a tool to fall out of a window of the house, and the tool, in falling, injured the plaintiff, who was passing along the highway. The jury found that the hoarding had been properly removed, but that the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendants in not providing some other protection for the public. Upon this finding it was held that the defendants were entitled to judgment. Commenting upon the doctrine, propounded by the plaintiff's counsel, that there was a general duty imposed upon the defendants to guard against accidents, Coleridge, Ch. J., said: "That must mean accidents which could reasonably be foreseen, and there was no evidence that this was such an accident. No doubt the accident has happened, and may happen again, but the falling of a tool in this manner is not such a probable incident in the plastering of the interior of a house as that it could reasonably have been foreseen. If it was so, that would be a ground for holding someone liable; but if anyone is liable for not providing some protection, it would be the subcontractor." Bramwell, L. J., said: "I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons. The only ground on which the action could be maintained against the defendants would be that the carrying on of the work, in the course of which the accident happened, was a nuisance to the highway unless the passers-by were guarded against the results. It may be that when a house is being built there is a probability that tools or other things will fall, and the jury might be justified, either upon the evidence of experts, or from knowledge of common life and without experts being called, in finding that some protection to the public must be afforded. . . . But however that may be, if there was any such duty, it was the duty of the person whose conduct was a nuisance to the highway. I agree that the general builder would be the person who is to guard against general dangers in the course of the building, but this, according to the opinion of the jury, is not such an accident. But even if I assume danger to the public from plastering, I cannot understand upon what ground the defendants are to be made liable. The plasterer, if any person, ought to be made liable; it is he who knows when he is going to begin, and when he is going to leave off, and how the work will be done, and he is the person who ought to provide against the accident. Going, therefore, as far as I can, and assuming that someone ought to have provided against the danger, the last link in the chain fails; it is the plasterer who ought to have pro-liability on the theory that it is his duty to insert in a contract an affirmative provision to the effect that the contractor shall not be guilty of negligence. "The law always implies that every person who is authorized to do any act which, if it is done improperly, may injure his neighbor, will do that act without negligence, and such an implication is a necessary part of every contract."³ Still less can an employer be held responsible on the ground that the injury was a natural and probable result of his contract, where that instrument expressly provides that the stipulated work shall be provided against it, and not these defendants." Brett, L. J., said: "The negligence alleged was that the hoarding ought to have been kept up, or that there ought to have been some protection at the window, but there was no evidence that the tool fell by the negligence of anyone; no such question was left to the jury. It seems to have been assumed that the falling of this tool was the result of accident. If there had been any evidence that such an accident might probably happen whilst such work was going on in the interior of a house, then there might have been a question for the jury whether someone ought not to have guarded the public against such an accident. If there had been such evidence, then, with all deference to what has been said, I should have thought it a question whether the builders were not the persons who ought to have put up that protection to the public, as they had control over the whole building. But there was no evidence that any such accident was probable, and no one said it was probable that such things would fall from the window; nor is it a thing the probability of which must be known to all the world, so that the jury must be taken to know it without any evidence. The accident was highly improbable, and a man need not guard against highly improbable accidents."

18 A.L.R.—52.

³ White v. New York (1897) 15 App. Div. 440, 44 N. Y. Supp. 454, holding a complaint to be demurrable which was based upon the theory that the failure of a city to include in a contract with an independent contractor for the improvement and grading of a street a provision that the contractor should care for and remove all carefully done, and the injury complained of would not have occurred had that provision been observed.⁴

§ 8. Invalidity of contract, effect of.

It has been laid down that, where the provisions of a written contract are of such a tenor as to render the person employed an independent contractor, the mere fact that it is void, as not having been filed in accordance with a statutory requirement, does not operate so as to convert the relationship between the parties into that of master and servant.¹

It is difficult to reconcile this de-surface water, sewage, and drainage which would be interfered with by such grading, rendered it liable for the negligence of such contractor in failing to provide for the removal of surface water and sewage.

In Aston v. Nolan (1883) 63 Cal. 269, it was urged that it was the duty of defendant to insert in the contract an express term to the effect that the work should be so conducted and finished as not to disturb the soil of the adjacent lot, and that in default of such express provision the defendant was liable, because the work was done in accordance with the contract. The court, however, said: "When a contract provides for doing a thing which may be, and generally is, done in a lawful manner, and is silent as to the mode of doing it, the contract is to be construed as requiring it to be done in a lawful manner. As the injury was caused by the contractor while doing work which, it must be assumed, could have been done without causing it, and the contractor had agreed so to do it, the injury was done in violation of his contract."

⁴ Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co. (1882) 49 Mich. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 456, 18 N. W. 499.

¹ Smith v. Dryden (1911) 15 Cal. App. 568, 115 Pac. 455, decided with reference to § 1183 of the Cal. Code of Civ. Proc., which provides that, in case of failure to file a building contract, it "shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had by either part thereto." The court reasoned thus: "In such cases, persons furnishing labor and materials at the instance of the contractor would possess the right to recover against him personally, but the fact that the contract was void

cision with another, the effect of which is that, where an independent contract with respect to municipal work which is within the scope of the charter powers of the contractee is invalid by reason of its having been made without a due observance of certain formal requirements prescribed by statute or ordinance, the right of a third person to recover for an injury resulting from a tort committed during the progress of the work is determined on the same footing as if the municipality had undertaken to perform the work without the interposition of a contractor.²

Agents of a municipal corporation, who, without being properly authorized to do so, enter into a contract for the performance of civic work, render themselves responsible for any injury which may result from a tort committed by the contractor in the course of the work.³

would impose no personal liability upon the owner for such labor and materials. The only remedy against the owner is the foreclosure of such liens upon the building as they may have acquired. McMenomy v. White (1896) 115 Cal. 339, 47 Pac. 109. Since the relation existing between the owner and contractor under a void contract imposes no personal liability upon the owner for such labor and materials, it must follow that such relation can impose no liability upon the owner for damages sustained by reason of the negligence of the contractor in the performance of such contract."

²In Davis v. Wenatchee (1915) 86 Wash. 13, 149 Pac. 337, where a boy was injured by the explosion of a dynamite cap which, together with other explosives, a contractor for the excavation of a sewer trench had left in a sack on a highway near the boy's home, the invalidity of the contract resulted from the omission of the civic officials to insert in it the prescribed covenants with respect to the indemnification of the defendant by the contractor. It was laid down that the plaintiff, being a total stranger to the contract, was not estopped to deny "the contractual relation, as relieving the city of its positive duty to provide such adequate supervision of those employed on the work as to avoid

No evasion of the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act that "any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose and intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void," results from the making of a contract by an interstate railway carrier, under which the work of handling at the carrier's coal chutes the coal required for its engines, of breaking the coal into suitable sizes, of unloading wood from cars to storage piles of loading cinders from the right of way on cars, and of unloading sand from cars at designated points, is to be performed by an independent contractor who expressly assumes all liability for injury to himself or his property, or to his employees or to third persons.⁴ dangers reasonably to be anticipated from the negligent use or care of explosives necessarily employed in the performance of the work." The situation presented was declared to be precisely the same as that found in Collensworth v. New Whatcom (1896) 16 Wash. 224, 47 Pac. 439, where the defendant had, without letting any contract, undertaken to dig certain ditches for the extension of its water system by the direct employment of the day labor under the supervision of the city engineer. In an action brought to recover for an injury caused by a blast, it was held that the city could not avoid liability on the ground that in doing the work by day labor, instead of letting the work to an independent contractor, it was acting ultra vires, and consequently that the parties who fired the blast were not its servants or agents.

³So laid down, arguendo, in Colgrove v. Smith (1894) 102 Cal. 221, 27 L.R.A. 590, 36 Pac. 411, where the action was brought against a contractor employed by the board of trustees of the city in question.

⁴*Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bond* (1916) 240 U. S. 449, 60 L. ed. 735, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403, 11 N. C. A. 342, construing the Act of April 22, 1903 (35 Stat. at L. 66, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. § 8661, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1364) § 5.

§ 9. Stipulation obligating the contractor to indemnify the employer.

It has been laid down that, if the employer is otherwise exempt under the contract from liability in respect of the contractor's want of care, such liability is not imposed by a clause which provides "that all losses, accidents, and damages of whatever kind and from whatever cause, which shall at any time happen to the work, or any person or persons whomsoever, shall be wholly borne and made good by the" contractor.¹

More commonly, a stipulation of this tenor has been viewed as one which tends affirmatively to prove the independence of the contractor.

§ 10. Stipulation forbidding the use of the employer's name by the contractor.

A provision in a contract, to the effect that the person employed shall not use the name of his employer in any manner whereby the public or any individual may be led to believe that such employer is responsible for his actions, does not in any degree relieve the employer of liability for his negligence, if, as a matter of fact, the other provisions of the contract show that he is a servant, and not an independent contractor.¹

§ 11. Effect of statutory provisions.

In the cases cited below, the conclusion that the contractors by whom the stipulated work was being performed were not acting under the control of the defendants in respect of such performance was held to be deducible from the language of the statute authorizing the work.¹

¹ Erie v. Caulkins (1877) 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642; Wray v. Evans (1875) 80 Pa. 102, followed in Thomas v. Asttona & L. Valley Electric R. Co. (1899) 191 Pa. 366, 43 Atl. 215, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 383.

In Harger v. Harger (1920) 144 Ark. 375, 222 S. W. 736, where the contract in question provided for the operation of a mine by a lessee, the court said: "Nor does the fact that the lessor, in his contract with the lessee, exacted of the latter an undertaking 'to provide such personal injury liability insurance as will indemnify and be satisfactory,' create responsibility on the part of the lessor for the negligent acts or omissions of the lessee. Appellant coal company had the right to require indemnity, against all loss under any contingency, without committing itself to an obligation to become responsible for any injuries to persons or property."

In Blake v. Ferris (1851) 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304, the court laid it down that a stipulation of the character "does not inure to the benefit" of a third person.

For cases in which the nonliability of the defendant was affirmed with reference to a contract embracing an indemnity clause, but in which the court did not discuss its effect, see McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (1874) 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267; Rogers v. Florence R. Co. (1889) 31 S. C. 378, 9 S. E. 1059.

In Tibbetts v. Knox & L. R. Co.

(1873) 62 Me. 437, the defendant was held not to be liable for injuries caused to buildings in the vicinity of its road by the blasting operations of persons who had contracted to grade the road, although under the contract the company had reserved the right to retain in its hands sums sufficient to pay all damages that were not adjusted within thirty days from the time they were inflicted. This stipulation was treated as being "immaterial to the determination of the action."

¹ Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn (1889) 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175.

¹ In Welde v. New York & H. R. Co. (1898) 28 App. Div. 379, 51 N. Y. Supp. 290, plaintiff claimed damages for the injury occasioned to his property by the erection of a viaduct which was to carry the tracks of the defendant companies, and also asked for an injunction restraining them from maintaining the structure. The contention of the defendants that the contractors were acting solely under the authority and the procurement of the board of improvement created by Laws 1892, chap. 839, was upheld. The court was of opinion that, with respect to the general question of the defendants' liability for what was done by the contractors while engaged in building the viaduct, the case was governed by the decision in Taylor v. New York & H. R. Co. (1898) 27 App. Div. 190, 50 N. Y. Supp. 697, where the action was brought for substantially the same

In the case cited below, it was held that a municipal ordinance by which liability was imposed upon owners, contractors, or builders having control or supervision of the construction of a building did not operate so as to render owner and contractor liable, without regard to whether they actually had supervision or control.³

relief, and it was held that the work "was not that of the railroad company, and was nothing for which they were responsible, but that they had no connection with it, legally or otherwise, in such a way as to be able to control it, or to prevent it, or to be responsible for it—at least, until the structure, when finished, had been delivered over to them; and that after that time they would only be liable, if at all, by reason of their adoption of the work and using it for the purposes for which it was intended." The special point relied upon by the plaintiff was that the defendants had, apart from the board of improvement, begun to build a station opposite the plaintiff's premises, and that by this act they became wrongdoers. Discussing this aspect of the case, the court said: "It appeared that some work had been done on One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street by way of making the entrance to the station, and the posts to sustain the viaduct in front of the plaintiff's premises were set at the curb on Park avenue so as to afford sufficient width for the erection of the station which the act originally permitted to be built there. It may be that, so far as this work had been done by the defendant railroad companies, they would be liable for it; that all of it was done by them was strenuously denied. It appeared that they had let the contract for building the station to a particular firm, and that the board of improvement had also made a contract with a different firm to build that portion of the structure to be used as a station which the defendants undertook to construct. The defendants proposed to show that no work had been done upon that viaduct by their contractor, or under their direction, but that all the work which was done had been done by the contractor of the board, and under the direction and pursuant to the plans

II. Evolution of the common-law doctrine.

§ 12. Effect of the English case, Bush v. Steinman.

The earliest case in which we find any thorough discussion of the extent of the liability of an employer for the torts of an independent contractor is Bush v. Steinman.¹ In that case, of the board. This evidence, if admitted, would have shown that the defendants were not responsible for the work that was done, and also that, if the contractor was guilty of any illegal act in his manner of doing the work, it was not a thing for which the defendants were liable; and upon that being made to appear it is quite likely that the award of damages would have been materially diminished. The defendants, therefore, should have been permitted to make that proof."

By § 2 of Oregon Laws of 1911, p. 16, it is declared: "The manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person in charge or control of the construction or works or operation, or any part thereof, shall be held to be the agent of the employer in all suits for damages for death or injury suffered by an employee." In Harvey v. Corbett (1915) 77 Or. 51, 150 Pac. 263, where the plaintiff's injury resulted from conditions produced by compliance with an order given by an employee of the architects engaged by the defendant to supervise the erection of a building, recovery was allowed on the ground that, having regard to this provision, the architects were not independent contractors.

See also Hoag v. Washington-Oregon Corp. (1915) 75 Or. 588, 144 Pac. 574, 147 Pac. 756, where the liability of the employer was affirmed, and that of the employee actually in charge of the work denied.

³ Gibbons v. Chapin (1909) 147 Ill. App. 575. The affirmance in (1913) 179 Ill. App. 12, of a judgment for plaintiff against the owner upon a new trial was upon the ground that the evidence on that trial justified a finding that the owner had supervision and control of the building at the time the accident occurred.

¹ (1799) 1 Bos. & P. 404, 126 Eng. Reprint, 978.

which came before the court of common pleas towards the close of the eighteenth century, the facts established by the evidence were as follows: The defendant, having a house by the roadside; contracted with B. to repair it for a stipulated sum; B. contracted with C. to do the work; and C. with D. to furnish the materials. The servant of D. brought a quantity of lime to the house, and placed it in the road, the result being that the plaintiff's carriage was overturned. It was argued that the action was not maintainable, because the liability of a principal to answer for his agents is founded on the superintendence which he is supposed to have over them (1 Bl. Com. 481), and it was not in the power of the defendant to control the agent by whose act the injury was caused; but this contention did not prevail. Eyre, Ch. J., said: "I find great difficulty in stating with accuracy the grounds on which it (the action) is to be supported. The relation between master and servant, as commonly exemplified in actions brought against the master, is not sufficient; and the general proposition that a person shall be answerable for any injury which arises in carrying into execution that which he has employed another to do seems to be too large." But he considered that the defendant might be charged with liability on the authority of three cases.

In the first of these³ the actual point determined was that the manager of a mine could not be held liable for an injury caused by the negligence of one of the workmen hired by him. The rationale of the decision was that the underworkmen, when hired by the manager, became the servants of the owner of the mine, and not of the manager himself. It is manifest, therefore, that the case was not really a precedent in point, as regards such circumstances as those presented in Bush v. Steinman. So far as it was relevant, it simply affirmed by implication the liability of the mine owner as the master of the tort-feasor.

The following remarks were made by Chief Justice Eyre with regard to the second case cited by him:⁴ "Lord Lonsdale's colliery was worked in such a manner by his agents and servants (or possibly by his contractors, for that would have made no difference) that an injury was done to the plaintiff's house, and his lordship was held responsible. Why? Because the injury was done in the course of his working the colliery; whether he worked it by agents, by servants, or by contractors, still it was his work; and though another person might have contracted with him for the management of the whole concern without his interference, yet, the work being carried on for his benefit and on his property, all the persons employed must have been considered as his agents and servants, notwithstanding any such arrangement; and he must have been responsible to all the world, on the principle of 'sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.' Lord Lonsdale having empowered the contractor to appoint such persons under him as he should think fit, the persons appointed would, in contemplation of law, have been the agents and servants of Lord Lonsdale. . . . The principle of this case, therefore, seems to afford a ground which may be satisfactory for the present action, though I do not say that it is exactly in point. According to the doctrine cited from Blackstone's Commentaries, if one of a family 'layeth or casteth' anything out of the house which constitutes a nuisance, the owner is chargeable. Suppose, then, that the owner of a house, with a view to rebuild or repair, employ his own servants to erect a hoarding in the street (which, being for the benefit of the public, they may lawfully do), and they carry it out so far as to encroach unreasonably on the highway, it is clear that the owner would be guilty of a nuisance; and I apprehend there can be but little doubt that he would be equally guilty if he had contracted with a person to do it for a certain sum of money, instead of footnote of the reporters of Bush v. Steinman mentions that the facts involved in the earlier case are to be gathered from the pleadings.

³ Stone v. Cartwright (1795) 6 T. R. 411, 101 Eng. Reprint, 622.

⁴ Lonsdale v. Littledale (1793) 2 H. Bl. 269, 126 Eng. Reprint, 544. The

employing his own servants for the purpose; for in contemplation of law the erection of the hoarding would equally be his act. If that be established, we come one step nearer to this case. Here the defendant, by a contractor, and by agents under him, was repairing his house; the repairs were done at his expense, and the repairing was his act. If, then, the injury complained of by the plaintiff was committed in the course of making those repairs, I am unable to distinguish the case from that of erecting the hoarding, or from Lonsdale v. Littledale, unless, indeed, a distinction could be maintained (which, however, I do not think possible) on the ground of the lime not having been delivered on the defendant's premises, but only at a place close to them, with a view to being carried onto the premises and consumed there."

The effect of the third case (unreported) was thus stated: "A master having employed his servant to do some act, the servant out of idleness employed another to do it, and that person, in carrying into execution the orders which had been given to the servant, committed an injury to the plaintiff, for which the master was held liable. The responsibility was thrown on the principal from whom the authority originally moved." This case manifestly had no real bearing upon the question presented to the court, for the point involved was simply the extent of the authority of a servant to engage another person to perform the work intrusted to him.⁴

The comments of the chief justice upon the second of the cases cited by him show that the theory upon which he intended to base his judgment was that the obligation of an occupier of fixed property to see that work performed on or with respect to it, for his benefit, does not injure third persons, is absolute in quality. In this point of view it was manifestly immaterial, so far as the responsibility of the occupier was concerned, whether the work was performed by his own servants or by an independent contractor.

The language of Rooke, J., also embodies the same conception of an absolute duty: "He who has work going on for his benefit, and on his own premises, must be civilly answerable for the acts of those whom he employs. According to the principle of the case in 2 Lev., it shall be intended by the court that he has a control over all those persons who work on his premises, and he shall not be allowed to discharge himself from that intendment of law by any act or contract of his own. He ought to reserve such control, and, if he deprive himself of it, the law will not permit him to take advantage of that circumstance in order to screen himself from an action. The case which has been supposed of the lime being deposited at a distance from the defendant's house, and the accident having happened there, does not apply; for here a person acting under the general employment of the defendant brought a quantity of lime to the premises, and deposited it without any objection being made by any person there, whereas it was the duty of the defendant to have provided a person to superintend those employed in his work. . . .

The person from whom the whole authority is originally derived is the person who ought to be answerable, and great inconvenience would follow if it were otherwise." Heath, J., thus defined his position: "I found my opinion on this single point, viz., that all the subcontracting parties were in the employ of the defendant. It has been strongly argued that the defendant is not liable, because his liability can be founded in nothing but the mere relation of master and servant; but no authority has been cited to support that proposition. Whatever may be the doctrine of the civil law, it is perfectly clear that our law carries such liability much further. Thus, a factor is not a servant; but, being employed and trusted by the merchant, the latter, according to the case in Salkeld, ⁴It may be observed in passing that the weight of authority is against the decision as rendered. See Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 2514-2517.

is responsible for his acts."⁵ It is apparent that the fact of adopting a theory so broad as that which is embodied in this passage would be to obliterate with respect to every kind of work, whether performed with relation to fixed or to movable property, the distinction between an independent contractor and a servant or agent. That some of the members of the court which sat in the subsequent case of Laugher v. Pointer (see next section) understood that the learned judge intended to go to this length is reasonably clear from the language used by them.

The foregoing detailed analysis of Bush v. Steinman is offered for the purpose of enabling the reader to comprehend clearly the actual purport and rationale of a case which for a long period exercised a marked influence upon the development of the general doctrine discussed in the present subtitle. That the decision is not sustainable upon the grounds adverted to by the members of the court by which it was rendered is fully settled. But even now it cannot be regarded as an entirely defunct precedent, in view of the fact that it contains the earliest distinct recognition of that theory of positive, non-delegable duties which has, by its operation in various directions, greatly abridged the immunity of an employer with respect to injuries caused by the torts of an independent contractor. In this point of view, it should be observed that, although the owners or occupiers of fixed property, who procure the performance of work by a contractor "on, near, or in respect of" their property, are no longer deemed to be chargeable with an absolute liability merely by reason of the fact that the work is of this description (see next section), that theory operates so as to render them subject to such a liability as regards certain classes of the members of the public. In other words, the conception of a general obligation has been replaced by that of special obligations, enuring to the benefit only of definite and limited categories of persons.

Under circumstances similar to those involved in Bush v. Steinman, some, at least, of the American courts, would hold the employer liable on the ground of his being chargeable with a special duty of non-delegable quality in respect of safeguarding travelers against injury from dangerous conditions which are normally incident to such work as the contractor was engaged to perform.⁶

§ 13. Doctrine applied in later English cases.

The influence of the decision in Bush v. Steinman is distinctly traceable in two later rulings made by Lord Ellenborough in nisi prius cases.¹

⁵ Hern v. Nichols (1701) 1 Salk. 289, 91 Eng. Reprint, 256.

⁶ Some of the cases in which the doctrine is recognized that an abutter is liable for injuries caused by obstructions created on an adjacent highway in the course of work executed by a contractor for the benefit of the abutting premises were decided with reference to the conception of a general duty to see that reasonable care was used for the protection of travelers. Friedman v. New York (1909; App. T.) 63 Misc. 310, 116 N. Y. Supp. 750; Harrodsburg v. Vandersdall (1912) 148 Ky. 507, — A.L.R. —, 147 S. W. 1; Louisville v. Nicholls (1914) 158 Ky. 516, 165 S. W. 660; Kampmann v. Rothwell (1908) 101 Tex. 535, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758, 109 S. W. 1089. In other cases the right of action was predicated upon the existence of a special duty in that regard, which was regarded as being incidental to the privilege conferred by a municipal license to perform the work in question. Pine Bluff Natural Gas Co. v. Lenyard (1913) 108 Ark. 229, — A.L.R. —, 158 S. W. 1091; Kirk v. Santa Barbara Ice Co. (1910) 157 Cal. 591, 108 Pac. 509; Darmstaetter v. Moynahan (1873) 27 Mich. 188; Hundhausen v. Bond (1874) 36 Wis. 29.

¹ In Sly v. Edgley (1806) 6 Esp. (Eng.) 6, the plaintiff was allowed to recover for an injury received through falling into a sewer opened by a bricklayer, whom he had employed jointly with others. One of the points taken by defendant's counsel was that the bricklayer was not the servant of the defendant, for whose acts he might be made responsible; that as he was

But it was not until 1826 that the general questions involved were again considered by a court of review in the leading case of Laugher v. Pointer.^a In that case a nonsuit had been directed by Abbott, Ch. J., in an action brought to recover damages for an injury caused by the negligent driving of a coachman, who had been sent with a pair of horses which the defendant had hired from a jobmaster to draw his carriage. As the questions raised by the case were of exceptional importance, and the members of the court of King's bench were divided in opinion, when a motion for a new trial was argued, it was ordered that the points submitted should be discussed before the whole body of the judges of the common-law courts. The judgments finally delivered in the King's bench, therefore, represent the results of an unusually exhaustive and searching examination of principles and authorities. It should be observed that two separate and distinct questions were suggested by the evidence, viz.: (1) Whether the effect of a contract of employment was to render the employer liable for the torts of the person employed, irrespective of whether the latter was a servant or a contractor; and (2) whether, supposing that no such general liability could be predicated, the coachman might not be regarded as the special servant pro tempore of the defendant as long as he was driving the carriage. It is only with the former of these questions that we are here concerned. Holroyd and Bayley, JJ., were of opinion that the nonsuit was erroneous.

employed to do a certain work, and the mode of doing it, which had caused the injury, was entirely his own act, he only should be liable. According to the report, Lord Ellenborough disposed of this contention by the remark: "It was the rule of respondeat superior; what the bricklayer did was by the defendant's direction; he had employed the bricklayer."

In Matthews v. West London Waterworks Co. (1818) 3 Campb. (Eng.) 403, where a verdict was obtained against a waterworks company for an injury resulting to the plaintiff from the negligence of men employed by certain

They relied upon Bush v. Steinman, which was considered to have established the general propositions that "responsibility is not confined to the immediate master of the person who committed the injury, and that the action may be brought against the person from whom the authority flows to do the act in the negligent execution of which the injury has arisen." It should be noted that, in the earlier case cited, the liability of the hirer of a job carriage for the negligence of the coachman who is sent with it was taken for granted by Heath, J., in his opinion. The opposite view was adopted by Abbott, Ch. J., and Little-dale, J. The former judge considered that, if the defendant should be declared responsible simply on the ground of his having had the temporary use and benefit of the horses, it would follow that the hirer of a hackney carriage would be answerable for the negligence of the coachman, and the hirer of a wherry on a river would be answerable for the conduct of a wherryman. In his opinion, a doctrine which led to consequences by which "the common sense of mankind would be shocked" could not be sound. That he approved of the decision in Bush v. Steinman, so far as it rested upon the theory of an absolute duty incumbent upon the defendant as owner of the fixed property with relation to which the work in question was being performed, is clearly shown by the following passage in his judgment: "Whatever is done for the working of my mine or the repair of my house, by persons mediately or immediately em-pipe layers, with whom the company had contracted for the laying down of certain water pipes in a public street, Lord Ellenborough said he had "no doubt" as to the defendant's liability. The precise rationale of this ruling, however, is not very clearly apparent. The report is short and unsatisfactory, and the particular circumstances are not detailed. See the comments of Maule, J., in Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 3 Car. & K. 52, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 16 Jur. 65.

^a 5 Barn. & C. 547, 108 Eng. Reprint, 204.

ployed by me, may be considered as done by me. I have the control and management of all that belongs to my land or my house; and it is my fault if I do not so exercise my authority as to prevent injury to another." Littledale, J., referring to Bush v. Steinman and the decisions based upon it, said: "Supposing the cases to be rightly decided, there is this material distinction, that there the injury was done upon, or near, and in respect of, the property of the defendants, of which they were in possession at the time. And the rule of law may be that, in all cases where a man is in possession of fixed property, he must take care that his property is so used and managed that other persons are not injured; and that, whether his property be managed by his own immediate servants, or by contractors or their servants. The injuries done upon land or buildings are in the nature of nuisances, for which the occupier ought to be chargeable when occasioned by any acts of persons whom he brings upon the premises. The use of the premises is confined by the law to himself, and he should take care not to bring persons there who do any mischief to others. . . . It may be said that the defendant in the present case was owner of the carriage, and that therefore the principles of these latter cases apply; but, admitting these cases, the same principle does not apply to personal movable chattels as to the permanent use and enjoyment of land or houses. Houses and land come under the fixed use and enjoyment of a man for his regular occupation and enjoyment in life; the law compels him to take care that no persons come about his premises who occasion injury to others. The use of a personal chattel is merely a temporary thing, the enjoyment of which is, in many cases, trusted to the care and direction of persons exercising public employments, and the mere possession of that, where the care and direction of it is intrusted to such persons, who exercise public employments, and in virtue of that furnish and provide the means of using it, is not sufficient to render the owner liable. Movable property is sent out into the world by the owner, to be conducted by other persons; the common intercourse of mankind does not make a man or his own servants always accompany his own property; he must in many cases confide the care of it to others who are not his own servants, but whose employment it is to attend to it."³

This exposition of the law was approved in several later cases, decided between 1842 and 1847.⁴ In one of the cases belonging to this period the liability of the employer for injuries caused by a nuisance in a highway was affirmed on the ground that he

³ Sir Federick Pollock, in his preface to vol. 29 of the Rev. Rep. (p. IX.) remarks that the judgment of Littledale, J., contains a suggestion of the rule settled many years later in Indermaur v. Dames (1867) L. R. 2 C. P. 311, 36 L. J. C. P. N. S. 181, 16 L. T. N. S. 293, 15 Week-Rep. 434, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 64, and other cases of that class. But, as already stated, the theory of an absolute duty as arising from the possession of fixed property had been already propounded in Bush v. Steinman. See preceding section.

⁴ In Quarman v. Burnett (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 499, 151 Eng. Reprint, 509, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 308, 4 Jur. 969, in which the defendant was held not liable upon evidence which, in its general features, was virtually identical with that presented in Laugher v. Pointer (1826) 5 Barn. & C. 547, 108

Eng. Reprint, 204, 8 Dowl. & R. 550, 4 L. J. K. B. 309, Parke, B., incorporated in the judgment delivered for the whole court a large part of the remarks of Littledale, J., which are quoted in the text, and expressed the opinion that they stated the law correctly.

In Rapson v. Cubitt (1842) 9 Mees. & W. 710, Car. & M. 64, 11 L. J. Exch. N. S. 271, 6 Jur. 606, 152 Eng. Reprint, 301, this judge again expressed his approval of the doctrine, saying: "If a man has anything to be done on his own premises, he must take care to injure no man in the mode of conducting the work."

The language of Littledale, J., was also quoted in Rich v. Basterfield (1847) 4 C. B. 783, (p. 802), 136 Eng. Reprint, 715, in which the defendant was a landlord who, on the ground of his not being in possession of the was chargeable with personal fault in respect of having allowed the dangerous conditions to exist.⁶

demised premises, was held not to be liable in respect of a nuisance created thereon by his tenant.

In Randelson v. Murray (1838) 3 Ad. & El. 109, 112 Eng. Reprint, 777, decided a few years before Quarman v. Burnett (Eng.) supra, the facts were as follows: The defendants, for the purpose of removing some barrels of flour from their warehouse, had employed one Wharton, who was a master porter in Liverpool, and who used his own tackle, and brought and paid his own men. Taylor, a master carter, was employed by Wharton to carry the barrels away; Taylor also sent his own carts, etc., and his own men, one of whom was the plaintiff. The injury to the plaintiff was occasioned by a barrel falling on him in consequence of part of Wharton's tackle failing while it was being used by Wharton's men. The defendant's counsel argued that Wharton was a bailee for a special purpose, and that the remedy of the plaintiff was against him, not against the defendants. But this contention did not prevail, and the defendant was held liable. Lord Denman, Ch. J., said: "Had the jury in this case been asked whether the porters, whose negligence occasioned the accident, were the servants of the defendants, there can be no doubt they would have found in the affirmative." Littledale, J., said: "It seems to me to make no difference whether the persons whose negligence occasions the injury be servants of the defendant, paid by daily wages, or be brought to the warehouse by a person employed by the defendant. The latter frequently occurs in a large place like Liverpool, where many persons exercise the occupation of a master porter. But the law is the same in each case." Patteson, J., said: "The case of a carrier is quite distinct. He has goods in his custody as bailee." In Quarman v. Burnett (Eng.) supra, Parke, B., intimated that this case might be classed with those in which the occupiers of land or buildings have been held responsible for acts of "others than their servants, done upon, or near, or in respect of" their property. But the passages quoted above show clearly that the actual ratio decidendi was that the master

The result of the authorities so far referred to in the present section was, on the one hand, to abrogate defini-porter and his workmen were in the service of the defendant while the work was in progress.

That this was the standpoint of the court is shown by the following comment which was made upon the decision by Lord Denman in Milligan v. Wedge (1840) 12 Ad. & El. 737, 113 Eng. Reprint, 993: "The work was in effect done by the defendant himself at his own warehouse; if he chose, instead of keeping a porter, to hire one by the day, he did not thereby cease to be liable for injury done by the porter, while under his control." (The italics are ours.) This explanation, it should be observed, proceeded from a member of the court who had taken part in the decision. That such a conclusion would not be drawn by any court at the present time is reasonably certain. But it is at all events clear that the case is not one which exemplifies any theory respecting the limits of an employer's liability for the acts of a person who is, in point of fact, an independent contractor. It is not easy to determine what was the precise point of view from which Pollock, C. B., was speaking, when he remarked in Murphy v. Caralli (1864) 3 Hurlst. & C. 462, 159 Eng. Reprint, 611, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 14, 10 Jur. N. S. 1206, 13 Week. Rep. 165, that "the case of Randelson v. Murray seems at variance with the current of authority." He may have intended to express his disapproval of the decision as being an apparent recurrence to the doctrine of Bush v. Steinman, or he may merely have stated his opinion that, on the facts, the relation of master and servant was improperly inferred.

⁶ Burgess v. Gray (1845) 1 C. B. 578, 135 Eng. Reprint, 667. There a building contractor had excavated a drain for the purpose of making a connection between the defendant's house and the main sewer. A man employed by him to cart away the surplus earth and gravel remaining after the drain was finished left some of it heaped up on the highway. The defendant had applied to the commissioner of sewers for leave to break into the sewer. There was also evidence showing that a policeman had called his attention to the heap, and told him it must be taken away; whereupon he said he would remove it as soon as he could.

tively, so far as movable chattels were concerned, the doctrine of the employer's imputed liability for the torts of an independent contractor, and, on the other hand, to leave that doctrine intact to the full extent, in so far as the torts of the contractor were incidental to work performed "upon, near, or in respect of" fixed property of which he was in possession. But the scope of the employer's responsibility was narrowed still further by the decision in the leading case of *Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co.*⁶ Having regard to the actual facts considered in this case, it might conceivably be viewed as one by which the right of action was denied in respect merely of injuries resulting from the transitory acts of the servants of a contractor employed to perform work with relation to fixed property. But the language used by Rolfe, B., in the judgment delivered for the court, shows that he intended to propound a doctrine of much broader scope, viz., that, where the gravamen of the claim is negligence, the employer's exemption from liability is equally predicable, whether the subject-matter of the contract was fixed property or movable chattels.

This doctrine was again applied a few years afterward in a case in which it was unsuccessfully sought to charge the employer with liability for damage

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for an injury resulting from the collision of his chaise with the obstruction. Tindal, Ch. J., took the position that the soil was placed upon the road with the defendant's consent, if not by his express direction. Coltman, J., was of opinion that "there was evidence enough to satisfy the jury that the entire control of the work had not been abandoned to the contractor." Cresswell, J., declared that "there was abundant evidence to show that the defendant had at least sanctioned the placing of the nuisance on the road." Erle, J., said: "The work was done with the knowledge of the defendant, and under his superintendence, and for his benefit. . . . He clearly would be liable unless he had parted with the entire control to Palmer [the contractor], and altogether abstained from personal interference himself. And even if the defendant had parted with the entire control to Palmer, I am at a loss to know why he should not be liable jointly with Palmer." Contrast the decision, with regard to somewhat similar circumstances, in Peachey v. Rowland (Eng.) reviewed in note 9, infra.

⁶ (1849) 4 Exch. 244, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1201, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 168, where the defendant was held not to be liable for the negligence of the servants of a contractor in letting fall a stone from a bridge which was under construction. Rolfe, B., in delivering the judgment of the court, made the following observations: "The case of Bush v. Steinman, where the owner of a house was held liable for the act of a servant of a subcontractor, acting under a builder employed by the owner, was a case of fixed real property. That case was strongly pressed in argument, in support of the liability of the defendants, both in Laugher v. Pointer and in Quarman v. Burnett; and as the circumstances of those two cases were such as not to make it necessary to overrule Bush v. Steinman, if any distinction in point of law did exist, in cases like the present, between fixed property and ordinary movable chattels, it was right to notice the point. But on full consideration we have come to the conclusion that there is no such distinction, unless, perhaps, in cases where the act complained of is such as to amount to a nuisance; and in fact that, according to the modern decisions, Bush v. Steinman must be taken not to be law, or, at all events that it cannot be supported on the ground on which the judgment of the court proceeded. It is not necessary to decide whether, in any case, the owner of real property, such as land or houses, may be responsible for nuisances occasioned by the mode in which his property is used by others not standing in the relation of servants to him, or part of his family. It may be that in some cases he is so responsible. But then his liability must be founded on the principle that he has not taken due care to prevent the doing of acts which it was his duty to prevent, whether done by his servants or others. If, for instance, a person occupying a house or a field should permit another to carry on there a noxious trade, so as to be a which excavations made by a contractor on his land had occasioned to an adjacent building.⁷ The doctrine laid down in Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. was also applied in a case where the alleged cause of action was that the workmen of a subcontractor had, in contravention of the orders of the defendant's engineer, excavated a road in such a manner as to cut into a drain, the consequence being that the plaintiff's land was flooded by the water which escaped.⁸

In several cases where the injuries complained of resulted from danger-nuisance to his neighbors, it may be that he would be responsible, though the acts complained of were neither his acts nor the acts of his servants."

It may be pointed out that, several years before the Reedie Case was decided, a doubt as to "whether the distinction as to the law in cases of fixed property and movable chattels could be relied on" had been expressed by Lord Denman, arguendo, in Milligan v. Wedge (1840) 12 Ad. & El. 737, 118 Eng. Reprint, 998, 4 Perry & D. 714, 10 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 19.

In Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 335, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week. Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196, the remark made in the Reedie Case, with regard to the liability which may possibly be imposed upon an owner or occupier of land for injury caused to another by the user of the land, was referred to by Smith, L. J., in language which indicated that he regarded such liability as being predicable.

⁷ Gayford v. Nicholls (1854) 9 Exch. 702, 156 Eng. Reprint, 301. In delivering the judgment of the court, Parke, B., said: "It may be the defendant would have been liable for improperly building on his own soil; but there is nothing of that sort here, the claim in this part of the case going entirely upon the supposed obligation of the defendant to support the adjoining house. But he is under no such obligation or duty, in the absence of the plaintiff's right to support as before mentioned. In the next place, the learned judge says that if the jury should be of opinion that the workmen, whilst they were on the land by

ous conditions created in the course of work which was being performed within the limits of public highways, the ratio decidendi was the absence of personal fault on the part of the defendants. With regard to three of these cases it should be observed that, as the employers were private persons, and consequently not in possession of the fixed property which was affected by the stipulated work, the circumstances were not appropriate for the application of the general principle alluded to by Littledale, J., in Laugher v. Pointer, supra.⁹ In the remaining the defendant's permission, had from want of due care injured the plaintiff's property, or had carried away the plaintiff's materials, the defendant would be liable for those acts. But I am clearly of opinion that no action would lie against him unless he carried away the materials himself, or unless that was done by some person authorized by him to do so as his servant. But here the defendant entered into an agreement with a contractor to do the work, and the acts complained of were done by the contractor's servants, who, according to the several authorities upon this subject, cannot be considered as the defendant's servants, so as to render him responsible for such acts. The ruling, therefore, cannot be supported." The ruling of the trial judge that the employer was liable by reason merely of the fact of the workmen being upon his land with his permission was declared to be erroneous. In this case the responsibility of the employer for the misappropriation of certain materials belonging to the owner of the damaged building was also denied.

⁸ Steel v. Southeastern R. Co. (1855) 16 C. B. 550, 189 Eng. Reprint, 875. Cresswell, J., observed, during the argument of counsel: "It was proved that the defendant's surveyor directed the thing to be done, but not the improper manner of doing it." In his judgment he said: "This was work done under a contract,—whether parol or otherwise is immaterial,—and there is nothing to show negligence in anyone for whose acts the company is responsible."

⁹ In Knight v. Fox (1850) 5 Exch.

case the employer was a public authority responsible for the maintenance of the highway. A state of facts was therefore presented which might well have suggested a discussion of the relevancy of that

721, 155 Eng. Reprint, 316, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 14 Jur. 968, the defendant, a subcontractor whose undertaking required him to erect a railway bridge across a highway, employed a subcontractor to construct a scaffold to be used for the purposes of the work. One of the supports of this scaffold was fixed in a piece of timber rested on the pavement of the highway, and the plaintiff tripped over the obstacle thus created. Held, that the action was not maintainable. The contention of counsel that the principle laid down in Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. was met by Parke, B., with the remark that the nuisance there referred to "means a nuisance as connected with a man's house, or with his fixed property."

In Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, the defendants were employed by A. to pave a district. They contracted with B. to pave one of the streets. B's workmen, in the course of paving the street, left some stones, at night, in such a position as to constitute a public nuisance, and the plaintiff was injured by falling over these stones. No personal interference of the defendants with or sanction of the work of laying down the stones was proved. Held, that the defendants were not liable. Maule, J., said: "I apprehend that if the defendants had been present, and directed or sanctioned the doing of the act complained of, they would have been responsible for it. But here they are sought to be charged simply on the ground that they had contracted with the parish authorities to do the work in the performance of which, by their subcontractor, the negligence happened which has given rise to the plaintiff's misfortune." Cresswell, J., said: "The defendants, not having personally interfered or given any directions as to the performance of the work, but merely having contracted with a third person to do it, cannot be held responsible for an unauthorized and unlawful act of such third person in the course of it. It is quite true, as was said in Bush v. Steinman (1799) 1 Bos. & P. 404, 126 Eng. Reprint, 978, that the original contractor might be liable equally with the subcontractor, if he in any manner directed or countenanced the doing of the act complained of. But there is no pretense for so charging the defendants here. They contracted with Warren to lay down the curbstone in a particular way, not to so place the stones, and so negligently leave them, as to occasion injury to the plaintiff. If the act contracted to be done would itself have been a public nuisance, of course the defendants, would have been responsible." Williams, J., said: "The plaintiff's counsel has rested his argument upon a broad and intelligible ground, viz., that the act complained of is a public nuisance. Some of the cases, it is true, would seem to justify that distinction; but it seems to me that we cannot give any weight to it without overruling Knight v. Fox (1850) 5 Exch. 721, 155 Eng. Reprint, 316, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 14 Jur. 963."

In Peachey v. Rowland (1853) 13 C. B. 182, 138 Eng. Reprint, 1167, the defendants, having built some houses, contracted with S. and R. to construct a drain in connection with them. S. and R. employed A. to excavate the drain and fill it in as the work was done, at so much per foot, and to carry away the surplus earth. In doing this the defendant's carts were to be employed, if required, by A. The earth was placed by A. so much above the level of the road that it formed a dangerous obstruction. It was left unguarded, and the plaintiff's carriage drove against it at night. One of the defendants testified that a few days before the accident, while the work was still incomplete, he had seen the improper manner in which A. was doing his work. Held, that the action was not maintainable. During the argument of counsel, Maule, J., observed: "Unless you can show that the work was so done that the defendants might have been indicted for obstructing a public highway, they are not liable in this action. I am satisfied that the decision in Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 16 Jur. 65, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 3 Car. & K. 52, was right, though I was afterwards less satisfied with the reasons which I gave." In his judgment he made the following remarks: "The true result of the evidence here was that the defendants had nothing whatever to do principle. But the attention of the court was not directed to this point.¹⁰

In another case, involving a private nuisance which was maintained by a contractor upon premises of which the defendant was in possession, the defendant's responsibility was affirmed with reference to that principle.¹¹

§ 14. General review of the American cases.

In several of the earlier American with the wrongful act complained of. They employed somebody to do something, which might be done either in a proper or an improper manner, and he did it in a negligent and improper manner, and injury resulted to the plaintiff. That is the substance of the evidence. The question is whether the evidence fairly justified a verdict for the defendants. We have no right to look with extreme scrupulosity, in cases of this sort, to see if there is not some grain of evidence the other way. If the whole evidence taken together is not such as to warrant a jury in finding for the plaintiff, practically speaking, there is no evidence. I am of opinion that if the jury had, upon this evidence, found that the defendants did the wrong complained of, their verdict would have been set aside as not being warranted by the evidence. There was, in truth, no evidence for the practical purpose in hand." Burgess v. Gray (Eng.) (see note 5, supra) was distinguished by Jervis, Ch. J., on the ground that in the earlier case "the nuisance was pointed out to the defendant, and he promised to remove it."

¹⁰ In Reid v. Darlington Highway Board (1877; Q. B. Div.) 41 J. P. (Eng.) 581, a highway board instructed its surveyor to employ one S., a contractor, to repair a road. In the course of the work, with which the board did not interfere, the servants of S. left stones on the highway at night, without placing a light to show where they were, and a traveler drove his gig against the obstruction and was injured. In the very brief judgment delivered for the court by Lush, J., it was held that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the highway board or its surveyors. The precise rationale of this decision is not clear from the report, which merely mentions that plaintiff's counsel argued that the contractor's men were servants of the board—a contention cases, Bush v. Steinman was treated as a valid precedent, in so far as it rested upon the theory of an employer's responsibility for those torts of an independent contractor which are committed in the course of work performed on or with relation to fixed property of which the employer is in possession.¹

In two of these cases, the court must have proceeded upon the assumpmanifestly untenable. Neither the court nor the counsel adverted to the possibility of maintaining an action on the ground that the duty of the board to keep the highway safe for travel was primary and non-delegable.

¹¹ White v. Jameson (1873) L. R. 18 Eq. (Eng.) 308, where the actual point determined was that, where the occupier of lands grants a license to another to do certain acts on the land, and the licensee, in doing them, commits a nuisance, the occupier may be made a defendant to a suit to restrain the nuisance. The nuisance complained of consisted in the burning of bricks in a kiln situated upon a shipyard owned and occupied by the defendant. The kiln was being operated in pursuance of a contract by which it was agreed that one Proffitt should excavate and take away, at his own cost, all clay to the depth of 10 feet or more, where required, from the shipyard, and that in payment therefor he should give the defendant a certain sum for every 1,000 bricks made therefrom. Sir G. Jessel, M. R., after having decided that the burning of the bricks was a nuisance to the plaintiff's cottages, continued thus: "I hold the defendant Jameson liable to be sued for the acts complained of. The land on which they were committed was his; and, independently of his having an interest in the profits, the defendant Proffitt did these acts by his license." The learned judge therein quoted the language of Littledale, J., and continued thus: "Here Jameson was in possession of the property, for he did not demise it to Proffitt; he merely granted to him a revocable license to burn bricks on it. Consequently he has brought Proffitt on his land and allowed him to commit a nuisance, and for this I hold he is liable to be sued in equity as well as at law."

¹ In Sproul v. Hemmingway (1833)

tion that this theory was controlling, irrespective of whether it was at-

14 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 25 Am. Dec. 350, the owner of a vessel which was being towed was held not to be liable for a collision caused by the negligence of the crew of a tugboat. Such a decision was in harmony with the modern rule, but the court cited Bush v. Steinman with approval, remarking that "it was decided principally on the ground that the owner of real estate must be taken to be the employer of all those who are engaged in making repairs for him; and that, having the power to control and regulate the use of his own estate, he is bound to do it in such a manner that others may not be injured by the mode in which it is used."

In Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. (1889) 23 Pick. (Mass.) 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33, the workman of a contractor engaged in constructing the defendant's roadbed had negligently omitted to replace the barriers which the agents of the plaintiff municipality had set on each side of a cutting opened through a highway. The consequence was that a traveler drove into the excavation and suffered serious injury. Held, that the damages which the plaintiff had been compelled to pay to the injured person could be recovered from the defendant. The court again expressed its approval of the decision in Bush v. Steinman, and took the broad ground that as "the work was done for the benefit of the defendants, under their authority, and by their direction," they were "to be regarded as the principals," and that "it was immaterial whether the work was done under contract for a stipulated sum, or by workmen employed directly by the company at daily wages." This case was explained in Hilliard v. Richardson (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743, as being sustainable on the following grounds: That the corporation, being intrusted by the legislature with the execution of a public work, such as the building of the railway in question, was bound, while the work was in progress, to protect the public against danger; that it could not escape this responsibility by a delegation of its power to others; that the work was done on land appropriate to the purpose of the railway, and under the authority of the corporation, vested in them by law for the purpose; that the barriers, the omission to replace which was the occasion of the accident, were put up and maintained by a servant of the corporation, and by their express orders; that that servant had the care and supervision of them; and that the accident occurred through the negligence of a servant of the railroad corporation, acting under its express orders. The fact that Bush v. Steinman was expressly approved is disposed of with the passing remark that the decision of the case before the court did not involve the correctness of the rule in the case cited. The explanation thus given of the rationale of Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. may be adequate to afford a justification for the actual decision on the special grounds enumerated. But it will be apparent to everyone who peruses page 31 of the report in 23 Pick. that the court did not rely upon these special grounds, but upon the doctrine applied in the English case.

In Earle v. Hall (1841) 2 Met. (Mass.) 353, A. agreed to convey land to B., and B. agreed to build a house thereon and pay for the land. B., in preparing to build the house on his own sole account, by workmen employed by himself alone, undermined the wall of the adjoining house of C., whereby it was injured. It was declared that "the general principle to be extracted from the cases, in regard to the use of real property, is that the owner of real estate, either absolutely or for the time being; he who has the management and control, and takes the benefit and profit of the estate; he at whose expense and on whose account the business is conducted—shall be responsible to third persons for the carelessness, negligence, or want of skill of those who are carrying on and conducting the business by which they are damaged; and this, whether the persons thus employed and engaged are working on wages or by contract; and whether they are employed directly by the principal, or by a steward, agent, or manager having the superintendence of his estate." The court then referred approvingly to the cases of Bush v. Steinman (1799) 1 Bos. & P. 404, 126 Eng. Reprint, 978, and Laugher v. Pointer (1826) 5 Barn. & C. 547, 108 Eng. Reprint, 204, 8 Dowl. & R. 550, 4 L. J. K. B. 309, as authorities for the doctrine concerning the tributable to conditions which constituted a nuisance of more or less per-larger liability of an owner of real property. That liability was said to be predicated on the broad ground that, "if one have the control and management of all that belongs to his house or land, it is his fault if he do not so exercise his authority as to prevent injury to another." The actual decision was in favor of the defendant, but it was based on the ground that, although the work was "done on land of which he was the general owner, it was not land of which he at the time had the possession or control, nor by persons appointed and employed by him."

In another case belonging to the same period (Stone v. Codman (1834) 15 Pick. (Mass.) 297), the plaintiff was allowed to recover damages for an injury to his goods caused by water which escaped from a drain which was being dug from the defendant's house to a common sewer by a mason who procured the materials and hired the laborers, charging a compensation for his services and disbursements. But there the decision was expressly put upon the ground that the relation of master and servant existed between the defendant and the mason; a conclusion which, according to the opinion in Hilliard v. Richardson (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743, was deduced in a great measure from the fact that there was no contract, written or oral, by which the work was to be done for a specific price, or as a job.

In Hilliard v. Richardson (Mass.) supra, where the distinction between cases of fixed and movable property was held unsound (see note 5, infra), an attempt was made to explain these earlier Massachusetts cases on such a footing as would render them consistent with the doctrine that was being adopted by the court. But, having regard to the explicitly approving language used in the earlier cases with regard to Bush v. Steinman, the success of this effort to demonstrate a continuity of doctrine seems to be questionable, to say the least.

In New York v. Bailey (1845; Ct. of Err.) 2 Denio (N. Y.) 433, affirming (1842) 3 Hill, 531, one of the precedents cited was Bush v. Steinman, and the doctrine as to the distinction between cases of fixed and movable property was invoked by Walworth, Ch., and Senator Hand, as a ground for declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to recover for damage caused to a building by the collapse of a defective dam which had been constructed by commissioners appointed to supervise the construction of the Croton waterworks. The latter judge observed: "It is upon the ground that the dam was the property of the corporation, and that such corporation was legally bound to see that its corporate property was not used by anyone so as to become noxious to the occupiers of property on the river below, that the judgment in this case must be sustained if it can be sustained at all."

In Wiswall v. Brinson (1849) 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 554, where the injury was caused by a hole in the street, which a contractor employed to move a house had left uncovered, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover. The decision was put upon the ground that the stipulated work was to be done "in respect to the defendant's property." Considering the date of this case, it is rather surprising to find in the opinion of the majority some language which indicated a more unqualified approval of Bush v. Steinman than is observable in any other case decided since Laugher v. Pointer (Eng.) supra. Ruffin, Ch. J., dissented. So far as his conclusion was determined by the doctrine as to a distinction between real and personal property, it was based upon the theory that the liability which is predicated with reference to that distinction takes effect only when the nuisance created by the contractor is actually on the premises of his employer. In this respect his opinion is in accord with the doctrine applied in the English cases. See preceding section.

For other American cases in which a distinction between the liabilities incident to the ownership or possession of real and of personal property is recognized more or less definitely, see Moore v. Sanborne (1853) 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209 (where the allusion to the doctrine is somewhat remarkable, as it had been expressly condemned in DeForrest v. Wright (1852) 2 Mich. 368—see note 4, infra), and Blattenberger v. Little Schuylkill Nav. R. & Coal Co. (1839) 2 Miles (Pa.) 309.

In Memphis v. Lasser (1849) 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 757, and Nashville v. Brown (1871) 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1, manent nature, or to a merely casual act.²

In the more recent American cases, the decision in Bush v. Steinman, whether viewed as one which embodies the broad principle that tortious acts committed in the course of his employment by a person who is doing work for the benefit of another are imputable to the latter,³ or as one which may be sustained on the ground that such a principle is applicable where the stipulated work is done on, near, or in respect of the employer's fixed property, has never been mentioned except with disapproval. In some of the cases in which the authority of the decision as a precedent in the latter of these points of view have been repudiated, the circumstances were such as to preclude the claimants from alleging nuisance as a cause of Bush v. Steinman was cited without any expression of disapproval; but the actual ratio decidendi in both cases was that the defendant was subject to an absolute duty in respect of the claimant.

² In Stone v. Cheshire R. Corp. (1849) 19 N. H. 427, 51 Am. Dec. 192, a person injured by a rock which was thrown out by a blast set off by a contractor who was building a portion of a railroad was held entitled to recover on the ground that, "where a man is in possession of fixed property, he must take care that his property is so used and managed that other persons are not injured, and that, whether his property be managed by his own immediate servants, or by contractors or their servants." This case is virtually overruled in Wright v. Holbrook (1872) 52 N. H. 120, 13 Am. Rep. 12, where, however, it was suggested that it might stand upon the same principle as Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. (1839) 23 Pick. (Mass.) 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33, as that decision is explained in Hilliard v. Richardson (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743. It will be observed that the general principle laid down in the Stone Case is derived from the statement of Littledale, J., which is quoted in the preceding section. But the court evidently failed to appreciate the fact that this principle was viewed by that judge as one which was applicable only with respect to conditions amounting to conditions of a more or less permanent nature.

In Gardner v. Heartt (1848) 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 165, where the action was brought to recover for injuries occasioned to plaintiff's land by reason of its sliding, as a result of certain excavation work which was being done by a contractor on the defendant's property, the trial judge charged the jury that if the digging which caused the slide was done by the direction, or the permission, of the defendant, and was negligently done, and the plaintiff sustained an injury by reason of the slide, the defendant was liable to the extent of such injury, unless the plaintiff directly or indirectly procured the digging to be done; and that if the digging was a mere trespass, or if the defendant had not permitted it to be done negligently, the defendant was not liable. The charge was approved on the ground that "it is a general principle of the common law that the owner of premises is bound so to control the use of them as not to produce injury to others; and if he permits another to place his premises in such a situation as to cause an injury, he will be answerable." The position taken was that defendant's liability was a necessary inference, if the evidence showed, in addition to the defendant's ownership and the negligent manner in which the earth was removed, the fact that the digging was permitted by the defendant. To a modern lawyer an interesting feature of this decision is that the actual conclusion arrived at was the same as that which would have resulted from an application of the doctrine that the duty of a landowner not to interfere with an adjacent landowner's right of lateral support is absolute. (This decision was reversed in (1848) 1 N. Y. 528; but the theory of the lower court, as above explained, was not adverted to.)

³ The authority of this case was denied in Hilsdorf v. St. Louis (1869) 45 Mo. 94, 100 Am. Dec. 352 (where the carcasses of animals destroyed in a fire were disposed of by a contractor with a city in such a manner that they were carried by a subsequent flood into plaintiff's quarry); and in Cunningham v. International R. Co. (1879) 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632 (where the plaintiff was injured while on a train operated by servants of contractors).

action.⁴ In other cases the conditions by which the injury complained of was occasioned were of such a nature as to constitute a nuisance.⁵

⁴ Kellogg v. Payne (1866) 21 Iowa, 575 (fire carelessly set out damaged plaintiff's land); Eaton v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1871) 59 Me. 520, 8 Am. Rep. 430 (timber was cut and fire kindled on plaintiff's land during construction of railroad); DeForrest v. Wright (1852) 2 Mich. 368 (plaintiff injured by negligence of servants of public licensed drayman in handling barrels of salt which he had been employed to deliver at a warehouse); Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. (1870) 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205, opinion of Depue, J., adopted in (1871) 35 N. J. L. 574 (traveler injured by explosion of nitroglycerin while it was being carried to a place where blasting was to be done); Simons v. Monier (1889) 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 419 (negligence in setting out fire).

Numerous cases in which circumstances of this character were involved, but in which the decision in Bush v. Steinman was not explicitly referred to, are collected in §§ 33, 34, infra, 858, 859.

⁵ Myer v. Hobbs (1876) 57 Ala. 175, 29 Am. Rep. 719 (excavation weakened lateral support of adjacent building and caused it to collapse); Robinson v. Webb (1875) 11 Bush (Ky.) 464 (defective wall of house under construction fell on adjacent building); McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (1874) 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267 (blasting negligently done); Barry v. St. Louis (1852) 17 Mo. 121 (unlighted sewer trench); Independence v. Slack (1895) 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094 (stones deposited in street were left unguarded and unlighted); Clark v. Fry (1858) 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590 (uncovered excavation made for area); Painter v. Pittsburgh (1863) 46 Pa. 213 (unprotected sewer trench); Allen v. Willard (1868) 57 Pa. 374 (unguarded excavation made for cellar of building).

In Hilliard v. Richardson (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743, where the injury complained of was caused by a horse taking fright at a pile of boards left on a highway, the earlier authorities were exhaustively examined and collated, and the doctrine of Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. (see preceding section) was approved.

In Blake v. Ferris (1851) 5 N. Y. 48,

55 Am. Dec. 304 (damage caused by blasting operations), it was held error to give an instruction by which the jury were in effect told that the person who undertakes the erection of a building or other work, for his own benefit, is responsible for injuries to third persons, occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the builder, or the person who is actually engaged in executing the whole work under an independent employment or a general contract for that purpose.

In Pack v. New York (1853) 8 N. Y. 222, where the plaintiff's house was injured by a rock thrown up by a blast set off in the course of grading operations in a street, a charge to the effect that, if the jury believed that the contractor employed by the defendant to do the work had been guilty of negligence in blasting, and that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by such negligence, the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation for certain injuries specified by the court, was held erroneous, inasmuch as it conflicted with the doctrine "that a person who undertakes the erection of a building or other work, for his own benefit, is not responsible for injuries to third persons occasioned by the negligence of a person, or his servant, who is actually engaged in executing the whole work under an independent employment or a general contract for that purpose."

In Ryder v. Thomas (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 296, where the plaintiff had fallen into an unguarded trench made in front of the plaintiff's house by a contractor employed to raise it, the court remarked: "The rule that an owner of real estate is subjected to liability for any injury resulting from negligence, done in the performance of work for the benefit of land, is not now recognized." The question whether liability might have been imputed to the employer on the ground of nuisance was not referred to.

In Boswell v. Laird (1857) 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 845, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 616, the court, referring to Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. (1849) 4 Exch. 244, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1201, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 168 (see preceding section), said: "The doctrine laid down in this last case appears to us to be founded in good sense; and it follows from it that the distinction as to the § 15. Concluding remarks.

From the foregoing review of the authorities, it is apparent that about the middle of the nineteenth century almost every court which had had an opportunity of expressing an opinion on the subject had definitely discarded the doctrine upon which it was for some time supposed that the decision in Bush v. Steinman could be supported, viz., that responsibility for the tortious acts of an independent contractor is imputable to the employer as regards all cases which involve injuries resulting from the manner in which the contractor performs work on, near, or in respect of fixed property.

What may be regarded as the characteristic, as it is certainly the most important, feature of the doctrinal developments during the subsequent period, is the gradual delimitation and definition of the domain within which the general rule as to the nonliability of an employer for the torts of an independent contractor is controlled and overridden by the principle that a person who is subject to an absolute duty cannot, by delegating it to another party, relieve himself from liability for injuries caused by its nonfulfilment. The result of working out this principle in its application to certain situations has been the formation of several groups of precedents which, in any case involving similar facts, put a plaintiff, so far as his actual right of recovery is concerned, in a position liability of a party when he engages a contractor to erect structures on his own premises, and when he engages such contractor to erect them on the premises of another, does not rest on any just principle. If the enterprise undertaken be a lawful one, and be intrusted to competent and skilful architects, there is no just reason why liability should attach to the proprietor for injuries occurring in its progress, any more if such enterprise be executed on his own land, than if executed elsewhere." The injury complained of was caused by the collapse of a defectively constructed dam.

For other cases in which the nonliability of employers for injuries resulting from nuisances was affirmed which is very nearly, if not quite, as favorable as he would have occupied, if the broad doctrine that an employer is liable for all the tortious acts of an independent contractor, as well as for those of a servant or agent, had found a permanent place in Anglo-American jurisprudence. How far these encroachments upon the doctrine of nonliability will be carried remains to be seen. But in view of the trend of judicial opinion, as indicated by the most recent decisions, it seems perfectly safe to predict that, in some directions at least, the immunity of the employer will continue to be more and more abridged.

It should be observed that the various developments of the conception of absolute duties have considerably diminished the practical importance of one phase of the subject, viz., the extent of the employer's obligations in respect of remedying a nuisance which supervenes upon his property, as a result of the manner in which the contractor performs the stipulated work. The authorities show that the general rule discussed in the present chapter is no protection to the employer, where the evidence shows that, while the work was in progress, he remained in possession of the property upon which it was performed, and permitted the nuisance complained of to be created or maintained.¹ But the precise scope of this exception to the rule has not yet been determined. In a considerable number of the cases in which the action was held not to be maintain-without any explicit reference to the decision in Bush v. Steinman, see §§ 21-30, infra, 843-854.

¹ For the English cases, see § 13, supra, 824, especially White v. Jamieson, cited in note 11.

The same doctrine has been taken for granted in numerous American cases.

A recognition of the doctrine is clearly imported by the statement in McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (1874) 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267, where one of the reasons assigned for denying the liability of the defendant company was that it "did not authorize or permit a nuisance upon its premises."

able,² the courts seem to have proceeded upon the broad theory that the divestiture of the employer's possession, which results from his handing over his fixed property to a contractor for the purposes of work with respect to it, is as complete as the divestiture which is effected by a demise to a tenant. Under such a theory the abatement of a nuisance is not incumbent upon the employer, his exemption from any obligation in that regard being predicable, irrespective of whether he was or was not chargeable with notice of its existence. But the soundness of this theory is by no means self-evident, and there is specific authority for the doctrine that, during the progress of the work, the employer remains responsible to the extent that he is bound to remedy a nuisance, as soon as its existence becomes known to him, either actually or constructively.³

The reasons for holding him to be subject to a duty of this scope seem to be especially strong as respects cases in which this contract is one which expressly reserves to him more or less extensive powers of supervision and control. It may be affirmed with some confidence that, in the great majority of the instances in which the employer's rights are defined by a contract of this type, any supervening conditions which constitute a nuisance will also constitute a violation of the contractor's obligations to his employer. In this point of view it may not unreasonably be argued that, although the employer may, if he chooses, refrain from enforcing those obligations for his own benefit, his right to insist upon their observance carries with it, in respect of the public at large, a corresponding duty to see that damage is not occasioned by the conditions which are the consequence of their not having been performed. With regard to such a situation, the principle embodied in the maxim "qui non prohibet cum prohibere potest, assentire videtur," might well be treated as controlling. That the suggested duty would not be unduly onerous to the employer is apparent from the consideration that proof of his knowledge, actual or constructive, that the nuisance in question existed, must always be a prerequisite to the imputation of responsibility.⁴

III. Doctrine applied in civil-law jurisdictions.

§ 16. Louisiana.

The doctrine which prevails in this state with regard to the nonliability of ² See §§ 21-30, infra, 843-854.

³ In James v. McMinimy (1892) 93 Ky. 471, 40 Am. St. Rep. 200, 20 S. W. 435, where the plaintiff was injured by a rock thrown up by a blast set off in the course of the work of excavating a cellar, it was held to be error to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the work was being done by an independent contractor. In stating the principles which were to control the case at the second trial, the court said: "Where he [i. e., the employer], as a prudent man, has no reason to believe that the act contracted to be done is a nuisance, but is in itself lawful, and it turns out during the progress of the work that it is necessary to create a nuisance in order to do the work, then the contractee is not liable for injuries to third persons resulting from the nuisance before he had notice of its existence. But, in such case, upon receiving notice, it would be his duty to take such reasonably prompt and efficient means as are in his power to suppress the nuisance, else he will be responsible for injuries to third persons resulting from the nuisance after notice."

⁴ For a case in which the very elaborate argument of the courts might apparently have been dispensed with if the decisive significance of the element of want of notice had been duly recognized, see Kilts v. Kent County (1910) 162 Mich. 646, — A.L.R. —, 127 N. W. 821.

In other cases the availability of such a defense was excluded by the evidence which showed that the employer or his supervising agents were clearly chargeable with notice of the existence of the nuisance complained of. See, for example, Atlanta & F. R. Co. v. Kimberly (1891) 87 Ga. 161, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231, 13 S. E. 277, the effect of which is stated in § 26, infra.

an employer for the torts of an independent contractor seems to be in all respects identical with that which is applied in the American states in which the common law prevails.¹

§ 17. Scotland.

In this country the rules regarding the circumstances under which the employer of an independent contractor is or is not liable for the torts of an independent contractor are apparently the same as in jurisdictions in which the common law is administered.¹

§ 18. France.

The accepted doctrine is that "ouvriers d'une profession reconnue et déterminée" are not within the purview of art. 1384 of the Code Napoléon, under which "les maitres et com-mettants sont responsables du dommage causé par leurs domestiques et preposés dans les fonctions auxquelles ils les ont employés."¹

§ 19. Province of Quebec.

The French law, as administered in the Canadian province of Quebec, seems to be substantially the same as that of jurisdictions in which the common law prevails.¹ The general rule, as laid down in a recent case, is that the propriétaire (owner of the property with reference to which the stipulated work is to be performed) is responsible only where he has reserved to himself the conduct and direction of the work; otherwise, the entrepreneur (person undertaking the performance of the work) is not his preposé (agent).² Some cases which il-

¹ See Robideaux v. Hebert (1907) 118 La. 1089, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 632, 43 So. 887; Lutenbacher v. Mitchell-Borne Constr. Co. (1915) 136 La. 805, 19 A.L.R. —, 67 So. 888.

By La. Rev. Code, art. 2320, it is provided: "Masters and employers are answerable for the damage occasioned by their servants and overseers in the exercise of the functions in which they are employed; . . . responsibility only attaches when the masters or employers, teachers, and artisans, might have prevented the act which caused the damage, and have not done it." This provision has been held not to be applicable to a case in which the injury resulted from the manner in which an independent contractor employed by the defendant had performed work over which the defendant himself had no supervisory control. Gallagher v. Southwestern Exposition Asso. (1876) 28 La. Ann. 943. The same construction has been placed on the similar Quebec provision. See § 19, note 2, infra.

¹ See, for example, M'Lean v. Russell (1850) 12 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d series 887, 12 Scot. Jur. 394; Braidwood v. Bonnington Sugar Ref. Co. (1866; Ct. of Sess.) 2 Scot. L. R. 152.

¹ This provision, and not the exception to it, was held to be controlling in Serendat v. Saisie (1866) 1 P. C. 152, where the Judicial Committee was dealing with a case which involved a tort committed in Mauritius, where the Code Napoléon is in force.

In 2 Sourdat, Responsabilite, n. 887, the law is thus stated: The relationship of commettant (employer) and preposé between two persons, in the sense of art. 1384 of the Civil Code, depends upon the concurrent existence of these two conditions: (1) that the preposé has been voluntarily and freely selected; and (2) that the commettant has the power to give him instructions, and even orders, respecting the manner of performing the acts which are intrusted to him. Wherever the existence of these two conditions shall be established, it can be asserted with confidence that responsibility exists; while, if one of them is lacking, responsibility is not predicable (cesse).

See also Tuzier-Herman, Code Civil Annoté, art. 1384, Nos. 78, 79, 85; and Sirey, Codes Annotés, vol. 1, p. 655.

¹ See Eastern Twps. Bank v. De Kérangat (1907) Rap. Jud. Quebec 17 B. R. 232.

² Fraser v. Dumont (1912: Cour d'Appel) 18 Rev. L. N. S. 317. It was also laid down that when works are "donnés à l'entreprise à forfait," the damages caused by the "entrepreneur" do not affect with responsibility the person "qui a donné l'entreprise." The point actually determined in this case was that the defendants, who were lumber merchants, could not be held liable for the damages inflicted upon the plaintiff's land from the overflow of a river, resulting from a jam of logs, occasioned by the negligence of a log-driving company, illustrate this rule under its positive and negative aspects are cited in the footnote.³

IV. Torts of contractors for which employers are not answerable.

§ 20. Introductory.

The following propositions and defining formulæ will serve as sufficient examples of the phraseology which has been used by the courts for the purpose of describing the category of tortious acts of an independent contractor for which an employer is not answerable:

"Where the act is in itself a nuisance, the party who employs another to do it is responsible for all the consequences, for there the maxim 'qui facit per alium facit per se' applies; but where the mischief arises not from the act itself, but the improper mode in which it is done, the person who ordered it is not responsible, un-which at the time when the jam occurred was in the exercise of a statutory right to use the river for the purpose of transporting the lumber. The doctrine that, "when a person can only exercise a right on condition of his paying the damages which may result therefrom, he cannot relieve himself of responsibility by exercising his right by the entremise (interposition) of a third person," was approved, but held inapplicable, for the reason that the statutory right exercised was absolute.

In Harold v. Montreal (1867; Q. B.) 11 Lower Can. Jur. 169, Badgley, J., discussing the right of action in one of the points of view suggested, said: "The defendants, however, urge an important objection to their liability in the fact that the work was done by contract, and that the contractor was not their servant or agent. As to this, it has been a prevailing doctrine that a party who has contracted for the doing of certain work for his own use and benefit is not liable for injuries arising in the performance of such work whilst a master is responsible for injuries arising from the negligence of his servant; and the distinction is made to rest upon the ground that the master has the control of his servant and can remove him for misconduct."

In Ware v. Dominion Exp. Co. (1908) 13 Rev. L. N. S. 358 (reversed in 14 Rev. L. N. S. 398, but merely on the ground of a difference of view concerning the construction of the contract in question), the accepted doctrine was thus formulated by Archibald, J., sitting as a court of first instance: "If the proprietor commits his work to an independent contractor for a price fixed, the obligation of the contractor being only to deliver over to the proprietor the work in a finished condition, the contractor, and not the proprietor, is responsible for accidents which may occur during the progress of the work through the contractor's negligence; but if the proprietor has reserved a control over the proceedings of the contractor through the progress of the work, the proprietor still remains liable."

In Blanchard v. Montreal (1912; Cir. Ct.) 18 Rev. L. N. S. 489, it was held that an architect was not a "preposé" (agent).

In Marine v. Atlantic N. W. R. Co. (1889) 12 Leg. News, 89, it was laid down that contractors are not ouvriers (workmen) within the meaning of the Quebec Civil Code, art. 1054, which provides that "masters" and employers are responsible for the damage caused by their servants and workmen in the performance of the work for which they are employed. (Les maitres et les commettants sont responsables du dommage cause par leurs domestiques et ouvriers, dans l'exécution des fonctions auxquelles ces derviers sont employés.) A similar construction has been placed upon the corresponding provision of the Louisiana Code. See § 16, note, supra, 837.

³ Bélanger v. Bélanger (1895) 24 Can. S. C. 678; Harold v. Montreal (1867; Montreal Q. B.) 11 Lower Can. Jur. 169; Robert v. Montreal (1881; Montreal Q. B.) 2 D. C. A. 68, 4 L. N. 292; Loiselle v. Muir (1889) Montreal L. Rep. 5 S. C. 155; Groleau v. Quebec C. R. Co. (1895; Cir. Ct.) 1 Rev. de Jurispr. 54; Eastern Twps. Bank v. De Kérangat (1907) Rap. Jud. Quebec 17 B. R. 232; Gagnon v. Saraguay Electric Light & P. Co. (1909; Ct. of Review) Rap. Jud. Quebec 36 C. S. 227; Blanchard v. City of Montreal (1912) 18 Rev. L. N. S. 489; Beaulieu v. Picard (1912; Montreal Ct. of Rev.) 7 D. L. R. 2, Rap. Jud. Quebec 42 C.

less the relation of master and servant exists." ¹

"The true distinction between cases of master and servant and cases of employer and independent contractor seems to be this—that, when the person actually doing the work does something for which he would himself be liable, the master is, whilst the employer is not, liable for what is conveniently called 'collateral negligence,' meaning thereby negligence other than the imperfect or improper performance of the work which the contractor is employed to do." ²

"When the work is not in itself a nuisance, and the injury results from the negligence of such contractor or his servants in the execution of it, the contractor alone is liable, unless the owner is in default in employing an unskilful or improper person as the contractor." ³

"For negligence of the contractor, not done under the contract, but in violation of it, the employer is in general not liable." ⁴

"If the nuisance necessarily occurs in the ordinary mode of doing the work, the occupant or owner is liable; but if it is from the negligence of the contractor, or his servants, he should alone be responsible." ⁵

It has been laid down that the employer is not liable where the injury was caused by "the manner in which the contractor managed the details of the work;" ⁶ by "a wrongful act of commission by a contractor beyond the scope of his employment;" ⁷ by "a wrongful act unnecessarily done" by the contractor; ⁸ by acts which were "unnecessary for the accomplishment of the work, and in no way connected with its proper performance;" ⁹ by acts which "did not necessarily occur as an incident to the prosecution of the work;" ¹⁰ and by an "act of the contractor in doing what it was not necessary for him to do—what he was not expected to do." ¹¹

The term by which acts which come within the scope of the foregoing statements are commonly designated is "collateral." ¹² Another word which conveys a similar meaning, but which

S. 455; Scott v. Quebec (1913) Rap. Jud. Quebec 44 C. S. 184.

¹ Butler v. Hunter (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 826, 158 Eng. Reprint, 702, per Pollock, C. B.

² Rigby, L. J., in Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 352. It may be pointed out that the phrase, "imperfect or improper performance," evidently refers to the performance of the work in pursuance of the terms of the contract. But it might also be construed as having relation merely to the manner of performing those details of the work which are left to the management of the contractor, and its ambiguity in this respect renders it somewhat unsuitable for use in a general statement.

³ Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. (1870) 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205, opinion of Depue, J., adopted in (1871) 35 N. J. L. 574.

⁴ Lawrence v. Shipman (1873) 39 Conn. 586.

⁵ Scammon v. Chicago (1861) 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334.

⁶ Hauser v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1899) 27 Misc. 538, 58 N. Y. Supp. 286. The conception of nonliability for an injury which was the result of the manner in which the contract was performed is also explicitly adverted to, in Shute v. Princeton Twp. (1894) 58 Minn. 337, 59 N. W. 1050.

⁷ Gray v. Pullen (1864) 5 Best & S. 984, 122 Eng. Reprint, 1096, 34 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 265, 11 L. T. N. S. 569, 13 Week. Rep. 257, per Erle, Ch. J.

⁸ Upton v. Townend (1855) 17 C. B. 30, 139 Eng. Reprint, 976, 4 Week. Rep. 56, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 44, 1 Jur. N. S. 1089.

⁹ Scammon v. Chicago (1861) 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334.

¹⁰ Ibid.

¹¹ Boomer v. Wilbur (1900) 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246.

¹² "Liability for collateral negligence depends entirely upon the existence of the relation of master and servant between the employer and the person actually in default." Blackburn, J., in Mersey Docks & Harbour Bd. v. Gibbs (1864) L. R. 1 H. L. (Eng.) 93. In a later case the same judge (then a member of the House of Lords) observed: "Ever since Quarman v. Burnett (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 499, 151 Eng. Reprint, 509, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 308, 4 Jur. 969, it has been considered settled is found less frequently in the reports, is "casual."¹³ Occasionally those two epithets are combined in the same statement.¹⁴

In some instances the language used is indicative of the conception that no casual connection between the letting of the contract and the injury can be said to exist, where that injury resulted solely from the tortious act of the contractor.¹⁵ To establish such a connection it is not enough to show that the employer supplied one or more of the instrumentalities which were necessary for the execution of the stipulated work. It does not follow that, because those instrumentalities were capable of being so used as to constitute a nuisance, or of being used in an improper, negligent, or mischievous manner, an injury of which they were an efficient cause must therefore be regarded as a natural consequence of the permission to use them.¹⁶ The extent of the authority conferred by the employer is to law that one employing another is not liable for his collateral negligence, unless the relation of master and servant existed between them. So that a person employing a contractor to do work is not liable for the negligence of that contractor or his servants." Dalton v. Angus (1881) L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 769. The same term is also used in many other cases. See, for example, the following:

Alabama.—Birmingham v. McCary (1887) 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630.

California.—Frassi v. McDonald (1898) 122 Cal. 400, 55 Pac. 139, 772.

Louisiana.—Davie v. Levy (1887) 39 La. Ann. 551, 4 Am. St. Rep. 225, 2 So. 395.

Maryland.—Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Mitchell (1908) 107 Md. 600, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 974, 69 Atl. 422.

Missouri.—Jackson v. Butler (1913) 249 Mo. 342, 155 S. W. 1071.

Rhode Island.—Sanford v. Pawtucket Street R. Co. (1896) 19 R. I. 537, 33 L.R.A. 564, 35 Atl. 67.

West Virginia.—Anderson v. Tug River Coal & Coke Co. (1906) 59 W. Va. 301, 53 S. E. 718.

England.—Hole v. Sittingbourne & R. Co. (1861) 6 Hurlst. & N. 488, 158 Eng. Reprint, 201, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 3 L. T. N. S. 750, 9 Week. Rep. 274; Butler v. Hunter (1862) 7 Hurlst. & N. 826, 158 Eng. Reprint, 702, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 214, 10 Week. Rep. 214; Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week. Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196; Padbury v. Holliday & Greenwood (1912; C. A.) 28 Times L. R. 494.

¹³ Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 335, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week. Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196; Wilson v. White (1883) 71 Ga. 506, 51 Am. Rep.

269; Lampton v. Cedartown Co. (1909) 6 Ga. App. 147, 64 S. E. 495; Smith v. Benick (1898) 87 Md. 610, 42 L.R.A. 277, 41 Atl. 56; Jackson v. Butler (1913) 249 Mo. 342, 155 S. W. 1071.

¹⁴ See, for example, Holliday v. National Teleph. Co. [1899] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 392, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1016, 47 Week. Rep. 658, 81 L. T. N. S. 252, 15 Times L. R. 483.

¹⁵ Thus we find it laid down that the employer is not liable where the execution of the work did not entail the injury in question as a "natural or necessary" consequence (O'Rourke v. Hart (1860) 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 511, later appeal (1862) 9 Bosw. 301); as a "natural result" (Knowlton v. Hoit (1891) 67 N. H. 155, 30 Atl. 346; Carter v. Berlin Mills Co. (1876) 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572; Fuller v. Grand Rapids (1895) 105 Mich. 529, 63 N. W. 530); as a "probable" consequence (Smith v. Benick (1898) 87 Md. 610, 42 L.R.A. 277, 41 Atl. 56); or as a "necessary consequence" (Moore v. Sanborne (1853) 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209).

¹⁶ Carter v. Berlin Mills Co. (1876) 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572 (plaintiff's land was flooded owing to the improper use of defendant's dam by a logging contractor).

The fact that the materials for paving a highway were brought to the required spot by the principal contractor for the work will not render him liable for the negligence of a subcontractor in leaving a portion of those materials in such a position as to obstruct the highway. Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 3 Car. & K. 52, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 16 Jur. 65, citing Knight v. Fox (1850) 5 Exch. 721, 155 Eng. Reprint, 316, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 14 Jur. 963.

In Leavitt v. Bangor & A. R. Co. (1897) 89 Me. 509, 36 L.R.A. 382, 36

execute the contract by a proper and reasonable use of any means and appliances which he furnishes. His liability for the careless management of an appliance cannot be inferred from the mere fact that there was an understanding between him and the contractor that such an appliance was to be used.¹⁷ Nor is he chargeable with responsibility for injuries which resulted solely from the contractor's having adopted a particular method of performing the work, and failed to take the precautions appropriate to that method.¹⁸ But, for practical purposes, the immunity which these rules secure to the employer is considerably abridged by the operation of the doc-

Atl. 998, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 605, where the plaintiff's mill was burned by fire communicated from the stove of a cooking car occupied by a man who had contracted to supply cordwood to a railway company, it was sought to charge the company with liability on the ground that, inasmuch as it had, for the purpose of enabling the contractor to do his work conveniently, placed this and other cars on a siding close to the mill, the mischief complained of was not the negligent act of the contractor or his servants, but the direct result of using an appliance located by defendant; that the proximate cause was the location of the car, the use of which naturally would and did cause the damage. This contention was rejected by the court, which said: "The act of locating the car, and of using it with fire, must be distinguished. The former was the act of the defendant. The latter, of the contractor. The car itself was harmless, and its location, when unused, threatened no injury to plaintiff. The use might create mischief. The thing unused was harmless. . . . True, there might be cases where the landowner would be liable if the use was contrived by him for the purpose of mischief, with intent of avoiding liability; but there is no element of that sort here. The car was located without intent to injure. The liability for its imprudent use then rested upon its owner, who was tenant. There is no principle of law that can be invoked to charge the defendant. It did not create or maintain a nuisance, nor a condition that directly caused the mischief. That was perhaps caused from the misuse, by another, of the conditions created by defendant, for whose acts defendant is in no way responsible. . . . The act complained of in the case at bar was locating a car upon the employer's land, an act not dangerous to anyone. Its use might, or might not, be. A dangerous use was not contracted for."

The fact that certain appliances or materials were furnished by the employer is treated as immaterial in the following cases, among others:

Alabama.—Harris v. McNamara (1892) 97 Ala. 181, 12 So. 103.

Connecticut.—Corbin v. American Mills (1858) 27 Conn. 275, 71 Am. Dec. 63.

Iowa.—Miller v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. (1898) 76 Iowa, 655, 14 Am. St. Rep. 258, 5 N. W. 188.

Maine.—Mayhew v. Sullivan Min. Co. (1884) 76 Me. 100.

Maryland.—Deford v. State (1868) 30 Md. 179.

New York.—Benedict v. Martin (1862) 36 Barb. 288.

Pennsylvania.—Smith v. Simmons (1883) 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113.

Virginia.—Emmerson v. Fay (1896) 94 Va. 50, 26 S. E. 386.

England.—Murray v. Currie (1870) L. R. 6 C. P. 24, 40 L. J. C. P. N. S. 26, 23 L. T. S. N. 557, 19 Week. Rep. 104.

¹⁷ In Bailey v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1884) 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129, where the plaintiff's horse was frightened by a steam shovel and ran away, the court disapproved of an instruction contravening the principle stated in the text, saying: "If the shovel became a nuisance merely because it was negligently operated, and such operation was controlled by Munson [the contractor], he is the author of the nuisance, and answerable for the consequences; and the understanding between the parties that the shovel should be used in the work does not change the liability to the defendant. This understanding calls for the proper, not negligent, use of the shovel."

¹⁸ In Winniford v. MacLeod (1913) 68 Or. 301, 136 Pac. 25, where an action brought to recover for injuries caused to a house which the plaintiff was then constructing, by rocks thrown against it by an excessive blast set off by an independent contractor engaged by his codefendant, a municipal corporation, to grade

trine by which he is subjected to a positive, non-delegable duty in respect of the proper performance of work "from which mischievous consequences will arise unless preventive measures are adopted,"¹⁹ or which is of that quality which is denoted by the expression "intrinsically dangerous."²⁰

In the remaining sections of this annotation the cases in which various kinds of collateral negligence are involved have been arranged in such a manner as to facilitate comparison and contrast with those in which recovery has been allowed on the ground that the torts in question amounted to breaches of non-delegable duties which were incumbent upon the employers. Such a comparison shows that, in a large number of instances, the decisions regarding virtually identical states of fact are inconsistent, owing to the circumstance that the rights and liabilities of the parties were determined with reference to different doctrinal criteria. Having regard to this inconsistency, particular precedents for the nonliability of an employer as regards injuries caused by a tort of a certain description cannot safely be treated as reliable, unless it has been ascertained, by a careful investigation, that their authority has not been weakened or destroyed by decisions based upon the theory of non-delegable duties. As the domain of facts within which that theory is deemed to be controlling is being continually extended by the rulings of the courts, caution in the use of the older cases is constantly becoming more and more necessary.

a. Acts productive of more or less permanent conditions injurious to persons.

§ 21. Work performed for a railroad company.

The nonliability of railroad companies has been affirmed in cases where a workman left on a highway one of a number of large stones which were to be used for the abutments of a bridge;¹ where a young child was drowned in a pool of water, formed, while the defendant's line was under construction, by a heavy storm on the defendant's right of way, in a corner between one of its own embankments and one belonging to an intersecting line;² where the loading of cars was done in an improper manner;³ where a certain streets and lots, was held not to be maintainable, the court argued thus: "The contract was for grading. It was a lawful, harmless undertaking. There was nothing about it intrinsically dangerous to anyone. The fallacy of the argument for the plaintiffs consists in the assumption that the contract required blasting and the use of dangerous quantities of powder. So far as the defendant company was concerned, it mattered not whether the contractor excavated the earth by the use of large steam shovels, by hydraulic process, or by picks and shovels, or whether he removed it by trains of cars, by wheelbarrows, or in bags. The method of performing a harmless work was left to the contractor, and the latter alone is responsible for damages involved and arising out of the manner of accomplishment. Whether we consider the question as one of failure of proof entailing a nonsuit, or as a question of directed verdict, it should be decided in favor of the defendant company."

¹⁹ This is the phraseology used in the leading case, Bower v. Peate (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 321, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 446, 35 L. T. N. S. 321.

²⁰ Having regard to the fact that such work as that involved in Winniford v. MacLeod, note 18, supra, is in these days usually performed by means of explosives, it is probable that some courts would, under similar circumstances, proceed upon the theory that the employer contemplated the use of this agency, and that the right of action was consequently determinable with reference to the question whether the work for which the contractor was engaged was intrinsically dangerous—a question with regard to which there is a difference of opinion.

¹ Pawlet v. Rutland & W. R. Co. (1855) 28 Vt. 298.

² Charlebois v. Gogebic & M. River R. Co. (1892) 91 Mich. 59, 51 N. W. 812.

³ In Haley v. Jump River Lumber Co. (1892) 81 Wis. 412, 51 N. W. 321, 956, where a member of a train crew on a line built by a lumber company traveler's horse was frightened by the flapping of canvas suspended under a trestle as a protection against the dropping of paint on the street, the accident being due to the negligence of the servants of a contractor employed to paint the trestle, in so hanging the canvas that it became loose;⁴ where an embankment, not specified in the contract or necessary for its performance, was raised in a street on which the plaintiff's premises abutted;⁵ and where a wire fence which had been removed from its usual position while the road was being graded was placed so close to the track that it was caught by a passing train and dragged, together with a child who was leaning upon it, under the wheels of a car.⁶

§ 22. Work performed with respect to building. Conditions on the employer's premises.

The effect of the cases relating to for its own use was injured as a result of some logs slipping off a car, the evidence tended to show that the loading was done by a contractor. Held, error to refuse to submit to the jury the question whether the accident was wholly caused by negligent loading.

⁴ McCann v. Kings County Elev. R. Co. (1892; Brooklyn City Gen. T.) 46 N. Y. S. R. 327, 19 N. Y. Supp. 668.

⁵ Chattahoochee & G. R. Co. v. Behrman (1903) 136 Ala. 508, 35 So. 132.

⁶ Wood v. Long Island R. Co. (1910) 187 App. Div. 63, 122 N. Y. Supp. 159. Plaintiff's theory was that, when the contractor's workmen were moving a piece of timber through the fence, it became tangled in the wires, and dragged them near the track.

¹ McEnanny v. Kyle (1887; C. P.) 14 Daly (N. Y.) 268 (servant of owner injured).

² Mahon v. Burns (1894) 9 Misc. 223, 29 N. Y. Supp. 682, affirmed in (1895; C. P.) 13 Misc. 19, 34 N. Y. Supp. 91 (tenant struck his foot against a plank put down to protect newly laid tiling).

In Boss v. Jarmulowsky (1903) 81 App. Div. 577, 81 N. Y. Supp. 400 (appeal dismissed on a point of practice in (1906) 184 N. Y. 597, 77 N. E. 1182) where a servant fell over portions of a fire escape which had been left in the hallway of a tenement house, the work performed for street railway companies is stated in § 24, infra, 849.

(a) Injuries to persons in the building or elsewhere on the premises.

The employer's nonliability has been affirmed with respect to injuries caused by the overloading of an upper floor with materials to such an extent as to cause it to collapse;¹ by building material so placed in a passageway as to form a dangerous obstruction;² by cleats nailed in a staircase in such a manner as to be likely to cause a person using it to stumble;³ by a heavy fixture laid in such a position that it was likely to fall on a person near it;⁴ by the temporary removal of steps leading from the door of a house in front of which a concrete sidewalk was being constructed;⁵ by a dangerous opening;⁶ by an excavation so made as to form a dangerous contention that the case should not be considered as one of negligence only, but that the allegations of the complaint were broad enough to charge the defendant with maintaining a nuisance in a hallway, and the evidence sufficient to sustain that charge, was thus dealt with: "It is evident that this obstruction was not created in the hallway by the owner, or by his servants or agents, but was the wrongful act of a third party. If it were a nuisance, it was created by the servants or employees of the independent contractor. It was not the result of the ordinary method of doing work intrusted to an independent contractor, but was caused by the negligence of the contractor or his servants, and was in a matter purely collateral to the contract, viz., depositing materials, and the case comes within the distinction referred to by Gray, Ch. J., in Gorham v. Gross (1873) 125 Mass. 240, 28 Am. Rep. 224."

¹ Louthan v. Hewes (1902) 138 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 1065.

² Jackson v. Butler (1913) 249 Mo. 342, 155 S. W. 1071 (clothes locker had been temporarily moved while building was being altered; person injured was servant of lessee).

³ Carey v. Baxter (1909) 201 Mass. 522, 87 N. E. 901 (action against principal and subcontractor).

⁴ In Wiese v. Remme (1897) 140 Mo.

bank;⁷ by a pile of lumber placed so near a railway siding on the employer's premises as to endanger the safety of trainmen operating cars on the siding.⁸

The action was also held not to be maintainable in cases where a tenant's premises were exposed and foods injured, as a result of the manner in which a man contracting with the landlord for the removal of the adjoining house performed the work;⁹ where the death of a son of a tenant of the employer resulted from his inhaling sooty vapor which filled the room, owing to the negligence of workmen engaged in repairing the chimney;¹⁰ where a chimney of a house which was being removed was left standing in a dangerous condition during a suspension of the work;¹¹ and where a continuous escape of gas was caused by the manner in which fixtures were handled.¹²

(b) Injuries to persons on adjoining premises.

The right of recovery has been denied in cases where the injuries complained of were caused by the collapse of the building itself;¹³ by the collapse of a defective wall which was being taken down;¹⁴ and by the fall of lumber insecurely piled.¹⁵

(c) Injuries to persons on adjacent highway.

The right of action against the employer has been denied in respect of injuries occasioned by the collapse of a defective portion of the building itself;¹⁶ by the fall of a street sign 289, 41 S. W. 797, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 222, a landlord was held not to be liable in an action for damages brought by the parents of a child who fell into an unfinished privy vault which a contractor had dug on property of which they were the tenants, and had left uninclosed for several months.

In two cases where the defendant was held not to be liable for injuries caused by trapdoors left open, the report does not show whether the claimants were tenants or invitees. Burns v. McDonald (1894) 57 Mo. App. 599.

In Joseph v. Philip Henrici Co. (1907) 137 Ill. App. 171, where it was held that the plaintiff could not recover for an injury caused by falling into an uncovered catch basin filled with hot water, the evidence showed affirmatively that he was not an invitee, but a bare licensee.

⁷ Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co. (1884) 82 Mo. 276, 52 Am. Rep. 376 (bank collapsed and fell on child).

⁸ Wright v. Big Rapids Door & Blind Mfg. Co. (1900) 124 Mich. 91, 50 L.R.A. 495, 82 N. W. 829.

⁹ Rotter v. Goerlitz (1890) 16 Daly, 484, 34 N. Y. S. R. 1001, 12 N. Y. Supp. 210. The court was of opinion that there is no implied covenant in a lease that the landlord will keep in repair the demised premises, or that the adjacent property will remain in the condition in which it was at the time of letting. But a different view would probably be taken by some courts.

¹⁰ O'Connor v. Schnepel (1895) 12 Misc. 356, 33 N. Y. Supp. 562.

¹¹ Wilmot v. McPadden (1905) 78 Conn. 276, 61 Atl. 1069 (person injured was a child who had strayed onto the defendant's premises).

¹² In McCauley v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1896; Sup. App. T.) 16 Misc. 574, 38 N. Y. Supp. 773, the servant of a person employed by a company to put in a new pane of glass found a gas pipe interfered with his work, and removed two lengths of it, the consequence being that an explosion occurred when the gas was lighted in the evening. One of the grounds on which the liability of the company for the resulting damage was denied was that the tort-feasor's master was an independent contractor.

¹³ Braidwoods v. Bonnington Sugar Ref. Co. (1866; Ct. of Sess.) 2 Scot. L. R. 152. The parties injured were apparently persons on the adjoining premises; but the report is not clear as to this point. Nor is it distinctly stated whether the accident occurred while the building was under construction, or after its construction.

¹⁴ Engel v. Eureka Club (1893) 137 N. Y. 100, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692, 32 N. E. 1052, reversing (1892) 45 N. Y. S. R. 940, 18 N. Y. Supp. 945.

¹⁵ Andrews v. Boedecker (1885) 17 Ill. App. 213 (pile toppled over and killed a man on the adjoining premises).

¹⁶ Peyton v. Richards (1856) 11 La. Ann. 62 (iron front of building fell); Scales v. Llewellyn (1916) 172 N. C. 494, — A.L.R. —, 90 S. E. 521 (porch of house which was being raised fell).

defectively attached to a building;¹⁷ by a scaffold defectively secured or adjusted;¹⁸ by a ladder so placed by workmen engaged in repairing a roof that it was blown down by the wind;¹⁹ by the absence of a protective fence in front of a building while it was under construction;²⁰ by a derrick insecurely set up;²¹ by an excavation made in the immediate neighborhood of the highway;²² and by a horse taking fright at a pile of boards deposited in a street.²³

(d) Injuries to property on adjacent premises.

The right of action was denied in

In Brown v. Accrington Cotton Spinning & Mfg. Co. (1895) 3 Hurlst. & C. 511, 159 Eng. Reprint, 631, the following remarks were made during the argument of counsel:—Pollock, C. B.: "If a person is walking along a public street, and a house in the course of building falls down and injures him, that is evidence of negligence for which the owner of the house is prima facie liable; but he may show that he employed a competent builder, and that the accident was caused by the negligence of a servant of the builder." Martin, B.: "That is the case of a nuisance."

In Deford v. State (1868) 30 Md. 179, where a cornice and a portion of a wall fell, the liability of the landowner was declared not to be predicable, unless the wall had been so defectively constructed as to constitute a nuisance; and, as there was evidence tending to establish such a condition, a new trial was ordered.

¹⁷ McNulty v. Ludwig (1908) 125 App. Div. 291, 109 N. Y. Supp. 703. The court expressly stated that it had not considered the case from the standpoint of nuisance, because the complaint was drawn, and the case was tried and submitted to the jury, on the theory of negligence.

¹⁸ Hexamer v. Webb (1886) 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755 (piece of scaffolding was blown down upon passer-by); Phillips v. Roth (1914) 160 App. Div. 792, 145 N. Y. Supp. 745. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (1914) 123 Md. 249, 91 Atl. 343, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 115 (painter fell on pedestrian from platform not properly secured); Regan v. Keighley Metal Ceiling & Roofing Co. (1915) 220 Mass. 259, 107 N. E. 984 (staging used a case where a wall of a building under construction was blown down by a high wind and fell against the plaintiff's house.²⁴

§ 23. Same subject. Conditions on highway adjacent to employer's premises.

It has been held that the employer is not chargeable with responsibility for injuries occasioned to travelers by the following conditions: Obstructions produced by depositing materials in front of the building under construction;¹ obstructions of other by painters was tipped over by a gust of wind and struck person entering building).

¹⁹ McCarty v. Second Parish (1880) 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320.

²⁰ In Crawford v. Peel (1887) Ir. L. R. 20 C. L. 332, it was laid down that, unless the obligation to place a hoarding in front of a building under erection is imposed by a statute applicable to the locality in which the work is being executed, the owner of the building is not liable for injuries resulting from the fact that the contractor by whom it was being erected omitted to put up the hoarding. In this case Murphy, J., was of opinion that, even if a breach of a statutory obligation had been proved, the owner's liability did not extend beyond the penalty imposed. But the doctrine propounded by the learned judge is in conflict with decisions cited in Labatt, Master & Servant, § 1905.

²¹ Potter v. Seymour (1859) 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 140.

²² Cary v. Sparkman & M. Co. (1911) 62 Wash. 363, — A.L.R. —, 113 Pac. 1093; (pedestrian fell into unguarded excavation, which was made for the purpose of constructing a basement window, and extended to the edge of the sidewalk).

²³ Hilliard v. Richardson (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743.

²⁴ Scharff v. Southern Illinois Constr. Co. (1905) 115 Mo. App. 157, 92 S. W. 126.

¹ Morning v. Cramp (1909) 170 Fed. 364 (plaintiff, when alighting from a street car, came into collision with a pile of girders near the track); Green v. Soule (1904) 145 Cal. 96, 78 Pac. 337, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 8 (buggy driven against pile of materials deposited by subcontractor); Hilliard v. Richard- descriptions;² a defective fence erected for the purposes of the son (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743 (plaintiff's horse, being frightened by pile of boards deposited in a street, swerved aside and threw his wagon against a post); Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741 (principal contractor held liable for injury caused to pedestrian by unguarded heap of materials); Winters v. American Radiator Co. (1915) 128 Minn. 508, L.R.A.1915D, 476, 151 N. W. 277 (plaintiff fell over radiators left on sidewalk); Ege v. Phoenix Brick & Constr. Co. (1906) 118 Mo. App. 630, 94 S. W. 999 (dirt deposited in street opposite defendant's property); Solberg v. Schlosser (1910) 20 N. D. 307, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 127 N. W. 91 (wagon collided with materials left on street); Grandy v. Anderson (1913) — R. I. —, 85 Atl. 641 (plaintiff tripped over mortar bed of subcontractor, for plastering); Blanchard v. Montreal (1912) 18 Rev. Leg. (N.S.) (Can.) 489 (vehicle collided with unlighted pile of stones deposited in street by building contractor).

Where a proprietor of a house contracted with a builder to execute certain repairs, and the builder made a subcontract for the plaster work, it was held that neither the proprietor nor the principal contractor was liable for injuries caused by the upsetting of a vehicle, which resulted from the negligence of the subcontractor in leaving a heap of lime in the street, without any fence or protection, outside the space which had been duly set apart, fenced in, and lighted by the principal contractor, in accordance with the provisions of a police act. M'Lean v. Russell (1850) 12 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d series, 887, 22 Scot. Jur. 394. Lord Fullerton said: "Here there was nothing hazardous; and if a party employed to perform the very safe operation of plastering a house executed it in a dangerous way, he only is blamable." Adverting to the contention that there was a constructive culpa in employing careless persons, Lord Mackenzie said: "It is perfectly vain to say that any such blame can attach to a man who employs responsible tradesmen to execute harmless repairs on his house, or in these persons contracting with another to do part of the work."

In Hoff v. Shockley (1904) 122

Iowa, 720, 64 L.R.A. 538, 101 Am. St. Rep. 289, 98 N. W. 573 (where plaintiff's buggy collided with pile of sand), the argument unsuccessfully advanced by plaintiff's counsel was that "defendant should have known that the carrying on of the work by the contractor would involve the deposit of sand in the street, and, while this would not necessarily and of itself constitute a nuisance, it might become a nuisance by reason of failure to properly guard it, or warn against it, and the defendant should have taken pains to see that the contractor took proper precautions." The court said: "It was not the concern of the defendant how the contractor used the street, nor did defendant have any control over the use which the contractor should make of the street. . . . The real negligence complained of was the failure to put out barriers of warning lights, and this was not an act as to which the defendant had any responsibility, or over which defendant had any control. Even if defendant's husband acted as her agent in approving the placing of the sand in the street, his assent did not render her liable, for the placing of the sand in the street was not a wrong in itself. Callanan v. Gilman (1887) 107 N. Y. 360, 1 Am. St. Rep. 831, 14 N. E. 264. Such an act may be entirely proper, and does not necessarily give rise to a nuisance. The wrong was in leaving the pile of sand in the street at night, without barricade or danger signals, so as to imperil the safety of those using the street in the usual way. For this neither defendant nor her husband was responsible."

A contractor for the erection of a building is not liable for the penalty imposed by a city ordinance which forbids any person to place, leave, or deposit in the street any material, except such as is permitted by ordinance or resolution, if it appears that the ordinance was infringed by his subcontractor, and there was no necessity for putting the material in the street. Buffalo v. Clement (1892) 46 N. Y. S. R. 676, 19 N. Y. Supp. 846.

² Peachey v. Rowland (1853) 13 C. B. 182, 138 Eng. Reprint, 1167, 17 Jur. 764, 22 L. J. C. P. N. S. 81 (earth was so replaced in drain made for sewer connection as to create an obstruction); Massey v. Oates (1905) 143 work;³ an unguarded trench dug for making a sewer connection;⁴ an unguarded excavation made in the sidewalk adjacent to the building;⁵ by an open and unguarded area;⁶ an unguarded opening left in a temporary Ala. 248, 39 So. 142 (plaintiff tripped over planks laid over newly laid cement pavement); Winslow v. Glendale Light & P. Co. (1918) 164 Cal. 688, 130 Pac. 427 (plaintiff tripped over wire stretched across sidewalk); Davie v. Levy (1887) 39 La. Ann. 551, 4 Am. St. Rep. 225, 2 So. 395 (driver knocked off his wagon by a coal run, built for the purpose of unloading coal from a barge); Independence v. Slack (1895) 184 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094 (pedestrian collided with stones which were to be used for construction of a sidewalk); Goldstein v. Wolkenberg (1907) 54 Misc. 545, 104 N. Y. Supp. 786 (plaintiff tripped over cable of hod elevator); Whitehill v. Hartman Constr. Co. (1914) 87 Misc. 184, 149 N. Y. Supp. 518, affirmed in (1915) 168 App. Div. 928, 152 N. Y. Supp. 1149, on opinion below (similar accident); Richmond v. Sitterding (1903) 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616 (pedestrian tripped over plank way laid across sidewalk by masons).

In Larow v. Clute (1891) 60 Hun, 580, 37 N. Y. S. R. 859, 14 N. Y. Supp. 616, the injury for which the employer was held not to be liable, was caused by the plaintiff's falling on a ridge of ice which the servants of a contractor, engaged to pump water from a cellar, had allowed to form on a sidewalk.

Where the owner of premises, having occasion to construct an improvement in his cellar which is required by the board of health, employs a contractor who is bound to do all work and furnish materials, the employer is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian from colliding with a barrel placed over an open coalhole in the sidewalk, and kept there by the contractor to supply necessary ventilation for the prosecution of the work. Maltbie v. Bolting (1893; Super. Ct.) 6 Misc. 339, 26 N. Y. Supp. 903.

In Evansville v. Senhenn (1898) 151 Ind. 42, 41 L.R.A. 728, 68 Am. St. Rep. 218, 47 N. E. 634, 51 N. E. 88, the liability of a city for an injury caused by lumber which the vendor had negligently piled in a street was denied on the ground that the vendor was not the "agent" of the city.

³ Martin v. Tribune Asso. (1883) 30 Hun (N. Y.) 391 (fence was blown down and struck passer-by); Ewing v. Litzmann (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 188 S. W. 742 (fence constructed in front of building fell on pedestrian).

⁴ Zimmerman v. Baur (1894) 11 Ind. App. 607, 39 N. E. 299 (horse injured by stepping into trench); Kelly v. Doody (1889) 116 N. Y. 575, 27 N. Y. S. R. 653, 22 N. E. 1084.

⁵ Fuller v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1882) 15 Fed. 875; Ryan v. Curran (1878) 64 Ind. 845, 31 Am. Rep. 123 (answer alleging that the defendant's lot and appurtenances were, at the time of the injury, in the exclusive possession of the contractor, held to be sufficient); Schweickhardt v. St. Louis (1876) 2 Mo. App. 671; Allen v. Willard (1868) 57 Pa. 374 (pedestrian fell into excavation for cellar which extended 4 feet outside the line of the houses).

The facts with reference to which the defendant's liability was denied in Ryder v. Thomas (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 296, were thus stated by the court: "The defendant made a contract with one Clynes to raise a building. . . . It was not necessary to interfere with the sidewalk or street to perform the contract. The building was to be raised 4 feet from a point about 1 foot above the level of the sidewalk. The contractor dug a trench in the sidewalk next to the house about 2 feet in width and about the same depth, and threw the earth excavated upon the sidewalk. The excavation was left unguarded at night, and the plaintiff fell into it and was injured. Defendant did not dig or authorize the digging of the ditch, and did not know of its being done until the next morning after the injury."

⁶ Du Pratt v. Lick (1869) 38 Cal. 691 (accident was due to the negligence of a carpenter employed to repair a sidewalk); Scammon v. Chicago (1861) 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334 (disapproved in Chicago v. Robbins (1862) 2 Black (U. S.) 418, 17 L. ed. 298, and Robbins v. Chicago (1867) 4 Wall. (U. S.) 657, 18 L. ed. 427); Clark v. Fry (1858) 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590.

sidewalk, while an excavation was being made underneath;⁷ a coalhole left open and unguarded;⁸ an unguarded opening made in a sidewalk by raising the flap of a cellar door;⁹ and a ladder which was left standing against the front of a store and was blown down on a passer-by.¹⁰

⁷ Frassi v. McDonald (1898) 122 Cal. 402, 59 Pac. 139, 772.

⁸ Harrison v. Collins (1878) 86 Pa. 153, 27 Am. Rep. 699.

⁹ Wilson v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Co. [1915] W. N. (Eng.) 352, 32 Times L. R. 60, 60 Sol. Jo. 142.

¹⁰ Bacon v. Chandler (1914) 181 Mich. 372, 148 N. W. 194.

¹ Hauser v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1899) 27 Misc. 538, 58 N. Y. Supp. 286 (horse sank through the earth between the pavement and a bridge laid over an excavation made in a street on which a railway was being constructed).

Where the plaintiff was injured by falling into a hole dug in a public street by a railroad company engaged, as an independent contractor, in erecting a line of poles and wire for the defendant company, the action was held not to be maintainable. Hackett v. Western U. Tele. Co. (1891) 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822.

² Overton v. Freeman (1852) 11 C. B. 867, 138 Eng. Reprint, 717, 16 Jur. 65, 21 L. J. C. P. N. S. 52, 8 Car. & K. 52 (plaintiff stumbled over stones left in a street by the workmen of a paving contractor); Fulton County Street R. Co. v. McConnell (1891) 87 Ga. 756, 13 S. E. 828 (plaintiff's horse struck his foot against some nails which had been deposited in a street by the instructions of a street railway company); Overhouser v. American Cereal Co. (1902) 118 Iowa, 417, 92 N. W. 74 (bicycle collided with a stone thrown from a wagon used for transporting building materials); Manchester v. Warren (1893) 67 N. H. 482, 32 Atl. 763 (man engaged in hauling logs left one of them on a highway); Lancaster Ave. Improv. Co. v. Rhoads (1887) 116 Pa. 377, 2 Am. St. Rep. 608, 9 Atl. 852 (wagon overturned by bank of earth left on road which was being graded by a land development company); Sanford v. Pawtucket Street R. Co. (1896) 19 R. L. 537, 33 L.R.A. 564, 35 Atl. 67 (wire stretched along a street during construction of street

18 A.L.R.—54.

§ 24. Work performed on a highway.

Private employers have been held to be exempt from liability for injuries occasioned to travelers by a defect in the surface of a highway;¹ by an obstruction on or above the surface;² by an open trench;³ by an opening formed in a footpath by lifting cellar railway injured pedestrian); Texarkana Teleph. Co. v. Burge (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 192 S. W. 807 (guy wire of a telephone company's pole, which had been slackened by the servant of a man employed to transport a motor boat, caught the top of a buggy and overturned it).

³ In Blake v. Ferris (1851) 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304, the defendants, who had received a license from the authorities to construct a public street at their own expense, were held not to be liable for an injury received by one who drove at night into an open sewer which had been left unguarded and unlighted. In Storrs v. Utica (1858) 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437, Comstock, J., distinguished this case from those in which the liability of a municipal corporation for the defective condition of a street is in question, but took occasion to express a doubt whether the decision was correct in view of the facts. There would certainly seem to be good grounds for contending that the position of a licensee of a municipality under such circumstances cannot be either more or less favorable than that of the municipality itself. But the decision is in line with several of those cited below.

In Smith v. Simmons (1883) 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113, the employer was held not to be responsible for injuries received by a pedestrian from falling into an open trench which had been dug in a street by permission of the authorities, and left unprotected by the contractor.

Where W. contracted with the A. gas company to dig a trench, the work to be under the supervision of the company's engineer, and he sublet the work to D., and in consequence of D's negligence in not guarding the excavation a foot passenger was injured, it was held that D. alone was liable. Wray v. Evans (1875) 80 Pa. 103, approved in Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. (1885) 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404.

flaps for the purpose of delivering merchandise;⁴ by an opening in a trestle used for the purposes of the work of constructing a street railway;⁵ by gas pipes stacked in an unsafe manner.⁶

The courts have also denied the liability of municipalities and other public bodies for injuries occasioned to travelers by unguarded obstructions on or above the surface of the highway;⁷ by unguarded trenches;⁸ by defective bridges;⁹ by an explosion of gas which escaped from a pipe into a sewer trench which was under construction;¹⁰ and by machinery left in such a position as to frighten horses.¹¹ But the preponderance of authority is opposed to these decisions.

§ 25. Other descriptions of work.

The right of action has been denied under the following circumstances: Where a brakeman on a passing train came into collision with a plank laid by a teamster in the employ of the defendant across a gondola car on a siding, for the purpose of facitating the transfer of goods to a wagon;¹ where the plaintiff was thrown from a vehicle, as a result of his horse having shied at a broken-down truck which had been left on the highway;² where a man was injured by the fall of a chute by means of which goods were being lowered into his lighter.³

b. Acts productive of more or less permanent conditions injurious to property.

§ 26. Work performed for a railroad company.

The right of action against the employer has been denied under the following circumstances: Where a subcontractor's workmen, in contravention of the orders of the defendant's engineer, excavated a road in such a manner as to cut into a drain, the consequence being that the water escaped onto the premises of an adjoining landowner;¹ where construction work was performed in such a manner as to produce a nuisance affecting land adjacent to the right of

⁴ Wilson v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Co. [1915] W. N. (Eng.) 352, 32 Times L. R. 60, 60 Sol. Jo. 142.

⁵ Rinker v. Galveston-Houston Electric R. Co. (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 176 S. W. 737 (child fell through opening).

⁶ O'Hara v. Laclede Gaslight Co. (1912) 244 Mo. 395, 148 S. W. 884 (boys set a pipe rolling).

⁷ Reid v. Darlington Highway Board (1877; Q. B. Div.) 41 J. P. (Eng.) 581 (pile of stones left on the road); Quayle v. Sewerage & Water Bd. (1912) 131 La. 26, 58 So. 1021 (plank laid to protect newly laid pavement).

In a Newfoundland case, the court being of the opinion that there was no statutable obligation on the part of the defendant board of works to keep a certain road in repair, held that it was not liable for an injury to a person who drove against a heap of gravel which had been left in the road through the negligence of one who had contracted for its repair. Duchemin v. Chairman Bd. of Works (1880) Newfoundl. Rep. (1874-1884) 236.

⁸ Barry v. St. Louis (1852) 17 Mo. 121 (sewer trench); Wendell v. Troy (1862) 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 329 (wheel of truck sank into a hole made by collapse of side of drain); Charlock v. Freel (1891) 125 N. Y. 357, 26 N. E. 262 (nonliability of municipal corporation in respect of injuries occasioned by a hole in a sidewalk was affirmed by the court, arguendo, in a case in which the action was brought against the contractor); Painter v. Pittsburgh (1863) 46 Pa. 213 (sewer trench); Erie v. Caulkins (1877) 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642 (same); Eby v. Lebanon County (1895) 166 Pa. 632, 31 Atl. 332 (trench dug for the purpose of laying a curbing).

⁹ Wood v. Watertown (1890) 58 Hun, 298, 11 N. Y. Supp. 864 (bridge collapsed while under construction).

¹⁰ Brady v. New York (1912) 149 App. Div. 816, 134 N. Y. Supp. 305.

¹¹ Howarth v. McGugan (1893) 23 Ont. Rep. 396 (hammer of pile driver used for constructing a bridge).

¹ Hopkins v. Empire Engineering Corp. (1912) 152 App. Div. 570, 137 N. Y. Supp. 478.

² Lake v. Bennett (1915) 41 R. L. 154, 103 Atl. 145.

³ Woodward v. Peto (1862) 3 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 389.

¹ Steel v. Southeastern R. Co.

way;² where, owing to the negligence of a contractor in constructing defective stock gaps and throwing down fences, cattle strayed onto land adjoining the right of way;³ where a contractor's workmen left down the bars of an opening in the fence of a field adjoining the right of way;⁴ where a horse was entangled in a wire fence which was being constructed along the right of way.⁵

§ 27. Work performed with respect to a building.

The employer's liability has been (1855) 16 C. B. 550, 189 Eng. Reprint, 875.

² Atlanta & F. R. Co. v. Kimberly (1891) 87 Ga. 161, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231, 18 S. E. 277 (conditions complained of were that the earth taken from a cut had been deposited in such a manner as to dam up a small stream and form a pond near the complainant's house, and that the filth accumulating in the sinks of a construction camp had been permitted to flow therefrom and be deposited near the house); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hughes (1910) 134 Ga. 75, 67 S. E. 542, second appeal in (1915) 143 Ga. 206, 84 S. E. 451, land injured by rocks and debris thrown upon it, and by the diversion of waters from their natural channel, so that it was flooded); Clark v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1865) 36 Mo. 203 (embankment thrown up so as to cause the flooding of land).

³ Alabama Midland R. Co. v. Martin (1893) 100 Ala. 511, 14 So. 401.

⁴ Clark v. Vermont & C. R. Co. (1854) 28 Vt. 103.

⁵ Missouri, K. & O. R. Co. v. Ferguson (1908) 21 Okla. 266, 96 Pac. 755.

¹ In Van Wert v. Brooklyn (1865) 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 451 (where the wall of a municipal engine house in course of erection fell on the plaintiff's building, the supreme court refused to accept the theory of the trial judge that liability of the defendant was predicable on the ground "that all owners of real property, and especially where the property is actually improved and occupied by the owner, are bound so to use it as not to injure the property of others; and that any improper or careless use of it, whether by the owner personally, or by a person or persons by him put in charge of it."

denied, with regard to injuries caused by the following conditions: A wall defectively built;¹ water pipes defective owing to the unskilfulness of a plumber;² earth so piled that, when a rainstorm occurred, water was turned into the cellar of an adjoining house;³ a derrick insecurely set up;⁴ the construction of additional stories in such a manner as to cause a drain-pipe to burst, the result being that a tenant's goods were damaged;⁵ and the impairment of the lateral support of the adjacent land and buildings thereon.⁶

For another case in which the employer's liability in respect of a similar injury was denied, see White v. Green (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 82 S. W. 329.

² Blake v. Woolf [1898] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 426, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 813, 62 J. P. 659, 79 L. T. N. S. 188, 47 Week. Rep. 8 (cistern overflowed).

³ Dutton v. Amesbury Nat. Bank (1902) 181 Mass. 154, 63 N. E. 405.

⁴ Prairie State Loan & T. Co. v. Doig (1878) 70 Ill. 52 (adjacent property injured).

⁵ Jefferson v. Jameson & M. Co. (1897) 165 Ill. 138, 46 N. E. 272, reversing (1895) 60 Ill. App. 587. The ratio decidendi was that the plaintiff, "having agreed that the repairs might be made, occupied no better position, so far as its right to recover damage is concerned, than a stranger." It is not clear whether this statement is to be understood as being indicative of the view that, apart from this factor of an agreement, the action would have been maintainable on the ground of the landlord's being chargeable with an absolute duty to protect the tenant. But it seems to be questionable, to say the least, whether the quality of the landlord's obligation in this respect could be qualified by the mere injection of such a factor.

⁶ Gayford v. Nicholls (1853) 9 Exch. 702, 156 Eng. Reprint, 301, 2 C. L. R. 1066, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 205, 2 Week. Rep. 453 (workmen in excavating soil shook and damaged plaintiff's buildings); Myer v. Hobbs (1876) 57 Ala. 175, 29 Am. Rep. 719; Aston v. Nolan (1883) 63 Cal. 269; Lawrence v. Shipman (1873) 39 Conn. 586 (excavation made under party wall for the purpose of constructing a new portion); Harrison v. Kiser (1887) 79 Ga. 588, 4 S.

§ 28. Work performed on a highway.

The liability of employers has been denied in respect of injuries caused by grading a street in such a manner as to cause surface water to flood adjacent land;¹ by breaking a culvert and leaving piles of earth in such a position as to cause surface water to flood adjacent land;² by obstructing the surface drainage in such a manner, by earth taken from a sewer trench, that the plaintiff's cellar was flooded;³ by constructing a sewer so defectively that water escaped from and flooded the premises of an abutter;⁴ by constructing a tunnel required for a sewer connection so unskillfully that a water pipe was broken, the result being that the premises of an abutter were flooded;⁵ by allowing water to collect in a trench dug for a sewer connection, the result being the flooding of a trench in which the plaintiff was laying a water pipe;⁶ by cutting through the roots of trees on a street so as to render them liable to fall;⁷ by excavating a sewer trench so as to cause the ground to subside in front of the plaintiff's premises;⁸ by the failure of a gas company to support pipes which another company had previously laid;⁹ and by leaving

E. 320; Crenshaw v. Ullman (1898) 113 Mo. 683, 20 S. W. 1077; McGrath v. St. Louis & H. Constr. Co. (1918) 215 Mo. 191, 114 S. W. 611; Nelson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1884) 14 Mo. App. 592; King v. Livermore (1876) 9 Hun (N. Y.) 298, affirmed in (1877) 71 N. Y. 605; Keller v. Abrahams (1885) 13 Daly (N. Y.) 188; Korn v. Weir (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 976 (wall of adjacent house was pierced for the purpose of inserting needles while the foundations of a new building were being excavated); Schulhofer v. Mulhare (1906) 50 Misc. 658, 99 N. Y. Supp. 489.

In Butler v. Hunter (1860) 7 Hurlst. & N. 826, 158 Eng. Reprint, 702, there was held to be no evidence of liability on the part of the defendant, the owner of a house, where the workmen of the contractor in pulling down the front wall of the house removed a breastsummer which was inserted in the party wall between the defendant's and plaintiff's houses, without taking any precautions, by shoring or otherwise, the result being that the front wall of the plaintiff's house fell. Wilde, B., considered that "the absence of a shoring is like the absence of a proper hoarding, or any of the ordinary precautions which belong to the careful taking down of a wall." This decision, however, was disapproved by Lord Blackburn in Dalton v. Angus (1881) L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740, 50 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 689, 44 L. T. N. S. 844, 30 Week. Rep. 196, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 769, and in Hughes v. Percival (1883) L. R. 8 App. Cas. (Eng.) 443, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 719, 49 L. T. N. S. 189, 31 Week. Rep. 725, 47 J. P. 772.

¹ White v. New York (1897) 15 App.

Div. 440, 44 N. Y. Supp. 454, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 213.

² Sappington v. Centralia (1911) 162 Mo. App. 418, 144 S. W. 1112 (negligence of contractor engaged to construct waterworks plant).

³ Dorst v. Toronto (1908) 11 Ont. Week. Rep. 738 (decision of a single judge).

⁴ Fields v. Johnston City (1908) 143 Ill. App. 485.

⁵ Von Lengerke v. New York (1912) 150 App. Div. 98, 134 N. Y. Supp. 832, affirmed without opinion in (1914) 211 N. Y. 558, 105 N. E. 1101.

⁶ Kelly v. New York (1905) 106 App. Div. 576, 94 N. Y. Supp. 872.

⁷ Morris v. Salt Lake City (1909) 35 Utah, 474, 101 Pac. 373. In this case, where the trees were blown down six days after the roots had been cut through by a paving contractor, and fell against the plaintiff's dwelling, the defendant municipality was held liable on the special ground that it was chargeable with constructive notice of the dangerous conditions.

⁸ Uppington v. New York (1901) 165 N. Y. 222, 53 L.R.A. 550, 59 N. E. 91, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 115 (recovery was denied on the ground that the damages were consequential, and the plan adopted for the work was reasonably safe).

⁹ Chartiers Valley Gas Co. v. Lynch (1887) 118 Pa. 362, 12 Atl. 435; Chartiers Valley Gas Co. v. Waters (1888) 123 Pa. 220, 16 Atl. 423 (gas exploded when undermined pipe broke). Commenting on a charge of the trial judge which seemed to imply that because the pipe of the other company was necessarily undermined, and this result was therefore contemplated by the contract, the employer an unguarded and unlighted pile of earth on the highway.¹⁰

§ 20. Work performed by means of explosives.

In many of the cases involving the various descriptions of work referred to in §§ 26 to 28, supra, 850-852, the gravamen of the action was alleged negligence in respect of the use of explosives. As the decisions denying the employer's liability for injuries caused by such negligence form a well-defined category, and are inconsistent with a considerable number of others in which claims have been allowed on the ground that the employer is under a positive duty to see that explosives are used by the contractor with reasonable care, it will be advisable to was liable, for the reason that there was a necessary interference with the rights of others, the courts pointed out that there was no necessary interference with the rights of others unless negligence existed. Both companies had their rights, and they were perfectly consistent with each other. In some jurisdictions it may be that this case would have been referred to the doctrine embodied in the charge criticized.

¹⁰ Crowder v. Emery (1917) 206 Ill. App. 562, where the plaintiff's horse and buggy were injured by coming into collision with the obstruction. Compare cases cited in § 24, note 2, supra, 849.

¹ Logansport v. Dick (1880) 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166; McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (1874) 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267.

² McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (1874) 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267.

³ French v. Vix (1893) 2 Misc. 312, 21 N. Y. Supp. 1016, affirmed in (1894) 143 N. Y. 90, 37 N. E. 612.

⁴ Schnurr v. Huntington County (1899) 22 Ind. App. 188, 53 N. E. 425.

⁵ In McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. (N. Y.) supra, where the rocks were cast against the plaintiff's house, the court argued thus: "The injuries were not occasioned in consequence of the omission of any duty which was incumbent on the defendant. It had let the contract, so far as appears, to a competent person, and had provided in the contract that he should be responsible for any damage group them together in the same section.

It is clear that the doctrine as to the nonliability of the employer for injuries of this type involves an acceptance of the proposition, expressly affirmed in some of the cases, that the latter cannot be charged with responsibility on the theory of his having authorized the performance of work which constituted a nuisance;¹ or would "necessarily produce" such injuries as those referred to above;² or was "dangerous in itself;"³ or "inherently dangerous."⁴

The liability of the employer for the acts of the contractor has been denied in respect of damage occasioned to property by flying rocks,⁵ occasioned by blasting. The defendant did not authorize or permit a nuisance upon its premises. If it had, it would have been liable for any damage occasioned by the nuisance. Hence, if the defendant can be held liable in this case it must be upon the naked ground that it is responsible for the careless acts of the subcontractor's servants over whom it had no control. There is no authority in this state for imposing such a liability under such a state of facts." In this case Dwight, C., delivered a very elaborate and able dissenting opinion. The decision was expressly disapproved in Wetherbee v. Partridge (1899) 175 Mass. 185, 78 Am. St. Rep. 486, 55 N. E. 894.

For other cases in which the plaintiff was held not to be entitled to recover for injuries caused by the blasting operations of railroad contractors, see Tibbetts v. Knox & L. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 437; Pack v. New York (1853) 8 N. Y. 222; Stephensville, N. & S. T. R. Co. v. Couch (1909) 56 Tex. Civ. App. 336, 121 S. W. 192.

In Schnurr v. Huntington County (Ind.) supra, a city, which, as licensor, had permitted the board of public commissioners to construct a sewer from the courthouse to a sewer of the city, was held not to be liable for damage occasioned to a house by the negligent manner in which rock was blasted by the contractor engaged to perform the work.

The liability of a municipal corporation for injuries caused to a house by stones thrown up while a and by the shock of the explosion.⁶

The effect of the cases which relate to personal injuries is stated in § 33, infra, 858.

§ 30. Other descriptions of work.

The liability of the employer has been denied under the following circumstances: Where an embankment made for the purpose of diverting a creek proved to be too weak to resist the action of the water which it was intended to confine;¹ where a sub-contractor, engaged to construct the abutments of a bridge, dredged out the river bed in such a manner as to throw the stream against the land of a riparian proprietor;² where a dam burst while it was being built;³ where a contractor employed to dredge out a canal built dams without constructing a by-pass to carry off the water, the result being that land adjacent to the canal was flooded;⁴ where splash street was being graded was denied in Kelly v. New York (1854) 11 N. Y. 432; Pack v. New York (1853) 8 N. Y. 222. In Storrs v. Utica (1858) 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437, Comstock, J., doubted whether the second of these cases had been correctly decided upon the facts.

For cases in which it was held that an action was not maintainable for similar injuries, sustained as a result of blasting for the purpose of excavating the foundations of a house, see French v. Vix (1894) 143 N. Y. 90, 37 N. E. 612, affirming (1893) 2 Misc. 312, 21 N. Y. Supp. 1016; Roemer v. Striker (1894) 142 N. Y. 134, 36 N. E. 808 (holding that no error had been committed in allowing the defendant to give in evidence a written contract between himself and another, whereby the latter agreed to make the excavation).

It has been held that art. 16, § 8, of the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1874, is merely intended to impose upon corporations having the power of eminent domain a liability for consequential damages caused by the taking of property, and cannot be so construed as to render a railway corporation, having the power of eminent domain, responsible for damages caused by the negligence of a contractor in blasting rocks so as to throw them on property adjacent to the right of way. Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. (1885) 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404.

⁶ Probst v. Hinesley (1909) 133 Ky. 64, 117 S. W. 389.

On the ground that the "work contracted for was lawful and necessary for the improvement and use of the defendant's property," the negligence of a contractor or his employee, in blasting out a ledge of rock which extended close up to the wall of a building on adjoining property, was held not to be chargeable to his employer, who engaged him to excavate the lot preparatory to building thereon. Berg v. Parsons (1898) 156 N. Y. 109, 41 L.R.A. 391, 66 Am. St. Rep. 542, 50 N. E. 957, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 432, reversing (1895) 90 Hun, 267, 35 N. Y. Supp. 780, Gray, J. (with whom agreed Bartlett and Haight, JJ.), dissented, but merely on the ground that there was evidence justifying the conclusion that the employer was culpable in engaging an incompetent contractor.

In the somewhat earlier case of Hill v. Schneider (1897) 13 App. Div. 299, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1, the court refused to grant, at the instance of a tenant, a preliminary injunction to restrain his landlord from blasting in an adjoining piece of land, the evidence being that the landlord personally had not been concerned in the blasting, but had employed an independent contractor to accomplish a certain result, not in itself wrongful, reserving to himself no control over the manner in which it shall be done. The decision was put upon the ground that the defendant was not proceeding to do something which might injure the petitioner pendente lite.

In Seattle Lighting Co. v. Hawley (1909) 54 Wash. 137, 103 Pac. 6, it was held that a gas company could not recover for damage caused to one of its mains by the explosion of dynamite used in grading a street.

¹ Allen v. Hayward (1845) 7 Q. B. 960, 115 Eng. Reprint, 749, 4 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 104, 15 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 99, 10 Jur. 92.

² Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. (1903) 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378.

³ Boswell v. Laird (1857) 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 345, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 616.

⁴ White v. Philadelphia (1902) 201 Pa. 512, 51 Atl. 332.

dams designed to facilitate the delivery of logs at a sawmill were located in such a manner as to diminish the amount, and impair the quality, of the water which the plaintiff supplied to a town;⁵ where the plaintiff's land was flooded in consequence of the failure of a dredging contractor to close a gap which had been opened in a river levee to admit his dredges;⁶ where logs which were being driven down a river were so handled as to create an obstruction to navigation;⁷ where logs were so negligently driven that they lodged against a bridge, the consequence being that it was carried away;⁸ where a boom of logs which was about to be towed across an inlet of the sea was insecurely fastened, and, being detached from its moorings by a storm, was driven against the piles supporting a house;⁹ where a man employed to drive logs to a sawmill, and for that purpose to make use of his employer's dams, kept the lower one closed, and so caused the water to be backed up, to the injury of a riparian proprietor;¹⁰ where a contractor employed to improve a harbor failed to provide lights and set marks for the guidance of ships;¹¹ and where a trained nurse, employed by the defendant to attend on his wife, created a nuisance in a hotel by depositing in a closet the corpse of an illegitimate child, of which she had been delivered while in her employer's apartments.¹²

c. Acts productive of transitory occurrences injurious to persons or property.

§ 31. Work performed for a railroad company.

The liability of the employer has been denied under the following circumstances: Where the injury complained of resulted from the negligent management of a train, used and controlled by contractors on a portion of the road not yet turned over to the company;¹ where a plank which

⁵ Cartier Van Dissel v. Holland-Horr Mill Co. (1916) 91 Wash. 239, 157 Pac. 687. In this case the evidence showed that the dams had been constructed against the advice of the owner of the sawmill.

⁶ Teller v. Bay & R. Dredging Co. (1907) 151 Cal. 209, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 267, 90 Pac. 942, 12 Ann. Cas. 779.

⁷ Moore v. Sanborne (1853) 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209 (nuisance held not to be a necessary consequence of the work contracted for).

⁸ Pierrepont v. Loveless (1878) 72 N. Y. 211; Road Dist. v. Pelton (1901) 129 Mich. 31, 87 N. W. 1029.

⁹ Easter v. Hall (1895) 12 Wash. 160, 40 Pac. 728.

¹⁰ Carter v. Berlin Mills Co. (1876) 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572 (gates of lower dam kept shut so that water was backed up).

¹¹ Gilbert v. Halpin (1858) 3 Ir. Jur. N. S. 300 (Pigot, C. B., dissenting). This decision was put on the broad ground that it was the duty of the contractor either to apprise the employer that the work had reached the stage at which it was necessary to have lights to prevent accidents, or to put the lights out himself. The inference drawn was that, as the contractor had not performed this duty, he was the only culpable party against whom the injured person could proceed. This case was decided before the evolution of the doctrine regarding the non-delegable quality of certain duties, and at the present day the conclusion of most courts with regard to the same facts would probably be different.

¹² Parke v. Seasingood (1907) 152 Fed. 583. The court sustained the contention of defendant that, upon the allegations of the declaration, the nurse alone caused the plaintiff's injury, and was alone responsible for her actions, unless "there was either active participation in the concealment of the body outside of the rooms under the defendant's control, . . . and suffering it to become offensive, having knowledge of its presence."

¹ McKinley v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. (1890) 40 Mo. App. 449; Hitte v. Republican Valley R. Co. (1886) 19 Neb. 620, 28 N. W. 284 (stranger was run over); Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Van Bayless (1876) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 248 (mule run over), cited in Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Meador (1878) 50 Tex. 77; Meyer v. Midland P. R. Co. (1873) 2 Neb. 319 (similar accident); Cunningham v. International R. Co. (1879) 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632 (injury to passenger on construction train, his reformed a temporary crossing was turned up by the negligence of a contractor's servant in driving against it, and injured a person who had stepped on it;² where a traveler was struck by a stone dropped from a bridge which was being constructed over a highway;³ where workmen dropped a chain from an elevated railway onto the street below;⁴ where the iron rail of an awning which was being moved for the purpose of obtaining more space for a street railway was let fall on a passer-by;⁵ where a railway car which was being drawn along a street by horses collided with a wagon;⁶

where two of the cars of a street railway company, after they had been turned over for repairs to another company over whose lines the defendant had running powers, broke loose while they were being hauled to the barn, and ran down a grade until they collided with a stationary car, thereby causing the death of a passenger;⁷ where a child was drawn into a machine used for the manufacture of the concrete needed for the construction of a street railway;⁸ where a horse was frightened by the operation of machinery near a highway;⁹ where fire kindled for the purpose of clearing the ception on the train being a violation of the express prohibition of the railway company); Union P. R. Co. v. Hause (1871) 1 Wyo. 27 (in this case the plaintiff was conveyed in the caboose on a regular ticket issued by the contractor's employees).

In cases of this class it is error to give a charge to the jury which bases the responsibility of the defendant upon the isolated fact that the contractor was transporting freight and passengers for reward, on a finished portion of the line. This fact would be insufficient to warrant the inference thus drawn from it, if it should be shown, either (1) that the contractor was operating that particular section of the road, as a means of furthering the construction of the unfinished portion, or (2) that, although the contractor might have been transporting freight and passengers under an arrangement which did not avail to exempt the company from liability for his negligence, while he was rendering that service, yet he exercised at the same time, in respect to the work of construction, an independent occupation, and was not the agent of the company while discharging the functions incident to that position. Rome & D. R. Co. v. Chasteen (1889) 88 Ala. 591, 7 So. 94.

² Thomas v. Altoona & L. Valley Electric R. Co. (1899) 191 Pa. 361, 43 Atl. 215, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 383.

³ Reedie v. London & N. W. R. Co. (1849) 4 Exch. 244, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1201, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 65, 6 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 184, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 168.

⁴ Burmeister v. New York Elev. R. Co. (1881) 15 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 264.

⁵ O'Rourke v. Hart (1860) 7 Bosw.

(N. Y.) 511, later appeal in (1862) 9 Bosw. 301.

⁶ Schular v. Hudson River R. Co. (1862) 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 653.

⁷ Beckman v. Meadville & C. Street R. Co. (1907) 219 Pa. 26, 67 Atl. 983.

⁸ Chicago City R. Co. v. Hennessy (1884) 16 Ill. App. 153. The court said: "The accident arose from the prosecution of work by the contractor purely collateral to the construction of the road. The company contracted with Holmes to build a designated cable system, with certain specified materials to be furnished by him, among which were engines, wire, concrete, etc. How or where the contractor should procure such materials was a matter with which the company had no concern. The contract did not provide how or where the concrete should be procured or mixed, much less that it should be mixed in a machine like the one which caused the injury; nor was Holmes the agent of the company in procuring and using the machine. The making of the concrete upon the street, and the use of the machine, were the idea and device of Holmes for his own convenience and benefit. The company could not interfere or control as to where he should procure or manufacture his materials, and he might manufacture them in the public street if the municipal authorities did not object. The use of the machine was not one of the natural contingencies which the company was required to anticipate, or which it could have provided against. Its use was only subsidiary to the performance, by the contractor, of his undertaking."

⁹ Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver (1887) 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep.

right of way spread to adjacent premises;¹⁰ and where goods in a warehouse were destroyed by a fire communicated from the engine of a pile driver, used in connection with the work of repairing the company's wharf.¹¹

§ 32. Work performed with respect to a building.

(a) Injuries to persons in the building.

The right of action has been denied in cases where a workman in the employ of one who had undertaken to lay an upper floor pushed his foot through the ceiling of the room underneath, and caused a large piece of plaster to fall on the occupants;¹ where the failure of a gas fitter to turn off the gas caused an explosion;² where a fire which started in the defendant's house, owing to the negligence of a man employed to paint it, destroyed the plaintiff's house.³

(b) Injuries to persons on adjacent highway.

The liability of the employer has been denied in cases where the platform of a hoisting apparatus was lowered so as to strike a person using the street;⁴ where such a person was injured by a heavy substance falling from the building;⁵ where a vehicle

696, 12 N. E. 296 (pumping engine); Grant v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1914) 129 Tenn. 398, 165 S. W. 963 (portable forge).

¹⁰ See § 34 note, 1, infra, 859.

¹¹ Brunswick Grocery Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. (1898) 106 Ga. 270, 71 Am. St. Rep. 249, 32 S. E. 92. But a decision which proceeds upon the theory that the obligations of a bailee are not absolute is in conflict with the general doctrine that all contractual obligations are of this nature.

¹ Fitzgerald v. Timoney (1895; New York City Ct.) 13 Misc. 327, 34 N. Y. Supp. 460.

² Rapson v. Cubitt (1842) 9 Mees. & W. 710, 152 Eng. Reprint, 301, 6 Jur. 606; Car. & M. 64, 11 L. J. Exch. N. S. 271.

³ Francis v. Johnson (1904) 127 Iowa, 391, 101 N. W. 878, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 507.

⁴ Sartirana v. New York County Nat. Bank (1910) 139 App. Div. 597, 124 N. Y. Supp. 197.

⁵ The injuries in the cases under this head were caused by the following:

A cornice which was being placed in position. Chute v. Moeser (1908) 77 Kan. 706, 95 Pac. 398; Eastern Twps. Bank v. De Kérangat (1907) Rap. Jud. Quebec 17 B. R. 232; Deford v. State (1868) 30 Md. 179.

A storm window which was being installed. Phillips v. Roth (1914) 160 App. Div. 792, 145 N. Y. Supp. 745.

A shutter which was being painted. DAVIS v. JOHN L. WHITNEY & SON CO. (reported herewith) ante, 782.

A piece of timber. Pearson v. Cox (1877; C. A.) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 369, 36 L. T. N. S. 495; Hurlstone v.

London Electric R. Co. (1913; C. A.) 30 Times L. R. (Eng.) 398, reversing 29 Times L. R. 514; Long v. Moon (1891) 107 Mo. 334, 17 S. W. 810; Vanderpool v. Husson (1858) 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 196.

A stone. Johnson v. Helbing (1907) 6 Cal. App. 424, 92 Pac. 360.

A brick. Boomer v. Wilbur (1900) 176 Mass. 482, 53 L.R.A. 172, 57 N. E. 1004, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 246; Gardner v. Bennett (1874) 6 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 197; Wolf v. American Tract Soc. (1898) 25 App. Div. 98, 49 N. Y. Supp. 236, reversed on another point in (1900) 164 N. Y. 30, 51 L.R.A. 241, 58 N. E. 31, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 296; Neumeister v. Eggers (1899) 29 App. Div. 385, 51 N. Y. Supp. 481; Smith v. Humphreyville (1907) 47 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 104 S. W. 495; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exch. (1895) 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041.

A bucket of paint. Drennen Co. v. Jordan (1913) 181 Ala. 570, — A.L.R. —, 61 So. 938.

A rivet. Padbury v. Holliday & Greenwood (1912; C. A.) 28 Times L. R. (Eng.) 494; SMITH v. BANK OF COMMERCE & T. Co. (reported herewith) ante, 788 (ratio decidendi was that such an occurrence could not have been anticipated as a direct or probable consequence of the work).

A tool. Pearson v. Cox (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 369, 36 L. T. N. S. 495; Fitzpatrick v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. (1888) 31 Ill. App. 649, writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction in (1891) 139 Ill. 248, 28 N. E. 837.

A coil of rope. Geist v. Rothschild (1900) 90 Ill. App. 324.

In Meighan v. Hollister (1892) 28 came into collision with a mortar box left on the roadway;⁶ where a pedestrian was struck by a wheelbarrow in which rubbish was being carried across the sidewalk;⁷ and where a pedestrian was injured, owing to the negligence of a workman in throwing a piece of lime into a mortar bed in the street.⁸

(c) Injuries to property on adjacent premises.

The nonliability of the employer has been affirmed in cases where a defectively built wall was blown down;⁹ where a house fell while it was being raised with a view to making an addition underneath;¹⁰ and where brick and mortar used for constructing a brick wall were allowed to drop.¹¹

Jones & S. 139, 17 N. Y. Supp. 180, the actual ground on which the complaint was held to have been properly dismissed was that the plaintiff had not discharged the burden of proving that an injury caused by a falling brick was attributable to the fault of the owner.

⁶ Green v. Soule (1904) 145 Cal. 96, 78 Pac. 337, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 8.

⁷ Wilson v. Crutcher (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 176 S. W. 625.

⁸ Strauss v. Louisville (1900) 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075.

⁹ Benedict v. Martin (1862) 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 288.

¹⁰ Conners v. Hennessey (1873) 112 Mass. 96.

¹¹ Pye v. Faxon (1892) 156 Mass. 471, 31 N. E. 640 (occurrence was regarded as not being necessarily involved in the work).

¹ Hunt v. McNamee (1905) 72 C. C. A. 441, 141 Fed. 293; Symons v. Allegany County (1907) 105 Md. 254, 65 Atl. 1067 (stone was cast from a quarry from which a contractor, engaged to repair a highway, was authorized to obtain materials); Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co. (1907) 152 Cal. 500, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 913, 93 Pac. 82, 14 Ann. Cas. 1159 (traveler injured by fragment of stump of tree which was being removed by dynamite).

In Blumb v. Kansas City (1884) 84 Mo. 112, 54 Am. Rep. 87, where a pedestrian was struck by a stone thrown from a sewer trench, the court took the position that the cases relating to the positive duty of a city to § 33. Work performed by means of or with respect to explosives.

(This section is to be read, in connection with § 29, supra, 853.)

That an action will not lie against an employer to recover for personal injuries caused by rocks or other materials cast up by a blast has been laid down with relation to persons on or near highways;¹ to persons on adjoining premises;² and to property in the neighborhood of the place of work.³ His nonliability has also been affirmed in respect of injuries which result from horses being frightened by the noise of the blasting.⁴

The nonliability of a city for injuries caused by an explosion of dynamite stored in a street for the pur-keep its streets in a safe condition for public travel were not applicable as precedents.

In Joliet v. Seward (1877) 86 Ill. 402, 29 Am. Rep. 35, where a blast set off by the workmen of a contractor employed to construct a sewer frightened the plaintiff's horse and caused it to run away, the actual ground upon which it was sought to charge the defendant municipal corporation with liability for the resulting injuries was that it "permitted" the contractor "to set off blasts without giving notice of danger to persons in the immediate vicinity." It was not contended that the action could be maintained in the absence of proof that the defendant had been negligent in this regard.

² Hunt v. Vanderbilt (1894) 115 N. C. 559, 20 S. E. 168 (man standing in doorway of building); Hayes v. Chicago, O. & P. R. Co. (1916) 203 Ill. App. 472 (servant of one railroad company was struck by a stump thrown up by a blast set off on the adjoining property of another railroad company); Kendall v. Johnson (1907) 51 Wash. 477, 99 Pac. 310.

³ Winniford v. MacLeod (1913) 68 Or. 301, 136 Pac. 25 (house under construction was struck by flying rocks).

⁴ In Herrington v. Lansingburgh (1888) 110 N. Y. 145, 6 Am. St. Rep. 348, 17 N. E. 728, where a team, which was standing in a street crossing the one in which a sewer was being constructed, was frightened by the noise of a blast fired by the contractors in the prosecution of the work, and the poses of construction work was affirmed in the cases cited below.⁵

In another case, where injuries were occasioned to persons and property by an explosion of dynamite which the servants of a stevedore were loading on a steamer, it was held that no action would lie against the steamship company.⁶

plaintiff, while attempting to control them, was injured, it was held that the defendant municipality was not liable. The court said: "If there was any culpable carelessness which caused the injury to the plaintiff, it was that of the contractors. They had entire control of the work and the manner of its performance. They could choose their own time for firing the blasts and select their own agents and instrumentalities. They could make the charges of powder large or small, and they could, in some degree, smother the blasts so as to prevent falling rocks and much of the noise of the explosion, or they could carelessly omit all precautions, and for the consequences of their negligence they alone would be responsible. If it was a prudent thing to notify persons in the vicinity of the blast before it was fired, then the contractors should have given the notice; but the duty to give it did not devolve upon the village."

⁵ Smyth v. New York (1911) 208 N. Y. 106, 96 N. E. 409 (adjacent property injured); Carpenter v. New York (1906) 115 App. Div. 552, 101 N. Y. Supp. 402 (person on adjacent premises injured).

⁶ Joseph R. Foard Co. v. Maryland (1914) 135 C. C. A. 497, 219 Fed. 827, affirming 213 Fed. 51.

¹ That a landowner was not liable where a person employed to clear land set fire to some of the brushwood, and the fire spread to the premises of an adjoining landowner, was held in Ferguson v. Hubbell (1884) 97 N. Y. 507, 49 Am. Rep. 544. Ripley v. Priest (1912) 169 Mich. 383, 135 N. W. 258.

In Rogers v. Parker (1909) 159 Mich. 278, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 955, 123 N. W. 1109, 18 Ann. Cas. 753, the court relied not only on what it conceived to be the general principles applicable to the circumstances, but also on a special consideration, thus stated: "The setting of fires in this state in the process of fitting lands for cultivation is a lawful and proper act, without which

§ 34. Other descriptions of work.

The liability of the employer has been denied under the following circumstances: Where fire kindled for the purpose of clearing land spread to adjoining premises;¹ where a fire negligently kindled on a tramroad on which timber was being cut spread the extension of husbandry would have been greatly limited. The statute upon which plaintiffs count in this suit recognizes the lawfulness of such fires, and only makes the owner of lands responsible for the escape of fire therefrom to the lands of another, where such escape was wilfully or negligently permitted. In other words, the statute recognizes that, if the work is properly done, no injurious consequences will follow, and therefore only holds the owner liable where the work has been improperly done." The present writer ventures to express the opinion that the argument of the court, in so far as it was based upon the terms of this statute, was unsound. It is submitted that a provision of this tenor merely amounted to a declaration that proof of negligence in regard to the use of fire for the purpose authorized should be a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action, or, in other words, that a landowner's liability should not be deemed absolute, in the sense that he must, at his peril, see that a fire which he set out did not spread outside his own premises. In this point of view the provision would manifestly have no bearing whatever upon the question of a landowner's responsibility for the negligence of a contractor employed to set out the fire.

In several cases it has been held that a railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by fire which spreads to adjoining land from timber or brushwood which a contractor is burning on its right of way. Woodhill v. Great Western R. Co. (1855) 4 U. C. C. P. 449; Rogers v. Florence R. Co. (1889) 31 S. C. 378, 9 S. E. 1059; Callahan v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. (1867) 23 Iowa, 562.

The doctrine laid down in one case was that a railroad company cannot, under such circumstances, be held liable, as a matter of law, and that the propriety of imputing such liability depends upon whether, under the given circumstances, the burning of outside the employer's premises;² where damage to plaintiff's property resulted from a fire caused by sparks from the smokestack of a sawmill;³ where a fire was kindled on premises adjacent to a highway by sparks escaping from a threshing machine which was being moved along it;⁴ where premises adjacent to a highway were flooded by water which escaped from a fire plug;⁵ where a vehicle was negligently driven;⁶

the brush would be obviously dangerous to such landowners, or whether the circumstances were such that the operation would create no danger, except in so far as such danger might arise from the careless manner in which the work should be done. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yonley (1890) 53 Ark. 503, 9 L.R.A. 604, 13 S. W. 333, 14 S. W. 800.

That an action is not maintainable against a railroad company, where a subcontractor cuts a road through the plaintiff's premises, outside the right of way, and sets fires which, through his negligence, spread and burn the plaintiff's timber, was held in Eaton v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1871) 59 Me. 520, 8 Am. Rep. 430.

In Gillson v. North Grey R. Co. (1872) 33 U. C. Q. B. 128, affirmed in (1874) 35 U. C. Q. B. 475, it was held that liability for damage resulting from the spread of fire from a right of way could not be imputed to the company, on the theory that it was bound to insure the adjacent landowners against injury, for the reason that the contractor might adopt this method of disposing of brush and logs.

That a municipality is not liable where fire spreads from timber which is being burned on a road by a contractor was held in Carroll v. Plympton (1860) 9 U. C. C. P. 345.

That a town which enters into a contract with an individual for the repair of a highway, including the destruction by fire of brush which has theretofore been cut and piled, is not liable for damages caused by the negligence of said contractor when burning the brush, was held in Shute v. Princeton Twp. (1894) 58 Minn. 337, 59 N. W. 1050.

² Gay v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co. (1908) 148 N. C. 336, 62 S. E. 436.

³ Whitney v. Clifford (1879) 46 Wis. 138, 32 Am. Rep. 703, 49 N. W. 835.

where a teamster unlawfully used a drag to hold back a loaded wagon on a steeply graded street in a city;⁷ where a workman dropped a heavy object from a bridge which was being constructed over a highway;⁸ where the injuries complained of were caused by the negligent manner in which heavy articles were handled by persons engaged to transport them;⁹ where a horse was frightened by the noise of a steam

⁴ Taute v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. (1913) 25 N. D. 102, 141 N. W. 134, 4 N. C. C. A. 365.

⁵ Frank v. Rome (1908) 125 App. Div. 141, 109 N. Y. Supp. 247; Ginther v. Yorkville (1897) 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 403.

⁶ Segler v. Callister (1914) 157 Cal. 377, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, 139 Pac. 819 (automobile); Foster v. Wadsworth-Howland Co. (1897) 168 Ill. 514, 48 N. E. 163, affirming (1896) 68 Ill. App. 600 (wagon); Jahn v. Wm. H. McKnight & Co. (1904) 117 Ky. 655, 78 S. W. 862 (same); Muldry v. Fromherz (1917) 142 La. 1087, 78 So. 126 (collision between plaintiff's automobile and a wagon); Moore v. Stainton (1904) 80 App. Div. 295, 80 N. Y. Supp. 244, affirmed in (1904) 177 N. Y. 581, 69 N. E. 1127 (truck); Muldoon v. City Fireproofing Co. (1909) 134 App. Div. 453, 119 N. Y. Supp. 320 (wagon); Woodcock v. Sattle (1914; Sup. Tr. T.) 84 Misc. 488, 146 N. Y. Supp. 540 (automobile); Thorn v. Clark (1919) 188 App. Div. 411, 177 N. Y. Supp. 201 (same); Loiselle v. Muir (1889) Montreal L. Rep. 5 C. S. (Quebec) 155 (wagon).

⁷ Johnston v. Seattle Taxicab & Transfer Co. (1915) 85 Wash. 551, 148 Pac. 900 (taxicab collided with drag, and passenger was injured).

⁸ Dorn v. Snare & T. Co. (1909) 62 Misc. 269, 114 N. Y. Supp. 820 (tool); McNamara v. New York (1911) 144 App. Div. 504, 129 N. Y. Supp. 230.

⁹ Liability for the negligence of draymen, etc., and their servants, has been denied under the following circumstances:

A person passing by was struck by a barrel which was being rolled along a skid to a truck. McMullen v. Hoyt (1867) 2 Daly (N. Y.) 271.

A barrel of salt which was being delivered at the vendee's store rolled against and injured a person passing roller on a city street,¹⁰ or by the noise of a portable forge operated near a highway by a railroad contractor;¹¹ where one of the logs which were being cut for the purpose of timbering a mine was allowed to roll down a steep hillside to the entrance of a drift;¹² where damage was done to a wall by the servants of a drayman engaged by a tenant of the building to move his furniture;¹³ where, by reason of the negligence of a winchman in the service of a stevedore, steel rails fell on a lighter from which they were being hoisted into a ship;¹⁴ where dynamite exploded while it was being loaded on a ship;¹⁵

where a child's hand was caught in a pulley used by a contractor for stringing telephone wires;¹⁶ where a visitor to a public resort was injured owing to the fall of a pole, while a balloonist was endeavoring to raise it for the purposes of the exhibition which he was engaged to give;¹⁷ where such a visitor was injured by reason of the negligent manner in which fireworks were handled;¹⁸ where a ram escaped from a farm and attacked a person on an adjoining farm;¹⁹ where a vessel which was being towed on a canal came into collision with another vessel.²⁰ on the footpath. DeForrest v. Wright (1852) 2 Mich. 368.

A truckman negligently rolled barrels out of his employer's store. Riedel v. Moran, Fitzsimons Co. (1894) 103 Mich. 262, 61 N. W. 509.

A carpenter employed on the lower floor of a warehouse was injured through the negligence of a truckman, or his employees, in allowing a mass of paper to slip from the sling in which it was being raised. Kueckel v. Ryder (1900) 54 App. Div. 252, 66 N. Y. Supp. 522.

In Brophy v. Bartlett (1888) 1 Silv. Ct. App. (N. Y.) 575, reversing (1885) 37 Hun, 642, where a man sent in charge of a horse which had been hired from his master by a truckman was injured by the fall of a hoghead from the truck, the trial judge granted a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence showed that, while the truck was being used, the plaintiff either remained under the control of his master, or became the servant pro tempore of the truckman. But the court of appeals held that the position of the plaintiff was a matter for the jury to determine.

¹⁰ Cary v. Chicago (1895) 60 Ill. App. 341.

¹¹ Grant v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1914) 129 Tenn. 398, 165 S. W. 963.

¹² Anderson v. Tug River Coal & Coke Co. (1906) 59 W. Va. 301, 53 S. E. 713 (log knocked down some of the timbers in the drift).

¹³ Bogle v. Weber (1914) 189 Ill. App. 184, 9 N. C. C. A. 351.

¹⁴ The Satilla (1916) 148 C. C. A. 552, 235 Fed. 58.

¹⁵ State use of Goralski v. General Stevedoring Co. (1914) 213 Fed. 51, affirmed in (1914) 135 C. C. A. 497, 219 Fed. 827. This case was decided with reference to the theory that the work was not "intrinsically dangerous," and for this reason would not be regarded by all courts as a sound precedent.

¹⁶ Vosbeck v. Kellogg (1899) 78 Minn. 176, 80 N. W. 957, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 86.

¹⁷ Smith v. Benick (1898) 87 Md. 610, 42 L.R.A. 277, 41 Atl. 56. The court assigned three distinct grounds for its decision, viz.: (1) That the negligence complained of was collateral to, and not a probable consequence of, the work in hand; (2) that a new method, not known to the defendant, was employed for raising the pole; and (3) that there were no concealed dangers against which the defendant was bound to warn visitors.

¹⁸ Reisman v. Public Service Corp. (1911; Ct. of Err.) 82 N. J. L. 464, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 922, 81 Atl. 838; Deyo v. Kingston Consol. R. Co. (1904) 94 App. Div. 578, 88 N. Y. Supp. 487; Noggle v. Carlisle & Mt. H. R. Co. (1906) 215 Pa. 357, 64 Atl. 547. In some jurisdictions the liability of the employer under such circumstances would doubtless be predicated on the ground that the stipulated work was "intrinsically dangerous."

¹⁹ Marsh v. Hand (1890) 120 N. Y. 315, 24 N. E. 463, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 390.

²⁰ Blattenberger v. Little Schuylkill Nav. R. & Coal Co. (1839) 2 Miles (Pa.) 309.

d. Acts constituting a trespass as regards the property of third persons.

§ 35. Work performed for a railroad company.

The right of action has been denied in cases where the contractor damaged adjacent property by taking a strip of land outside a right of way;¹ by making roads;² by throwing down fences;³ by destroying crops;⁴ by taking materials for the purposes of construction;⁵ by depositing materials excavated during the progress of the work.⁶

¹ In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Gillihan (1906) 77 Ark. 551, 92 S. W. 793, the allegations of the plaintiff were that, after he had conveyed to the defendant a right of way 100 feet wide through his lands, defendant entered upon and took an additional strip 7½ feet wide; that defendant's agents and employees took and destroyed 1,000 cedar rails; that, without plaintiff's consent, they made roads through plaintiff's lands, and that they unlawfully, and without authority, threw down and destroyed plaintiff's fences, exposing the crops on said land to depredations by live stock. Held, that the action was not maintainable.

In Murdfelt v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. (1886) 102 N. Y. 703, 7 N. E. 404, affirming (1884) 34 Hun, 632, where a subcontractor trespassed on certain land adjoining the right of way, the defendant's nonliability was affirmed on the ground that the plaintiffs, through their agent, had knowledge, at the time, of what was done by the contractors under the defendant, and made no objection. But the court also adverted to the point that "it does not appear that the contract which the defendant made with the North River Construction Company could not have been executed as made, without any interference with plaintiff's land, . . . and hence it cannot be said that the defendant caused the trespass, or is liable for it."

² St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Gillihan (1906) 77 Ark. 551, 92 S. W. 793.

³ St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Knott (1891) 54 Ark. 424, 16 S. W. 9; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Gillihan (Ark.) supra; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ferguson (1893) 3 Colo. App. 414, 33 Pac. 684; Clark v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1865) 36 Mo. 203; McKinley v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. (1890) 40 Mo. App. 449.

⁴ Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dudley (1878) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 271.

⁵ Parker v. Waycross & F. R. Co. (1888) 81 Ga. 387, 8 S. E. 871 (timber taken); Rooker v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. (1917) 66 Ind. App. 521, 114 N. E.

998 (gravel removed from plaintiff's land).

In Waltmeyer v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. (1887) 71 Iowa, 626, 33 N. W. 140, where a subcontractor hauled earth for an embankment from land which lay outside the right of way, and had not been condemned, the court disapproved an instruction by which the jury were told that the defendant was responsible for whatever injury was directly committed by anyone who, while acting in its interest in building the road, took such ground as was reasonably necessary to be used for its right of way, although it had not been condemned for that purpose.

In Kerr v. Atlantic & N. W. R. Co. (1895) 25 Can. S. C. 197, plaintiff's counsel contended that, as the company had agreed in one clause of its contract to provide the contractor with the necessary land for borrow pits, it had made itself responsible for his acts, even though such acts should constitute trespass upon the property of others. The court was, however, of the opinion that, upon a proper construction of the contract, this stipulation must be taken to refer to places at which the contractor had borrowed by the consent of the company's engineer, such consent being requisite under another clause of the contract. The trespass in question, therefore, was held to be an independent tortious act for which the company could not, upon any principle of law, be made responsible.

For a case in which the liability of the company for a trespass of this nature was affirmed on the ground of an implied authorization, see McClanathan v. New York & O. Midland R. Co. (1873) 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 501. That the action could not have been maintained in the absence of proof of the employer's consent to the acts complained of was recognized by the court.

⁶ Louisville R. Co. v. Wigginton (1913) 156 Ky. 400, 161 S. W. 209 (earth deposited outside right of way obstructed flow of water); Clark v.

§ 36. Work with respect to a building.

The right of action as against the employer was denied in a case where the workmen of a person who had contracted with the defendant to erect a building carried away some bricks and other materials belonging to the buildings of a person who owned the adjacent land.¹

§ 37. Work performed on a highway.(a) Employer a private party.

The action was held not to be maintainable in cases where a contractor, engaged to grade a street, deviated from the surveyed line, and constructed it through a lot previously purchased by the plaintiff from the contractor's employer;¹ where a contractor engaged to cut standing timber in his employer's land felled trees so that they damaged the fences of an adjoining proprietor;² where a contractor engaged to cut timber on his employer's land cut some on the land of an adjoining proprietor;³ where a contractor, engaged by the grantee of a right to cut timber on the grantor's land, cut down trees expressly excepted from the grant.⁴

(b) Employer a municipal corporation.

The nonliability of such a corporation has been affirmed in cases where a contractor, engaged to raise the grade of a street, allowed some of the dirt used for the embankment to roll down and remain in an adjoining lot;⁵ where earth was deposited on the land of a private party by a contractor engaged to grade a street,⁶ or to construct a sewer;⁷ where a contractor, engaged by a city to construct an aqueduct, cut down a fence and used the materials for the purposes of the work;⁸ where a contractor, engaged to construct a sewer, took possession of plaintiff's lands and damaged his crops;⁹ where a contractor for such work transported building materials across land not belonging to, or in the possession of, his employer;¹⁰

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1865) 36 Mo. 203; Hughes v. Cincinnati & S. R. Co. (1883) 39 Ohio St. 461.

¹ Gayford v. Nicholls (1854) 9 Exch. 702, 156 Eng. Reprint, 301. It was held error to instruct the jury that, if the jury should be of opinion that the workmen, whilst they were on the land by defendant's permission, had from want of due care injured the plaintiff's property, or had carried away the plaintiff's materials, the defendant would be liable for those acts.

That the owner of a lot is not liable for unauthorized acts of trespass committed by an independent contractor, employed to build a house thereon, was held in Davison v. Shanahan (1892) 93 Mich. 486, 53 N. W. 624. But the nature of the trespass in question is not stated.

¹ Clark v. Torchiana (1912) 19 Cal. App. 786, 127 Pac. 831.

² Knowlton v. Hoit (1891) 67 N. H. 155, 30 Atl. 346.

³ Phillips v. Brittingham (1910; Super. Ct.) 2 Boyce (Del.) 173, 77 Atl. 964 (in charge to jury).

⁴ Abbott v. Sumter Lumber Co. (1912) 93 S. C. 131, 76 S. E. 146.

⁵ Bloomington v. Wilson (1896) 14 Ind. App. 476, 43 N. E. 37.

⁶ Fuller v. Grand Rapids (1895) 105 Mich. 529, 63 N. W. 530; Reed v. Allegheny City (1875) 79 Pa. 300.

⁷ Harding v. Boston (1895) 163 Mass. 14, 39 N. E. 411 (not work "of a kind which necessarily or naturally involved any injury to the plaintiff's land").

⁸ In Robert v. Montreal (1881; Montr. Q. B.) 2 D. C. A. (Quebec) 68, 4 L. N. 292. There is nothing in the judgment to show the precise ground upon which the majority of the court proceeded, but presumably the ratio decidendi was the merely collateral character of the tort. Ramsay, J. (with whom one judge concurred), was of opinion that the defendant was liable because the contractor acted "under a misapprehension of the rights of the corporation." But it may be affirmed with some confidence that no common-law court would ascribe any exculpatory effect to such a circumstance.

⁹ Smith v. Montreal (1917) Rap. Jud. Quebec 52 C. S. 284, 37 D. L. R. 159.

¹⁰ Harding v. Boston (Mass.) supra.

and where scavenging work was so performed that the materials removed were deposited on the property of the complainant.¹¹

¹¹ In Hilsdorf v. St. Louis (1869) 45 Mo. 94, 100 Am. Dec. 352, the defendant city had made a contract with a certain party for the removal of the carcasses of any animals which might die or be killed within the city limits. On one occasion, after a large number of mules had been destroyed by a fire, the mayor, in order to obviate the nuisance which would have resulted from conveying the carcasses through the streets to the reduction works of the contractor, arranged with the contractor's servant to have them thrown into the Missouri river. This servant took a road to the river bank where it happened to be convenient of access, and threw the carcasses into the river at a place where it had temporarily overflowed, and concealed a quarry belonging to the plaintiff. The current did not catch them, and they sank into the quarry, the result being that the plaintiff could not reopen it. For the injury so caused the city was held not to be liable. C. B. L.

STATE OF NEVADA

v.

SAMUEL COHEN.

Nevada Supreme Court—December 2, 1921.

(— Nev. —, 201 Pac. 1027.)

Appeal — effect of serving term of imprisonment — dismissal.

The serving of his term of imprisonment by one convicted of deserting his wife and child will render moot questions raised by his appeal from an order denying a new trial in the case, and cause dismissal of the appeal.

[See note on this question beginning on page 867.]

MOTION by the State to dismiss an appeal by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Washoe County (Moran, J.), denying his motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment of conviction of wife and child desertion. Appeal dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. L. D. Summerfield and Harlan L. Heward, for the State:

Defendant's appeal should be dismissed, because all the questions presented in said appeal are now moot questions.

State v. Pray, 30 Nev. 206, 94 Pac. 218; Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 40 L. ed. 293, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; 17 C. J. 193; Tropp v. State, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 186 Pac. 737; Kitchens v. State, 4 Ga. App. 440, 61 S. E. 736; Ex parte Stedham, 84 Tex. Crim. Rep. 523, 208 S. W. 930; Harris v. Lang, 27 App. D. C. 84, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 125, 7 Ann. Cas. 141; United States v. Mills, 11 App. D. C. 510; Tabor v. Hipp, 136 Ga. 123, 70 S. E. 886, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 246; Edwards v. Reno, — Nev. —, 198 Pac. 1090.

Mr. H. V. Morehouse for defendant.

Ducker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal which came on to be heard in advance of a hearing on the merits, by stipulation of the parties. Appellant was found guilty by a jury in the second judicial district court, in and for Washoe county, upon a charge of wife and child desertion; said wife and children being in necessitous circumstances. He was thereafter, on the 27th day of June, 1921, sentenced to be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not less than one month, nor more than twelve months, and remanded to the custody of the sheriff for the execution of sentence. Appellant in due time made a motion for a new trial, and moved in arrest of judgment. From the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial this appeal is taken.

It appears from the certificate of the clerk of the court in which the conviction was had, annexed to the notice of motion to dismiss the appeal, that no application for a certificate of probable cause to stay the execution of judgment was ever made.

After appellant had served one month of his imprisonment, and on the 26th day of July, 1921, he applied to the court in which judgment was rendered for a writ of habeas corpus. It was alleged that the illegality of his confinement consisted in this: "That no definite period of time was fixed for the punishment and imprisonment of the said Samuel Cohen under said sentence, and that there is no law in this state authorizing or empowering the aforesaid district court to pronounce an indeterminate sentence in a case of misdemeanor against the said Samuel Cohen, and that the said offense for which he was prosecuted was and is a misdemeanor, and that he, the said Samuel Cohen, has now served the said period of one month, fixed in the said sentence and judgment of the court, and is entitled to his discharge from custody, for the reason that the remainder of said sentence over and above the said one month is illegal and void, and that the said confinement and restraint and deprivation of liberty of the said Samuel Cohen by the sheriff is now illegal, and he, the said Samuel Cohen, is entitled to his discharge from custody."

The writ was granted and the petitioner released from custody on said 26th day of July, 1921.

Upon these facts, counsel for the state urges that all questions presented on the appeal have become moot questions, and insists that it should be dismissed.

Appellant contends, and the affidavit of his counsel sets forth, that the appellant's guilt or innocence, the jury's disregard of the instructions of the court, as well as the disregard of its own instructions by the court, are questions involved in the motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment; that these questions are presented by a duly settled bill of exceptions; and that, as the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial herein is a distinct and separate appeal from the judgment, the said questions are squarely before the court on appeal, and affect the substantial rights of this appellant, and also the state of Nevada, and are therefore not moot questions. While we are unable to perceive why the fact that these questions are brought before this court on an appeal from the order denying a new trial has any bearing on the motion before us, it is plain that their determination could have no practical result in the case.

Assuming that a decision on the merits would result favorably to appellant, the most that could be determined is that the evidence was insufficient to establish his guilt of the offense charged, or at least that he was illegally convicted by reason of erroneous instructions.

A reversal of the case by this court on any or all of the errors claimed could afford him no relief from the judgment.

He has satisfied that by the term of imprisonment served, and has been discharged from custody. Consequently the controversy between the state and appellant, involved in this appeal, has been terminated as effectually as though a verdict of not guilty had been rendered. There is nothing material to be accomplished,—nothing on which the judgment of this court can act effectively and work an advantage to the appellant. People v. Leavitt, 41 Mich. 470, 2 N. W. 812.

Appeal—effect of serving term of imprisonment —dismissal.

While there are cases to the contrary, the weight of authority is to the effect that an appeal or writ of error will be dismissed when there has been a voluntary payment by the defendant of the fine imposed. Brown v. Atlanta, 123 Ga. 497, 51 S. E. 507; State v. Westfall, 37 Iowa, 575; State v. Conkling, 54 Kan. 108, 45 Am. St. Rep. 270, 37 Pac. 992; Eutsler v. Com. 154 Ky. 35, 156 S. W. 855; People v. Leavitt, supra; Washington v. Cleveland, 49 Or. 12, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 88 Pac. 305; Com. v. Gipner, 118 Pa. 379, 12 Atl. 306; Batesburg v. Mitchell, 58 S. C. 564, 37 S. E. 36; Payne v. State, 12 Tex. App. 160; Madsen v. Kenner, 4 Utah, 3, 4 Pac. 992; State v. Pray, 30 Nev. 207, 94 Pac. 218; 17 C. J. 193.

In the case of Tropp v. State, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 186 Pac. 737, an appeal was taken from a judgment of conviction. It was dismissed on motion of the attorney general. The court stated as one of its reasons for the dismissal: "That each defendant having been committed to jail under said judgment, they have long since served their respective terms of imprisonment; any legal question involved in this pretended appeal is moot."

There can be no real distinction which might call for the application of a different rule in a case where a fine has been imposed and one where the term of imprisonment adjudged has been served. This was pointed out in State v. Westfall, 37 Iowa, 576, in which the court said: "By voluntarily paying a fine imposed upon them, they [appellants] stand in the same relation to the law as they would have done if they had served their period of imprisonment. All that can be said for them is that they have paid money in mistake of their legal rights. If the money need not have been paid, they have clearly made a mistake of law. If, upon this appeal, the judgment should be reversed, they could not recover it, and hence they could derive no benefit from the appeal. The judgment of the court, upon appeal, would determine a mere abstraction."

An appeal was dismissed by this court in the case of State v. Pray, supra, on the following facts: Pray and his codefendant, Langdon, were convicted of a felony, and appealed from the judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial. The former paid his fine under protest, and attempted, by stipulation of his counsel with the district attorney, to reserve the rights of appeal. The attempted reservation was declared void by the court. In the course of its opinion upon this phase of the case, the court said that it fell within a class of cases referred to in 2 Cyc. 648, 649: "Where an order appealed from is of such a nature that its execution has left nothing upon which a judgment of reversal can operate, the appeal will be dismissed, unless such right was specially reserved;" and pointed out that, upon a reversal of the case, no effective relief could be granted, for the reason that neither this court nor the trial court had power to direct that the fine paid by Pray be restored to him. As previously stated, there can be no distinction between the voluntary payment of a fine and serving a term of imprisonment. Both satisfy the judgment of the lower court and leave nothing upon which a decision on appeal could operate. Counsel for appellant would distinguish the Pray Case, and, referring to the summary of the briefs, preceding the opinion, urges that, as it appears a fine was imposed instead of a sentence of imprisonment, at the request of the defendants, and the appeal taken after the payment of the fine, it was deemed waived by the appellate court. Whereas, in the instant case, he insists there could be no waiver of appeal, for the reason that the appeal was perfected and pending before appellant was released on habeas corpus. The opinion in the Pray Case speaks for itself; but, be that as it may, the effect is the same in either instance. The voluntary payment of a fine or serving a term of imprisonment in a criminal action operates as a final disposition of the case, and precludes the defendant from prosecuting an appeal, or proceeding further with an appeal already commenced.

If this appeal should be maintained, the appellant can derive no benefit in point of law from the judgment of this court. It is insisted that the conviction is erroneous for the reasons given, and casts a stigma upon appellant's good name, which he is entitled to have removed by a judgment of reversal. We agree with counsel for appellant, and the poet and authorities he quotes, and are also mindful of the scriptural assurances that a "good name is better than riches." Its loss or impairment is a melancholy disaster to anyone who values it. But we do not perceive how we can revive a dead judgment for the purpose of quieting title to a good reputation. Appellant's opportunity to relieve himself of any odium that may have attached to his name on account of his conviction was lost by his failure to avail himself of the procedure provided for staying execution of judgment, pending an appeal. See Rev. Laws, § 7294.

The authorities cited and quoted by appellant (Com. v. Fleckner, 167 Mass. 13, 44 N. E. 1053; Barthelmy v. People, 2 Hill, 248; People v.

Marks [Gen. Sess.] 64 Misc. 679, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1106; Roby v. State, 96 Wis. 667, 71 N. W. 1046), in which the right to maintain an appeal, notwithstanding the payment of the fine imposed, was upheld on account of the disgrace attaching to the defendant's good name by reason of the conviction, belong to a class of cases which form the minority rule. See note in Ann. Cas. 1913E, p. 300. The doctrine advanced was not recognized in State v. Pray, and we cannot sanction it.

A defendant who has taken an appeal in a criminal action is entitled to a reversal only when there is prejudicial error in the record, and an existing judgment upon which the decision of this court can operate.

Appellant served one month of the sentence imposed, and applied for a writ of habeas corpus to be released from further imprisonment, upon the ground that the remainder of his sentence was void. His petition was granted, and he was discharged from custody. He cannot now be heard to contend that the judgment has not been satisfied.

The appeal is dismissed.

Sanders, Ch. J., and Coleman, J., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Payment of fine, serving sentence, or discharge on habeas corpus, as waiver of right to review conviction.

I. Payment of fine:

- a. Majority view, 867.
- b. Minority view, 871.

II. Serving sentence, 872.

III. Discharge on habeas corpus, 873.

I. Payment of fine. —

a. Majority view.

Generally.

There is some conflict in the decisions on the right of a defendant, after he has paid a fine, to have reviewed the judgment imposing the fine, but the view is taken in a majority of the jurisdictions that a voluntary payment of the fine terminates the action and precludes a review of the conviction.

Arkansas.—Floyd v. State (1877) 32 Ark. 200; Schlieff v. State (1882) 38 Ark. 522; Hubbard v. State (1903) 71 Ark. 467, 75 S. W. 853.

Georgia.—Brown v. Atlanta (1905) 123 Ga. 497, 51 S. E. 507; White v. Tifton (1907) 1 Ga. App. 569, 57 S. E. 1088; Kitchens v. State (1908) 4 Ga. App. 440, 61 S. E. 736.

Iowa.—State v. Westfall (1873) 37 Iowa, 575.

Kansas.—State v. Conkling (1894) 54 Kan. 108, 45 Am. St. Rep. 270, 37 Pac. 992.

Kentucky.—Eutsler v. Com. (1913) 154 Ky. 35, 156 S. W. 855.

Louisiana.—State ex rel. Lamarque v. Burthe (1887) 39 La. Ann. 328, 1 So. 652; State ex rel. Perilloux v. Wilder (1898) 50 La. Ann. 388, 23 So. 203.

Michigan.—People v. Leavitt (1879) 41 Mich. 470, 2 N. W. 812; Powell v. People (1881) 47 Mich. 108, 10 N. W. 129; Ishpeming v. Maroney (1882) 49 Mich. 226, 13 N. W. 527 (fine paid by third person).

Minnesota.—State v. People's Ice Co. (1914) 127 Minn. 252, 149 N. W. 286, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 618. See also State v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1914) 125 Minn. 332, 147 N. W. 109.

Nevada.—State v. Pray (1908) 80 Nev. 206, 94 Pac. 218.

Oklahoma.—See Sibenaler v. State (1915) 11 Okla. Crim. Rep. 504, 148 Pac. 678.

Oregon.—Washington v. Cleland (1907) 49 Or. 12, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 88 Pac. 305. Compare State v. Swikert (1913) 65 Or. 286, 132 Pac. 709.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Gipner (1888) 118 Pa. 379, 12 Atl. 306; Com. v. Yocum (1908) 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 237; Com. v. Konas (1914) 57 Pa. Super. Ct. 629; Com. v. Shofnoski (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 784; Com. v. Reeher (1906) 17 Pa. Dist. R. 18, 33 Pa. Co. Ct. 472; Com. v. Nickolson (1908) 35 Pa. Co. Ct. 556.

South Carolina.—Batesburg v. Mitchell (1900) 58 S. C. 564, 37 S. E. 36. See also Lexington v. Wise (1885) 24 S. C. 163.

Texas.—Payne v. State (1882) 12 Tex. App. 160.

Utah.—Madsen v. Kenner (1884) 4 Utah, 3, 4 Pac. 992.

Virginia.—See Com. v. Bass (1912) 113 Va. 760, 74 S. E. 397.

England.—Rex v. Justices of West Riding (1815) 3 Maule & S. 493, 105 Eng. Reprint, 695.

Canada.—Rex v. Neuberger (1902) 9 B. C. 272; Re Justices of York (1863) 13 U. C. C. P. 159; Rex v. Sing, 32 West. L. Rep. 649. See also Rex v. Tucker (1905) 10 Ont. L. Rep. 506, 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 583.

As to the effect of the payment of a fine on the right of the defendant to review by certiorari the proceedings against him, the court said, in People v. Leavitt (Mich.) supra: "Passing to the return made to the certiorari, which must be regarded as conclusive (People ex rel. Sims v. Fire Comrs. (1878) 73 N. Y. 437), we find that plaintiff, being charged with having disobeyed the ordinance, was convicted on his plea of not guilty, and simply fined $5, without costs, and that he immediately satisfied the judgment by paying the fine. He voluntarily submitted to the conviction, and discharged the entire penalty without the award of process. . . . Nothing remained in which the plaintiff could have legal interest, or anything which could be affected practically by any judgment on certiorari. An order of reversal would be a fruitless thing." See to the same effect, Powell v. People (1881) 47 Mich. 108, 10 N. W. 129.

In State v. Westfall (1873) 37 Iowa, 575, the court said: "If the judgment in this case had been one of imprisonment, and the defendants had served out the period of imprisonment, it seems clear that they could not afterward prosecute an appeal from the judgment, for the reason that they could derive no benefit from a reversal. By voluntarily paying a fine imposed upon them they stand in the same relation to the law as they would have done if they had served their period of imprisonment. All that can be said for them is that they have paid money in mistake of their legal rights. If the money need not have been paid, they have clearly made a mistake of law. If, upon this appeal, the judgment should be reversed, they could not recover it, and hence they could derive no benefit from the appeal. The judgment of the court upon appeal would determine a mere abstraction. Besides, it is inconsistent to yield a voluntary obedience to a judgment of a court, and afterwards appeal therefrom."

In Com. v. Konas (1914) 57 Pa. Super. Ct. 629, it was said: "When a defendant is convicted in a summary proceeding before a magistrate, of an offense of which the magistrate had jurisdiction, and is fined an amount within the limit authorized by the statute or ordinance creating the offense, and voluntarily pays the fine, that is an end of the case. Having voluntarily paid his fine, he has satisfied the law, and is no longer in a position to raise any question as to the validity of the payment. Com. v. Gipner (1888) 118 Pa. 379, 12 Atl. 306; Com. v. Yocum (1908) 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 237. When the fine has been thus voluntarily paid, any question as to the regularity of the proceedings becomes merely academic, and the state does not maintain her courts of record for the purpose of deciding questions of that character."

In State v. People's Ice Co. (1914) 127 Minn. 252, 149 N. W. 286, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 618, it appeared that the president of the defendant company requested a special term of court to withdraw a plea of not guilty and enter a plea of guilty. After the plea of guilty was entered, a fine was imposed and at once paid, and no further proceedings were taken until almost six months later, when an appeal was taken. The court held that the appeal should be dismissed, since the facts of the case clearly showed the payment of the fine to be voluntary.

An agreement that the amount of a fine should be held by the clerk of the court, pending the outcome of an appeal, has been held to be invalid, and not to alter the rule that the payment of the fine barred the defendant from prosecuting an appeal. State v. Pray (1908) 30 Nev. 206, 94 Pac. 218.

Payment not fully satisfying sentence.

Under the rule supported by the better reasoning, the payment of a fine does not bar a defendant's right to a review of his conviction unless the judgment of conviction is fully satisfied. Sibenaler v. State (1915) 11 Okla. Crim. Rep. 504, 148 Pac. 678; State v. Swikert (1913) 65 Or. 286, 132 Pac. 709.

In the case last cited it appeared that the defendant was sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary, a fine was imposed on him, and he was paroled from the sentence of imprisonment on condition that he pay the fine. It was held that the payment of the fine did not bar his right of appeal, the court saying: "The payment of the fine was payment under duress, equivalent to a payment under protest. It was made to avoid being sent to the penitentiary, and was a satisfaction of the judgment only pro tanto, which still stands against him as to the imprisonment; and he has a right to question the legality of the judgment, which was beyond the jurisdiction of the court to render." So, in Sibenaler v. State (1915) 11 Okla. Crim. Rep. 504, 148 Pac. 678, the court said, with respect to a similar state of facts: "While the state has not traversed the allegation that plaintiff in error has so far complied with the condition of his pardon, yet there may be a breach of the condition before the $500 has been fully paid. For this reason, the motion that the proceedings abate is overruled." The court held, however, that the defendant, by applying for a pardon, abandoned his appeal, which was then pending.

However, the payment of costs in a criminal case has been held to be a partial compliance with a judgment to pay a fine and costs and be confined in jail, and to deprive the defendant of the right to prosecute an appeal. State v. Massa (1913) 90 Kan. 129, 132 Pac. 1182.

In Eutsler v. Com. (1913) 154 Ky. 85, 156 S. W. 855, it appeared that the appellant was convicted under each of three indictments, and a judgment was entered under each, imposing both a fine and imprisonment. In holding that the payment of two of the fines and a part of the third barred him from prosecuting appeals from the judgments, the court said: "It is not claimed or pretended by appellant that the payment was made to prevent his property from being levied upon and sold in satisfaction of the judgments, or to prevent his confinement in jail under capiases, either in payment of the fines or to serve out the terms of imprisonment imposed as punishment by the judgments; for, pending the appeals, his property was protected from sale and his person from imprisonment by the supersedeas bonds he had executed. Aside from these considerations, appellant cannot, in the event of a reversal of the judgments appealed from, recover of the commonwealth what he has paid on the judgments; nor could he, in the event of reversals, do so, had they not been superseded. The state cannot be sued by one of its citizens without an enabling act from the legislature. So, it cannot be claimed that the appellant paid the judgments with the expectation that the money would be refunded if the judgments are reversed. By his payment to the clerk of the Harlan circuit court of the amount shown by his response to the motion to dismiss the appeals, appellant deprived himself of a hearing on his appeals, as he thereby entirely satisfied two of the judgments appealed from and left unpaid of the third judgment only $14, which reduced it to an amount of which this court has no jurisdiction. In other words, we cannot entertain the appeals, for two of the judgments have been satisfied and appellant's only liability on the third one is for an amount or fine less than $50; therefore, § 347, Criminal Code, deprives us of jurisdiction. The imprisonment imposed by the judgments does not give us jurisdiction, for in each case it is less than the thirty days required by the section of the Code, supra, to confer such jurisdiction."

Payment to avoid imprisonment or levy.

Though a judgment is in the alternative, imposing a fine, or, in the case of nonpayment, incarceration, it has been held that a payment of the fine is voluntary, and bars the right to a review of the conviction by an appellate court. White v. Tifton (1907) 1 Ga. App. 569, 57 S. E. 1038; State ex rel. Lamarque v. Burthe (1887) 39 La. Ann. 328, 1 So. 652; State v. Pray (1908) 30 Nev. 206, 94 Pac. 218; Washington v. Cleland (1907) 49 Or. 12, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 88 Pac. 305; Madsen v. Kenner (1884) 4 Utah, 3, 4 Pac. 992. Compare State v. Swikert (1913) 65 Or. 286, 132 Pac. 709, set out supra.

An order overruling a writ of certiorari has likewise been held to be proper where it appeared that the defendant paid a fine under an alternative sentence to pay the fine or work for thirty days on the streets or public works of the city. Brown v. Atlanta (1905) 123 Ga. 497, 51 S. E. 507. See to the same effect, Kitchens v. State (1908) 4 Ga. App. 440, 61 S. E. 736, wherein the right to a review by a writ of error was denied.

On the contrary, in Com. v. Barbono (1914) 56 Pa. Super. Ct. 637, a defendant who, after having been fined for the violation of a liquor regulation, was unlawfully sentenced to jail, was held not to be precluded by a payment of the fine from having his conviction reviewed by certiorari. The court said: "The Act of 1911 provides that the fine or penalty shall 'be recovered, as debts are by law recovered, in an action to be instituted in the name of the commonwealth.' It confers no express authority upon the justice to summarily sentence the defendant to imprisonment in jail, in default of payment, and, therefore, payment of the fine and costs, in order to obtain release from such imprisonment, cannot be regarded as a voluntary act which precludes him from having the lawfulness and regularity of his conviction reviewed by certiorari."

In State v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1914) 125 Minn. 332, 147 N. W. 109, it appeared that defendant paid his fine under protest, having been refused a stay of proceeding for the purpose of perfecting his appeal. The court said: "The trial court, after hearing the evidence, adjudged defendant guilty of the charge and imposed a fine of $15. Though the record is not quite clear, it is apparent that defendant requested a stay of proceedings to enable it to perfect an appeal. This the court declined to grant, holding that, under the statute creating that court, a stay of proceedings after conviction of a criminal charge is prohibited until the fine imposed has been paid. Defendant thereupon, and under protest, paid the fine, and thereafter perfected this appeal. We are all agreed that the learned court was in error in applying the provisions of the statute under which the court was organized, namely, § 5, chap. 48, p. 624, Sp. Laws 1887, for that statute, properly construed, applies only to prosecutions for municipal offenses, and not to violations of the state laws. But this is unimportant, since the majority hold that, by reason of the refusal of the court to grant the stay of proceedings, the payment was not voluntary within the rule holding that such a payment precludes the right of appeal from the judgment so paid."

In Rex v. Tucker (1905) 10 Ont. L. Rep. 506, 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 533, a judgment of a trial court directed that if a fine and costs imposed on the defendant were not paid forthwith, the same were to be collected by a levy on his goods and chattels. The defendant paid the fine and costs, and immediately thereafter gave notice that he would take an appeal. It was held that the payment was not voluntary, and did not preclude an appeal.

Payment under protest.

There is authority for the doctrine that though the defendant pays a fine under protest, he thereby waives his right to a review of the conviction. State v. Conkling (1894) 54 Kan. 108, 45 Am. St. Rep. 270, 37 Pac. 992; Com. v. Nickolson (1908) 35 Pa. Co. Ct. 556; Batesburg v. Mitchell (1900) 58 S. C. 564, 37 S. E. 36.

An appeal taken after the payment of a fine was dismissed in State v. Conkling (Kan.) supra, with the following explanation: "It appears that the sentence of the law has been executed, and nothing is left for further controversy. By his own act, Conkling has satisfied and discharged the judgment entered against him. His protest and attempt to reserve the right of appeal are unavailing. The statute does not provide for or contemplate an appeal from a discharged judgment. Neither payment nor protest was necessary to protect his rights. Under the statute, the judgment of conviction which was entered against him would have been stayed by the mere taking of an appeal, without any order of the court, or the giving of a bond. Gen. Stat. 1889, § 5349. The appeal will be dismissed."

But in a case wherein it appeared that the defendants had offered bonds to abide the determination of their case on appeal, and had paid their fine under protest, when the bonds had been refused on the ground that they had no right to appeal, it was held that the payment was involuntary, and that the appeal should be allowed. Lexington v. Wise (1885) 24 S. C. 163. See also State v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1914) 125 Minn. 332, 147 N. W. 109, set out supra.

Giving of security for fine.

The giving of a mortgage for the amount of a fine has been held not to be a payment of the fine which prevents the defendant from taking an appeal under the following statute: "No appeals shall be taken from the judgment of a justice's court after it has been paid or collected, nor after sixty days from the rendition of the judgment." Floyd v. State (1877) 32 Ark. 200; Schlieff v. State (1882) 38 Ark. 522; Hubbard v. State (1903) 71 Ark. 467, 75 S. W. 853.

Likewise it has been held that the giving of a note is not a payment of a fine which satisfies a judgment or bars the defendant from a right of appeal, and it is immaterial that the docket of the trial justice may state that the fine has been paid. Com. v. Bass (1912) 113 Va. 760, 74 S. E. 397. In that case it was held to be also immaterial that the costs were paid before the judgment was actually entered.

b. Minority view.

There is authority, however, to support the view that the payment of a fine does not impair the right of a defendant in a criminal action to have his conviction reviewed by an appellate court. Johnson v. State (1911) 172 Ala. 424, 55 So. 226, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 296; Com. v. Fleckner (1896) 167 Mass. 13, 44 N. E. 1053; Barthelemy v. People (1842) 2 Hill (N. Y.) 248; People v. Marks (1909) 64 Misc. 679, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1106.

In Johnson v. State (1911) 172 Ala. 424, 55 So. 226, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 296, the court said: "A defendant who has been convicted of a misdemeanor must, although he appeals, either give the bail prescribed by the statute or satisfy the judgment (if it can be satisfied), or be committed to jail. We find nothing in our statutes regulating appeals which might indicate that, where the punishment imposed is the payment of money, its payment by the defendant, before or pending appeal, is a waiver or relinquishment of that right. We are therefore free to adopt that rule which is most consonant with justice, and most in accord with the general principles of the law. . . . Nor do we conceive that the supposed inability of the defendant to recover, after reversal of the judgment, the sum paid by him for its satisfaction, as is predicted in some of the cases under criticism, is a matter of vital importance. Whether or not the defendant in this case might, by order of restitution, or by any other legal remedy, recover the money he has paid, is a question which is not before us, and which we need not now consider. The right to appeal and reverse an erroneous judgment in a criminal case cannot, we are satisfied, be grounded solely on that consideration, and we concur in the opinion of Cowen, J., in Barthelmy v. People (1842) 2 Hill (N. Y.) 255, where he says, in discussing this very question, in relation to a conviction for criminal libel: 'But the payment or satisfaction of an erroneous judgment against a party can never be allowed as a bar to a writ of error, even in a case where we must see that no restitution could follow the reversal as a legal consequence, and no costs be recovered. An erroneous judgment against him is an injury per se, from which the law will intend he is or will be damnified by its continuing against him unreversed. . . . A judgment on the merits is conclusive between the parties, and, if not by direct, it may be followed by remote, consequences actually injurious.' And this view has been quoted and approved by the supreme court of Illinois. Page v. People (1878) 99 Ill. 425. The motion to dismiss the appeal must, therefore, be overruled."

Justice Holmes, in delivering the opinion of the court in Com. v. Fleckner (1896) 167 Mass. 13, 44 N. E. 1053, said: "We should be slow to suppose that the legislature meant to take away the right to undo the disgrace and legal discredit of a conviction, . . . merely because a wrongly convicted person has paid his fine or served his term."

In People v. Marks (1909) 64 Misc. 679, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1106, it was said: "But it is contended by the learned counsel for the people that 'payment of the fine concluded the action, and this appeal is purely academic.' If there is any force in this contention, the point should have been raised by counsel on the motion for allowance of appeal. Mr. Justice Rosalsky allowed the appeal, and I am of the opinion that his action renders it necessary for me to consider this case on its merits. But I do not agree with the learned counsel that the question is purely academic. I am of opinion that if the defendant had been unjustly compelled to pay a fine, his money should be returned to him. Of far more importance, however, is the defendant's right to be relieved of the odium and disgrace of a conviction."

In Ohio it has been held that the payment of a fine to avoid imprisonment is made under such duress as to leave unimpaired the defendant's right of appeal. Hogue v. State (1902) 23 Ohio C. C. 567; Oberer v. State (1904) 28 Ohio C. C. 620.

And a payment of a fine by the defendant to prevent the foreclosure of a mortgage given by him as security has been held to be an involuntary payment, entitling him to prosecute an appeal. Johnson v. State (1890) 2 Ohio C. D. 687, 4 Ohio C. C. 524.

II. Serving sentence.

The two decisions which have passed on the effect of the serving of the full term of a sentence of imprisonment on the right of the defendant to a review of his conviction have reached opposite conclusions.

In Roby v. State (1897) 96 Wis. 667, 71 N. W. 1046, the court said: "It appears by the record that the plaintiff in error was sentenced to one year's imprisonment in May, 1896, and consequently that his term must now have expired. This fact, however, makes no difference with the disposition of the case. A person convicted of crime may prosecute his writ of error while serving his sentence, and the fact that he may serve out his entire sentence before the decision of his case does not affect his right to a reversal of the judgment if it be erroneous. The mere payment of a judgment in a civil cause does not operate to bar or waive the right to appeal therefrom (Sloane v. Anderson (1882) 57 Wis. 123, 13 N. W. 684, 15 N. W. 21), and for stronger reasons the compulsory working out of a judgment in a criminal case does not debar a man from obtaining a reversal of an erroneous conviction, and thus removing the stigma which wrongly rests on his name and reputation." There is a dictum to the same effect in Com. v. Fleckner (1896) 167 Mass. 13, 44 N. E. 1053. See supra, I. b.

On the other hand, in Tropp v. State (1920) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 186 Pac. 737, it was held that the defendants, after serving the full term of their sentences in jail, were not entitled to prosecute a joint appeal from their conviction, since any legal question involved in the appeal was moot. A dictum to the same effect in State v. Westfall (1873) 37 Iowa, 575, is set out supra, I. a.

III. Discharge on habeas corpus.

In the reported case (STATE v. COHEN, ante, 864) it is held that one who has served a part of a sentence of imprisonment, and has been discharged on a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that the remainder of the sentence was illegal, cannot thereafter prosecute an appeal from his conviction, though the appeal was perfected and pending before he was released. The court states that the defendant's opportunity for vindication was lost by his failure to avail himself of the procedure providing for staying execution of judgment pending an appeal. A search has failed to disclose any other case on this point. W. S. R.

MRS. W. B. HIPPIE

v.

E. I. DUPONT DE NEMOURS & COMPANY et al., Appts.

North Carolina Supreme Court — September 14, 1921.

(— N. C. —, 108 S. E. 318.)

Husband and wife — wife's action for injury to husband.

1. A wife whose husband is mutilated by the negligence of another may recover from such other damages for injuries personal to herself from the accident, for which the husband could not have recovered, such as shock suffered by her when seeing his mutilated condition, and loss of consortium and support.

[See note on this question beginning on page 882.]

Pleading — demurrer — effect.

2. A demurrer admits all facts sufficiently pleaded.

[See 21 R. C. L. 506.]

Judgment — against husband — estoppel against wife.

3. A woman is not estopped to maintain an action against one negligently injuring her husband for the loss thereby caused to her, by a judgment against the husband in his action to recover damages for the injury.

[See 15 R. C. L. 1022.]

Action — by one spouse for torts to other.

4. Neither husband nor wife can recover damages for torts inflicted by third persons upon the other.

[See 13 R. C. L. 1432, 1443; see note in 5 A.L.R. 1050.]

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Mecklenburg County (Harding, J.) overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff's husband, alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Clark, Ch. J.:

The plaintiff, who is the wife of W. B. Hipp, brings this action, alleging that her husband, while working as an employee of the defendant company in Hopewell, Virginia, was "seriously, painfully, and permanently injured as a proximate result of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants," setting out the manner in which he was injured and the extent of such injuries and the expense, and that, under the law of Virginia, which is set out, the plaintiff was entitled, as a married woman, to sue and be sued as if she were unmarried, and to own and control her property as fully as if she had remained single, and that neither she nor her husband have received anything whatever from the defendants in the way of damages for the serious injuries inflicted on him; and that her husband brought action in Virginia, but, notwithstanding three separate jury verdicts afforded him, the court of appeals of that state rendered judgment against him upon demurrer to the evidence; that the plaintiff is entitled, notwithstanding, to recover in this jurisdiction, she having obtained service upon the defendants, for the personal injuries inflicted on her by the injury to her husband. The defendants demur upon the ground that it appears upon the face of the complaint that judgment has been rendered in Virginia, that her husband was not entitled to recover, and that it appears inferentially, therefore, that under the law of the state of Virginia she has no action for the loss of her husband's company, for damages to her consequent upon injury sustained by him, caused by the negligence of a third person, where the husband's right of action, if any, is barred. The judge overruled the demurrer, and the defendants appealed.

Messrs. W. S. Beam, V. S. Thomas, C. A. Cochran, and Clarkson, Taliaferro, & Clarkson, for appellants:

The complaint does not state a cause of action founded on any common-law right or any statutory right.

13 R. C. L. 1443; Emerson v. Taylor, 133 Md. 192, 5 A.L.R. 1045, 104 Atl. 538; Brown v. Kistleman, 177 Ind. 692, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, 98 N. E. 631; Smith v. Nicholas Bldg. Co. 93 Ohio St. 101, L.R.A.1916E, 700, 112 N. E. 204, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 206; Kosciolek v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. 81 Or. 517, 160 Pac. 132; Goldman v. Cohen, 30 Misc. 336, 63 N. Y. Supp. 459; Feneff v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 203 Mass. 278, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1024, 133 Am. St. Rep. 291, 89 N. E. 436; Nieberg v. Cohen, 88 Vt. 281, L.R.A. 1915C, 483, 92 Atl. 214, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 476; Patelski v. Snyder, 179 Ill. App. 24.

More than one person cannot have right of action for recovery of the same expenditures, loss of earnings, etc.

21 Cyc. 1530; Goldman v. Cohen, 30 Misc. 336, 63 N. Y. Supp. 459; Brown v. Kistleman, 177 Ind. 692, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, 98 N. E. 631; Bernhardt v. Perry, 276 Mo. 612, 13 A.L.R. 1320, 208 S. W. 462.

No right of action for consequential damages exists where there is no right of recovery for primary damages, or where compensation has been made to a person injured.

Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; Feneff v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 203 Mass. 278, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1024, 133 Am. St. Rep. 291, 89 N. E. 436; Kosciolek v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. 81 Or. 517, 160 Pac. 132; Gambino v. Manufacturers Coal & Coke Co. 175 Mo. App. 653, 158 S. W. 77; Stout v. Kansas City Terminal R. Co. 172 Mo. App. 113, 157 S. W. 1019.

A right of action arising out of intentional interference with marital relations is fundamentally different from a right of action growing out of indirect damages sustained through negligent injury to other.

Clark v. Hill, 69 Mo. App. 541; Gambino v. Manufacturers Coal &

Coke Co. 175 Mo. App. 653, 158 S. W. 77; Gearing v. Berkson, 223 Mass. 257, L.R.A.1916D, 1006, 111 N. E. 785; Brown v. Kistleman, 177 Ind. 692, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 286, 98 N. E. 631; Bernhardt v. Perry, 276 Mo. 612, 13 A.L.R. 1320, 208 S. W. 462; Smith v. Nicholas Bldg. Co. 93 Ohio St. 101, L.R.A.1916E, 700, 112 N. E. 204, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 206; Emerson v. Taylor, 133 Md. 192, 5 A.L.R. 1045, 104 Atl. 588.

The complaint discloses no duty on the part of defendant toward plaintiff for the breach of which a cause of action exists.

1 Sedgwick, Damages, 219; Welch v. Morrison, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 852.

There is no cause of action for mental suffering on account of another's mental or physical suffering.

Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Overton, 101 Tex. 583, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 500, 110 S. W. 736; Dayvis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 79, 51 S. E. 898; Reaves v. Anniston Knitting Mills, 154 Ala. 565, 45 So. 702; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Martini, 2 Ala. App. 652, 56 So. 830; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Robinett, 151 Ky. 778, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433, 152 S. W. 976; Sanderson v. Northern P. R. Co. 88 Minn. 162, 60 L.R.A. 403, 97 Am. St. Rep. 509, 92 N. W. 542; Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale, 143 Ala. 550, 39 So. 335, 5 Ann. Cas. 578; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 1 L.R.A. 728, 10 Am. St. Rep. 772, 9 S. W. 598; Connelly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Va. 51, 56 L.R.A. 663, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 40 S. E. 618.

Messrs. John M. Robinson and Hamilton C. Jones, for appellee:

Plaintiff's action can be maintained, inasmuch as, under identically the same circumstances, the husband would have a right of action.

Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; Bailey v. Long, 172 N. C. 661, L.R.A.1917B, 708, 90 S. E. 809, 14 N. C. C. A. 49; 13 R. C. L. §§ 461, 462; 21 Cyc. 1527; Holleman v. Harward, 119 N. C. 150, 34 L.R.A. 803, 56 Am. St. Rep. 672, 25 S. E. 972; Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 85 Ohio St. 327, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 360, 98 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 983; 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 477; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun. 40; Bernhardt v. Perry, 276 Mo. 612, 13 A.L.R. 1320, 208 S. W. 468; Crowell v. Crowell, 180 N. C. 524, 105 S. E. 206; Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 26 Ann. Cas. 990, note.

Plaintiff may recover damages for shock and fright suffered by her when seeing her husband brought home to her a crippled and mangled invalid.

Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; Spearman v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The demurrer admits all facts sufficiently pleaded, and therefore we must take it that the plaintiff's husband was "seriously, painfully, and permanently injured as the proximate result of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants," and that by reason thereof the plaintiff has suffered shock, which has impaired her nervous system, impaired and permanently injured and weakened her physical and mental condition, and that she has suffered greatly from loss of sleep, worry, and anxiety on account of the condition of her husband, in watching over and caring for him, causing her to devote her entire time to nursing and caring for him, while at the same time the burden of maintaining the family fell upon her, entailing heavy cost and expense, and that she has been forced to pay out large sums of money to hospitals, doctors, nurses, and medical expenses, and that by reason of said injuries she has been deprived of the support and maintenance which her husband would have given her, and has suffered mental anguish by being forced to witness the suffering endured by her husband, whereby her own nerves and health have been seriously and permanently shocked, weakened, and impaired; and that by reason of the physical and mental condition of her husband she still continues to suffer in mind and body, and has been denied the care, protection, consideration, companionship, aid, and society of her said husband, and the pleasure and assistance of her husband in escorting her to visit friends and relatives, and has been required to remain at home for long periods of time, denying herself to friends and relatives, and, besides, has had entailed upon her the fatigue of nursing and caring for him, and incurred expenses, and has paid large sums on that account. These matters are set out more at length in the complaint, but this is a summary of the grounds of her action—all of which allegations of facts are admitted as pleaded by the demurrer. The demurrer in effect presents two questions of law upon these facts:

(1) The first is that the judgment against her husband in Virginia (E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Co. v. Hipp, 123 Va. 49, 96 S. E. 280) bars any right of action which she might have for damages for grief, mental anguish, labor, and expense devolving upon her by the disability of her husband and the loss and comfort of his society.

(2) The second is that, upon the facts admitted, the wife is not entitled to maintain this action.

As to the first ground of demurrer, if the wife has a cause of action we do not think the demurrer can be sustained. She was not a party to the action brought by her husband, and she is not estopped by the Judgment—against husband

—estoppel
against wife.

judgment as to any relief she might be entitled to. It may be that upon the trial of this action an entirely different state of facts as to the manner in which the husband was injured might be developed, either by additional evidence or by the estimate placed upon the evidence by the jury. She was neither a party nor a privy to that action.

In Laskowskj v. People's Ice Co. 203 Mich. 186, 2 A.L.R. 586, 168 N. W. 940, it was held that "a judgment in favor of a woman in an action to recover damages for injuries to her person is not conclusive upon the question of defendant's negligence, and absence of her contributory negligence, in an action by her husband for the damages resulting to him from such injuries."

Of course, the reverse must be true, since, as held in that case, under the Married Woman's Act, he was not a necessary or proper party to the action by his wife to recover damages for injuries to her person, and was not, in fact, a party. See notes to that case (2 A.L.R. 592) citing many cases that neither the judgment in such cases nor a settlement by compromise on the part of the wife would affect the husband's right to recover for the damages sustained by him, quoting, among others, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kinman, 182 Ky. 597, 206 S. W. 880.

But the second ground of demurrer presents an entirely different question. At common law the husband could maintain an action for the injuries sustained by his wife for the same reason that he could maintain an action for injuries to his horse, his slave, or any other property; that is to say, by reason of the fact that the wife was his chattel. This was usually presented in the euphemism that "by reason of the unity of marriage" such actions could be maintained by the husband. But singularly enough this was not correlative, and the wife could not maintain an action for injuries sustained by her husband. The reason is thus frankly stated by Blackstone: "We may observe that in these relative injuries notice is only taken of the wrong done to the superior of the parties [husband] related by the breach and dissolution of either the relation itself, or, at least, the advantages accruing therefrom; while the loss of the inferior [the wife] by such injuries is totally unregarded. One reason for which may be this: That the inferior hath no kind of property in the company, care, or assistance of the superior as the superior is held to have in those of the inferior, and therefore the inferior can suffer no loss or injury." 3 Bl. Com. 143.

By the married women's provision in the Constitution of 1868, art. 10, § 6, this conception of ownership by the husband, whereby upon marriage all the personal property of the wife became the property of the husband, and he became the owner of her realty during his lifetime, was abolished. The courts in this state continued for a long while, notwithstanding, to hold that the husband could recover his wife's earnings and the damages for injuries done her; but by Acts 1913, chap. 13, now Consol. Stat. § 2513, it was provided that her earnings and damages for torts inflicted upon her were her sole and separate property, for which she could sue alone.

It follows, therefore, that the husband cannot sue to recover his wife's earnings, or damages for torts committed on her, and there is no reason why she can sue for torts or injuries inflicted on her husband. The law has never authorized the wife to maintain such action for torts sustained by the husband. We agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiff that, if the husband could maintain an action to recover damages for torts on the wife, she should be able to maintain an action on account of torts sustained by the husband. Such right of action, if it existed in favor of the husband, should exist in favor of the wife. It should be in favor of both or neither, but, in view of the Constitution of 1868 and our statute on the subject, we think that such action cannot be maintained by either on account of the injury to the other.

Action—by one spouse for torts to other.

So far as injuries to the husband are concerned and the damages he has sustained, whether the plaintiff recovers or fails to do so, the verdict and judgment are conclusive. The wife certainly cannot recover a second time for the injuries of the husband, who alone can sue for them (or, in case of wrongful death, his personal representative); but the action of the wife is not for the injuries to the husband, though formerly the husband was allowed to recover damages for the injuries sustained by the wife because they were his property. Price v. Charlotte Electric R. Co. 160 N. C. 450, 76 S. E. 502. That is now swept away.

The cause of action for the wife in this case is not for the injuries to the husband, but for the injuries to herself, which are thus summed up in the brief for the plaintiff in this action: (1) Expenses paid by her, made necessary by her husband's injuries. (2) Services performed in nursing and caring for him. (3) Loss of support and maintenance. (4) Loss of consortium. (5) Mental anguish.

Though the husband can no longer recover for the damages which his wife has sustained as property belonging to himself, he may still recover for the damages sustained by him by reason thereof, which have been held to include expenses incurred, deprivation of society, and loss of aid and comfort.

In Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 405, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 781, the plaintiff's wife received a serious injury by reason of the defendant's negligence. The court said: "It is contended that the husband has sustained no injury, and as to him the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed. It seems to be well settled that where the injury to the wife is such that the husband receives a separate loss or damage, as where he is put to expense, or is deprived of the society or the services of his wife, he is entitled to recover therefor, and he may sue in his own name."

In Bailey v. Long, 172 N. C. 661, L.R.A.1917B, 708, 90 S. E. 809, 14 N. C. C. A. 49, decided since chapter 13, Laws 1913, the plaintiff had taken his wife to the defendant's hospital. By reason of the defective condition and construction of said hospital, his wife contracted pneumonia and died. The plaintiff brought the action for damages suffered by him. Mr. Justice Brown, for a unanimous court, held that the plaintiff could recover for expenses which accrued to him for nursing and otherwise, and said: "In addition, we think plaintiff can recover damages for the mental suffering and injury to his feelings in witnessing the agony and suffering of his said wife while lingering with such cold and pneumonia, and in the act and article of death resulting therefrom."

We do not think that the husband could now recover compensatory damages for her physical and mental anguish, or for the value of her services, which are matters purely personal to her, and for which she alone could recover, though formerly these were the basis for an action by the husband. As he can no longer sue for her earnings, of course he is not entitled to recover the value of her services. But the great weight of authority sustains the proposition that, under the modern statutes enlarging the rights of married women, the husband is not deprived of his right to recover the damages which he himself sustains, and which are the direct consequences of the injury to the wife. He cannot sue for the injuries she sustained, but for those which accrued to himself as the direct and not the remote consequences of such wrongful act of the defendant. 13 R. C. L. § 642; 21 Cyc. 1527.

In Holleman v. Harward, 119 N. C. 150, 34 L.R.A. 803, 56 Am. St. Rep. 672, 25 S. E. 972, where the defendant had sold the plaintiff's wife laudanum or similar drugs despite the plaintiff's protests, the court held that the husband could recover for loss of companionship and loss of services resulting therefrom. While the statute now does not permit the husband to recover for loss of services, which must be recovered solely by the wife, the loss of the companionship of his wife is a loss purely personal to him, and the direct consequence of the wrong of the defendant. For this the wife could not recover, and, being the direct and not remote consequence of the wrongful act, the husband is entitled to his action.

In Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 85 Ohio St. 327, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 360, 98 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 983,

where the defendant had sold drugs to the husband over the wife's protests, it was held, in exact analogy to the above case from this court, that she could recover for the damages thus resulting to her. The court said: "A statutory right cannot change except by action of the lawmaking power of a state. But it is the boast of the common law that 'its flexibility permits its ready adaptability to the changing nature of human affairs.' So that, whenever, either by the growth or development of society, or by the statutory change of the legal status of any individual, he is brought within the principles of the common law, then it will afford to him the same relief that it has theretofore afforded to others coming within the reason of its rules. If the wrongs of the wife are the same in principle as the wrongs of the husband, there is now no reason why the common law should withhold from her the remedies it affords to the husband."

The court in that case aptly cited from Cooley on Torts, 3d ed. 477: "Upon principle, this right in the wife is equally valuable to her as property, as is that of the husband to him. Her right being the same as his in kind, degree, and value, there would seem to be no valid reason why the law should deny to her the redress which it affords to him. . . . The gist of the action is the loss of consortium, which includes the husband's society, affection, and aid."

And also uses this language: "There can be no reasonable contention but that the wife suffers the same injury from the loss of consortium as the husband suffers from that cause. His right is not greater than hers. Each is entitled to the society and affection of the other. The rights of both spring from the marriage contract, and in the very nature of things must be mutual, and, while this was always true of the marriage relation, yet there was a time in the history of our jurisprudence when the legal status of the wife was such that she could not, at common law, maintain an action of this character. Now her legal status is the same as that of her husband. She has the same right to the control of her separate property, the same right to sue in her own name, and, in a word, is in the full enjoyment of every right that her husband enjoys, so that she comes clearly within the principles of the common law that allow a right of action by the husband for damages for the loss of the consortium of his wife. Either we must hold that the common law is fixed, unchangeable, and immutable, that it possesses no such flexibility as will permit its ready adaptability to changing conditions of human affairs, or that, when every reason and every theory for denying the wife the same rights as the husband have entirely disappeared from our jurisprudence, she is now equally entitled with her husband to every remedy that the common law affords; and we have no hesitation in adopting the latter view."

To the same purport is Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun, 40. The plaintiff's counsel adds: "Why should the husband be allowed a recovery in cases of this character, and the wife, who suffers in the identical same way, be denied a recovery? They stand before the same altar; they enter into the same contract."

Necessarily their rights are the same at the bar of justice.

In Bernhardt v. Perry, 276 Mo. 612, 208 S. W. 462, in discussing this identical question, it was said by the able Chief Justice Bond of that court, as follows, in speaking of the rights of the wife: "She could have had no recovery when she occupied the status of a married woman at common law; for then her legal existence was merged in that of her husband. But under the Married Woman's Acts in this state, beginning in 1875 and culminating in 1889, with slight amendments thereafter, a wife is to all intents and purposes a legal entity distinct from her husband and capable of contracting and being contracted with, and suing and being sued, as fully as if she were an unmarried woman and sui juris. While the principles of the common law, previous to her statutory emancipation, debarred the wife from any legal redress in cases like the present, they nevertheless recognized fully the injury to her personal rights caused by the acts set forth in the petition, and they affirmed such rights to be the same as those which the husband would have been deprived of had the injury in question been inflicted upon the wife (Flantermeyer v. Cooper, 85 Ohio St. 327, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 360, 98 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 983; Holleman v. Harward, 119 N. C. 150, 34 L.R.A. 803, 56 Am. St. Rep. 672, 25 S. E. 972; 13 R. C. L. ¶ 509, p. 1460); and, though sanctioning a full right to recover in such cases on the part of the husband, they denied it to the wife, although an equal sufferer, because feudalism had decreed that she was a legal nonentity and incapable of maintaining any action for the violation of her rights as a wife, caused by wrongful injuries inflicted upon her husband."

Further he says: "The injury suffered by a husband from the loss of the consortium of his wife is no more direct and immediate than that sustained by her from the loss of his society, aid, and affection. Hence, there is no logical basis for the reason, upon which some of the adverse rulings are based, that in such cases the injury sustained by the wife is not directly and proximately caused by the wrongful act preventing her husband from giving her the means of a livelihood—which it is his duty to provide—and from performing his conjugal duties."

And again: "The reasons given in the decisions against the right of a wife to recover from the material injury inflicted on her by a negligent act destroying the power of her husband to labor for her support, and thereby imposing on her the task of supporting him, and which renders him unable to perform the duties of a consort, are utterly inadequate to support the conclusions reached. It will be noted in all of these cases that they are rested upon the lack of suable capacity of the wife, or upon the rules of the common law disabling her, as against her husband, to acquire title to the money awarded as damages for wrongful injury to him, wherefore the hobgoblin of a foolish consistency impelled the common law to adjudge she could not recover for an injury to her personal rights, so caused, since the instant a recovery was had it would belong to the husband. Neither of these reasons can exist under the specific provisions of the law governing married women; for, as has been shown, the wife may now sue as a feme sole, and the awards for any violation of her personal rights belong to her and not to her husband."

It is true that these citations from the distinguished chief justice are in a dissenting opinion (in which Judge Williams concurred), but the decisions in other courts than ours are not authority, and are entitled only to the persuasive weight given them on account of the force and correctness of the reasoning therein, and therefore, if there is correct and forceful reason in a dissenting opinion from another state, it should command exactly the same consideration as if it were made in the majority opinion.

One of the chief grounds for the plaintiff's recovery is the loss of consortium, which was formerly pleaded by the phrase, "per quod consortium amisit." This formerly lay only in behalf of the husband, but now the term has been extended to give the wife, and with more reason, the same ground of action. The present state of the law is thus fully stated under the heading of "Consortium;" 12 C. J. 532, with full citations in the notes. "In its original application the term was used to designate a right which the law recognized in a husband, growing out of the marital union, to have performance by the wife of all those duties and obligations in respect to him which she took upon herself when she entered into it; the right to the conjugal fellowship of the wife, to her company, co-operation, and aid in every conjugal relation; fellowship and assistance of the wife; comfort in her society in that respect in which a husband's right is peculiar and exclusive; conjugal society, affection, and assistance of the wife. The term, however, has developed to include the right of the wife to the society and comfort of the husband, and is now used interchangeably to denote the affection, aid, assistance, companionship, and society of either spouse; and, as thus employed, the term has been defined as those duties and obligations which by marriage both husband and wife take upon themselves toward each other in sickness and health; conjugal affection; conjugal fellowship; conjugal society and assistance; the conjugal society arising by virtue of the marriage contract; the consort's affection, society, or aid; the person's affection, society, or aid; the person, affection, assistance, and aid of the spouse. Loss of services as well as society and affection is included in the legal meaning of the loss of consortium."

There are decisions from other courts denying relief to the wife in cases of this character. Such decisions are necessarily dependent upon two factors: (1) The legislation in reference to the rights of married women in the particular jurisdiction; (2) the attitude of the court in giving either a liberal or restricted construction to new legislation of the nature of that in this state. As was well said by Chief Justice Bond in the above case: "So prone are the courts to cling to consuetudinary law, even after the reason for the custom has ceased or become a mere memory, that it has required hundreds of years to obtain the meed of justice for married women."

The reasons formerly advanced for a denial to the wife of a recovery for damages sustained by her as a direct result of the injury to him; and which are over and above and distinct from the damages which could be recovered by the husband in an action by himself, were three-fold: (1) The merger of her identity into that of her husband; (2) her incapacity to sue; (3) the right of her husband to recover full damages for his diminished earning capacity, with no corresponding right possessed by her.

Neither of the first two grounds is now valid in this state. It is urged, however, that the plaintiff, after he had obtained a recovery, is presumed to have obtained full pecuniary compensation for all the injuries sustained by him, and of course, if he failed to recover, no action can be maintained by the wife. This proposition is correct if the action of the wife is for the damages for which the husband could maintain an action, but the facts as admitted by this demurrer are that he was injured by the negligence of the defendants, and that the wife sustained damages, which, though flowing from the injuries to her husband, are purely injuries to herself, and for which the husband could not have maintained an action. She is, therefore, not barred by the judgment, favorable or unfavorable, in the action brought by her husband. A judgment in an action is not effective as a bar or estoppel in any other action, unless between the same parties and for the same cause of action. The present action is not between the same parties, or for the same cause of action, as in the litigation between the husband and the defendants.

It has always been held that the husband's action for damages sustained by him on account of injuries to her is not barred by judgment in favor of the same defendant in an action brought by the wife. See cases cited in the note to 2 A.L.R. 592. Of course, the reverse of the proposition is true. 13 R. C. L. § 461.

As already stated, the rights which the wife is asserting in this action are entirely separate and distinct from the grounds of recovery asserted by the husband in his action. In ¶ 12 of the complaint is the following allegation, which is admitted by the demurrer to be true: "That, by reason of the sudden and fearful injury of her husband as above stated, and by reason of being forced to look upon him in his horribly mutilated condition, she was shocked and frightened to such an extent that her entire nervous system was impaired and undermined, and left permanently injured and weakened, and her physical and mental condition was permanently injured and impaired."

In Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778, the court said: "We think the general principles of the law of torts support a right of action for physical injuries resulting from negligence, whether wilful or otherwise, none the less strongly because the physical injury consists of a wrecked nervous system instead of lacerated limbs."

This was cited and approved (Walker, J.) in May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 157 N. C. 422, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, 72 S. E. 1059.

While the wife cannot recover for any damages for which the husband might have recovered (or his personal representative in the case of a wrongful death), we think that she could recover for those injuries which were sustained by her, and, being personal to her, for which the husband could not have recovered in his action. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 861, which is cited in May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 157 N. C. 423, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, 72 S. E. 1059.

Husband and wife—wife's action for injury to husband.

We will not go more fully into the elements of damages which can be considered by the jury when the action goes back for a new trial.

It is objected by the defendant in this case that, if such action can be maintained by the wife, it can be sustained on the part of the children or other dependent relatives. That plea has never been found good when the action has been brought by the husband, and of course it cannot avail when the action is by the wife upon the same state of facts. The wife's cause of action arises from the nature of the relationship created by the contract of marriage as now recognized by our Constitution, and the laws replacing the former status, under which, by the common law, the husband was the sole personage. Such plea has not been held valid in an action for criminal conversation or for alienation of affections, or in any other case in which an action by either husband or wife has been brought for injury to the plaintiff (whether husband or wife), which were personal to the plaintiff therein, and for which the other party could not maintain an action. It does not depend upon the fiction of loss of services of the other party to the marriage, but is based upon the ground that the party bringing the action (whether husband or wife) has been directly injured by the wrongful conduct of the defendant.

It is sufficient to say that the plaintiff has a cause of action for those injuries which were sustained by her, and which are personal to herself, and the direct and not the remote consequences of the negligence of the defendants, which is admitted by the demurrer in this case; and the judgment overruling the demurrer must, therefore, be affirmed.

Stacy, J., concurs in result only.

Allen, J., concurs in result.

ANNOTATION.

Wife's right of action for loss of consortium.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note in 5 A.L.R. 1049; and see Bernhardt v. Perry, a later case on the subject reported in 13 A.L.R., at page 1320, referred to in the note in 5 A.L.R.

Since the date of these notes the question has been passed upon in but one case other than the reported case (HIPP v. E. I. DUPONT DE NEMOURS & Co. ante, 873). In Tobiassen v. Polley (1921) — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 153, the court adopted the rule, which is sustained by the majority of courts, as shown in the earlier note, that the wife cannot recover for loss of consortium due to negligent injury of the husband. According to this court, "the weight of authority to be gleaned from the reported cases in our sister states is that a wife cannot maintain an action in her own name for the loss of her husband's services, including the right of consortium, resulting from personal injury to him caused by the negligence of a stranger, and not the result of a malicious interference with the society, companionship, and right of consortium of her husband." Compare with the reported case. W. A. E.

GEORGE C. GRIFFITH, Appt.,

v.

JOHN T. HICKS.

Arkansas Supreme Court — October 17, 1921.

(— Ark. —, 233 S. W. 1086.)

Account stated — what is.

1. Where parties have had mutual dealings, and one renders to the other a statement purporting to set forth all the items of indebtedness on the one side and credit on the other, and the account so rendered is not objected to within a reasonable time, it becomes an account stated, and cannot afterwards be impeached, except for fraud or mistake.

[See note on this question beginning on page 887.]

Conflict of laws — account stated — what law governs.

2. Whether or not an account rendered by mail becomes an account stated is governed by the laws of the state where it is mailed and received.

— explanation of retention of account.

3. The retention of an account rendered, apparently beyond the reasonable time which will make it an account stated, is open to explanation.

[See 1 R. C. L. 214.]

— form of objection.

4. The objection to an account rendered which will prevent its becoming an account stated must be something more than a mental operation on the part of the person receiving the account.

— objections to supposed agent of one rendering account.

5. One receiving an account rendered cannot avoid its becoming an account stated by making objections to one whom he mistakenly believes to be the agent of the one rendering the account, without taking steps to ascertain the extent of the authority of the supposed agent within a reasonable time.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for White County (Jackson, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action upon an account stated. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. John E. Miller and C. E. Yingling, for appellant:

There is nothing mysterious or mythical about an account stated, and it is not of itself conclusive, but is open to rebuttal by competent testimony.

2 Jones, Ev. § 287.

A jury might have found under proper instructions that, on account of the action of the defendant, he had impliedly consented that the account was correct, but this is a question that the jury should have passed upon.

1 R. C. L. p. 211, § 9.

The retention of an account for an unreasonable length of time only has the effect of shifting the burden of proof.

1 R. C. L. p. 214, § 12.

The weight to be given to an account which has been retained for a length of time without objection is for the consideration of the jury, under all the circumstances of the case.

1 R. C. L. p. 215, § 13; Hollenbeck v. Ristine, 105 Iowa, 488, 67 Am. St. Rep. 306, 75 N. W. 355; White v. Hampton, 10 Iowa, 238; Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Choctaw Mercantile Co. 80 Ark. 438, 97 S. W. 284; Lane & B. Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 97 S. W. 441; May & E. Co. v. Farmers Union Mercantile Co. 120 Ark. 316, 179 S. W. 490.

The law raises a strong presumption against the validity of plaintiff's claim.

Beneke v. Beneke, 119 Minn. 441, 138 N. W. 689, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 381.

Mr. J. N. Rachels, for appellee:

An itemized account, rendered by one and assented to by the other of the parties thereto, becomes an account stated, and is a new cause of action.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541, 1 S. W. 704; Barr v. Lake, 147 Mo. App. 252, 126 S. W. 757; Cape Girardeau & S. L. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 58 Mo. 83; Koegel v. Givens, 79 Mo. 77; Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 65 C. C. A. 508, 131 Fed. 688; Mine & S. Supply Co. v. Park & L. Co. 47 C. C. A. 34, 107 Fed. 881; Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 47 C. C. A. 637, 108 Fed. 726; Yount v. Spain, — Mo. App. —, 180 S. W. 19; Harris v. Janisch, — Mo. App. —, 226 S. W. 610.

Assent may be given either expressly (verbally or in writing) or impliedly (by compliance or silent acquiescence).

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541, 1 S. W. 704; Powell v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 661; Alexander v. Scott, 150 Mo. App. 213, 129 S. W. 994; Adam Roth Grocery Co. v. Hotel Monticello Co. 183 Mo. App.

429, 166 S. W. 1126; Niehaus v. Gillanders, — Mo. App. —, 184 S. W. 951; Locke v. Woodman, — Mo. App. —, 216 S. W. 1009; Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 65 C. C. A. 508, 131 Fed. 688; Mine & S. Supply Co. v. Parke & L. Co. 47 C. C. A. 34, 107 Fed. 881; Cooper v. Coates, 21 Wall. 105, 22 L. ed. 481; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 27 L. ed. 319; Crawford v. Hutchinson, 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84; Bloss v. Aurora Mill. Co. 207 Mo. App. 402, 229 S. W. 833; Memphis, D. & G. R. Co. v. Atlas Powder Co. 123 Ark. 620, 185 S. W. 786; Wood v. Green, 131 Tenn. 583, 175 S. W. 1140.

When an account rendered has been assented to, the question of liability is one of law for the court, not one of fact for the jury.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541, 1 S. W. 704; Lane & B. Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 97 S. W. 441; Schwanner v. Winn Boiler Compound Co. 19 Mo. App. 534; Powell v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 661; Koegel v. Givens, 79 Mo. 77; Adam Roth Grocery Co. v. Hotel Monticello Co. 183 Mo. App. 429, 166 S. W. 1126; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 27 L. ed. 319; Crawford v. Hutchinson, 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84.

Whether an account rendered and not objected to within a reasonable time, and not assailed for fraud or mistake, has become an account stated, is a question of law, not one of fact.

Lane & B. Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 97 S. W. 441; Powell v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 661; Koegel v. Givens, 79 Mo. 77; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 27 L. ed. 319; Crawford v. Hutchinson, 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84.

An account stated is final and unimpeachable, except for fraud, accident, or mistake.

Godfrey v. Hughes, 114 Ark. 312, 169 S. W. 958; Roberts v. Totten, 13 Ark. 609; Pulliam v. Booth, 21 Ark. 421; Wilcox v. Boothe, 19 Ark. 684; Lawrence v. Ellsworth, 41 Ark. 502; Weed v. Dyer, 53 Ark. 155, 13 S. W. 592; Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Choc-taw Mercantile Co. 80 Ark. 438, 97 S. W. 284; Lane & B. Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 97 S. W. 441; May & E. Co. v. Farmers Union Mercantile Co. 120 Ark. 316, 179 S. W. 490; 1 C. J. 292, § 277; Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 47 C. C. A. 637, 108 Fed. 726; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 27 L. ed. 319;

Elmore-Schultz Grain Co. v. Stonebraker, 202 Mo. App. 81, 214 S. W. 221.

The doctrine of account stated applies to the relationship of attorney and client.

Lane & B. Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 97 S. W. 441; Crawford v. Hutchinson, 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit filed by appellee, Hicks, against appellant, Griffith, upon a statement of an account which is alleged to have become an account stated.

Hicks was a resident of this state until 1916, when he removed to St. Louis, where he has since resided. Griffith is also a resident of that city. Hicks was for many years the attorney in this state for Griffith, whose interests here were varied and valuable. The professional relation was mutually satisfactory, and the personal relation was close and cordial, as shown by the correspondence between the parties offered in evidence.

Griffith is shown to be a man of large affairs, and from time to time loaned Hicks considerable sums of money. One such loan was evidenced by a note dated February 23, 1913, for the sum of $1,781.25, due one year after date. This note was executed jointly by Hicks and one E. A. Robbins, of Searcy, Arkansas.

Finally an estrangement grew up between Hicks and Griffith, and on November 19, 1917, Hicks rendered Griffith what Hicks testified was a complete statement of the account between them, in which he embraced all the items of professional service for which charges had been made, and credited the account with payments received and also with the note signed by himself and Robbins. Griffith received the account the day after it was mailed. No objection of any kind to the account was made by him, except as hereinafter stated.

Griffith saw Robbins in Searcy and demanded payment of the note, and Robbins communicated that fact to Hicks in July, 1919. When advised of this demand on Robbins, Hicks told Robbins that he would attend to the note, as that was an affair between himself and Griffith. This assurance satisfied Robbins, and he gave the matter no further attention. Robbins died in August, 1919, and some months thereafter Griffith filed the note with the administrator of Robbins's estate for allowance and classification. This proceeding was had in the probate court of White county, the county in which Robbins lived and in which the administration on his estate was pending.

On January 5, 1920, which was immediately after Hicks had been advised that the note had been filed as a claim against Robbins's estate, Hicks brought this suit. On January 20, 1920, Griffith filed an answer, denying liability for the items comprising Hicks's account. At the same time he filed a counterclaim and prayed judgment against Hicks.

In the direct examination of Griffith in the trial from which this appeal comes, he was asked if he had talked with anyone about the statement he had received from Hicks. He answered that shortly after he got the statement he had a talk with Mr. Cornwell, who was Hicks's law partner. This conversation occurred in Griffith's office, where Cornwell had come as the representative of Hicks to discuss a matter of business between Hicks and Griffith, but which had no relation to the items covered in the account which Hicks had mailed to Griffith. Griffith was asked: "What, if anything, did Cornwell represent to you about the contract; I mean about the statement, and about the amount due, or claimed to be due, Mr. Hicks?"

An objection to this question was sustained. Griffith was further asked: "Did Cornwell come there to see you as the representative of Hicks?"

And also: "Did Cornwell state to you that he wanted to talk to you about the account which Hicks had rendered to you?"

Objections were sustained to both these questions. Thereupon Griffith offered to show that "Mr. Cornwell, the law partner of Mr. Hicks, came to see Mr. Griffith about the account, and asked to talk to him about it, and at that time he denied owing Mr. Hicks anything on the items charged to him."

This offer of proof was by the court refused, and Griffith excepted.

Griffith gave testimony sufficient to raise an issue for the jury as to the correctness of Hicks's account, if the account was not in fact an account stated.

Hicks denied that Cornwell had any authority to represent or act for him in adjusting or settling his account against Griffith.

The court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of Hicks, and this appeal is prosecuted to review that action.

The statement of the account was mailed and received in Missouri, and we must therefore look to the law of Conflict of laws —account stated —what law governs. that state to determine whether the account became stated. The case of Bloss v. Aurora Mill. Co. 207 Mo. App. 402, 229 S. W. 833, is said to be the latest expression of an appellate court of that state on the question of an account stated. This decision is by the Springfield court of appeals, and, in defining an "account stated," the court quotes from the case of Powell v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 658, the following language of the supreme court of that state: "An account settled between the debtor and creditor therein in which a sum of money or balance is agreed on, and an acknowledgment by one in favor of the other of a balance or sum certain to be due, and an express or implied promise to pay the sum by one to the other."

Continuing, Cox, P. J., speaking for the court, said: "To constitute an account stated, the debtor and creditor must both agree to the correctness of the account, and, in addition thereto, the debtor must agree to pay or satisfy the amount agreed upon, and the creditor must agree to accept the payment of the agreed sum in satisfaction of the account.

"The agreement may be proven by evidence, either direct or circumstantial, as any other fact may be proven, or, if the party to whom the account is rendered retains it without objection for an unreasonable length of time, his so retaining it will justify the inference that he has approved it, and in such a case other proof of his acceptance and agreement to pay is not required. Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank, 96 Mo. App. 125, 135, 70 S. W. 173; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Coombs & Bro. Commission Co. 71 Mo. App. 299."

Under this test, the majority are of the opinion that the account rendered became an account stated, for the following reasons:

Where parties have had mutual dealings, and one renders to the other a statement, purporting to set forth all the items of indebtedness on the one side and credit on the other, the account so rendered, if not objected to in a reasonable time, becomes an account stated, and cannot afterwards be impeached except for fraud or mistake. Lawrence v. Ellsworth, 41 Ark. 502, and Dunavant v. Fields, 68 Ark. 534, 60 S. W. 420.

The law requires an objection within a reasonable time. The retention of the account apparently beyond a reasonable time is open to explanation, and Griffith might have explained his waiting for a time by showing that he thought the law partner of Hicks was the latter's agent in the premises. The objection, however, must be something more than a mental operation on the part of the person receiving the account. The objection must be made to the party rendering the account, or his duly authorized agent. Hence Griffith could not excuse his delay of two years in failing to object to the account, by showing that he thought he had made objection to a duly authorized agent of Hicks.

In determining what was a reasonable time within which to object, the court might permit Griffith to explain the delay by showing that he made objection to Hicks's law partner, thinking he was Hicks's agent. He could not excuse himself indefinitely on this account. It was his duty to ascertain the authority of Hicks's law partner in the premises within a reasonable time, and he could not retain the account for twenty months without objection, and excuse his delay by showing that he thought he had objected to a duly authorized agent of Hicks. This would be to allow his mental attitude in the premises to govern, and would excuse the communication of his objection to the other party for an indefinite length of time. This is not the law. The objection must be made to the party rendering the account, or his duly authorized agent, within a reasonable time.

It is the opinion of the chief justice and the writer that the excluded testimony of Griffith should have been admitted, and that the actual agency and authority of Cornwell is not of controlling importance. An account rendered becomes an account stated only by the admission of its correctness by the debtor. This admission may be made expressly, or it may arise by implication from the circumstances of the case. But an account cannot become an account stated unless the debtor, expressly or by implication, admits its correctness. The proper inquiry, therefore, is: What did Griffith do? Was his conduct such as that it must be said that he has impliedly assented to the correctness of the account? The assent of the debtor is ordinarily implied from the length of time during which the account is retained by —objections to supposed agent of one rendering account.

Account stated—what is.

Conflict of laws
—explanation of retention of account.

—form of objection.

the debtor without objection made. The courts therefore hold that the debtor may show any fact or circumstance which repels the implication that he has assented to the correctness of the account.

So, here, we think the question of Griffith's assent was for the jury. In determining whether Griffith has, by implication, assented, we view the circumstances from his perspective, for it is his acquiescence or nonacquiescence that we seek to determine. Did he believe, and was it reasonable for him to believe, that, in his conversation with Cornwell, the law partner of Hicks, he had denied liability; it being borne in mind that Griffith supposed that Cornwell had been sent to him by Hicks to discuss the account, and that no further communication between Hicks and Griffith occurred after the receipt of the account through the mails, and Griffith's repudiation of liability for any of the items covered by it in his conversation with Cornwell? Or, to state the proposition conversely, must we say, as a matter of law, that, because of the lapse of time herein shown, Griffith must be held to have assented to the correctness of the account, notwithstanding his denial of liability to Cornwell and the absence of any further communication on the subject from Hicks? We think the question of Griffith's assent is one of fact which should have been submitted to the jury.

As has been said, Griffith gave testimony questioning the accuracy both of the charges and credits on Hicks's account; but if the account is, in fact, an account stated, these last questions pass out of the case.

As before stated, the majority are of the opinion that the account rendered became an account stated. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

What is a reasonable time within which to object to an account so as to prevent its becoming an account stated.

I. In general, 887.

II. As question for court or jury, 895.

I. In general.

What is a reasonable time within which objection must be made to an account rendered, in order to preclude a presumption of acquiescence therein, will depend upon the circumstances, among which may be enumerated the nature of the transaction, the relation of the parties, their distance from each other and the means of communication between them, and the usual course of their business.

United States. — Bainbridge v. Wilcocks (1832) Baldw. 536, Fed. Cas. No. 755.

Florida. — Martyn v. Arnold (1895) 36 Fla. 446, 18 So. 791.

Idaho. — Lewis v. Utah Constr. Co. (1904) 10 Idaho, 214, 77 Pac. 336.

Illinois. — Moran v. Gordon (1889) 33 Ill. App. 46.

Iowa. — White v. Hampton (1859)

10 Iowa, 238; Millard v. Bennett (1913) 161 Iowa, 242, 139 N. W. 914.

Louisiana. — Freeman v. Howell (1849) 4 La. Ann. 196, 50 Am. Dec. 561; Darby v. Lastrapes (1876) 28 La. Ann. 605.

Missouri. — Dameron v. Harris (1920) 281 Mo. 247, 219 S. W. 954.

New York. — Lockwood v. Thorne (1858) 18 N. Y. 288, s. c: on former hearing (1852) 12 Barb. 487, reversed on other grounds in (1854) 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81; Harris v. Ely, (1852) Seld. Notes, 37; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Newman (1918) 172 N. Y. Supp. 228.

Oklahoma. — Lamont Mercantile Co. v. Piburn (1915) 51 Okla. 618, 152 Pac. 112.

Oregon. — Howell v. Johnson (1901) 38 Or. 571, 64 Pac. 659.

Pennsylvania. — Porter v. Patterson (1850) 15 Pa. 229; Colket v. Ellis (1875) 1 W. N. C. 246.

Washington. — Ault v. Interstate

Sav. & L. Asso. (1896) 15 Wash. 627, 47 Pac. 13; Merritt v. Mersenneheimer (1915) 84 Wash. 174, 146 Pac. 370.

There is no arbitrary rule of law which renders an omission to object in a given time equivalent to an actual agreement or consent to the correctness of the account thus rendered; but it is merely competent evidence, subject to be rebutted by circumstances from which counter inferences may be drawn. Lockwood v. Thorne (1858) 18 N. Y. 288.

The presumption arising from the lapse of time must be measured with reference to the business capacity of the parties, their customary dealings, their business methods, their intelligence or want of intelligence, and all other circumstances attending them in their dealings and in the rendition of the account. Merritt v. Meisenheimer (Wash.) supra.

The retention of an account without objection, apparently beyond a reasonable time, is open to explanation. The reported case (GRIFFITH v. HICKS, ante, 882).

Thus, the question of reasonable time may be affected by the fact that the person to whom the account was rendered was ignorant of his rights. See Mastell v. Salo (1919) 140 Ark. 408, 215 S. W. 583.

And the circumstance that the person to whom the account is rendered is absent from the place where the transaction was carried on will be considered in determining whether timely objection to the statement was made. Dameron v. Harris (1920) 281 Mo. 247, 219 S. W. 954.

The failure of the defendants to object to the account within a reasonable time may be explained by evidence that objection was made to one who claimed to be the representative of the plaintiff, even though this unidentified person was, as a matter of fact, a stranger to the plaintiff, as in such case the purpose of the evidence is not to bind the plaintiff, but to explain the failure of the defendants to communicate their objections to the plaintiff. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Newman (N. Y.) supra. This decision seems preferable to the contrary view expressed in the reported case (GRIFFITH v. HICKS).

The fact that the person to whom the account was rendered frequently met members of the firm rendering it, at lunch time and at lodge meetings, without objecting thereto, is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether objection was made within a reasonable time, but is not conclusive. Merritt v. Meisenheimer (Wash.) supra. The court said: "We would not be inclined to hold, as a matter of law, that men who are accustomed to meet at a lodge, or take lunch together at a club, are in duty bound to challenge an account rendered at such times and at such places, and that if they do not they are forever concluded to thereafter question it. If it were incumbent upon defendant to speak at such times and places, by the same token it was the duty of plaintiffs to remind defendant of the fact that an account had been rendered and had not been paid. It cannot be put forth as an abstract statement of law that men who have mutual dealings, and who meet in social and fraternal intercourse, are bound to speak under the pain of suffering the penalty of estoppel. We cannot say that there is a legal duty to carry the burdens and distractions of business into the hours of relaxation and refreshment. A man cannot be held to a rule that would hazard his digestion by a self-reminder of his debts and business troubles. There is a place for work and a place for play."

Less than one month.

See also cases under heading, "As between parties in particular relations," infra.

In Freas v. Truitt (1874) 2 Colo. 489, it was held no error to give an instruction that if defendant, after having received accounts rendered, allowed several mails to pass after he examined the same, without making any objection to their correctness, then the plaintiff had a right to infer that the defendant admitted the correctness of the accounts.

In Atkinson v. Golden Gate Tile Co.

(1913) 21 Cal. App. 170, 131 Pac. 107, it was held that proof that an account for goods, wares, and merchandise, sold and delivered, was rendered twenty-five days prior to the commencement of the suit, and that no objection was made thereto, was sufficient to support a finding of fact that the account was an account stated.

In Mulford v. Caesar (1893) 53 Mo. App. 263, it was held that evidence of defendant's silence for a period of two weeks after receiving an account, of his several payments on account thereafter, and of his statement that he would pay as he could, and that he owed the balance, all tended to show an account stated.

More than one month and less than a year.

See also cases under heading, "As between parties in particular relations," infra.

In Gorman v. McGowan (1904) 44 Or. 597, 76 Pac. 769, where it appeared that the defendant had kept the accounts rendered for a full month without apparent objection thereto, and that no such objection was made or offset claimed until he was drawn upon, it was held that there was sufficient legal evidence upon which to base a finding for an account stated.

But an account rendered and detained without objection for more than a month cannot be said, as a matter of law, not to have been assented to. Little v. McClain (1909) 134 App. Div. 197, 118 N. Y. Supp. 916.

And a retention for thirty-five days of an account involving tax transactions running through nine consecutive years, involving in the aggregate between six and seven hundred thousand dollars, is insufficient to raise a presumption of acquiescence in its correctness. Lott v. Mobile County (1885) 79 Ala. 69.

In Donald v. Gardner (1899) 44 App. Div. 235, 60 N. Y. Supp. 668, where it appeared that an account rendered had been retained without objection from July 30th till September 11th, when the action was commenced, it was held to be no error to refuse defendant's request to go to the jury on the question as to whether the account had been stated definitely between the parties.

In Dows v. Durfee (1850) 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 213, where no objection was shown to have been made to an account as rendered, except by defending the suit thereon commenced about two months thereafter, it was held that the referee was justified in treating such account as an account stated.

The retention of an account from October 14 to December 23 is said, in W. A. Parkinson Co. v. Tullgren (1913) 177 Ill. App. 295, to warrant a finding of account stated.

In Pickham v. Illinois, I. & M. R. Co. (1910) 153 Ill. App. 281, the court said: "When parties are located in the same city,—as, for instance, here in Chicago,—where they can readily communicate with each other, the time required for an account rendered to ripen into an account stated is comparatively short. In the case now before us, and under the circumstances therein, the time from May 31, 1905, to August 25, the same year, was more than sufficient to give the defendant the opportunity to examine the statement in question and to inform the plaintiff of the objections thereto, if any there were. Certainly the only objection which was finally offered, namely, that the item of extras as covered by the written contract, could and should have been made long before it was made. We are of the opinion that there was an account stated between the parties, owing to defendant's unreasonable delay of nearly three months before making any objection to the statement rendered."

Failure to object to an account during a period of three months will be regarded as an admission of its correctness by the party charged. Hawkins v. Long (1876) 74 N. C. 781.

But in Follansbee v. Parker (1873) 70 Ill. 11, it was said that a failure to object to an account rendered until nearly three months thereafter would not preclude defendant from disputing it, where he was in ignorance of the real facts.

In Gurnett v. J. H. Flick Constr. Co. (1916) 163 Wis. 574, 158 N. W. 325, where it appeared that the plaintiff, who was engaged in carrying on work for defendant under a contract, had an understanding with the defendant that the latter should purchase for the plaintiff certain camp supplies, which, as delivered, were accompanied by statements of account disclosing the prices charged for the supplies, which were O. K'd by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff retained these statements, which were rendered monthly, beginning with the month of February and including the month of August; and that, upon the completion of the work in August, a final and complete statement of account was made, when plaintiff promptly objected to the prices charged, it was held that the delay was, under the circumstances, at most only prima facie evidence of correctness, and that the jury were therefore warranted in finding in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the balance due on the contract.

Where an account was made up and presented to one who went over it and made no objection to it from the time it was presented in August until after suit was brought, which was on November 25th, there was a sufficient acquiescence from which to imply an assent. Hendy v. March (1888) 75 Cal. 566, 17 Pac. 702.

In Colket v. Ellis (1875) 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 246, it was held that a delay of four months in objecting to an account rendered, on which were credited the proceeds of certain collateral, consisting of stock the market value of which had greatly risen in the meantime, was unreasonable.

In Brown v. Kimmel (1878) 67 Mo. 430, it was held that where plaintiff testified that he mailed an account to defendant in December, that no objection had been made thereto until the following May, about a week before the trial, and that plaintiff and defendant saw each other three or four times a week, it was error to sustain a demurrer to the evidence as insufficient to establish the account.

In Crane v. Stansbury (1916) 173 Cal. 631, 161 Pac. 7, it was held that a delay of six months, if unsatisfactorily explained, was, as a matter of law, unreasonable; and that the debtor's acquiescence would be presumed and the account would become an account stated, if no objections were made within that time.

In Fleischner v. Kubli (1891) 20 Or. 328, 25 Pac. 1086, where an account was rendered nearly six months before any objections were heard on the subject, and after its rendition the party charged made a remittance to be applied on account, without any objections to the account, it was held that the assent of the party charged to the account as rendered must be presumed, and that it was the duty of the court to inform the jury that such was the law.

It has been held that eight months is an unreasonable length of time, in which to hold an account without objection thereto, and the account so held becomes an account stated. Riley v. Mattingly (1914) 42 App. D. C. 290.

One who has retained an account rendered in the month of February, till the fall of the following year, without objection to the prices charged therein for supplies, or without having questioned its correctness, must be held to have waived the right to make such objection. Dudoit v. Spencer (1860) 2 Haw. 493.

In Lockwood v. Thorne (1854) 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81, it is said that the lapse of nine months after receiving an account, before the commencement of the action, there having been made in the meantime no objection or complaint, would have been abundant to authorize the legal inference of acquiescence; particularly as the proximity of the parties to each other secured them a daily opportunity of communication by mail.

In Dickerson v. Scheuer (1888) 24 Jones & S. 605, 1 N. Y. Supp. 419, where it appeared that a bill rendered at least nine months before was never disputed, though payment thereof had been often requested, it was held that there was sufficient evidence to call for the submission of the case to the jury as one upon an account stated.

In I. L. Elwood Mfg. Co. v. Betcher (1898) 72 Minn. 103, 75 N. W. 113, where it appeared that defendant kept the account rendered at the time of the sale, without questioning its correctness, for nearly one year, it was held to be evident that the objection thereto was not made within a reasonable time.

One year or longer.

See also cases under heading, "As between parties in particular relations," infra.

Where an account was rendered to the defendant, and no objection was ever made to it in respect to the amount, or otherwise, prior to the commencement of the action, which was more than a year, and the trial was had over two years, after such presentation, the account was properly regarded as an account stated. Case v. Hotchkiss (1867) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 283.

In Marye v. Strouse (1880) 6 Sawy. 204, 5 Fed. 483, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 294, where it appeared that an account rendered had been retained more than a year without objection, such delay was held to warrant fully a presumption of acquiescence therein.

But in McKay v. Myers (1897) 168 Mass. 312, 47 N. E. 98, it was held that a silence of eighteen months after receiving an account did not preclude the recovery of an amount shown to have been credited thereon without authority.

In Rich v. Eldredge (1860) 42 N. H. 153, it was held not to be improper to instruct the jury that if they should find that the creditor exhibited to the debtor his books, and presented to him a detailed statement of the accounts between them, and that this statement was received and examined by the debtor without objection, and retained by him for a year and a half afterward, they might find that he had assented to the correctness of the account.

In Holstcomb v. Rivers (1669) 1 Ch. Cas. 127, 22 Eng. Reprint, 726, it was held, where fourteen years had elapsed since an account was rendered, and there was no clear proof of any exception to it until two years after its rendition, although a request was made that any exception should be immediately taken, "that the account should not be raveled into."

In Lutcher & M. Lumber Co. v. Eells (1903) 108 Ill. App. 156, evidence showing that statements were sent by mail from time to time during a period of three years, which were received and retained without objection for some three years longer, was held sufficient to justify a court in finding in favor of the plaintiff as on an account stated.

In Raub v. Nisbett (1898) 118 Mich. 248, 76 N. W. 393, it was held that where an account rendered was retained without objection during a period of nearly three years, for nearly one year of which both parties were residents of the same town, there was a strong presumption of the accuracy of the account, which, when taken in connection with fact that no distinct error in the account was shown, should be held controlling.

Keeping the rendered account three or four years after receiving it, without objection, will make it a stated account. Bruen v. Hone (1848) 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586.

In White v. Macon (1827) 3 Cranch, C. C. 250, Fed. Cas. No. 17,553, the court instructed the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that defendant received an account rendered about three years before the commencement of the suit, and there was no evidence that he objected to its amount, they might infer that it was correct.

Retention of an account rendered for nearly four years, without objection, was held sufficient, in O'Hanlon Co. v. Jess (1920) 58 Mont. 415, 14 A.L.R. 237, 193 Pac. 65, to render it an account stated.

Leaving an account with the defendant five years before trial, and repeatedly importuning him for payment, he at no time making any objection to any item in the account, and finally going out of business, is sufficient to justify a finding of account stated. House v. Beak (1892) 43 Ill. App. 615.

In Murray v. Toland (1818) 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569, it was held that chancery would not decree an account to be taken, after the lapse of five years from the rendition of an account to which no objection was offered, but would leave the party to his remedy at law.

In Towsley v. Denison (1866) 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 490, where it appeared that an account rendered was retained without objection for nearly six years before the commencement of the action, it was held that the referee should have held the account rendered a stated account.

In Parkinson v. Hanbury (1865) 2 DeG. J. & S. 450, 46 Eng. Reprint, 449, it was held that where an account was delivered to a person entitled to take out administration, who raised questions upon it which were answered at the time, and she became administratrix seven years afterwards, and filed her bill for an accounting seven years after taking out administration, equity would not entertain the bill.

In Baker v. Biddle (1831) Baldw. 394, Fed. Cas. No. 764, it was held that equity would not compel an accounting ten years after the rendition of an account which had been acquiesced in.

Equity will not compel an accounting, where a statement of account had been retained without the least objection by plaintiff's ancestor for ten years, after the lapse of twenty years more since his decease. Tharp v. Tharp (1843) 15 Vt. 105.

As between parties in particular relations — attorney and client.

In Ault v. Interstate Sav. & L. Assn. (1896) 15 Wash. 627, 47 Pac. 13, where it appeared that an attorney mailed to his client a statement of account, to which the client replied about twenty days later by calling for information in reference thereto, it was held that in view of the course of business between the parties such delay was not, in itself, so unreasonable as to warrant the assumption that the account had been approved.

It cannot be said as a matter of law that a presumption of acquiescence in an account rendered by a firm of attorneys to a client arises from a failure to object thereto for eleven months. Merritt v. Meisenheimer (1915) 84 Wash. 174, 146 Pac. 370.

In Harris v. Drenning (1917) 101 Kan. 711, 168 Pac. 1106, the failure of a client to object to the amount of an attorney's charge at the time, or for eighteen months thereafter, was held as a matter of law to constitute an account stated.

In the reported case (GRIFFITH v. HICKS, ante, 882), a delay of twenty months in objecting to an account rendered to a client by an attorney was held as a matter of law to render it an account stated, though the client sought to explain the delay by showing that he had made objection to the attorney's law partner, thinking that he was the attorney's agent in the matter, where he took no steps to ascertain whether such was in fact the case.

— banks.

In Union Bank v. Planters' Bank (1837) 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 439, 31 Am. Dec. 113, where it appeared that no objection had been made to an account rendered by one bank to another for a period of over five years, and that it was the usage of the banks to notify one another at once of any discrepancy in accounts, it was held error to refuse to instruct the jury that they were at liberty to infer from the silence of the defendants their acquiescence in the correctness of the account rendered.

— bank and depositor.

In Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank (1903) 103 Mo. App. 613, 77 S. W. 1002, it is said that, while ten days may not be arbitrarily fixed in every case as the time within which a depositor is bound to examine his bank book after it has been balanced, it is a reasonable time in which to make the examination, when the depositor resides in the same town or city in which the bank is located.

In Citizens Bank & T. Co. v. Hinkle (1916) 126 Ark. 266, 189 S. W. 679, where it appeared that a complete statement of account was furnished by a bank to the attorneys for a depositor in the latter part of February, and suit was not commenced until September 25th, but that a conference of the depositor's attorneys with one who was a director of and the general attorney for the bank, and a member of its auditing committee, was held in the latter part of February, at which the correctness of the account was challenged, it was held that it should be said as a matter of law that no such time had elapsed between the date when the full statement of account was furnished, and the date when the bank's attorney was notified that the account was not correct, as to make the statement so furnished an account stated.

In American Nat. Bank v. Bushey (1881) 45 Mich. 135, 7 N. W. 725, it was held that, where a depositor was notified by a bank of a balance in his favor, and without inquiry or objection drew out the admitted balance, and for nearly two years made no claim of error in his account, there was such a presumption in favor of its correctness as would throw upon the depositor the burden of impeaching it.

In Harley v. Eleventh Ward Bank (1877) 7 Daly (N. Y.) 476, affirmed without opinion in (1879) 76 N. Y. 618, it was held that, where a bank received a check for collection and forwarded it to its correspondent, from which it received a notification of its payment, and credited the amount to its customer, but was afterward informed that the check was not paid, and attempted to charge it back to the customer, who would not permit it, and accounts were then rendered for two years without any mention of it, there was an account stated, which precluded the bank from afterwards looking to the customer for the amount.

In Shepard v. Bank of State (1851) 15 Mo. 143, it was held that, where the account of a depositor in a bank was shown to have been balanced from time to time during the period of four years, that a memorandum had been made by the parties of the fact of the correctness of the account, and that no objection had been made to its correctness for more than three years after the account was closed, the court below was justified in finding that an account had been stated.

In Hutchinson v. Market Bank (1867) 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 302, where a bank depositor failed to object for nearly six years after a statement of account, to a failure to allow him a certain credit, it was held to be so plainly a stated account that it was not, under the evidence, a question proper for consideration by the jury whether the delay was sufficiently accounted for.

In Nodine v. First Nat. Bank (1902) 41 Or. 386, 68 Pac. 1109, where it appeared that, when a depositor's bank book was first balanced, he insisted that the bank had failed to give him certain credits, but the officers of the bank contended that he was mistaken, and refused to make any change in the account; that for the succeeding ten years the bank continued to render him monthly or bimonthly statements of his account, which were received and retained by him without objection; and that he retained without objection for nearly six years a statement rendered when his account was closed, it was held that the account must be regarded as an account stated.

— broker and customer.

In Knickerbocker v. Gould (1889) 115 N. Y. 533, 22 N. E. 573, where brokers on December 26th mailed an account to a customer, with notice that if it was not paid by December 31st they would bring suit, and suit was brought January 14th, it was held that the account had become stated.

In McMullin v. Reid (1906) 213 Pa. 338, 62 Atl. 924, where it appeared that a statement was sent by a stock-broker to his customer, with a demand for payment, and notice that collateral held by the broker would be sold in fifteen days, and that the defendant had made no answer to the statement when suit was brought, twenty-five days thereafter, it was held that there was evidence from which the jury were warranted in finding an account stated.

— commission merchants or factors, and their principals.

Where the parties lived in the same city and were in the habit of almost daily intercourse, the retention of the account for upwards of five weeks without objection, coupled with the fact of the principal's dealing with the factor upon the old footing, estops him from going into the question whether the sales had or had not been made at an inadequate price. Smedley v. Williams (1849) 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 359.

A principal who received the account current of his factors in February, and retained it without objection until the time his bill for an accounting was exhibited in January of the following year, must be deemed impliedly to have admitted the correctness of the account, although such admission will not operate so conclusively against him as to prevent him from surcharging and falsifying. Langdon v. Roane (1844) 6 Ala. 518, 41 Am. Dec. 60.

In Hall v. Sloan (1873) 9 Phila. (Pa.) 138, it was held that where a commission merchant rendered an account of sales to his consignor, who drew upon him for the proceeds, the silence of the consignor for more than six months thereafter raised a legal presumption of his assent.

In Allen-West Commission Co. v. Patillo (1898) 33 C. C. A. 194, 61 U. S. App. 94, 90 Fed. 628, it was held that a failure for two years to object to a statement of account rendered by a factor, which included a charge for commissions on property not shipped to him, but on which he claimed commissions under his contract, rendered the account a stated one.

— master and servant.

In Schneider v. Oakman Consol. Min. Co. (1918) 38 Cal. App. 338, 176 Pac. 177, it was held that proof that a statement of account between a mining company and its manager was mailed by him in California, to the company at its office in Massachusetts, on or about August 1, and that the officers of the company, in letters written from time to time thereafter, the latest being under date of December 28 following, referred to his claim against the company without making any objection to his account, was sufficient to support an action on account stated.

In J. S. Phelps & Co. v. Plum (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 817, 32 S. W. 753, where the employer of several agents to solicit shipments of tobacco, the agents to agree among themselves what statements should be credited to each, delivered to one of them in the presence of the others a statement showing the amount of commissions due him, it was held that his failure for nearly four and one-half years to make any objection thereto should be treated not only as an estoppel, but as conclusive evidence of the correctness of the account.

— merchants.

Between merchants at home, an account which has been presented, and to which no objection has been made after the lapse of several posts, is treated, under ordinary circumstances, as being by acquiescence a stated account. Brown v. Vandyke (1853) 8 N. J. Eq. 795, 55 Am. Dec. 250.

In Sherman v. Sherman (1692) 2 Vern. 276, 23 Eng. Reprint, 778, it was held that equity will not entertain a bill for an accounting, where there has been an acquiescence for several years after the dealings ceased, the court saying: "Amongst merchants, it is looked upon as an allowance of an account current if the merchant that receives it does not object against it in a second or a third post."

In Pratt v. Weyman (1825) 6 S. C. Eq. (1 M'Cord) 156, it is said that in some cases, where an account is sent by one merchant to another, with a balance stated against him, and he keeps it by him for two or three years, it is considered as a settled account between them.

An account current sent by a foreign merchant to a merchant in this country, and not objected to for two years, is deemed an account stated, and throws the burden of proof upon him who received and kept it without objection. Freeland v. Heron (1812) 7 Cranch (U. S.) 147, 3 L. ed. 297.

In Tickel v. Short (1750) 2 Ves. Sr. 239, 28 Eng. Reprint, 154, it was said by the Lord Chancellor: "If one merchant sends an account current to another in a different country, on which a balance is made due to himself; the other keeps it by about two years without objection; the rule of this court and of merchants is that it is considered as a stated account."

— mortgagor and mortgagee.

Assent on the part of a mortgagor to the correctness of an account stated by the mortgagee cannot be implied from the circumstances that no objection was made for about three years thereafter, where it appears that the principals are both dead, the mortgagee dying within forty days after he prepared the account, and that when the first effort was made by his executor to collect the account, objection was duly made. Wilbur v. Win (1918) 89 N. J. Eq. 278, 103 Atl. 985.

— partners.

In Atwater v. Fowler (1833) 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 417, it was held that if a partner in a single partnership transaction receives from the other partner a statement of accounts between them, and is silent for thirteen years afterward, it amounts to an acquiescence.

II. As question for court or jury.

In some jurisdictions it is held that what is a reasonable time is, where the facts are clear, always a question exclusively for the court; and that, where the proofs are conflicting, the question is a mixed one of law and fact.

United States. — Toland v. Sprague (1838) 12 Pet. 309, 9 L. ed. 1097; Wiggins v. Burkham (1870) 10 Wall. 129, 19 L. ed. 884; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten (1883) 107 U. S. 325, 27 L. ed. 319, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 178; McLaughlin v. United States (1901) 36 Ct. Cl. 138, s. c. on subsequent appeal (1902) 37 Ct. Cl. 150; Talcott v. Chew (1885) 27 Fed. 273; Edwards v. Hoeflinghoff (1889) 38 Fed. 635; Charlotte Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Hartog (1898) 29 C. C. A. 56, 42 U. S. App. 716, 85 Fed. 150; Long-Bell Lumber Co. v. Stump (1898) 30 C. C. A. 260, 57 U. S. App. 546, 86 Fed. 574.

California. — Crane v. Stansbury (1916) 173 Cal. 631, 161 Pac. 7; Cusick v. Boyne (1905) 1 Cal. App. 643, 82 Pac. 985.

District of Columbia. — Riley v. Mattingly (1914) 42 App. D. C. 290.

Florida. — Martyn v. Arnold (1895) 36 Fla. 446, 18 So. 791; Daytona Bridge Co. v. Bond (1904) 47 Fla. 136, 36 So. 445.

Illinois. — State v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1910) 246 Ill. 188, 92 N. E. 814; but see, contra, Moran v. Gordon (1889) 33 Ill. App. 46.

Missouri. — Brown v. Kimmel (1878) 67 Mo. 430; McKeen v. Boatmen's Bank (1898) 74 Mo. App. 281; Kansas City Commercial Photo View Co. v. Kansas City Bridge Co. (1921) — Mo. App. —, 233 S. W. 947.

Oregon. — Fleischner v. Kubli (1891) 20 Or. 328, 25 Pac. 1086; Howell v. Johnson (1901) 38 Or. 571, 64 Pac. 659; Crawford v. Hutchinson (1901) 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84; Nodine v. First Nat. Bank (1902) 41 Or. 386, 68 Pac. 1109; Carlson v. First Nat. Bank (1916) 80 Or. 539, 157 Pac. 809.

Washington. — Ault v. Interstate Sav. & L. Asso. (1896) 15 Wash. 627, 47 Pac. 13, which is, however, overruled in Merritt v. Meisenheimer (1915) 84 Wash. 174, 146 Pac. 370, in which it is said that the case "declares one rule and applies another, and is inconsistent with Baxter v. Waite (1883) 2 Wash. Terr. 228, 6 Pac. 429; Shaw v. Lobe (1910) 58 Wash. 219, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333, 108 Pac. 450."

On the other hand, it has been held in a number of cases that the question is ordinarily one for the jury.

Idaho. — Lewis v. Utah Constr. Co. (1904) 10 Idaho, 214, 77 Pac. 336.

Illinois. — Moran v. Gordon (1889) 33 Ill. App. 46, but see, contra, State v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1910) 246 Ill. 188, 92 N. E. 814.

Iowa.—Hollenbeck v. Ristine (1898) 105 Iowa, 488, 67 Am. St. Rep. 306, 75 N. W. 355; Millard v. Bennett (1913) 161 Iowa, 242, 139 N. W. 914; Marks Hat Co. v. Slatnick (1915) 178 Iowa, 370, 154 N. W. 757.

Michigan.—Peter v. Thickstun (1883) 51 Mich. 589, 17 N. W. 68.

Minnesota.—Western Newspaper Union v. Segerstrom Piano Mfg. Co. (1912) 118 Minn. 230, 136 N. W. 752.

New Hampshire.—Austin v. Ricker (1881) 61 N. H. 97.

New York.—Little v. McClain (1909) 134 App. Div. 197, 118 N. Y. Supp. 916; Curtis-Blaisdell Co. v. Lederer (1913) 82 Misc. 444, 143 N. Y. Supp. 1074.

Oklahoma.—Lamont Mercantile

Co. v. Piburn (1915) 51 Okla. 618, 152 Pac. 112; Oklahoma Hay & Grain Co. v. T. D. Randall & Co. (1917) — Okla. —, 168 Pac. 1012.

Washington.—Merritt v. Meisenheimer (1915) 84 Wash. 174, 146 Pac. 370 (where it is said that the question is one for the jury, save in the absence of all circumstances except the lapse of time).

In Ottoby v. Winsor (1909) 137 Mo. App. 272, 119 S. W. 40, it is said to be a question for the jury whether an account rendered was retained by the debtor without objection a sufficient length of time to give it the status of an account stated; but the context plainly shows that the opposite was meant. E. S. O.

MARIE E. ZIESEL, Respt.,

v.

WILLIAM ZIESEL, Appt.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals—November 14, 1921.

(— N. J. —, 115 Atl. 435.)

Parent and child — expense of boarding school.

1. Where the father and mother are divorced, and the custody, maintenance, and education of the son have been committed by the court of chancery to the mother, and where the father's annual net income is only $4,500, an order requiring him, against his objection, to pay to the mother $520 annually for the support and maintenance of such sixteen-year-old son, and $980 annually for his board and tuition in a boarding school, is excessive, and will be reversed in so far as it represents expenses of education in a boarding school rather than in a public high school, in view of the fact that the father believes, with some showing of reason, that attendance at a public high school is adequate, and preferable for his son for present purposes, and in view of the further fact that the father has a second wife and daughter to support.

[See note on this question beginning on page 899.]

— education — authority to determine.

2. A father, unless his parental authority has been taken away by the courts, is the one to decide the extent of the education of his child, beyond what is required and provided by the school system of the state, and is under no legal duty to send his son to a boarding school, no matter what his financial circumstances may be.

[See 20 R. C. L. 626.]

Headnotes by TRENCHARD, J.

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Court of Chancery (Leaming, Vice Ch.) requiring him to pay for the support, maintenance, and education of his minor son, in a proceeding by complainant for a greater allowance for his support. Reversed.

The oral opinion delivered by Vice Chancellor Leaming was as follows:

"I am a little in doubt. It seems to me that an allowance of $1,500 a year, under all the circumstances, would not be very far from right. That ought to be sufficient to provide for the board of the boy, and a fairly liberal expenditure for his education. If $10 a week were allowed for the support of the boy, it would be $520, and then if $800 were allowed for the education, in addition, it would be a total of $1,320 which would be only a little less than $1,500. Eight hundred dollars is cutting down education to a pretty small amount, as charges are made at this time by most colleges, and I do not believe there is any doubt that Dr. Ziesel can afford to pay $1,500 without crippling him. I think that the net income of the doctor is not far from $4,500. I think this item of $2,400 for money borrowed could be excluded from the gross receipts, and in like manner the item of $1,847.29 for repairs and alterations could be excluded from the expenditures, which would leave him approximately the amount I stated, $4,500. With that, and the expenses he must bear, I should think $1,500 for the support and education of the son would be reasonable. It may not be as much as would be desirable, and it may be more than the doctor cares to pay, but it would not be far from right. In making expenditures for the boy's education the doctor is building a monument for himself that is more desirable even than the pursuits in scientific investigation that he is following. However commendable that research may be, there can be nothing in the nature of a legally imposed duty—and should be a corresponding pleasure—greater than that of the support of your own issue, and that word 'support' should, in all appropriate circumstances, include appropriate education. I think the doctor himself, on mature reflection touching the duties of a parent to his offspring, would be inclined to concede that $1,500 a year allowance is not too much. The income of his wife—his first wife—is limited; she might not have anything left after her own year's expenditures are made. I do not think $1,500 is an unreasonable amount. I will make the allowance. I think it was reasonable to employ an accountant by counsel for complainant, and to make the investigation which was made, and that the expense thus incurred should be paid by the defendant, as well as the master's costs, of course. And I think $75 counsel fee will be proper."

18 A.L.R.—57.

Mr. Lewis Starr for appellant.

Messrs. Leap, Sharpless, & Way for respondent.

Trenchard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This, as will be seen, is an appeal from an order of the court of chancery requiring the appellant to pay for the support, maintenance, and education of his minor son, Edward Ziesel.

The facts and circumstances giving rise to the order under review are these:

The parties to the action, Dr. and Mrs. Ziesel, were married January 27, 1889. Three children were born, of whom Edward, the one concerned here, is the youngest. They were divorced in Pennsylvania December 21, 1914. No provision was made in that decree for the support and maintenance of Edward. Apparently the parties removed to Wildwood, New Jersey, and in the early part of 1916 Mrs. Ziesel filed a bill in the court of chancery for the support of Edward, the minor child, and no question was raised as to the jurisdiction of the court. On July 10th of that year a decree was entered in that proceeding, awarding the care, custody, and education of Edward to Mrs. Ziesel, and requiring Dr. Ziesel to pay $5 per week to Mrs. Ziesel for his support, maintenance, and education, and leave was granted by the decree, to either party, to apply thereafter for such variance or modification thereof as changing circumstances might render equitable and just. In November, 1920, Mrs. Ziesel petitioned for a greater allowance, saying that Edward had attained the age of sixteen years, and was a "second-year high school student;" that his father's income was from $10,000 to $15,000 per year; that she desired to send the boy to a preparatory school, which she named, where the board and tuition were $1,000 per year. It was on that petition that the court of chancery made the order now under review, requiring Dr. Ziesel to pay to Mrs. Ziesel for the support and maintenance of Edward $10 per week, and an additional sum of $980 annually for his education. We are of the opinion that such order cannot be sustained.

It appears that Dr. Ziesel is a dentist, having offices in Wildwood in this state and in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; that he is doing much research work in connection with his profession; that, prior to the divorce, he settled upon Mrs. Ziesel approximately $40,000 of property in Wildwood, from which she has an income of about $2,600 a year; and that the other two children of the marriage are of age and self-supporting. It further appears that after the parties were divorced the doctor married again, and has one child by that marriage; and, while he is not living with his second wife, he is obliged to support her and his daughter by that marriage.

The learned vice chancellor found as a fact, and we think rightly, that the annual net income of Dr. Ziesel was approximately $4,500, out of which, of course, he had to pay for the support of his second wife and his daughter, and also such sum as may be awarded in this proceeding for the support and education of his son Edward.

Now Dr. Ziesel seems to find no fault with the order so far as it relates to support and maintenance. His objection is to that part of the order relating to allowance for education, and his objection really is to the expense of board and tuition at a boarding school, his contention being that attendance at a high school is adequate and preferable for his son for present purposes. The doctor testifies that he has always insisted upon a public school education for his children; that "this preparatory school (selected by the mother) does not rank as high as the average public high school;" and in this connection it is to be noted that he further testifies that Edward had "voluntarily" left another boarding school, in which, quite recently, he had been placed by his mother, but whether with or without the consent of his mother does not appear.

It is not questioned that the court of chancery has power to make a proper order touching the education of the son, such as "the circumstances of the parties and the nature of the case" shall render "fit, reasonable, and just." 2 C. S. p. 2035, § 25.

The order under review seems to be predicated upon some legal duty of a father to send his son to a boarding school, if he can do so without "crippling him," and this the vice chancellor thought the present order would not do, and hence he required an expenditure of one third of the father's income for the support and education of this one son, made up in large part of boarding-school expenses.

But a father is under no legal duty to send his son to a boarding school, no matter what his financial circumstances may be. True, many a father does it at a sacrifice to himself and other members of his family, but he does so voluntarily. That may be a commendable thing to do. No doubt the vice chancellor had such instances in mind. But, after all, if a father sees fit to content himself with a common public school and high school education for his son, the law ordinarily will require no more of him. If Edward, the son, were living with his father instead of the mother, no court

Parent and child —education—authority to determine.

would compel him to send the son to any boarding school, or even a private day school. He would be compelled by statute (4 C. S. p. 4775, § 153), and those administering it, to educate the child, but the state provides free schools, where all its sons and daughters may be thus educated, and the law ordinarily requires no more than this. A father, unless his parental authority has been taken away by the courts, is the one to decide the extent of the education of his child, beyond what is provided by the school system of the state. Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, 58 N. J. Eq. 570, 45 L.R.A. 842, 43 Atl. 904. If the father were dead and the minor son had property, his education would be paid for out of his income under the direction of the court of chancery, on a basis of what was proper and customary for one in his station in life; but that is not this case.

A case somewhat in point is that of Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, supra. There, in a suit brought by the wife for a limited divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, alimony pendente lite was awarded her. She subsequently applied for additional alimony pendente lite, to enable her to meet the expenses for tuition and books, at a law school, of her son, then in his twentieth year, who lived with her, and was chiefly supported by her. No order had been made giving the custody of the son to either parent. The application was granted, against the objection of the husband, who testified that he thought his son unfitted for the law, and wished him to go into business. On appeal to this court it was held that the order giving additional alimony pendente lite to enable the wife, against the judgment of her husband, to secure for the son a professional education, should be reversed.

Of course, in the present case, it appears that the father and mother were divorced, and that the custody, maintenance, and education of the son had been committed by the court to the mother. But where, as here, it appears that the father's annual net income was only $4,500, we think that an order requiring him, against his objection to pay to the mother $520 annually for the support and maintenance of such sixteen-year-old son, and $980 annually for his board and tuition in a boarding school, is excessive in so far as it represents expenses for education in a boarding school rather than in a public high school, in view of the fact that the father believes, with some showing of reason, that attendance at a public high school is adequate, and preferable for his son for present purposes, and in view of the further fact that the father has a second wife and daughter to support.

The decree will be reversed, and the record remitted to the Court of Chancery for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

ANNOTATION.

Allowance in decree against parent for education of child.

Allowances, in a decree against a parent for education of a child, are generally combined with the child's support; that is, the allowance is usually made for "support and education." Very few cases take up the matter of education as a separate item.

It will be seen that in the reported case (ZIESEL v. ZIESEL, ante, 896) it is held that a decree should be reversed which ordered the divorced father of a boy sixteen years old in his mother's custody, to pay $900 annually for his education at a boarding school, when the boy was already at high school, and the father was content with a high school education for him, the decree further ordering him to pay for the boy's support $10 per week.

Streitwolf v. Streitwolf (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 570, 45 L.R.A. 842, 43 Atl. 904, is sufficiently set out in the reported case (ZIESEL v. ZIESEL). In the Streitwolf Case, where the boy was nineteen years of age, the court said: "It appears that the application to the court of chancery was virtually for an order compelling the husband, against his own judgment, by way of supporting his wife pending suit, to make a grown-up son a lawyer and to pay the expense of his professional education. We do not find that the husband had committed himself to this course by his own conduct, or that he had become bound to take it by any previous adjudication. For reasons already stated, we think that the order appealed from was an undesirable extension of a power that exists primarily for the protection of the wife. The son's ambition in the direction of a liberal education is in itself commendable, but upon the facts now before us, and at this stage of the suit, the father cannot be forced to gratify that ambition without making an unwise exception to a good rule."

In the English case of Blandford v. Blandford, L. R. [1892] Prob. (Eng.) 148, under a statute authorizing the court, in or after a final decree of dissolution of marriage, to make such provision as it may deem just and proper with respect to the custody, maintenance, and education of the children of the marriage, the court, on an application by the divorced wife for maintenance of a son nineteen years old, said: "It is perfectly clear, on principle and authority, that if I were dealing with the first of the matters mentioned in the sections—that is, with custody—I should have no power to make an order as to the custody of a child who had attained the age of sixteen years. When we come to the next matter—education—the sections can only be intended to apply to the education of young persons, and certainly are not intended to apply to the education of a child as long as he or she may live. Am I to put a different interpretation on the sections in regard to maintenance? My own opinion is that the sections dealing with the custody, maintenance, and education of children apply only to infants, and deal with all these matters exactly in the same way. It is clear, therefore, I think, on the authorities, that there is no jurisdiction in the court to make such an order as that asked for."

In Mack v. Mack (1919) 91 Or. 514, 179 Pac. 558, the court, in modifying a decree, said and held: "The statute authorizes the court, when the marriage is dissolved, to provide for the nurture and education of the minor children of the marriage. When such a child reaches the age of majority he is no longer a ward of the court, and such provision should cease to be effective."

But where, by contract embodied in a decree of divorce, the defendant had agreed to give his son and daughter a college education, the court, in holding that this duty continued after the minority of the children, and in sustaining a decree in an action to modify and construe the earlier decree, held that $675 per year for the college education of each child was proper, and said: "We think that, by the contract and decree defendant having agreed to give his daughter a college education, this duty and contract continue until performed, whether he dies, or whether the daughter reaches majority. This applies to both the children in this case." Dunham v. Dunham (1920) — Iowa, —, 178 N. W. 551.

In Tribe v. Tribe (1921) — Utah, —, 202 Pac. 213, where a decree of divorce required the defendant (the husband), inter alia, to pay the sum of $20 per month "for the support, care, maintenance, and education of said minor child, George Vernon Tribe, for a period of ten months in each year of his minority, beginning September 1st and ending June 30th," the court in a contempt proceeding refused to modify the decree on the ground that such minor was earning a living and did not attend school continuously during the ten-month period. It appeared that said minor, as the court states it, "was desirous of adapting himself for what he calls an automobile engineer; that, in view that the defendant failed to pay the $20 per month alimony, he could not accomplish his purpose without earning additional sums of money. It was also made to appear that for the purpose aforesaid he paid his matriculation fee to the University of Utah, but in view that the expenses were so far in excess of his means, he soon had to leave that institution, and when he left it he was indebted, and thus was compelled to earn money to pay those debts. . . . It was also shown that he could not accomplish his purpose of becoming an automobile engineer by merely attending the common schools of Ogden; that for a time, while he was employed at $80 per month, he took a training course under a special teacher. . . . The evidence is also to the effect that, in view of the mother's inability to help George Vernon Tribe, and that the defendant refuses to pay the amount due under the original decree, the boy was compelled to work to earn a livelihood. It is then shown that he could obtain employment, and that he worked only a little in excess of nine months between the time the original decree was entered and this proceeding was commenced; that he had saved about $60, which, as he says, 'was put away so that I could go to school.' The boy also testified that he attended school at Ogden a few months after the original decree was entered, and before this proceeding was commenced."

In Hillard v. Anderson (1902) 197 Ill. 549, 64 N. E. 326, the court held that it was proper that a father, on being divorced from his wife for his fault, should be required by decree to pay sufficient for the education of his daughter, fourteen years of age, until her educational course was completed at the boarding school to which he had sent her prior to the divorce.

It may be noted that, in Cline v. Cline (1918) 183 Iowa, 1255, 166 N. W. 698, where a divorce decree had been modified so as to take the custody of a girl six or seven years old from its mother, giving it to a third party, and requiring the child to be placed at a school or institution to be designated by the court, and, providing that the father pay $40 per month for her maintenance and education, the appellate court struck out the provisions changing the custody of the child and committing it to a school, etc., and reduced the monthly sum to $30 to be charged on the father's estate, he having died pending the appeal. B. B. B.

MARY H. EMORY et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

W. H. BAILEY et al.

Texas Supreme Court—November 2, 1921.

(— Tex. —, 234 S. W. 660.)

Evidence — copy of ancient deed — effect of affidavit of forgery.

1. Under a statute permitting the use in evidence of a certified copy of the record of a lost deed if the original would be admissible, such copy may be admitted after the deed has been on record for more than thirty years, if it is free from anything suspicious on its face, notwithstanding the filing of an affidavit charging the original to be forged.

[See note on this question beginning on page 908.]

— of seal on corporate deed — scroll on record copy.

2. That a corporate deed was under seal, as required by statute, is shown by the fact that the copy in the public record has a scroll opposite the signature to represent such seal.

— corporate seal as evidence of authenticity of act.

3. The presence of the corporate seal upon an instrument purporting to be a deed of a corporation is prima facie evidence that the instrument was the duly authorized act of the corporation.

[See 7 R. C. L. 668.]

— registration of deed — production from proper custody.

4. The prompt registration of a deed is not less efficacious upon the question of its admissibility in evidence than its production from proper custody.

— proof that instrument was ancient.

5. A certified copy from a record of a deed made more than thirty years before the copy is offered in evidence shows conclusively that the instrument was in existence for the period necessary to make it an ancient instrument.

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Harris County (Masterson, J.), in favor of defendants in an action brought to try title to certain land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. L. C. Kemp, for plaintiffs in error:

Where a deed has been recorded, in the absence of anything to rebut the presumption, it will be presumed that the deed is properly of record.

Crain v. Huntington, 81 Tex. 615, 17 S. W. 243; Catlett v. Starr, 70 Tex. 489, 7 S. W. 844; Ballard v. Perry, 28 Tex. 364; Hines v. Thorn, 57 Tex. 98; Ballaster v. Mann, 86 Tex. 645, 26 S. W. 494; Trimble v. Edwards, 84 Tex. 497, 19 S. W. 772.

In executing a sealed instrument by a corporation, it is not necessary that the instrument recite that the seal has been affixed, but it is sufficient that it should appear otherwise that the seal has been affixed.

Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677; Mitcheney v. Holmes, 117 Mo. 185, 22 S. W. 1076; 10 Cyc. 1012.

Where a county clerk has recorded an instrument, and has placed on the record, in the proper place for a seal, a scroll, it will be presumed, in favor of the act of the clerk who recorded the instrument, that the instrument bore the proper seal to entitle it to record.

Ballard v. Perry, 28 Tex. 364; Crain v. Huntington, 81 Tex. 615, 17 S. W. 243; Stephens, v. Motl, 81 Tex. 115, 16 S. W. 731; Chamberlain v. Pybas, 81 Tex. 511, 17 S. W. 50; Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677; Caudle v. Williams, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 51 S. W. 560; Catlett v. Starr, 70 Tex. 489, 7 S. W. 844; Hines v. Thorn, 57 Tex. 98; Ballaster

v. Mann, 86 Tex. 643, 26 S. W. 494; Trimble v. Edwards, 84 Tex. 497, 19 S. W. 772; Monroe v. Arledge, 23 Tex. 481; Mitcheney v. Holmes, 117 Mo. 185, 22 S. W. 1076.

Where a deed has been executed in behalf of a corporation by the proper officer or officers, it will be presumed that the device annexed, whatever it may be, is the common seal of the corporation.

10 Cyc. 1012; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5073.

Where it appears in the body of a deed that a corporation is the grantor, the deed will be regarded as the deed of the corporation although the officers signed their names with their official additions instead of signing the name of the corporation, by themselves as president and secretary.

Muller v. Boone, 63 Tex. 93; Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 368, 18 S. W. 734; 3 Cook, Corp. 7th ed. § 722, p. 2549.

Where the officers of a corporation are the proper officers to execute a deed, and have executed a deed purporting to be the act of the corporation, the law presumes a precedent authorization, regularly and rightfully made, and it is not necessary to produce evidence of such authority from the records of the corporation.

Adams v. Dignowity, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 28 S. W. 373; Quinlan v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 89 Tex. 356, 34 S. W. 738; National Bank v. Goolsby, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 362, 35 S. W. 713; Brownwood Ice Co. v. York Mfg. Co.

— Tex. Civ. App. —, 37 S. W. 339; Catlett v. Starr, 70 Tex. 489, 7 S. W. 844; Magee v. Paul, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 159 S. W. 330; Houston Oil Co. v. Payne, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 886; Coleman v. Luettcke, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 1120; 10 Cyc. 1003.

Where a deed is executed by the proper officers of a corporation, and the seal of the corporation is affixed, the authority of the officers acting to execute the deed will be presumed.

Catlett v. Starr, 70 Tex. 489, 7 S. W. 844; Magee v. Paul, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 159 S. W. 330; 10 Cyc. 1003.

Where a deed is admissible in evidence as an ancient instrument, the power under which it purports to have been executed will be presumed.

Simmonds v. Simmonds, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 79 S. W. 632; Harris v. Nations, 79 Tex. 413, 15 S. W. 262; Jones v. Neal, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 412, 98 S. W. 420; Arthur v. Ridge, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 137, 89 S. W. 17; Hill v. Conrad, 91 Tex. 341, 43 S. W. 789.

Where a certified copy of a properly recorded instrument which has been recorded more than thirty years is offered in evidence, it is an ancient instrument and proves itself; and such certified copy is not rendered inadmissible by the filing of an affidavit of forgery.

Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 688; Cox v. Cock, 59 Tex. 524; Robertson v. Du Bose, 76 Tex. 6, 13 S. W. 300; Warren v. Fredericks, 76 Tex. 652, 13 S. W. 643; Rudolph v. Tinsley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 213; Crosby v. Ardoin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 713.

Where a certified copy of a duly recorded instrument is offered in evidence, the statutory affidavit of loss of the original is sufficient, and it is not necessary to prove search for the original.

Williamson v. Work, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 369, 77 S. W. 267; Butler v. Brown, 77 Tex. 345, 14 S. W. 186; Foot v. Silliman, 77 Tex. 268, 13 S. W. 1032.

Mr. McDonald Meachum also for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. S. H. Brashear, for defendants in error:

The evidence was insufficient to prove execution of the paper in question, or to admit it as an ancient instrument.

Joske v. Irvine, 91 Tex. 582, 44 S. W. 1059; Belcher v. Fox, 60 Tex. 527; Baldwin v. Goldfrank, 88 Tex. 249, 31 S. W. 1066; Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex.

688; Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 Tex. 372; Hill v. Taylor, 77 Tex. 295, 14 S. W. 367; Luckie v. Watt, 77 Tex. 262, 13 S. W. 1035; Craddock v. Merrill, 2 Tex. 496.

Where plaintiffs' title depended upon a deed from the Washington County Railroad Company, and an affidavit of forgery of said paper was filed by defendants, and plaintiffs offered only a certified copy in evidence, without showing any search or inquiry for the original, or its loss or destruction, it was not error for the court to sustain an objection to said deed upon these grounds, and to instruct a verdict for defendants.

Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 Tex. 372; Hill v. Taylor, 77 Tex. 295, 14 S. W. 367; Luckie v. Watt, 77 Tex. 262, 14 S. W. 1037.

The testimony does not show that the paper was sealed by the corporate seal of the supposed corporation, or that it was sealed by any seal whatever. Nor does it show that a certain mark appearing on the record was anything more than an indication that the seal was lacking, or that such record was intended to represent a faithful copy of what appeared on the original.

Texas Consol. Compress & Mfg. Asso. Co. v. Dublin Compress & Mfg. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 38 S. W. 409; Stooksbury v. Swan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 21 S. W. 696, affirmed in 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963; Taylor v. Harrison, 47 Tex. 458, 26 Am. Rep. 304; Holliday v. Cromwell, 26 Tex. 194; Shepherd v. Burkhalter, 13 Ga. 443, 58 Am. Dec. 523; Todd v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. 118 N. Y. 337, 23 N. E. 301; Pringle v. Dunn, 37 Wis. 449, 19 Am. Rep. 772; Isham v. Bennington Iron Co. 19 Vt. 230.

The instrument not having been executed under the seal of the supposed corporation, and not being shown to have been executed by its president, and not having been acknowledged or proven, as required by law, was not entitled to record, and a certified copy of the record was not admissible in evidence.

Den ex dem. Osborne v. Tunis, 25 N. J. L. 633.

Ever presuming that the seal of the supposed corporation was attached to the paper, a further presumption of an authorization by the governing body to execute the same cannot be built upon such first presumption.

Baldwin v. Goldfrank, 88 Tex. 249,

31 S. W. 1064; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Porter, 73 Tex. 304, 11 S. W. 324.

The instrument, not being signed by and in the name of the supposed corporation, and not purporting to be signed by it, will not be considered as the act or deed of such supposed corporation.

Brinley v. Mann, 2 Cush. 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669; Isham v. Bennington Iron Co. 19 Vt. 230; Clark v. Hodge, 116 N. C. 761, 21 S. E. 562; Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. 334; Hatch v. Barr, 1 Ohio, 390; Elliott, Contr. 3895, 3898; 10 Cyc. 1037-1079.

The certified copy of the instrument was inadmissible, in the absence of evidence showing, or tending to show, an authorization thereof by the board of directors or other governing body of the supposed corporation, or of evidence from which an authorization might be presumed.

Mt. Sterling & J. Turnp. Road Co. v. Looney, 1 Met. (Ky.) 550, 71 Am. Dec. 491; Mathias v. White Sulphur Springs Asso. 19 Mont. 359, 48 Pac. 624; Des Moines Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Tilford Mill. Co. 9 S. D. 542, 70 N. W. 839; Lyndon Mill Co. v. Lyndon Literary & Biblical Inst. 63 Vt. 581, 25 Am. St. Rep. 783, 22 Atl. 575.

Greenwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs in error brought an action against defendants in error to try the title to 640 acres of land in Montgomery county, being section 11, patented by the state of Texas to the Washington County Railroad Company.

Plaintiffs in error, having introduced in evidence a patent to the land from the state to the Washington County Railroad Company, or its assigns, dated April 3, 1877, offered in evidence a certified copy of a deed, dated March 7, 1862, to the land certificate on which the patent issued, from the Washington County Railroad Company to G. R. Healy, which was signed by "J. W. McDade, Prest." and by "A. G. Comp-ton, Secty.," and which was filed for record March 22, 1862, and recorded March 24, 1862. The certified copy disclosed a circular scroll to the left of the signatures at the end of the deed, and it was proven that the scroll appeared in like manner on the deed record. The certified copy had been filed among the papers of the suit for more than three days, and due notice of its filing had been given, and plaintiffs in error had caused to be filed an affidavit of loss of the original deed.

The defendants in error objected to the admission in evidence of the certified copy of the deed on grounds which may be summarized as follows: First. That the deed was invalid to convey the title of the railroad company, because it did not bear the company's seal, and no authority for its execution was shown from the board of directors or other governing board of the company. Second. That the certified copy was not admissible as a copy of a deed duly recorded, because the deed, being without the seal of the railroad company, was not properly authenticated for record, and because, the defendants in error having filed an affidavit charging that the original was forged, the certified copy was not admissible without proving the execution of the original, in the absence of evidence that the deed had been so acted on as to furnish corroboration of its genuineness. The trial court sustained the objections and refused to admit the certified copy in evidence, and excluded evidence that plaintiffs in error were the heirs of G. R. Healy, the grantee in the deed. The trial court thereupon instructed a verdict for defendants in error.

The honorable court of civil appeals at Galveston affirmed the trial court's judgment, deciding that there was no error in excluding the certified copy of the deed, because there was no proof of authority from the railroad company to its president and secretary for the execution of the deed, and because there was no proof that the grantee or his heirs had asserted any claim under the deed. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 181 S. W. 831.

The principal question for our determination is as to the correctness of the conclusion that there was no error in refusing to admit in evidence the certified copy of the deed, which was an essential link in the title of plaintiffs in error. The special act of the legislature for the incorporation of the Washington County Railroad Company, with power to construct and operate a railroad, provided that "all conveyances and contracts executed in writing, signed by the president and countersigned by the treasurer, or any other officer duly authorized by the directors, under the seal of the company, and in pursuance of a vote of the directors, shall be valid and binding." 4 Gammel's Laws of Texas, p. 349.

The Act of February 2, 1858, which dispensed with the necessity for scrolls or private seals, to give validity to conveyances and other written instruments, excepted from its operation such conveyances or other instruments as might be made by corporations. Paschal's Dig. art. 5087. The Act of 1905 provided that all conveyances theretofore made by a corporation by deed, sealed with the common seal of the corporation, and signed by the president or presiding member or trustee of the corporation, or in common form, without seal, by its attorney in fact, where the instrument constituting the attorney in fact had been executed in the manner mentioned, should be held valid in so far as regards the manner of their execution. Vernon's Sayles's Civil Stat. (Tex.) art. 1173. Beyond any doubt a deed from the Washington County Railroad Company, under its corporate seal, and signed by its president and secretary, was in the form required to pass the company's title, under the special act creating the corporation, and the general law.

We cannot sustain the contention that the certified copy offered in evidence failed to disclose that the deed to Healy was under seal. The copy does not reasonably admit of any other interpretation than that the deed bore the seal of the corporation. The scroll which the clerk put on the record, to the left of the signatures to the deed, was a proper representation of the corporate seal, and as clearly shows its presence on the original instrument as would the word "Seal" or the letters "L. S." The United States Supreme Court made the observation that one would not expect to find an impression where a seal had been copied, but "merely a scroll, representing the original seal." Jacksonville, M. P. R. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 521, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 381. With our law dispensing with individual seals and requiring corporate seals, we could not presume otherwise than that the seal attached was that of the corporation, instead of the individuals whose signatures were appended to the deed.

The seal was prima facie evidence that the deed was the duly authorized act of the railroad company. It implied that the board of directors had empowered the president and secretary to make the very sale and transfer which were evidenced by the instrument on which it was impressed. Catlett v. Starr, 70 Tex. 489, 7 S. W. 844; Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 367, 18 S. W. 734; Quinlan v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 89 Tex. 380, 34 S. W. 738; 3 Cook, Corp. § 722, and note 1.

Thompson says: "It [the seal] is presumptive or prima facie evidence that the deed is the deed of the corporation, and that the officers who signed, sealed, and acknowledged it were duly authorized so to do, and the instrument is therefore admissible in evidence, if otherwise relevant. In other words, the seal carries with it prima facie evidence of the assent of the corporation to the deed." 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5105.

It is to be noted that the presumption that the deed of a corporation, signed by the president, under the corporate seal, is authorized, may

Evidence—of seal on corporate deed—scroll on record copy.

—corporate seal as evidence of authenticity of act.

be overcome by proof, as was done in the case of Fitzhugh v. Franco-Texas Land Co. 81 Tex. 311, 16 S. W. 1078. The deed here tendered in evidence was attacked by no extrinsic evidence. It was presumptively the act of the corporation, and it carried on its face that which entitled it, in the absence of opposing proof, to be regarded as the binding act and deed of the railroad company.

Under the express language of the Act of April 6, 1861, as supplemented by the Act of January 14, 1862, the deed was regularly authenticated for record. The language of the act was: "That when any deed, transfer, or other instrument of writing, executed by the president of any railroad company, which has or may be incorporated by the laws of this state, shall be attested by the seal of said company, it shall be considered sufficiently authenticated to authorize the clerk of the county court to record the same." 5 Gam-mel's Laws of Texas, pp. 373, 501.

Hence the certified copy was that of a deed duly recorded for more than thirty years. Defendants in error insist that to render such a certified copy admissible in evidence, against an affidavit charging the original to be forged, it must be accompanied by some corroborative proof of the genuineness of the original.

The making and filing of the affidavit of forgery did not deprive plaintiffs in error of the right, expressly conferred by article 3700 of the Revised Statutes, to have "a certified copy of the record . . . admitted in evidence in like manner as the original could be," on filing proper affidavit of loss of, or inability to procure, the original deed, and after proper filing and notice of filing of the certified copy.

An original deed is admissible in evidence as an ancient instrument when the following requirements are satisfied: First, when it comes from the proper custody; second, when it is free from suspicion; and, third, when it is shown to have been in existence more than thirty years.

The decision in Ammons v. Dwyer, 78 Tex. 649 to 651, 15 S. W. 1049, established the rule that when the foregoing requirements are fulfilled, it is not necessary, in order to secure the admission of the ancient deed, to go on and adduce other proof in corroboration of the deed's genuineness, such as possession or claim thereunder. The rule, as laid down in Ammons v. Dwyer, supra, has been frequently and properly followed. Holt v. Maverick, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 650, 23 S. W. 752; Ken-nard v. Withrow, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 28 S. W. 227; Timmony v. Burns, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 42 S. W. 134; Woodward v. Keck, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 97 S. W. 854.

Since the original deed would have been admissible, on its production from proper custody, free from anything suspicious on its face, on proof of its existence for more than thirty years, we think no sufficient reason can be given for refusing to admit in like manner the certified copy, offered by plaintiffs in error.

—copy of ancient deed—effect of affidavit of forgery.

Coming from proper custody tends to establish the genuineness of a written instrument: First, because possession of the instrument by those claiming thereunder indicates that it was actually delivered to the grantee; and, second, because care taken to preserve an instrument indicates that it had real value. The prompt —registration of deed—production of instrument cannot be held less efficacious in these respects than production from proper custody.

registration of an instrument cannot be held less efficacious in these respects than production from proper custody. As said by Chief Justice Stayton, in Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 688: "The fact that it was recorded raises the presumption that it was delivered."

And it would be hard to adduce better evidence of care to have and keep an instrument available as a muniment of title than that afforded by its registration.

With an original deed lost, a certified copy is the best evidence of what was disclosed on the face of the deed, and when a certified copy discloses no notation by the recorder, or anything else to excite suspicion, no other presumption would be warranted than that the deed exhibited "an honest face;" and thus the test is met that the certified copy is of an instrument free from suspicion.

The record of a deed affords conclusive evidence of its existence at the date of its registration. Hence the certified copy from a record made more than thirty years before the trial shows beyond question the deed's existence for the period requisite to make it an ancient instrument. So we hold that where an instrument was duly recorded soon after its date, and has remained of record for more than thirty years, and where nothing is disclosed upon its face, as recorded, to impeach its genuineness, article 3700 of the Revised Statutes requires that a certified copy thereof be admitted in evidence, under the statutory affidavit, filing, and notice of filing, without the necessity of further proof of the original's execution or genuineness. This is in accord with the conclusion announced by this court in Brown v. Simpson, 67 Tex. 231, 2 S. W. 646. For, it is there declared that "a record of an instrument properly registered for thirty years, having been made upon acknowledgment of the grantor, or by proof of one of the subscribing witnesses, before an officer charged with the duty of taking such acknowledgment or proof, would seem to possess a higher degree of authenticity than an original deed offered as an ancient document at common law, upon which no such acknowledgment or proof appeared. . . . If the record had been shown by any competent evidence to have been made more than thirty years before the trial, then there would have been evidence of an ancient document, with the corroborative proof derived from the certificate of acknowledgment, and we would have had a case, as we think, covered by the statute cited. . . . In order for the copy to take the place of the original when the latter is lost, the registration must be shown to be ancient, just as the deed must appear to be ancient, where the deed itself is offered."

Of course, it can make no difference that another method than acknowledgment by the grantor or proof by a witness was used to authenticate a deed. The deed here offered, being that of a corporation, executed by the president, was required to be authenticated, not by acknowledgment or proof, but by the seal of the corporation. The gist of the decision in Brown v. Simpson, supra, is that no further proof of the original's genuineness should be exacted, to render admissible a certified copy of a deed duly recorded for more than thirty years, unimpeached by anything appearing on the face of the record, than is furnished by the deed's authentication for record and by the ancient record. See also Holmes v. Corryell, 58 Tex. 687; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Stealey, 66 Tex. 470, 1 S. W. 186; Schunior v. Russell, 83 Tex. 95, 18 S. W. 484; Wacaser v. Rockland Sav. Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 738.

The trial court should have admitted the certified copy in evidence, and should not have directed a verdict for defendants in error on the evidence introduced by the plaintiffs in error.

The judgments of the District Court and of the Court of Civil Appeals are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court for a new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied December 7, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Effect of filing affidavit of forgery against ancient deed.

I. Admissibility of deed in evidence:

a. Rule in Texas, 908.

b. Rule in Georgia:

1. Original deed, 911.

2. Copy of deed, 912.

II. Burden of proof as to genuineness of deed, 912.

I. Admissibility of deed in evidence.

a. Rule in Texas.

The rule in Texas seems to be that an ancient deed is admissible in evidence without proof of execution in spite of the fact that an affidavit has been filed attacking it for forgery, and this seems to be true whether the instrument offered is an original deed or a copy thereof. Holmes v. Coryell (1883) 58 Tex. 680; Shinn v. Hicks (1887) 68 Tex. 277, 4 S. W. 486; Parker v. Chancellor (1889) 73 Tex. 475, 11 S. W. 503; Stooksbury v. Swan (1893) 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963; McWhirter v. Allen (1892) 1 Tex. Civ. App. 649, 20 S. W. 1007; Chamberlain v. Showalter (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 23 S. W. 1017; Timmony v. Burns (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 42 S. W. 133; Crosby v. Ardoin (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 709; Wacaser v. Rockland Sav. Bank (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 737; Conrad v. Hughes (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 1181. And see the reported case (EMORY v. BAILEY, ante, 901). Compare Cox v. Cock (1883) 59 Tex. 521; Houston v. Blythe (1883) 60 Tex. 506.

In Holmes v. Coryell, supra, an action of trespass to try title, it appeared that one of the defendants had filed an affidavit of forgery against a copy of a deed more than thirty years old, which was one of the links in the plaintiff's chain of title. The court pointed out that, according to statute, any recorded instrument, on compliance with certain circumstances, may be admitted in evidence without proof of its execution, unless an affidavit of forgery is filed against the instrument by the opposite party, or by some person for him. The affidavit of forgery, it was said, simply remitted the party offering the copy to the common-law method of proving the execution of the instrument before it might be used as evidence. But an ancient deed, coming from the proper custody, free from suspicion, etc., would, it was remarked, be admitted in evidence without proof of its execution. After reciting the facts surrounding the copy of the deed introduced in evidence in the case at bar, facts which tended to establish its claim to the prerogatives of an ancient deed, the court said: "The certified copy of the deed, coming surrounded with such facts, was properly admitted in evidence, for, under the common-law rules of evidence, the deed would prove itself; and under given circumstances the statute of this state, as before said, declares that 'a certified copy of the record of any such instrument shall be admitted in like manner as the original could be.' When offered, being more than thirty years old, it stood as would a deed of less age after it had been proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, and upon those who sought to attack its genuineness rested the burden of proof."

In Shinn v. Hicks (1887) 68 Tex. 277, 4 S. W. 486, an affidavit was filed alleging that one of the plaintiffs believed that certain words, found on the face of a certificate forming part of a chain of title, were forged. The court considered that the instrument, by virtue of its age and the circumstances under which it was produced, was admissible in evidence as an ancient deed without proof of its execution. It was said: "It stood before the court, under the rules of the common law, as though its execution had been proved; and had there been no evidence before the court, other than the instrument itself, we are of the opinion that an inspection of it would have required the court to admit it, notwithstanding the affidavit of forgery, made by a person who had no knowledge of the instrument, on which a reasonable belief that it was not, in its entirety, genuine, could have been based, and who was unable to prove a single fact tending to show that the entire instrument was not, when offered, just as it was nearly half a century before, when it left the hands of the Secretary of War. The certificate was properly admitted in evidence."

In Parker v. Chancellor (1889) 73 Tex. 475, 11 S. W. 503, wherein an affidavit was made that a certain deed was believed to be a forgery, the court said: "Such an affidavit cannot in any wise control or affect the admissibility of an ancient instrument. With or without such an affidavit any proper evidence may be introduced to contest its validity."

In McWhirter v. Allen (1892) 1 Tex. Civ. App. 649, 20 S. W. 1007, it was shown that a transfer of a portion of a certificate locating land was dated 1848, and that it was recorded in 1853, and filed in the land office the same year. The court considered that the admission of the transfer in evidence as an ancient instrument was authorized by these facts, even though an affidavit had been made, impeaching the genuineness thereof.

In Stooksbury v. Swan (1893) 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963, it was pointed out that the question of admissibility was, in all cases, for the court, and it was said: "It is true, where a deed is offered as an ancient instrument, that an affidavit of forgery does not make it necessary, in order to entitle it to admission, that proof other than such as is requisite in such cases should be made."

In Chamberlain v. Showalter (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 23 S. W. 1017, an action of trespass to try title to certain land, the court said: "The defendant had in evidence no documentary title to the land in question unless the transfer of March 23, 1854, was properly admitted as an ancient instrument, and the other transfer duly proved." It appeared in that case that an affidavit of forgery had been made against these instruments, the statutory effect of which would ordinarily be to require proof of their execution as at common law. The court held, however, that, in case of an ancient instrument, it would be held to prevail over the affidavit of forgery, and to be admissible notwithstanding.

In Timmony v. Burns (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 42 S. W. 133, an action decided in 1897, the plaintiff and appellant urged that a certain transfer in the appellee's chain of title, made in 1846, should not have been admitted as an ancient instrument. It was held, however, that the affidavit of forgery, made as to the transfer in question, could not prevent the introduction thereof as an ancient instrument.

Crosby v. Ardoin (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 709, was an action of trespass to try title. The appellant filed an affidavit of forgery, attacking the authenticity of a certain transfer, a certified copy of which was offered in evidence. The instrument was dated 1839, purported to have been acknowledged in 1853, and was recorded, apparently, sometime in 1859 or 1860. The court said: "As affecting the question of the admissibility of this certified copy in evidence, the affidavit of forgery merely imposed upon appellees the burden of proving the instrument as at common law; it being an ancient instrument, recorded in El Paso county for over fifty years, and its authenticity corroborated by the acknowledgment certificate, the instrument proved itself, and the certified copy was admissible in evidence."

In Wacaser v. Rockland Sav. Bank (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 737, the instrument in question, against which an affidavit of forgery was filed, was a certified copy of a deed of trust of certain realty, dated and filed for registration in 1873. A statute was cited providing for the admission of certain recorded instruments without proof of execution, under certain circumstances, unless an affidavit of forgery was filed, with reference thereto. The court cited Holmes v. Coryell, supra, to the effect that the result of an affidavit of forgery, when filed against a certified copy of an ancient deed, was simply to remit the party to the common-law method of proving the execution of the instrument in order to permit of its introduction as evidence.

In Conrad v. Hughes (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 1181, it was considered that the record of a certain instrument or certified copy thereof was admissible without proof of execution of the instrument, by virtue of the provisions of a certain statute, and since the record was more than thirty years old, it was held that its admissibility was not affected by an affidavit of forgery filed by one of the defendants.

In Cox v. Cock (1883) 59 Tex. 521, an action to recover land, it appeared that, following the plaintiff's offer of what purported to be a deed, dated some forty years prior to the action, the defendant filed an affidavit charging that the instrument was a forgery. The lower court charged that the burden of proving the deed to be a forgery rested on the defendant. This was considered to be technically incorrect, although not erroneous under the facts as shown. The deed, it was said, was sufficiently proved to admit of its introduction in evidence as an ancient instrument. The court continued as follows: "When the proper affidavit is filed, as was done in this case, attacking the deed offered in evidence as a forgery, such a deed cannot be received in evidence without the usual proof of its execution; but when such proper proof is made, as was done in this case, it is not error to allow the deed to go to the jury as prima facie a genuine instrument. The impeaching affidavit has served its purpose. It has compelled the party claiming under the deed to prove its execution in accordance with the rules of evidence, and thus remove the suspicion cast on it by the affidavit of forgery. It throws upon the shoulders of the party offering the deed the burden of proving its execution in accordance with the rules of common law."

In the reported case (EMORY v. BAILEY), on the objection of the defendant, who had filed an affidavit of forgery, a certified copy of a deed, against which the affidavit was filed, was refused admission as evidence. This deed had been recorded for more than thirty years, but it was insisted by the defendant that, to make a certified copy thereof admissible against an affidavit of forgery, there must be proof of the genuineness of the original. It was pointed out, however, that, under the statute, the plaintiff was entitled, under certain circumstances, to have a certified copy of the record admitted in like manner as the original could be. The court says that the original was considered to be an ancient instrument, and that an ancient instrument, when coming from the proper custody, and free from suspicion, was admissible without further proof to corroborate its genuineness. So it is held that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the certified copy of the deed in evidence.

In Houston v. Blythe (1883) 60 Tex. 506, the defendant attempted to attack a title by offering in evidence a "testimonio copy," or second original of the title, bearing a date which it was claimed would invalidate it, as having been granted after the closing of the land office. This paper was assailed as a forgery by the sworn statements of the plaintiffs and the depositions of many witnesses. The instrument in question bore the date 1835; but the court did not speak of the deed as an ancient document. There was objection to the introduction in evidence of this testimonio. It was held that, even after so great a lapse of time, evidence of some kind should, when demanded, be offered to explain the nonproduction of assisting witnesses. It was said: "This matter, together with proof as to the death, and the signature of the officer executing the instrument, and some explanation of the interlineations and erasures, if there be any of a serious character, should always be required by the court when specially demanded and insisted on, as in this case, before the instrument that is charged to be forged should be allowed to be exhibited and read as part of the evidence in the case, and then with full and proper explanations to the jury from the court that the mere admission of the instrument in evidence, under such circumstances, did not relieve the jury from the duty of passing, with all the evidence before them, upon the question of its genuineness, and deciding, under all the facts in the case, whether it was in fact a forged instrument or not."

b. Rule in Georgia.

1. Original deed.

In Georgia an ancient deed, when offered in the original, is admissible in evidence without proof of its execution, regardless of an affidavit of forgery filed against it. Thus, in Matthews v. Castleberry (1871) 43 Ga. 346, an action of ejectment, the defendant relied on a deed which was more than thirty years old at the time of the trial. The plaintiff made an affidavit that it was a forgery. An issue was thereupon made up and tried as to the genuineness of the alleged deed. The court pointed out that it was provided in the Code that "a deed more than thirty years old, having the appearance of genuineness on inspection, and coming from the proper custody, if possession has been consistent therewith, is admissible in evidence without proof of execution," and also that "the subscribing witness must be produced in all cases except the following: (1st.) Ancient writings which prove themselves." It was held that if the deed in question was an ancient deed, it was not subject to the application of the section providing for an issue on the affidavit of parties that a registered deed is a forgery to the best of their knowledge and belief.

Hill v. Nisbet (1877) 58 Ga. 587, involved a deed more than thirty years old, which, however, showed on its face signs of erasure and alteration. An affidavit of forgery was filed against this deed, but it was objected that the statute providing for the trial of an issue following such an affidavit did not apply to a deed over thirty years old. It was said: "We think that the act applies to all registered deeds . . . and that it puts the party offering such a deed upon proof that it is genuine. Certainly, where the deed itself shows on its face that it is not genuine,—where it bears the marks of a material alteration,—we hold that the section does apply. And this ruling is not in conflict with the decision of this court in Matthews v. Castleberry (1871) 43 Ga. 352; for there the deed appeared genuine on its face."

McArthur v. Morrison (1899) 107 Ga. 796, 34 S. E. 205, was an action of ejectment decided in 1899. At the trial the plaintiff offered in evidence a certain deed dated 1809, to which the defendant tendered an affidavit of forgery. The case was then continued, but, when it came on again for trial, objection was made to the offer in evidence of the same deed on the ground that its execution had not been proved. The plaintiff contended that the instrument in question was an ancient deed, coming from proper custody, that possession had been consistent therewith, and that the paper was free from suspicion. The court below apparently ruled that, since the deed had been recorded, the affidavit of forgery resulted in imposing on the plaintiff the burden of proving its execution, despite its age. On appeal it was held that the court erred in refusing to admit the deed in evidence without proof of its execution. It was pointed out that, if the deed possessed the requisites demanded by the statutes, viz., age, genuine appearance, production from the proper custody, and possession consistent therewith, it was entitled to the presumption which the law conclusively raised in its behalf, from its age; that the witnesses to its execution were dead. It was said: "To arrest it on its way to the jury by an affidavit of forgery would be to require the proof which the plain letter of the law has dispensed with as to such instruments." The court cited Matthews v. Castleberry, supra, to the effect that the issue provided by the Code did not apply to such an instrument. It was true, said the court, that in the case of Patterson v. Collier (1885) 75 Ga. 419, 58 Am. Rep. 472, there had been a remark as follows: "That an ancient deed may be attacked, like any other deed, for forgery, is well settled." But the court pointed out that in that case a certified copy, and not an original deed, was involved, and that it was doubtful whether the instrument could have been considered as an ancient document. So the court held that, with respect to an ancient instrument offered in evidence, no special issue of its genuineness could be raised by tendering an affidavit of forgery.

2. Copy of deed.

In Georgia, where the instrument offered in evidence is not the original ancient deed, but a copy or record thereof, it is not admissible without proof of execution if it has been attacked by an affidavit of forgery, the burden of proving the execution of the instrument being cast on the party offering it in evidence.

In McCall v. Bentley (1902) 114 Ga. 752, 40 S. E. 768, it was held that a certified copy of an ancient deed, when offered in evidence, may be met by an affidavit of forgery, whereupon the burden is on the party offering the copy to show the execution of the original.

In Bentley v. McCall (1904) 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645, the question for determination was whether the court had erred in admitting in evidence a certified copy of a deed under which the defendant claimed, and against which one of the plaintiffs had filed an affidavit of forgery. It was held that the result was to place on the defendant the burden of proving the execution of the original. It was pointed out that while the existence, etc., of a lost deed, may be proved by a certified copy of the record, this rule does not apply in case an affidavit of forgery is filed. In such a case the recording is of no effect, and actual proof of the genuineness of the original, as well as of its existence, must be made if a certified copy is offered. Nor is this affected by the fact that the original of the certified copy is more than thirty years old, for, said the court: "The rule in reference to ancient documents applies only to original papers, not to copies." It was held that the defendant had not carried the burden imposed by the filing of the affidavit of forgery, and that the court erred in admitting as evidence the certified copy.

In Chatman v. Hodnett (1907) 127 Ga. 360, 56 S. E. 439, the defendant offered in evidence the official record of a deed which seemed to have been made some forty years before it was recorded. In a headnote, the court quoted Bentley v. McCall, supra, to the effect that the burden of showing the existence of the original deed is on a party whose offer in evidence of a certified copy of a recorded deed is met by an affidavit of forgery, and this even though the original of the copy appears to be more than thirty years old.

II. Burden of proof as to genuineness of deed.

There seems to be a difference of opinion, in Texas, as to where lies the burden of proof of the genuineness of an ancient deed which has been assailed by an affidavit of forgery. There are several cases which hold that not only is an ancient deed admissible in evidence despite such an affidavit, but also that on those who attack its genuineness rests the burden of proof of their claim. There is some dissent from this principle, as will be seen from the cases of Stooksbury v. Swan, Crosby v. Ardoin, and Gann v. Roberts (Tex.), set out infra.

Holmes v. Coryell (1883) 58 Tex. 680, was an action of trespass to try title. The plaintiff tendered in evidence a copy of a deed more than thirty years old, against which was filed, by one of the defendants, an affidavit stating a belief that the original thereof was a forgery. Speaking of this copy, the court said: "When offered, being more than thirty years old, it stood as would a deed of less age after it had been proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, and upon those who sought to attack its genuineness rested the burden of proof."

In Shinn v. Hicks (1887) 68 Tex. 271, 4 S. W. 486, regarding a certificate which was considered an ancient instrument, the court was asked to charge as follows: "The plaintiffs have filed an affidavit of forgery to the words, 'by his attorney, T. D. Tomkins,' inserted in the certificate of George W. Lemoyne, and say that the same is a forgery, and were inserted without the authority of the said George W. Lemoyne, and the burden of proof is on the defendants to show that the said words were inserted therein by the said George W. Lemoyne or his authority; and unless you find from the evidence that the words were inserted in said certificate by the authority of said George W. Lemoyne, then you cannot presume that there was a power of attorney or authority from Lemoyne to T. D. Tomkins to secure and transfer his certificate, and you will find for plaintiffs." It was held that this charge was correctly refused, and that the jury were properly instructed that if the words were inserted by the Secretary of War, who issued the instrument in question, the presumption would be, after such a great lapse of time, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he acted within the scope of his authority; and that in such case the burden of proving that the words had been inserted through fraud, etc., was on the plaintiffs.

In Masterson v. Todd (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 24 S. W. 682, an affidavit of forgery was interposed to a deed dated 1850, recorded in 1887, and offered by the plaintiff in the chain of title introduced by him. It was held that if the instrument was admitted as an ancient instrument, the burden of proof to establish the forgery rested on the defendants notwithstanding the affidavit.

But in Stooksbury v. Swan (1893) 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963, the rights of the parties depended on the genuineness of a certain deed through which the defendants claimed, and against which an affidavit of forgery had been filed. The court below charged the jury, in part, as follows: "In determining whether or not the signature of Robert W. Hamilton to such deed is a forgery, you are charged that a deed over thirty years old is admitted as evidence before the jury without any other proof of its execution, and the affidavit of forgery filed herein does not require defendants to prove such deed to be genuine, but the burden of proving it to be a forgery is on the plaintiffs; but the fact that the deed is thirty years old, or over is not conclusive of its genuineness, but it can be shown to be a forgery by evidence, as could any other instrument; and the jury are to determine, from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, whether or not such deed is in fact genuine or a forgery." On appeal the court was particularly concerned with whether the following portion of the charge was calculated to mislead the jury: "The affidavit of forgery filed herein does not require defendants to prove such deed to be genuine, but the burden of proving it to be a forgery is on the plaintiffs." It was remarked that where evidence is introduced by the respective parties to a case, tending to prove and to disprove an issue of fact, there is no occasion to declare on whom the burden rests, since the question becomes one of preponderance of evidence, which is for the jury. It was held that by charging that the burden of proof that the deed was not genuine was on the plaintiffs, who opposed the instrument, the court below exercised the power to weigh the evidence, which was a violation of the statute. Such a declaration was tantamount to a holding that the evidence introduced on the admissibility of the deed proved, prima facie, its genuineness. It was said: "It is true, where a deed is offered as an ancient instrument, that an affidavit of forgery does not make it necessary, in order to entitle it to admission, that proof other than such as is requisite in such cases should be made; but the question of admissibility is, in all cases, for the court, while the weight to be given to the evidence on which it is admitted, as well as to the instrument itself, in so far as the question of genuineness goes, where there is a conflict in the evidence on this point, must in all cases ultimately be left to the decision of the jury."

In Crosby v. Ardoin (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 709, the appellant questioned the action of the court in refusing to submit to the jury the question whether the transfer of a certain certificate was genuine or a forgery. It was said: "While the burden of proof at all times rests upon the party claiming under the impeached instrument, yet the jury, in the absence of all proof sustaining the plea of forgery, could not find against the validity of the deed, and should be so instructed, where its genuineness has been prima facie established in some mode prescribed by common law."

Gann v. Roberts (1903) 32 Tex. Civ. App. 561, 74 S. W. 950, was an action of trespass to try title, decided in 1903. The defendant offered in evidence a copy of a deed, dated 1839. The plaintiff filed an affidavit of forgery in reply to the notice of the filing of the copy of the deed, together with an affidavit of the loss of the original. The court said: "An affidavit of forgery having been filed, it was error for the court to hold that the age of the record, a copy of which was offered in evidence, was conclusive evidence of the execution of the deed. The question of the genuineness of the deed should have been submitted to the jury under proper instruction." R. S.

ANTONIO CARPIO, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO.

New Mexico Supreme Court — July 20, 1921.

(— N. M. —, 199 Pac. 1012.)

Homicide — killing bystander — malice.

1. In a homicide case, where A shoots at B, and the bullet strikes C and kills him, the malice or intent follows the bullet.

[See note on this question beginning on page 917.]

Evidence — proof of murder.

2. A charge that murder was done wilfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly, and of malice aforethought, is sustained by proof that it was committed with a mind imbued with these qualities, though they were directed against a person other than the one killed.

[See 13 R. C. L. 745, 746.]

Appeal — review of instructions.

3. Instructions given by the court to the jury, not objected to in the court below, will not be reviewed upon appeal.

[See 2 R. C. L. 75; 14 R. C. L. 808.]

Headnotes by ROBERTS, Ch. J.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Grant County (Mechem, J.), convicting him of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

(— N. M. —, 199 Pac. 1012.)

Mr. David E. Grant, for appellant:
Variance in any material matter is fatal, and entitles defendant to an acquittal.

State v. Crogan, 8 Iowa, 523; Cronin v. State, 30 Tex. App. 278, 17 S. W. 410; Stone v. State, 115 Ala. 121, 22 So. 375; State v. McWhirter, 141 N. C. 809, 53 S. E. 734; State v. Ray, 92 N. C. 810.

An indictment in its allegations must state the actual facts, and not conclusions of law, intendments, or implications.

Territory v. Hubbell, 13 N. M. 579, 86 Pac. 747, 13 Ann. Cas. 848; State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 276; Rank v. People, 80 Ill. App. 40; Pettibone v. United States, 148 U. S. 197, 37 L. ed. 419, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542; People v. Kane, 161 N. Y. 380, 55 N. E. 946; State v. Meysenburg, 171 Mo. 1, 71 S. W. 229; State v. Fitts, 44 N. H. 621; Lasindo v. State, 2 Tex. App. 59; State v. Gallagher, 123 Iowa, 378, 98 N. W. 906; Gage v. State, 67 Ark. 308, 55 S. W. 165; 22 Cyc. 293.

Malice aforethought, deliberation, and premeditation must be proved as charged to convict the defendant.

People v. Knapp, 71 Cal. 1, 11 Pac. 793; State v. Walker, 9 Houst. (Del.) 464, 33 Atl. 227; State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38; State v. Johnson, 40 Conn. 136; State v. Reddington, 7 S. D. 368, 64 N. W. 170; 21 Cyc. 726.

And, where the name of a third person is a necessary and essential part of the description of an offense, a material variance is fatal.

McFarland v. State, 154 Ind. 442, 56 N. E. 910, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 715; Wolf v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 85 S. W. 8; Haygood v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 618, 103 S. W. 890; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 23 Ga. App. 67, 97 S. E. 550; People v. Anderson, 267 Ill. 75, 107 N. E. 840; Mitchell v. State, 63 Ind. 276; State v. Williams, 68 Ark. 241, 82 Am. St. Rep. 288, 57 S. W. 792; Jacobs v. State, 46 Fla. 157, 35 So. 66, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 712; Hankins v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 152, 122 S. W. 21.

The indictment, in the light of the proof submitted by the state, was defective and prejudicial to defendant.

Territory v. Hubbell, 13 N. M. 579, 86 Pac. 747, 13 Ann. Cas. 848; United States v. Medina, 15 N. M. 204, 103 Pac. 976; Wingard v. State, 13 Ga. 396; State v. Dougherty, 4 Or. 200; United States v. Burns, 54 Fed. 351; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Harney v. State, 39 Md. 552; Com. v. Terry, 114 Mass. 263; State v. McGinnis, 126 Mo. 564, 29 S. W. 842; 22 Cyc. 295.

Mr. Harry S. Bowman, Attorney General, for the State:

Proof that the premeditation, deliberation, and malice, charged in the indictment to have been directed toward the deceased, were in fact directed at a person other than the deceased, does not constitute a variance and is not a ground for reversal.

State v. Brown, 4 Penn. (Del.) 120, 53 Atl. 354; Wheatley v. Com. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 436, 81 S. W. 687; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093; People v. Trebilcox, 149 Cal. 307, 86 Pac. 684; State v. Bell, 5 Penn. (Del.) 192, 62 Atl. 147; Brown v. State, 147 Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34; State v. Williams, 122 Iowa, 115, 97 N. W. 992; Thompson v. Com. 28 Ky. L. Rep. 642, 90 S. W. 221; State v. Payton, 90 Mo. 220, 2 S. W. 394; State v. Bectsa, 71 N. J. L. 322, 58 Atl. 933; State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069, 44 S. E. 391; Thornton v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 65 S. W. 1105; State v. Briggs, 58 W. Va. 291, 52 S. E. 218; 21 Cyc. 840; Wharton, Homicide, 3d ed. § 359; Ryan v. People, 50 Colo. 99, 114 Pac. 306, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1232; Brooks v. State, 141 Ark. 57, 216 S. W. 705; State v. Clark, 147 Mo. 20, 47 S. W. 886; Fooshee v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 666, 108 Pac. 554; State v. Foster, 136 Mo. 653, 38 S. W. 721; People v. Patini, 208 N. Y. 176, 101 N. E. 694.

The instructions upon murder in the first and second degrees correctly stated the law as applied to the facts.

People v. Patini, supra; Territory v. Edie, 6 N. M. 555, 30 Pac. 851; Miera v. Territory, 13 N. M. 192, 81 Pac. 586; Reed v. Com. 98 Va. 817, 36 S. E. 399; Ryan v. People, 50 Colo. 99, 114 Pac. 306, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1232; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093.

Roberts, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was tried and convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and appeals. On August 4, 1919, appellant attended a dance at the town of Central, Grant county, New Mexico. Appellant had asked a young lady, one Julia Olguin, to dance with him, and she had refused. Thereupon he told her that, if she would not dance with him, she could not dance with any other person. Later she was dancing with one Casamero Lucero, whereupon appellant caught hold of Lucero and told him that he could not dance with Miss Olguin. Lucero slapped or pushed appellant, and some other men pushed him outside the door and closed the door. Later Enfren Rios entered the ballroom, and told Lucero that Carpio, the appellant, wanted to see him outside. Lucero went out, followed by Rios, and approached appellant, and when he got to within 14 or 15 paces of appellant, appellant told him to stop; whereupon appellant fired at Lucero, and the bullet struck Rios and killed him. A second shot was fired at Lucero, wounding him, but not fatally.

The first point made upon which appellant relies for a reversal is that there was a variance between the allegation of the indictment and the proof adduced upon the part of the state, in that the indictment alleged that the defendant feloniously, wilfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, of his malice aforethought, and from a deliberate and premeditated design, then and there, unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of Enfren Rios, did assault and shoot the said Enfren Rios, from the effects of which assault and shot said Rios died; whereas the proof showed that the malice and deliberation were directed against Lucero, and not Rios. There is no merit in this argument, however, because under the law the malice and deliberation were transferred from Lucero to Rios. In other words, the malice followed the bullet. In Wharton on Homicide, 3d ed. § 359, the author says: "The rule is nearly, if not quite, universal that one who kills another, mistaking him for a third person whom he intended to kill, is guilty or innocent of the offense charged the same as if the fatal act had killed the person intended to be killed. . . . And a charge that a murder was done wilfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought, is sustained by proof that it was committed with a mind imbued with these qualities, though they were directed against a person other than the one killed."

Evidence—proof of murder.

In the case of Brooks v. State, 141 Ark. 57, 216 S. W. 705, a very late case, having been decided December 1, 1919 (reversed on other grounds), the defendant had been indicted for the murder of a girl named Irene Crawford, although the shot was directed at one John Law. It was insisted by the appellant that the indictment was defective, because it charged the defendant with killing Irene Crawford, with "the wilful, malicious, premeditated and deliberate intent then and there to kill and murder her, the said Irene Crawford."

The court held that there was no error in the indictment, stating: "An indictment for homicide in a case like this must allege the assault as made on the person killed. Where the accused shoots at one man and kills another, malice will be implied as to the latter; and a felonious intent is transferred, on the same ground, as where poison is laid to destroy one person and is taken by another. Hence, the felonious intent is thus transferred, and the indictment must be drawn accordingly. That is to say, it must allege that the assault was made on the party murdered, etc., in all respects just as if the party killed had been the party shot at."

In the case of State v. Clark, 147 Mo. 20, 47 S. W. 886, a question similar to that raised in the case of Brooks v. State, supra, was before the supreme court of Missouri; one count of the indictment charging that the design to kill was directed against one Lizzie Williamson, alias Lizzie Clark, while the person killed was Lizzie Hatch. The court held that count in the indictment was bad, upon the ground that the malice was transferred, and therefore that the indictment should have alleged the design to kill to have been directed against the deceased. This court said: "Where the party shoots at one man and kills another, malice will be implied as to the latter; and the felonious intent is transferred, on the same ground, where poison is laid to destroy one person and is taken by another.' . . . And where the felonious intent is thus transferred, the indictment must be drawn accordingly; to wit, it must allege that the assault was made on the party murdered, and so on, in all respects, just as if the party killed had been the party shot at. So are all the precedents in this state and elsewhere."

We know of no cases to the contrary. It follows that there is no merit in this contention.

The court gave to the jury instructions as to murder in the first and second degrees which followed the allegations of the indictment, that is to say, as to first degree; charged the jury that, if appellant deliberately and with malice aforethought shot at Rios intending to kill him, he would be guilty of murder in the first degree, and if the shooting was done without deliberation, but with malice aforethought, it would be murder in the second degree. The instructions were proper, as the malice was transferred, or followed the bullet. It would have been proper for the court to have explained in his instructions this principle to the jury.

The third point urged is that the indictment was defective in that it charged that the deliberation and malice aforethought were directed at Enfren Rios instead of Lucero, whom the appellant intended to kill. What we have said under the first proposition disposes of this point.

It is lastly urged that the court was in error in giving instruction No. 26 to the jury. This instruction, in effect, told the jury that if appellant shot at Lucero unlawfully, wilfully, and feloniously, not in his necessary or apparently necessary self-defense, and killed Rios, he would then be guilty of murder in the first degree. No objection was made to this instruction in the court below; consequently, it is not open to review here. This has been the uniform holding of this court. State v. Eaker, 17 N. M. 479, 131 Pac. 489; State v. Lucero, 17 N. M. 484, 131 Pac. 491; State v. Klasner, 19 N. M. 479, 145 Pac. 679, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 824; State v. Johnson, 21 N. M. 432, 155 Pac. 721; State v. Orfanakis, 22 N. M. 107, 159 Pac. 674; State v. Starr, 24 N. M. 180, 173 Pac. 674; State v. Whitener, 25 N. M. 20, 175 Pac. 870; State v. Parks, 25 N. M. 395, 183 Pac. 433.

David E. Grant, Esq., who so ably briefed and presented the case in this court, did so at the request of this court, and had no connection with the case in the court below.

The judgment will be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Reynolds and Parker, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Homicide by unlawful act aimed at another.

I. General rule, 917.

II. Illustrative cases:

a. Murder:

1. In general, 920.

2. Exceptions, 923.

b. Manslaughter, 927.

c. Justifiable homicide, 927.

d. Careless homicide, 928.

1. General rule.

With the exception of a very few courts, which, in interpreting local statutes, hold that the malice necessary to constitute murder in the first degree does not exist when a homicide is actually committed upon one person by a blow aimed at another, there is a singular unanimity among the decisions to the effect that such a homicide partakes of the quality of the original act, so that the guilt of the perpetrator of the crime is exactly what it would have been, had the blow fallen upon the intended victim instead of the bystander. Under this rule, the fact that the bystander was killed instead of the victim becomes immaterial, and the only question at issue is what would have been the degree of guilt if the result intended had been accomplished. The following cases hold that the degree of guilt is the same, whether the blow falls on the intended victim, or on the bystander:

United States.—United States v. Hart (1908; U. S. C. C. Fla.) 162 Fed. 192.

Alabama.—Isham v. State (1862) 38 Ala. 213; Tidwell v. State (1881) 70 Ala. 33; Wills v. State (1883) 74 Ala. 21; Gater v. State (1904) 141 Ala. 10, 37 So. 692; Bradberry v. State (1911) 170 Ala. 24, 54 So. 431.

Arkansas.—Ringer v. State (1905) 74 Ark. 262, 85 S. W. 410; Brooks v. State (1919) 141 Ark. 57, 216 S. W. 705.

California.—People v. Suesser (1904) 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093; People v. Trebilcox (1906) 149 Cal. 307, 86 Pac. 684.

Colorado.—Ryan v. People (1911) 50 Colo. 99, 114 Pac. 306, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1232; Henwood v. People (1913) 54 Colo. 188, 129 Pac. 1010.

Delaware.—State v. Evans (1893) 1 Marv. 477, 41 Atl. 136; State v. O'Niel (1875) Houst. Crim. Rep. 468; State v. Brown (1902) 4 Penn. 120, 53 Atl. 354; State v. Bell (1904) 5 Penn. 192, 62 Atl. 147.

Florida.—Pinder v. State (1891) 27 Fla. 370, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75, 8 So. 837.

Georgia.—McPherson v. State (1857) 22 Ga. 478; Durham v. State (1883) 70 Ga. 264; Butler v. State (1893) 92 Ga. 601, 19 S. E. 51; Charlon v. State (1899) 106 Ga. 400, 32 S. E. 347; Hamilton v. State (1907) 129 Ga. 747, 59 S. E. 803; Godbee v. State (1914) 141 Ga. 515, 81 S. E. 876; Strickland v. State (1911) 9 Ga. App. 552, 71 S. E. 919.

Illinois.—Butler v. People (1888) 125 Ill. 641, 1 L.R.A. 211, 8 Am. St. Rep. 423, 18 N. E. 338.

Iowa.—State v. Williams (1904) 122 Iowa, 115, 97 N. W. 992; State v. Mathews (1906) 133 Iowa, 398, 109

N. W. 616; State v. Huston (1919) — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 641.

Kentucky.—Golliher v. Com. (1865) 2 Duv. 163, 87 Am. Dec. 493; King v. Com. (1900) — Ky. —, 55 S. W. 685; Trabue v. Com. (1902) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2135, 66 S. W. 718; Wheatley v. Com. (1904) 26 Ky. L. Rep. 436, 81 S. W. 867; Com. v. Moore (1905) 121 Ky. 97, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 719, 123 Am. St. Rep. 189, 88 S. W. 1085, 11 Ann. Cas. 1024; Shelton v. Com. (1911) 145 Ky. 543, 140 S. W. 670.

Louisiana.—State v. Salter (1896) 48 La. Ann. 197, 19 So. 265; State v. Williams (1911) 129 La. 795, 56 So. 891.

Michigan.—People v. Gordon (1894) 100 Mich. 518, 59 N. W. 322; People v. Hodges (1917) 196 Mich. 546, 162 N. W. 966.

Missouri.—State v. Payton (1886) 90 Mo. 220, 2 S. W. 394; State v. Gilmore (1888) 95 Mo. 554, 8 S. W. 359, 912; State v. Renfrow (1892) 111 Mo. 589, 20 S. W. 299; State v. Pollard (1897) 139 Mo. 220, 40 S. W. 949; State v. Clark (1898) 147 Mo. 20, 47 S. W. 886; State v. Cavin (1906) 199 Mo. 154, 97 S. W. 573; State v. Solan (1918) — Mo. —, 207 S. W. 783; State v. Baker (1908) 209 Mo. 444, 108 S. W. 6.

Nevada.—State v. Raymond (1876) 11 Nev. 98.

New Jersey.—State v. Bectsa (1904) 71 N. J. L. 322, 58 Atl. 933.

New Mexico.—CARPIO v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 914.

New York.—People v. Miles (1894) 143 N. Y. 389, 38 N. E. 456; People v. Molineux (1901) 168 N. Y. 264, 62 L.R.A. 193, 61 N. E. 286; People v. Loose (1910) 199 N. Y. 505, 92 N. E. 100.

North Carolina.—State v. Fulkerson (1867) 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 233; State v. Lilliston (1906) 141 N. C. 857, 115 Am. St. Rep. 705, 54 S. E. 427.

Ohio.—Wareham v. State (1874) 25 Ohio St. 601.

Oregon.—State v. Johnson (1879) 7 Or. 210; State v. Murray (1884) 11 Or. 413, 5 Pac. 55; State v. Taylor (1913) 65 Or. 266, 132 Pac. 713.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Breyessee (1894) 160 Pa. 451, 40 Am. St. Rep.

729, 28 Atl. 824; Com. v. Johnson (1907) 219 Pa. 174, 68 Atl. 53; Com. v. Flanigan (1869) 8 Phila. 430.

South Carolina.—State v. Smith (1847) 33 S. C. L. (2 Strobbh.) 77, 47 Am. Dec. 589; State v. Kennedy (1910) 85 S. C. 146, 67 S. E. 152.

Texas.—Clark v. State (1885) 19 Tex. App. 495; Lankster v. State (1900) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 603, 56 S. W. 65; Powell v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 218; Hjeronymous v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 83 S. W. 708; Ricks v. State (1905) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 87 S. W. 1036; Nelson v. State (1905) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 274, 87 S. W. 143; McCullough v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 126, 136 S. W. 1055; Gaines v. State (1912) 67 Tex. Crim. Rep. 325, 148 S. W. 717; Whiten v. State (1913) 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 555, 160 S. W. 462; Hill v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 481, 168 S. W. 864; Spannell v. State (1918) 83 Tex. Crim. Rep. 418, 2 A.L.R. 593, 203 S. W. 357.

Washington.—State v. McGonigle (1896) 14 Wash. 594, 45 Pac. 20.

West Virginia.—State v. Briggs (1905) 58 W. Va. 291, 52 S. E. 218; State v. Clifford (1906) 59 W. Va. 30, 52 S. E. 981.

England.—Mansell & Herbert's Case (1555) 1 Dyer, 128, pl. 60, 73 Eng. Reprint, 279; Gore's Case (1611) 9 Coke, 81, 77 Eng. Reprint, 853; Rex v. Plummer (1701) J. Kelyng, 109, 84 Eng. Reprint, 1103; 12 Mod. 627, 88 Eng. Reprint, 1565; Williams's Case (1639) Wm. Jones, 432, 82 Eng. Reprint, 227; Rex v. Conner (1836) 7 Car. & P. 438; Reg. v. Saunders (1576) 2 Plowd. 473, 75 Eng. Reprint, 706, 1 Hale, P. C. 466.

Where a party, on their way at night to ship goods in violation of the revenue laws, were intercepted by government officers, and a fusee in the hands of one of the party was discharged, killing his companion, he was held not guilty because it was not found that the discharge was not a mere accident; but Holt, Ch. J., in the opinion, says that if he intended to discharge the weapon against an officer, though he had not killed the person intended, but another, the offense would be in the same degree as if he intended to kill the person killed. Rex v. Plummer (1701) J. Kelyng, 109, 84 Eng. Reprint, 1103, 12 Mod. 627, 88 Eng. Reprint, 1565.

The grade of the offense of one who, in shooting at one, accidentally kills another, is the same as it would have been had he killed his intended victim. State v. Raymond (1876) 11 Nev. 98.

In State v. Clark (1898) 147 Mo. 20, 47 S. W. 886, where the court was considering the sufficiency of the indictment, it states that, where an accused shoots at one man and kills another, malice will be implied as to the latter.

Where one kills a person by a shot aimed at another who is attempting to hide behind the one killed, the criminality of the act may be determined with reference to the conduct of accused toward his intended victim. In other words, his guilt or innocence may be made to depend upon the same considerations that would have governed had the shot which was fired killed the intended victim instead of the actual one. State v. Williams (1904) 122 Iowa, 115, 97 N. W. 992.

Where one, in shooting at an intended victim, killed a constable who was in the vicinity, the court held that if a person, in an attempt to kill one, by mistake accidentally kills another, the law transfers the intent to the person so killed, and a homicide thus committed will be of that grade which it would have been had the intention of the assailant been accomplished. State v. Renfrow (1892) 111 Mo. 589, 20 S. W. 299.

A ball fired at one person, with an intent to wound or kill him, carries with it the ingredient of malice when it strikes another and different person. Malice goes with the ball, and gives character to the act. State v. Brown (1902) 4 Penn. (Del.) 120, 53 Atl. 354.

The guilt of a person who shoots at one man and kills another depends on whether his intention, at the time he fired the shot, was to do an act made criminal by law. If the act he intended to do was criminal, then by the law he is responsible for what he did, even though such result was not intended. On the other hand, if he intended only a lawful act, he will not be punished for a result that he did not intend, if he acted with due care. Ringer v. State (1905) 74 Ark. 262, 85 S. W. 410.

In Tidwell v. State (1881) 70 Ala. 38, the court, in considering a requested instruction that if the deceased was killed by a shot fired at another person, "accused should be acquitted, says it is scarcely necessary to say the proposition cannot be supported. The guilt or innocence in such state of facts would depend on an inquiry whether accused would have been guilty or innocent, and, if guilty, of which degree of homicide, if the fatal bullet had fallen upon and killed the person against whom it was directed.

Where a shot, fired at a man, killed his wife, the court said that if a blow is intentionally or voluntarily given with a deadly weapon, without excuse, and the result be the death of a human being, even though not the person aimed at, this cannot be less than manslaughter in the first degree, and may be murder. The depraved heart or unlawful will with which the instrument of death is hurled at one accompanies and characterizes the fatal blow which falls on another by misadventure. Wills v. State (1883) 74 Ala. 21.

In considering the question of liability of rioters for death of a person accidentally killed by the police officers in attempting to quell the riot, the court says it may be regarded as a well-settled principle of law that a man will be held guilty of murder or manslaughter who, in the attempt to kill one person, by mistake, kills a third person, although there was no intent or design to kill such third person. Butler v. People (1888) 125 Ill. 641, 1 L.R.A. 211, 8 Am. St. Rep. 423, 18 N. E. 338.

In Hjeronymous v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 83 S. W. 708, it was held error to charge on manslaughter, where, in a prosecution for homicide, the evidence showed that accused killed his mother-in-law in an attempt to shoot her son, after the latter had beaten him and pushed him out of the house.

If one, with intent to kill or murder a particular person, illegally and feloniously shoots at him, but fails to accomplish his purpose, and unintentionally kills another person, he has no reason to complain if, under an indictment for murder, he is found guilty of manslaughter, because he may not have had reason to expect that his shot would strike a third person. State v. Salter (1896) 48 La. Ann. 197, 19 So. 265. The court says that the fact that accused may not have had reason to expect that his shot would strike a third person would not make any difference in the legal situation.

Where a man, in attempting to shoot a boarder in the family, shot and killed his own child, the court announced the rule that if a person, whilst doing or attempting to do another act, undesignedly killed a man, and the act intended or attempted was a felony, the killing is murder. People v. Gordon (1894) 100 Mich. 518, 59 N. W. 322.

In State v. Johnson (1879) 7 Or. 210, the court said that it is well settled that if one person, attempting to kill another, shoots at him, and, missing his aim, kills a third, he is as guilty as if he had killed the one at whom the shot was fired. This is an elementary principle of criminal law.

If one design to kill A, but by accident kills B, the crime will be the same as if he had executed his purpose. It will be murder, or manslaughter, or self-defense, according to circumstances. State v. Smith (1847) 33 S. C. L. (2 Strobb.) 77, 47 Am. Dec. 589.

A ball fired from a gun or pistol at one person, with an intent to wound or kill him, carries with it the ingredient of malice when it strikes another and a different person. Malice goes with the ball, and gives character to the action; or, as the rule is, malice speeds the ball, whoever may be the victim. State v. Brown (1902) 4 Penn. (Del.) 120, 53 Atl. 354.

II. Illustrative cases.

a. Murder.

1. In general.

The rule being that the degree of the crime, in case one kills another in an attempt to kill a third, is the same that it would have been had the blow fallen on the intended victim, there is no intention here to point out the differentiating elements of the various degrees of homicide, because that could not be done merely by an examination of cases which have involved the incidental killing of an unintended victim; but enough cases will be referred to, to show the manner in which the rule has been applied.

In Williams's Case (1639) Wm. Jones, 432, 82 Eng. Reprint, 227, where one, upon thinking himself insulted by another, threw a hammer at him, which hit and killed a third, the chief justice said that he would have been guilty of murder if he had been indicted for that offense, on the ground that the provocation was not such as to reduce a killing of his intended victim to a lower degree of crime.

Where two persons, engaged in a fight in a public place, shoot at each other, and kill a bystander, they are both guilty of murder, one as principal and the other as aiding and abetting. State v. Lilliston (1906) 141 N. C. 857, 115 Am. St. Rep. 705, 54 S. E. 427.

People v. Molineux (1901) 168 N. Y. 264, 62 L.R.A. 193, 61 N. E. 286, was a prosecution for the murder of one who took, by mistake, poison sent through the mail to another. There is no discussion of the question of liability in such cases, but it seems to have been assumed by counsel and court that accused would have been guilty, if shown to have sent the poison.

Under a statute making a killing by a person engaged in the commission of, or in the attempt to commit, a felony either upon or affecting the person killed, or otherwise, murder in the first degree, one is so guilty if, in maliciously shooting at one with intent to wound or kill him, he accidentally hits and kills another, the word "otherwise" not being confined to felonies against property, but including felonies upon or against a person other than the one killed. People v. Miles (1894) 143 N. Y. 389, 38 N. E. 456.

Where, by statute, the jury may find an accused guilty of a crime in a less degree than charged, and murder in the second degree is a designed killing without deliberation and premeditation, it is error to require the jury to find first-degree murder, or acquit, where accused, in shooting at a police officer, killed a bystander. The court said the jury might have ignored the element of the crime charged that accused was engaged in the commission of a felony, and found merely that accused assaulted the officer with a deadly weapon, without deliberation and premeditation, but with intent to kill him, when the crime would be murder in the second degree. People v. Van Norman (1921) 231 N. Y. 454, 132 N. E. 147.

If accused shoots at one, and, missing him, kills another, this is murder, because the law transfers the felonious intent from the intended victim to the innocent person who is slain. State v. Gilmore (1888) 95 Mo. 554, 8 S. W. 359, 912.

In a prosecution for an assault, the court says that, if a shot is aimed at one under circumstances which would have rendered a killing murder, the accidental killing of a bystander by it would likewise be murder. People v. Hodges (1917) 196 Mich. 546, 162 N. W. 966.

In Com. v. Moore (1905) 121 Ky. 97, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 719, 88 S. W. 1085, 11 Ann. Cas. 1024, which involved the question of the liability of persons attempting to commit robbery, for the death of a bystander accidentally killed by the owner in defending his property, the court said that, if they had accidentally killed a bystander by shooting at the property owner, they would have been guilty of murder.

In King v. Com. (1900) — Ky. —, 55 S. W. 685, where one convicted of murder, raised the question of the sufficiency of the indictment, it appeared that he shot at one person with the intention of killing him, but missed him and killed another, and the court, without discussion of the question of liability under such facts, affirmed the conviction.

In Golliher v. Com. (1865) 2 Duv. (Ky.) 163, 87 Am. Dec. 493, where it appeared that one entered a building where an election was being held, having upon his shoulder a gun, which was discharged and killed his friend, the court, inter alia, says if he had taken a gun into the house for the felonious purpose of killing any person, and had voluntarily fired the gun for the purpose of executing that malicious design, and accidentally hit his friend, the killing of the friend, though unintended, would nevertheless have been murder.

If, after a quarrel, one fires upon his adversary who is fleeing, and by accident kills a bystander, he is guilty of murder. Durham v. State (1883) 70 Ga. 264.

If accident left his house with a riotous intent of killing one person, and failed in this, and anyone else was killed by him whilst in the prosecution of that intent, he would be guilty of murder. McPherson v. State (1857) 22 Ga. 478.

In Isham v. State (1862) 38 Ala. 213, which involved the question of liability for killing one by mistake of identity, the court, in argument, cites with approval authority to the effect that if one, out of malice at A., shoots at and misses him, and kills B., it is no less murder than if he had killed the person intended.

The killing of one, in an effort to carry out a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of another, is murder in the first degree. Gater v. State (1904) 141 Ala. 10, 37 So. 692.

Where an attempted murder in the first degree fails, and results in the killing of an innocent bystander, the accused will be guilty of the same degree of murder that he would have been had he killed his intended victim, since the intention follows the bullet. State v. Pollard (1897) 139 Mo. 220, 40 S. W. 949.

Where the prisoner went to the room of a man with whom he had quarreled about half an hour before, and discharged a pistol at him, but shot and killed another, he was guilty of murder in the first degree. Com. v. Johnson (1907) 219 Pa. 174, 68 Atl. 53.

Murder committed by accidentally killing an unintended person, when shooting at another when lying in wait, is murder in the first degree. State v. Payton (1886) 90 Mo. 220, 2 S. W. 394.

If a person purposely and maliciously strikes a blow with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and death ensues, it will be murder in the second degree, although the blow missed the person against whom it was directed, and took effect upon another. The intent to kill and the malice follow the blow. And if deliberation and premeditation are added to the essential ingredients of murder in the second degree, the crime is murder in the first degree. The purpose and malice with which the blow was struck are not changed in any degree by the circumstance that it did not take effect upon the person at whom it was aimed. A blow given with deliberation and premeditated malice, and with the intent and purpose to kill another, if it accomplishes its purpose, cannot be said to have been given without malice and unintentionally, although it did not take effect upon the person against whom it was directed. Wareham v. State (1874) 25 Ohio St. 601.

The accidental killing of a woman, while attempting to kill a girl with premeditation and deliberation, is murder in the first degree. Bradbery v. State (1911) 170 Ala. 24, 54 So. 431.

Where persons, assuming to be a vice admiral and posse, made an attack on a house to take goods which had been taken by the owner of the house from a public enemy, and one of them killed an unarmed woman when throwing a stone at a person holding the entrance of the house, this was held to be murder in all those attacking the house. Certain of the judges, however, held that no malice was intended against the woman, and there could be no murder, because murder could not be extended beyond what was intended. Mansell & Herbert's Case (1555) 1 Dyer, 128, pl. 60, 73 Eng. Reprint, 279.

By poison.

If a husband gives a poisoned apple to his wife, intending to kill her, and she innocently gives it to a child, who dies from the poison, it is murder in the husband, but the wife, because ignorant, is not guilty. Reg. v. Saunders (1576) 2 Plowd. 473, 75 Eng. Reprint, 706, 1 Hale, P. C. 466. The reason assigned for the judgment was that the husband gave the poison with the intent to kill a person, and in the giving of it he intended that death should follow. And when death followed from his act, although it happened to another person than her whose death he directly meditated, yet it would be murder in him, for he was the original cause of the death; and if such death should not be punished in him, it would go unpunished. And it is said: "If a man, of malice prepense, shoots an arrow at another with an intent to kill him, and a person to whom he bore no malice is killed by it, this shall be murder in him, for when he shot the arrow he intended to kill, and inasmuch as he directed his instrument of death at one, and thereby has killed another, it shall be the same offense in him as if he had killed the person he aimed at; for the end of the act shall be construed by the beginning of it, and the last part shall taste of the first, and as the beginning of the act had malice prepense in it, and consequently imported murder, so the end of the act, viz., the killing of another, shall be in the same degree; and therefore it shall be murder, and no homicide only."

If one puts poison in a well with the intention of killing a particular person, but instead another one is killed against whom no intent was directed, he is nevertheless guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Evans (1893) 1 Marv. (Del.) 477, 41 Atl. 186.

If one lays poison for another, and it is taken by a third person and death results, it is murder. State v. Fulkerson (1867) 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 233.

Where a woman, in the attempt to kill her husband, put poison into a medicinal potion which had been prepared for him by an apothecary, and, after several had been made sick by tasting the medicine, the apothecary, in order to vindicate himself, took a portion of it, from the effects of which he died, the woman was held to be guilty of murder. Gore's Case (1611) 9 Coke, 81, 77 Eng. Reprint, 853.

2. Exceptions.

In a few states the courts have held that, where the statute made malice a necessary ingredient of murder in the first degree, the fact that the accused had no malice against the one whom he in fact killed, although he did have it towards his intended victim, would prevent the killing from being murder in the first degree. It would seem that such a rule is too favorable to the murderer, however, for if he, actuated by malice, attempts to kill one person, and, by accident or under faulty aim, his blow falls upon and kills another, why should he be permitted to take advantage of the fact that he bore him no ill will? His intention was to kill, and he did kill, and it was by no design of his that his blow fell upon an unintended, rather than an intended, victim; therefore, why should the law be tender of him, and reduce the degree of his crime? His act, actuated by malice, had its intended result—death; and does the mere accident that one person died instead of another alter the degree of guilt?

Under a statute defining murder in the first degree as all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of, or the attempt to perpetrate, any arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or larceny, shall be deemed murder in the first degree, and all other murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree, the actual killing of a bystander, in a deliberate attempt to kill another, is merely murder in the second degree. Bratton v. State (1849) 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 103. The court says: "If the universal principle of construction is to be regarded, that every word in a statute is to have meaning and effect given to it, if practicable, it results of necessity, by force of the terms employed in the definition of the crime, that to constitute murder in the first degree, it must be established that there existed in the mind of the agent, at the time of the act, a specified intention to take the life of the particular person slain. The characteristic quality of this crime, and that which distinguishes it from murder in the second degree, is the existence of a settled purpose and fixed design on the part of the assailant that the act of assault should result in the death of the party assailed; that death being the end aimed at, the object sought for and wished. . . . If then, by misadventure or other cause, a blow, directed at a particular person and designed to take his life, take effect upon and cause the death of a third person, against whom no injury was meditated, can it be said that the will concurred with the act which resulted in the accidental death of such third person; or that there existed a specific intention to take his life? A grosser absurdity cannot be conceived. The hypothesis that the killing was undesigned concedes that the will did not concur with the act; that, in point of fact, no such specific intention existed; no such result was either contemplated or designed. And upon what principle is it that this would be murder at common law? Simply upon the principle of implied or imputed malice and intention. In such case, all the essential elements of murder at the common law concur. A homicide has been committed with deadly weapon in the attempt to perpetrate a felony, by taking the life of another person, without legal justification or excuse, and in such case, from the circumstances and deadly weapon, the law conclusively presumes malice and the intent to murder; and, in like manner, the law conclusively presumes that the party contemplated the probable consequences of his own act."

In McCoy v. State (1860) 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520, the court, in considering the question whether one accused of murder was entitled to bail, in defining and illustrating malice, said that if the formed design be not to kill the accused, or inflict upon him serious bodily injury, but to commit some other offense, the killing will not be on express malice. A., attacking B with malice, shoots at, but misses him, and kills C., against whom he bears no malice. This is murder. Not because of any malice in fact against C., but because of the evil design against B., which, it is said, is carried over against C. by legal implication. And since the statute requires express and not implied malice to constitute murder in the first degree, this is merely murder in the second degree. And that rule has been subsequently followed in Texas. Taylor v. State (1878) 3 Tex. App. 387; Musick v. State (1886) 21 Tex. App. 69, 18 S. W. 95; Black v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 65 S. W. 906; Lankster v. State (1900) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 603, 56 S. W. 65; Honeycutt v. State (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 129, 57 S. W. 806; Howard v. State (1900) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 58 S. W. 77; Rainer v. State (1912) 67 Tex. Crim. Rep. 87, 148 S. W. 735; Buckley v. State (1915) 78 Tex. Crim. Rep. 378, 181 S. W. 729; Thomas v. State (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 272, 126 Am. St. Rep. 786, 109 S. W. 155; Holland v. State (1908) 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 27, 115 S. W. 48; McCullough v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 126, 136 S. W. 1055; Milo v. State (1910) 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 196, 127 S. W. 1025; Breedlove v. State (1888) 26 Tex. Crim. Rep. 445, 9 S. W. 768.

Where, in shooting at one person under circumstances which would have been murder had it resulted in his death, a bystander was killed, the court said that the killing was not in any attempt at arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, nor by poison, starving, or torture, and accused was, therefore, not guilty of murder in the first degree under the statute. The statute further provided that if one intend to commit a felony, and if, in the act of preparing for and executing the same, he shall, either by mistake or accident, do another act which, if voluntarily done, would be a felony, he should receive punishment affixed by law to the offense actually committed. Bean v. Mathieu (1870) 33 Tex. 591.

Where one, firing at a policeman who is attempting to arrest him, hits and kills a bystander, he may be found to be guilty of murder in the second degree. Angell v. State (1871) 36 Tex. 542, 14 Am. Rep. 380.

If one, with malice aforethought, shoots at one person with intention to kill him, and kills another person unintentionally, the law implies and imputes to the killing malice, and the accused is guilty of murder in the second degree. Halbert v. State (1878) 3 Tex. App. 656.

If one, in attempting to kill his wife, accidentally kills his child, he is guilty of murder in the second degree. McConnell v. State (1883) 13 Tex. App. 390.

One who, in shooting at one with intent to kill, accidentally kills another, may be found to be guilty of murder in the second degree, under a statute providing that, if one intending to commit a felony, and in the act of preparing for or committing the same, shall, through mistake or by accident, do another act which, if voluntarily done, would be a felony, he shall receive the punishment affixed by law to the offense actually committed. Richards v. State (1895) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 38, 30 S. W. 805.

But in Ricks v. State (1905) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 87 S. W. 1036, where accused, after a quarrel with his brother-in-law, went to the latter's house and, upon firing into it, killed his sister, error was alleged because of a charge of murder in the first degree. But, although the conviction was of murder in the second degree, the court held that a charge on first-degree murder was required, because, if accused intended to kill his brother-in-law, such killing would have been murder in the first degree, and if, under the facts, it might have been so, then the accidental killing of the wife would be murder in the first degree. But the court says that his firing into the house where he knew she was might be characterized as the act of one regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. These dicta, however, do not seem to have been noticed in subsequent Texas cases, which have followed the doctrine holding the grade of the murder to be merely second degree.

One of the anomalies of the Texas rule is that one engaged in committing a much less heinous crime than murder may, if he accidentally kills another in its perpetration, be guilty of first-degree murder, whereas, if the killing result from an attempt to commit first-degree murder, it will be merely second-degree murder. Thus, under a statute providing that all murder done in committing robbery is murder in the first degree, one who, in the perpetration of robbery, shoots at one and kills another, is guilty of murder in the first degree. Milo v. State (1910) 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 196, 127 S. W. 1025.

In Territory v. Rowand (1888) 8 Mont. 110, 19 Pac. 595, where the conviction was for murder in the second degree, an instruction that if accused had, with malice aforethought, wilfully, premeditatedly, and feloniously shot at a person with intent then and there to kill him, and while so engaged had killed accused, he should be found guilty of murder in the first degree, was not challenged by counsel for accused. The court says that the argument that there was no assault upon the deceased is fallacious. It can make no difference whether the assault was intended for deceased, or for Martin, the intended victim. On rehearing in (1889) 8 Mont. 432, 20 Pac. 689, 21 Pac. 19, the question discussed was whether or not the variance between the allegation of intent to kill the one actually killed, and proof of an intent to kill another, was fatal. The court held that, the conviction being for murder in the second degree, failure to show a specific intent was not fatal.

The Montana statute requires, as a constituent of murder in the first degree, a deliberate, premeditated design to kill. And in State v. Caterni (1918) 54 Mont. 456, 171 Pac. 284, the court held that the territorial court in the Rowand Case had settled that a charge of murder in the first degree against one for the premeditated, intentional killing of another was not sustained by evidence showing that the killing was done in an effort to accomplish the murder of a third person. The court said that such killing is not murder in the first degree, because the specific intent required by the statute—the deliberate, premeditated design specifically to kill the person who was killed—is lacking, and it becomes murder in the second degree, or manslaughter, according to the circumstances.

As seen above, the ruling in the Rowand Case does not seem to have gone to the extent stated, but the Caterni Case evidently has settled the law in Montana the same as it is in Texas.

In Com. v. Dougherty (1807) 1 Browne (Pa.) appx. xviii., however, under a similar statute, the court, in instructing the jury in a case where a man killed his child by a blow aimed at his wife, stated that if a man should mix a glass of poison with intention to murder one person, and another should take it, it would be murder in the first degree. So, if one were to shoot at one and kill another, it would be murder in the first degree. Where the original intent is murderous, the crime on legal principles, is the same, whoever happens to be killed. The murderous intention, the wicked disposition of heart, being once established against a particular person, the nature and guilt of the acts are immutably fixed, whoever may happen to be killed.

In Com. v. Hare (1844) 2 Clark (Pa.) 467, the court held that, although all engaged in a riot during which shots were fired in a public street would be liable for the killing of a bystander, yet, in view of the fact that, by statute, malice is a necessary ingredient of murder in the first degree, their crime would be murder in the second degree. That rule was not, however, adopted by the supreme court of the state, since, in Com. v. Breyessee (1894) 160 Pa. 451, 40 Am. St. Rep. 729, 28 Atl. 824, it was held that where a deliberate purpose is formed to kill A, and accused fires a pistol at him for that purpose, the fact that the ball misses the victim and takes effect on a third person and kills him, does not relieve the murderer. He is equally guilty, whether his effort to kill A results in the taking of his life or the life of B.

In People v. Suesser (1904) 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093, it was argued that to constitute murder in the first degree the malice must have existed toward the person killed. The court said Tennessee and Texas decisions sustain this contention, but that the overwhelming weight of authority is the other way.

The same statute exists in New Jersey, and the court, in State v. Bectsa (1904) 71 N. J. L. 322, 58 Atl. 933, held that the degree of crime was the same, in case of the accidental killing of a bystander, that it would have been had the blow taken effect on the intended victim. The court says: "In this statute, the two concrete cases of murder in the first degree and the general description of the cognate class that immediately follows are all based upon the existence of a certain condition of mind in the perpetrator of the murder, which, as to the concrete instances, is described by reference to the means employed or the method adopted, viz., by poison, or by lying in wait, and, as to the general class that follows, by the use of descriptive words, of which the two concrete cases are something more than apt illustrations, being, by force of the word 'other,' criteria controlling the sense in which the more general terms are employed. It is clear, therefore, that murder, whether resulting under the special circumstances first detailed, or evincing the state of mind afterwards described, is murder in the first degree, without regard to any extraneous consideration, and that the determining element in either case is the existence of the reprobated state of mind in the murderer, and not the measure of success that attended its accomplishment. So that if A administer poison to murder B, which is fatally drunk by C, A's crime is murder in the first degree. So, likewise, if A, lying in wait to murder B, or intending his murder in the state of mind described by the statute, chance to kill C, equally and in either case, A's crime is murder in the first degree. This is the plain meaning of the statute, consistent with its entire spirit, interpreted by its own illustrations, and sustained by the analogy it bears to the imputable quality at common law of the malice that is essential to the crime of murder."

Where a man killed a person who was escorting his wife home from a social function, the trial court charged that, if he intended to kill his wife or some other person than the one killed, and, missing his aim, killed deceased by mistake, he would be guilty of murder in the second degree. The appellate court, however, said it was unable to understand how the suggested fact could possibly have lessened the degree of the guilt of accused. State v. Murray (1884) 11 Or. 413, 5 Pac. 55. The court says: "The assassin who lies in wait, harboring in his bosom a murderous design to slay a human being, cannot extenuate his offense because he did not kill the particular person he designed to. All the circumstances constituting murder in the first degree are present, and, if he is guilty at all, he is guilty of that crime, and there is no more reason for lessening the degree of the crime in consequence of that circumstance, than there would be in acquitting him out and out. He has exhibited the same malignity and recklessness in the one event he would have displayed in the other, and the consequences to society are just as fearful."

b. Manslaughter.

If the circumstances of the killing are such that it would have been manslaughter had the blow fallen on and killed the intended victim, it will also result in manslaughter if a third person is killed. Hill v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 481, 168 S. W. 864; Whiten v. State (1913) 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 555, 160 S. W. 462; Clark v. State (1885) 19 Tex. App. 495.

Where a woman threw a poker at her child for correction under circumstances which, if it had killed him, would have made her guilty of manslaughter, she is equally guilty if the poker accidentally hits and kills another child. Rex v. Conner (1836) 7 Car. & P. (Eng.) 488.

If one, in shooting at persons in a sudden affray or sudden heat of passion, kill an innocent bystander, he is guilty of manslaughter. Shelton v. Com. (1911) 145 Ky. 543, 140 S. W. 670.

The slaying of one by a blow intended for another, inflicted in sudden heat and passion, is manslaughter just as it would have been had it reached its intended mark. Trabue v. Com. (1902) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2135, 66 S. W. 718.

In Com. v. Flanigan (1869) 8 Phila. (Pa.) 430, where the killing was caused by the accidental discharge of a weapon in a quarrel between two persons, the court says: Can it be doubted, in such a state of evidence, that, if the shot had killed the other person to the quarrel instead of the bystander, the offense would have been voluntary manslaughter? What matters it, then, if the shot took effect at the body of the bystander?

Where one killed a person with a shot fired at another, who at the time was fleeing from him, he could not complain that he was convicted of manslaughter under an instruction that, if he tried in sudden heat and passion to kill his intended victim, and accidentally killed accused, he was guilty only of manslaughter. Sims v. Com. (1890) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 215, 13 S. W. 1079.

c. Justifiable homicide.

One who, in shooting at another in self-defense, hits and kills a person who steps between the combatants, he will be guilty of no offense, since his right of self-defense protects him from the unexpected result of his act. Gaines v. State (1912) 67 Tex. Crim. Rep. 325, 148 S. W. 717.

If one kills a bystander by a random shot, in attempting to defend himself from an attack by another, the court says the rule is that if the killing of the person intended to be hit would, under all the circumstances, have been excusable, or justifiable homicide under the theory of self-defense, the killing of the bystander by a random shot fired in the proper and prudent exercise of such self-defense was also excusable and justifiable. The court further says, had the killing of the intended victim been reduced by the situation to murder in the second or third degree, or manslaughter in any of the degrees, then the unintended killing of a bystander, resulting from an act designed to take effect upon the intended victim, would be likewise reduced to the same grade of defense as would have followed the death of the victim intended to be killed. Pinder v. State (1891) 27 Fla. 370, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75, 8 So. 837.

If a person shooting in what he believes to be necessary self-defense actually kills one coming in range of the bullet, the question of his guilt will be determined with reference to his rights with respect to the person at whom the shot was aimed. Ringer v. State (1905) 74 Ark. 262, 85 S. W. 410.

If the bullet is fired in necessary self-defense, and hits a bystander by accident, accused should be acquitted. Shelton v. Com. (1911) 145 Ky. 543, 140 S. W. 670.

Shooting at one in self-defense, and accidentally killing another, is justifiable homicide. Ibid.; McCullough v. State (1911) 62 Tex. Crim. Rep. 126, 136 S. W. 1055.

If one, in preparing to defend himself against the attack of another, accidentally kills a bystander, he is not guilty of any offense, whether his act of preparation endangered the life of such other person or not. Lankster v. State (1900) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 603, 56 S. W. 65.

If accused, when subjected to assault which he did not provoke, shoots at his assailant, and by accident hits a bystander, no guilt will attach to him if the assault was such as would have justified killing the assailant. In such case the killing would be homicide by misadventure. It would be otherwise if he shot carelessly, and in wanton, reckless disregard of danger resulting to the bystander. Butler v. State (1893) 92 Ga. 601, 19 S. E. 51.

Since, by law, a husband would not be guilty of any grade of homicide in killing a man caught in adultery with his wife, the accidental killing of his wife, in an attempt to kill a man committing such an act, would not make him guilty of any offense. Powell v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 218, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 5.

d. Careless homicide.

The rule above stated may be somewhat modified by the care, or absence of care, with which one exercises his right of self-defense, or whatever other right he is relying on in justification of the killing. The law imposes upon all a duty of exercising a high degree of care in the use of deadly weapons, and will hold one to a strict account if he uses such weapons so carelessly that needless injury is done to a bystander, although the one using the weapon is not exceeding his legal rights in doing so.

If one, having a right to shoot in self-defense, does so in a place where others are present, without due caution or circumspection, and kills a bystander, he may be guilty of involuntary manslaughter. Henwood v. People (1913) 54 Colo. 188, 129 Pac. 1010.

If one, without criminal intent or design, shoots at one man, causing, as a result of carelessness, the death of another, he is guilty of manslaughter. Ringer v. State (1905) 74 Ark. 262, 85 S. W. 410.

So, one who fires a shot, when knowing that he cannot do so without hitting an innocent person, is guilty of voluntary homicide, but in determining that question regard must be had to the circumstances under which the shot was fired. Ibid.

An accused is guilty of involuntary manslaughter, where, in shooting at one carelessly and recklessly, in self-defense, he kills another. Scott v. State (1905) 75 Ark. 142, 86 S. W. 1004.

Where accused wrecked a house by an explosion in an attempt to kill his sister and stepmother, towards whom he entertained ill will, but instead another was killed, he is guilty of murder in the first degree, the act causing the death being one greatly dangerous to human life, and evincing a depraved mind regardless of human life, within the purview of the statute. Gallant v. State (1910) 167 Ala. 60, 52 So. 739. That ruling was under a statute providing that every homicide perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than he who is killed; or perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others, and evincing a depraved mind regardless of human life, is murder in the first degree. H. P. F.

SPRINGFIELD GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
CITY OF SPRINGFIELD.

Illinois Supreme Court—February 18, 1920.

(292 Ill. 236, 126 N. E. 739.)

Statutes — limitation by construction.

1. A provision excepting from a statute governing the regulation of public utilities such utilities when owned and operated by municipal corporations will not be construed so as to limit it to utilities operated by municipalities for their own use.

[See note on this question beginning on page 946.]

Public utility — injunction against rival.

2. A private corporation lawfully operating a public utility may enjoin another private corporation operating, without authority of law, a similar utility which competes with and injures the former's business.

Statutes — construction — validity of special provisions.

3. In determining the question of the validity or invalidity of particular provisions of public laws courts should not be unmindful of the effect upon the entire enactment of the holding of any particular provision invalid.

—effect of holding provision invalid.

4. If results not contemplated by the legislature would follow the holding of an exception in a statute invalid, then the entire statute must be held invalid if the exception is so held. [See 6 R. C. L. 124.]

—statute invalid in part, invalid in toto.

5. Where a portion of an act is valid and another portion invalid, and the court cannot say that the legislature would have passed the act with the invalid portion eliminated, the entire act must be held invalid. [See 6 R. C. L. 123.]

(Dunn, Ch. J., and Cartwright and Farmer, JJ., dissent.)

—effect of saving clause.

6. A provision in a statute that, if any portion of it is, for any reason, held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portion of the act, will not justify the court in holding invalid a clause exempting municipal corporations from its provisions if the effect would be to nullify an entire statute dealing separately with such corporations.

Courts — power to make laws.

7. Courts have no authority to make a law by holding invalid a provision of a statute and upholding the remainder, if, by so doing, they would accomplish a result which would not have been sanctioned by the legislature. [See 6 R. C. L. 123.]

Constitutional law — special privileges — exemptions of municipal corporation from public utility laws.

8. Excepting from a public utilities act municipal corporations and utilities owned and operated by them does not violate constitutional provisions against the enactment of special or local laws or the granting of special privileges.

Definition — corporation.

9. The word "corporation" in a constitutional provision forbidding the granting of special privileges to corporations does not include municipal corporations.

Constitutional law — right to classify for legislative purposes.

10. The legislature may classify persons or occupations for the purpose of legislative regulation and control, provided such classification is not an arbitrary one, and is based upon some substantial difference which bears a proper relation to the classification.

[See 6 R. C. L. 373-375.]

Public utilities — right of municipal corporation to operate.

11. The legislature may authorize and empower municipal corporations to own and operate public utilities.

[See 19 R. C. L. 717-719.]

— power of legislature over rates.

12. The state has the right to prescribe rates and charges by private corporations and persons for the operation of public utilities that shall produce a reasonable profit or return on their entire investment and outlay, and, on the other hand, to limit the rates and charges of utilities owned by municipalities so that they will only be sufficient to meet outlays and expenses of every kind by reason of their ownership and operation.

[See 9 R. C. L. 1190; 12 R. C. L. 897; 19 R. C. L. 764, 765.]

Legislature — delegation of power to municipal corporation.

13. The legislature may delegate to municipalities the right of regulation and control of public utilities owned and operated by the municipalities.

Constitutional law — what is local or special law.

14. A law is not local or special in the constitutional sense if it operates in the same manner upon all persons in like circumstances.

[See 6 R. C. L. 418.]

Statutes — repeal by implication.

15. The provisions of a statute relating to the control of public utilities owned by municipal corporations are not repealed by implication by a statute dealing with the regulation and control of public utilities generally.

[See 25 R. C. L. 920.]

Municipal corporation — capacity in which it operates public utilities.

16. A municipal corporation which supplies its inhabitants with light, gas, or water acts in its capacity as a private corporation, and not in the exercise of its powers of local sovereignty.

[See 19 R. C. L. 764.]

Constitutional law — due process — power to discriminate in rates.

17. A private corporation operating a public utility in competition with one owned and operated by a municipality is not deprived of its property without due process of law by the fact that the control of rates of the latter is vested in the municipality, and not in the public utilities commission, which controls the rates to be charged by the private corporation.

Courts — wisdom of municipal ownership of public utilities — power over question.

18. The wisdom of municipal ownership of public utilities is a question for the legislature, not for the courts.

[See 6 R. C. L. 107.]

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Sangamon County (Smith, J.), dismissing a bill filed to enjoin defendant from operating a public utility alleged to be injurious to, and in competition with, complainant's business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. William L. Patton and P. B. Warren, for appellant:

The right of complainant to maintain the bill on the basis of unfair and illegal competition is undeniable.

Memphis Street R. Co. v. Rapid Transit Co. 133 Tenn. 99, L.R.A.1916B, 1149, 179 S. W. 635, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1045; Bartlesville Electric Light & P. Co. v. Bartlesville Interurban R. Co. 26 Okla. 453, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81, 109 Pac. 228; Tulsa Street R. Co. v. Okla- homa Union Traction Co. 27 Okla. 339, 113 Pac. 180; Millville Gaslight Co. v. Vineland Light & P. Co. 72 N. J. Eq. 305, 65 Atl. 504; Ashley Tri-County Mut. Teleph. Co. v. New Ashley Teleph. Co. 92 Ohio St. 336, P.U.R. 1916B, 401, 110 N. E. 959; Farmers' M. Co-op. Teleph. Co. v. Boswell Teleph. Co. 187 Ind. 371, P.U.R.1918E, 172, 119 N. E. 513; Lindsley v. Dallas Consol. Street R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 200 S. W. 207; Citizens Electric Illuminating Co. v. Lackawanna & W. Valley R. Co. 255 Pa. 176, 99 Atl. 465.

The use of the municipally owned electric light plant is in two widely diverse functions. In operating to light the streets it is acting in a governmental capacity, in which it may be excepted from the regulation imposed upon private plants; but in operating commercially, the municipality acts in a purely private capacity, and is, quoad hoc, no different from a private corporation engaging in the same business.

Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 104 Ill. App. 376; Litchfield v. Litchfield Water Supply Co. 95 Ill. App. 647; Chicago v. University of Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 361; Davis v. Abstract Constr. Co. 121 Ill. App. 121; Holmes v. Chicago, 203 Ill. App. 445; People ex rel. Brockamp v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 261 Ill. 22, 103 N. E. 555; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; South Carolina v. United States, 199 U. S. 437, 50 L. ed. 261, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, 4 Ann. Cas. 737; Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1; Re Rapid Transit R. Comrs. 197 N. Y. 96, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647, 90 N. E. 456, 18 Ann. Cas. 366; Davoust v. Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 536, 84 Pac. 760, 9 Ann. Cas. 847, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 7; Fisher v. New Bern, 140 N. C. 506, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 542, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857, 53 S. E. 342; Brantman v. Canby, 119 Minn. 396, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 862, 138 N. W. 671; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730; Baily v. Philadelphia, 184 Pa. 594, 39 L.R.A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 812, 39 Atl. 494; Wigal v. Parkersburg, 74 W. Va. 25, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 81 S. E. 554; State Journal Printing Co. v. Madison, 148 Wis. 396, 134 N. W. 909; Hinze v. Iola, 92 Kan. 779, 142 Pac. 947, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 281; Woodward v. Livermore Falls Water Dist. 116 Me. 86, L.R.A.1917D, 678, 100 Atl. 317; Oakes Mfg. Co. v. New York, 206 N. Y. 221, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 286, 99 N. E. 540; Higginson v. Treasurer (Higginson v. Slatery) 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523; Audit Co. v. Louisville, 107 C. C. A. 467, 185 Fed. 349; Karpenski v. South River, 83 N. J. L. 149, 83 Atl. 639; Keever v. Mankato. 113 Minn. 55, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 339, 129 N. W. 158, 775, 1 N. C. C. A. 187, annotated in Ann. Cas. 1912A, 216; Hodgins v. Bay City, 156

Mich. 687, 132 Am. St. Rep. 546, 121 N. W. 275; Henry v. Lincoln, 93 Neb. 331, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, 140 N. W. 665; Brantman v. Canby, 119 Minn. 396, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 862, 138 N. W. 671; State ex rel. W. J. Armstrong Co. v. Waseca, 122 Minn. 348, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 437, 142 N. W. 319; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531; Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345; Eaton v. Weiser, 12 Idaho, 544, 118 Am. St. Rep. 225, 86 Pac. 541, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 504; Butler v. Karb, 96 Ohio St. 472, 117 N. E. 953; Riley v. Independence, 258 Mo. 671, 167 S. W. 1022, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 743, 7 N. C. C. A. 191; Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 222, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 93 Pac. 570, note in 14 Ann. Cas. 1004; Piper v. Madison, 140 Wis. 311, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 239, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1078, 122 N. W. 730; Winona v. Botzet, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, 94 C. C. A. 563, 169 Fed. 321, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 445; Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 Atl. 487, 1117, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 445; Aschoff v. Evansville, 34 Ind. App. 25, 72 N. E. 279; Barron v. Detroit, 19 L.R.A. 452, note; Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L.R.A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, 55 Pac. 961.

If, as contended by the city, § 10 exempts municipally operated commercial plants from the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission, it is void, as being in violation of both the state and Federal constitutional provisions against "class legislation," because it is a "special immunity" granted to the commercially operated plant of the municipality, relieving it from a regulation imposed on the like plant of an individual or private corporation.

Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Dill, 22 Ill. 264; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust, 130 Ill. 268, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 22 N. E. 798; Ex parte Levy, 43 Ark. 42, 51 Am. Rep. 550; Dike v. State, 38 Minn. 366, 38 N. W. 95; State v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 124 Tenn. 1, 135 S. W. 773, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 805; People ex rel. Danville v. Fox, 247 Ill. 402, 93 N. E. 302; School Dist. v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 103 U. S. 707, 26 L. ed. 601; People ex rel. Kewanee v. Kewanee Light & P. Co. 262 Ill. 255, 104 N. E. 680; L'Hote v. Milford, 212 Ill. 418, 103 Am. St. Rep. 234, 72 N. E. 399; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 389, 63

L.R.A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241, 67 N. E. 28; Bessette v. People, 193 Ill. 334, 56 L.R.A. 558, 62 N. E. 215; Badenoch v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 71, 78 N. E. 31; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 541, 46 L. ed. 682, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247; People v. Chicago, 256 Ill. 564, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954, 100 N. E. 194, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 305; Starne v. People, 222 Ill. 189, 118 Am. St. Rep. 389, 78 N. E. 61; State v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 124 Tenn. 1, 135 S. W. 773, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 805; Re Case, 20 Idaho, 128, 116 Pac. 1037; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 19 Fed. 679, 705; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. 127 Cal. 4, 47 L.R.A. 338, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17, 59 Pac. 304; Ballard v. Mississippi Cotton Oil Co. 81 Miss. 507, 62 L.R.A. 407, 95 Am. St. Rep. 476, 34 So. 533; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Bough, 168 Ind. 671, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418, 80 N. E. 529; Richey v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 176 Ind. 542, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 96 N. E. 694.

There being a reasonable construction of the exception, i. e., that municipally owned plants are excepted from the regulation of the Public Utilities Act so long as they operate only in their governmental function, it is the duty of the court to adopt the construction which will avoid all doubt as to the constitutionality of the act, and hold that municipal plants operated in their governmental function are exempt from the Public Utilities Act, but, when operated commercially, in the private function, are subject to the regulation of that act.

Hunter v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co. 175 Iowa, 245, L.R.A.1917D, 15, 154 N. W. 1037, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 803, 11 N. C. C. A. 886; United States ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & H. Co. 213 U. S. 366, 53 L. ed. 836, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527; State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 84 Vt. 167, 78 Atl. 944, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22; Henry v. Lincoln, 93 Neb. 331, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, 140 N. W. 665; Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974; Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 52; Kline v. Minnesota Iron Co. 93 Minn. 63, 100 N. W. 681; Bradford Constr. Co. v. Heflin, 88 Miss. 314, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1040, 42 So. 174, 8 Ann. Cas. 1077; Missouri P. Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35; Beleal v. Northern P. R. Co. 15 N. D. 318, 108 N. W. 23, 11 Ann. Cas. 921, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 453; State

v. Clement Nat. Bank, 84 Vt. 167, 78 Atl. 944, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22; State Public Utilities Commission v. Monarch Refrigerating Co. 267 Ill. 528, P.U.R.1915D, 119, 108 N. E. 716, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 528.

When the object attempted to be accomplished by the Public Utilities Act, its occasion and necessity, and the evils of the existing law, are considered, it is clear that the legislature could not have intended to exempt commercially operated municipal plants from the control of the commission.

36 Cyc. 1110; Kehl v. Taylor, 275 Ill. 346, 114 N. E. 125, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 948; State Public Utilities Commission v. Monarch Refrigerating Co. 267 Ill. 528, P.U.R.1915D, 119, 108 N. E. 716, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 528; State Public Utilities Commission ex rel. Mitchell v. Chicago & W. T. R. Co. 275 Ill. 555, P.U.R.1917B, 1046, 114 N. E. 325, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 50; Butler v. Karb, 96 Ohio St. 472, 117 N. E. 953; State ex rel. Bernero v. McQuillin, 246 Mo. 517, 152 S. W. 347.

The rate-fixing power lies with the legislature until it is granted to a municipal body; the legislature has the right to resume the grant, and the rate-fixing power granted by § 1 of the Municipal Ownership Act is repealed by the Public Utilities Act, and vested in the public utilities commission, and all rates for service must be fixed by the city under §§ 33 and 34 of the Public Utilities Act.

Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Railroad Commission, 153 Wis. 592, L.R.A.1915F, 744, 142 N. W. 491, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 911; Charleston Consol. R. Lighting Co. v. Charleston, 92 S. C. 127, 75 S. E. 390; Minnesota General Electric Co. v. Minneapolis, 194 Fed. 215; Union Electric Light & P. Co. v. St. Louis, 253 Mo. 592, 161 S. W. 1166; California-Oregon Power Co. v. Grants Pass, 203 Fed. 173; Chicago v. Burke, 226 Ill. 191, 80 N. E. 720; Cantrell v. Seaverns, 168 Ill. 165, 48 N. E. 186; Korah v. Ottawa, 32 Ill. 121, 83 Am. Dec. 255; Pavey v. Utter, 132 Ill. 489, 24 N. E. 77; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 731; Dingman v. People, 51 Ill. 277; New York C. R. Co. v. Stevenson, 277 Ill. 474, 115 N. E. 633; People ex rel. Hoyne v. Fisher, 274 Ill. 116, 113 N. E. 47; Merlo v. Johnston City & B. M. Coal & Min. Co. 258 Ill. 328, 101 N. E. 525; State v. Davis, 70 Md. 237, 16 Atl. 529; State ex rel. Gilbert v. Halliday, 63 Ohio St.

(292 Ill. 236, 126 N. E. 739.)

165, 57 N. E. 1097; Bailey v. Drane, 96 Tenn. 16, 33 S. W. 573; Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345; Ladd v. Jones, 61 Ill. App. 584; Curry v. Lehman, 55 Fla. 847, 47 So. 18; Kane v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 112 Mo. 34, 20 S. W. 532; Masterson v. Whipple, 27 R. I. 192, 61 Atl. 446; Ensley v. State, 172 Ind. 198, 88 N. E. 62.

Messrs. B. L. Catron and Stevens & Herndon, for appellee:

The great fundamental rule in construing statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature; but this intention must be the intention expressed in the statute; and where the meaning of the language used is plain, it must be given effect by the courts, or they would be assuming legislative authority.

36 Cyc. 1106; Eddy v. Morgan, 216 Ill. 437, 75 N. E. 174; People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L.R.A. 775, 49 N. E. 229; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34.

In the construction of statutes it is the duty of the court to take words found in the statute, and to give to each its ordinary, usual meaning, and not to qualify words there found by introducing other words which would change the effect of the act, to make it comport more nearly to what we might think it ought to be.

Eddy v. Morgan, 216 Ill. 437, 75 N. E. 174; Crozer v. People, 206 Ill. 464, 69 N. E. 489; People ex rel. Cameron v. Flynn, 265 Ill. 414, 106 N. E. 961; People ex rel. Krebs v. Jacksonville & St. L. R. Co. 265 Ill. 550, 107 N. E. 237; People ex rel. Brokaw v. Painter, 267 Ill. 473, 108 N. E. 683; Bigelow v. Burnside, 269 Ill. 324, 109 N. E. 1045; Frye v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 73 Ill. 399; 36 Cyc. pp. 1114, 1115; Dwarrris, Stat. § 200; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 55.

Defendant has power to own and operate an electric light plant, and to sell its product within or without the limits of the city, to private persons or corporations, and to fix the rates and charges for services rendered by it, and to make all needful rules and regulations in relation thereto, without complying with the provisions of the Public Utilities Act.

Chicago v. O'Connell, 278 Ill. 591, 8 A.L.R. 916, P.U.R.1917E, 730, 116 N. E. 210.

The Municipal Ownership Act and the Public Utilities Act were considered and passed practically together at the same session of the legislature; and, so far as their provisions relate to the same subject-matter, said acts should be considered and construed together, in pari materia, and thereby made consistent and harmonious with each other, so as to give full force and effect to the provisions of both acts, and to each part thereof.

36 Cyc. 1147; Gale v. Knopf, 193 Ill. 245, 62 N. E. 229; Mette v. Feltgen, 148 Ill. 357, 36 N. E. 81.

The regulation and control of municipal public utilities by the municipality, and of privately owned public utilities by the state utilities commission, does not constitute improper classification or special immunity, and therefore does not violate either the state or Federal Constitutions.

Tarantina v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 254 Ill. 624, 98 N. E. 999, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1058; Booth v. Opel, 244 Ill. 317, 91 N. E. 458; Dawson Soap Co. v. Chicago, 234 Ill. 314, 84 N. E. 920, 14 Ann. Cas. 1131; Douglas v. People, 225 Ill. 536, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 116 Am. St. Rep. 162, 80 N. E. 341; Burton Stock Car Co. v. Traeger, 187 Ill. 9, 58 N. E. 418; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Randle, 183 Ill. 364, 55 N. E. 728; People ex rel. Green v. Cook County, 176 Ill. 576, 52 N. E. 334; People ex rel. Henderson v. Onahan, 170 Ill. 449, 48 N. E. 1003.

The legislature may regulate and control public utilities directly, under the police power of the state, or it may exercise the power indirectly, by conferring the power upon agencies created or designated by the legislature.

Chicago v. O'Connell, 278 Ill. 591, 8 A.L.R. 916, P.U.R.1917E, 730, 116 N. E. 210; State Public Utilities Commission ex rel. Mitchell v. Chicago & W. T. R. Co. 275 Ill. 555, P.U.R.1917B, 1046, 114 N. E. 325, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 50; State Public Utilities Commission v. Monarch Refrigerating Co. 267 Ill. 523, P.U.R.1915D, 119, 108 N. E. 716, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 528.

Repeals by implication are not favored by the courts, and are never adjudged unless the two acts are irreconcilable, or the intent to repeal is otherwise clearly expressed; particularly where the two acts relate to the same subject-matter and were passed at the same session of the legislature.

36 Cyc. 1071; Ridgway v. Gallatin County, 181 Ill. 521, 55 N. E. 146; People ex rel. School Inspectors v. Mottinger, 215 Ill. 256, 74 N. E. 150;

People ex rel. Georgetown v. Murphy, 202 Ill. 493, 67 N. E. 226; Chicago v. Chicago & O. P. Elev. R. Co. 261 Ill. 478, 104 N. E. 240.

Duncan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee, the city of Springfield, owns and operates an electric light plant, produces electricity for its own use, and sells electricity not required for its purposes to private consumers at about one half the cost for which it can be procured from other sources. Appellant is a private corporation engaged in the production and sale of electricity in the city of Springfield, and has complied with the provisions of the Public Utilities Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1917, chap. 111a). It filed its bill for an injunction against appellee in the circuit court of Sangamon county, alleging, in substance, that appellee, in its production and sale of electricity to private consumers, is violating § 35 of the Public Utilities Act, providing that no public utility shall undertake to perform any service or to furnish any product or commodity unless and until the rates and other charges and classifications, rules and regulations relating thereto, applicable to such service, product, or commodity, have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of that act; also that appellee is violating §§ 33 and 34 of said act, which require the filing with the public utilities commission and the printing, posting, and keeping open to public inspection of schedules showing all rates, charges, and classifications in force for any product furnished or service rendered by it as such public utility. The city filed an answer, to which appellant filed exceptions. There was a hearing on the bill, answer, and exceptions, and the court entered a decree dismissing the bill for want of equity.

The theory of the bill is that appellant and appellee are competitors in business, are operating public utilities, and are both subject to the Public Utilities Act; that appellee, not having complied with the requirements of the act, is prohibited by its terms from engaging in the business; and that appellant is entitled to an injunction to prevent the illegal competition.

The parties have treated the issues in the case as questions of law, precisely as if they had arisen on a demurrer to the bill. In disposing of this appeal the court will also indulge in that same assumption.

The question for decision in the case is whether or not a municipality in this state, owning and operating an electric light plant for the production of electricity for its own use and also for the sale thereof to private consumers, is subject to the provisions of the act and to the supervision of the public utilities commission.

We are disposed to agree with the proposition of appellant that a private corporation lawfully operating a public utility may have an injunction against another private corporation operating, without authority of law, a similar utility which competes with and injures the former's business. Municipal corporations, however, are expressly excepted from the terms and provisions of the Public Utilities Act by § 10 thereof, and in a very emphatic manner, so much so that there can be no question that the act was not intended to apply to any public utility owned by a city. The following definitions are found in said § 10:

Public utility—injunction
against rival.

"The term 'public utility,' when used in this act, means and includes every corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, firm, partnership, or individual, their lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever (except, however, such public utilities as are or may hereafter be owned or operated by any municipality) that now or hereafter: (a) May own, control, operate or manage, within the state, directly or indirectly for public use, any plant, equipment or property used or to be used for or in connection with the transportation of persons or property or the transmission of telegraph or telephone messages between points within this state; or for the production, storage, transmission, sale, delivery or furnishing of heat, cold, light, power, electricity or water.

"The term 'company,' when used in this act in connection with a public utility, includes any corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, firm, partnership or individual, their lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, owning, holding, operating, controlling or managing such a public utility, but not municipal corporations.

"The term 'corporation,' when used in this act, includes any corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, but not municipal corporations."

The Public Utilities Act was passed June 20, 1913, as House Bill No. 907, and was approved June 30, 1913. It did not take effect until January 1, 1914, by special provision, because of the fact that that time was considered necessary for the appointment of the public utilities commission created thereby and for the railroad and warehouse commission to prepare its books and records, to be taken over by the public utilities commission. The Municipal Ownership Act (Laws 1913, p. 455) was passed June 20, 1913, as Senate Bill No. 538, was approved June 26, 1913, and became effective July 1, 1913. By § 1 of the latter act any city of this state is given the power to acquire, construct, own, and operate any public utility the product or service of which, or a major portion thereof, is or is to be supplied to the city or its inhabitants, and to contract for, purchase, and sell to private persons or corporations the products or service of such utility, to fix rates and charges for the service rendered by such public utilities, and to make all needful rules and regulations in relation thereto. The term "utility," when used in the act, is defined thereby to mean and include any plant, equipment, or property, and any franchise, license, or permit, used or to be used for the production, storage, transmission, sale, delivery, or furnishing of cold, heat, light, power, or for the conveyance of oil or gas by pipe line, etc. Section 12 of the act provides that the charges for the service rendered by means of any public utility of any city shall be high enough to produce a revenue sufficient to bear all costs of maintenance and operation, to meet interest charges on bonds and certificates issued on account thereof, and to permit the accumulation of a surplus or sinking fund that shall be sufficient to meet all outstanding bonds or certificates at maturity. Section 13 thereof provides that the accounts for the public utility shall be kept distinct from other city accounts, and in such manner as to show the true and complete financial results of such city ownership and operation, and so as to show the actual cost to such city of the public utility owned, all cost of maintenance, extension, and improvement, all operating expenses of every description, and the amounts set aside for sinking fund purposes, and also reasonable allowances for interest, depreciation, and insurance, and estimates of the amount of taxes that would be chargeable against such property if owned by a private corporation. It further provides that the city council shall cause to be printed annually for public distribution a report showing the financial results of such city ownership and operation, in form as aforesaid, and that the accounts of such utility, so kept, shall be examined once each year by an expert accountant, who shall report to the city council the result of his examination.

As will be seen from the foregoing, the Municipal Ownership Act is a complete act within itself, authorizing cities to acquire, own, and operate public utilities within their borders, and to regulate the same and fix rates and charges as aforesaid, and the act furnishes the reason for excepting such public utilities from the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission by the provisions of § 10 of the Public Utilities Act.

Appellant insists that, if such public utilities owned and operated by cities should be held to be excepted from the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission, as provided in said § 10, such a construction would render that exception void because in violation of § 22 of article 4 of the state Constitution, prohibiting the legislature from passing any local or special law granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special privileges, and also in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which prohibits the states from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws. In the determination of the validity or invalidity

Statutes—
construction—validity of special provisions.

of particular provisions of public laws, courts should not be unmindful of the effect upon the entire enactment of the holding of any particular provision invalid. If the exception in § 10 is of such import that the other sections of the Public Utilities Act, without such exception, would cause results not contemplated or desired by the legislature, then the entire statute must be holding provision invalid.

—effect of

held invalid if we hold the exception invalid. Connolly v.

Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431. On the other hand, if § 10 is held to be invalid and the balance of the act valid, then a large portion of the Municipal Ownership Act must likewise be held to be invalid, as a bare inspection of the act will show.

The purpose of the Public Utilities Act expressed in its title is to provide for the regulation of public utilities. If municipal corporations are made subject to the act, will a result be produced contrary to the intention of the legislature? The legislature, by the exception in § 10, has answered this question and has left nothing to inference, unless, as contended by appellant, § 83 of said act has expressed a different and controlling intention by this language: "If any section, subdivision, sentence or clause of this act is for any reason held invalid or to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portion of this act." The statute must be considered as a whole, and the intention derived from a consideration of all of its clauses and provisions. The statute, we must infer, was adopted in accordance with a plan. State v. Gantz, 124 La. 535, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1072, 50 So. 524. That plan was that all private corporations owning and operating public utilities should be bound by all the provisions of the act, and that all municipal corporations should be excluded from the provisions of the act. Public utilities owned and operated by municipalities were to be governed and controlled by the provisions of the Municipal Ownership Act, and regulated only by such municipalities. It is not possible to get away from these conclusions. To strike out the provisions of § 10, exempting municipalities from the terms and provisions of the Public Utilities Act, and to then hold that the remainder of the act is valid, would be the making of a law by this court that the legislature never intended to make, and at the same time would be nullifying a large portion of the Municipal Ownership Act which the legislature clearly intended should be and remain effective. While it is well settled by adjudications of this and other courts that, if different sections of a statute are independent of each other, that which is unconstitutional may be disregarded, and valid sections allowed to stand and be in force, yet it is also the inflexible rule that, where a portion of an act is valid

—statute invalid
in part, invalid
in toto.

and a portion invalid, and the court cannot say that the legislature would have passed the act with the void portion eliminated, then the entire act must be held invalid. People v. McBride, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 84 N. E. 865, 14 Ann. Cas. 994; Cornell v. People, 107 Ill. 372; Hinze v. People, 92 Ill. 406; People ex rel. Miller v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 585; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 389, 63 L.R.A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241, 67 N. E. 28; Kellyville Coal Co. v. Harrier, 207 Ill. 624, 99 Am. St. Rep. 240, 69 N. E. 927.

We cannot agree with appellant's contention that the saving clause in § 83 of the Public Utilities Act will justify this court in holding invalid the exception in § 10 without affecting the act as a whole. Section 83 was not intended to nullify any rule of statutory construction, and must receive a construction consistent with the rules of constitutional law. While this section may be some indication of legislative intention, yet, in construing it, we must give due consideration to the rules heretofore laid down by this court in the interpretation of statutes. State ex rel. Wausau Street R. Co. v. Bancroft, 148 Wis. 124, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 526, 134 N. W. 330. We cannot, under such rules, ignore the fact that the enforcement of this section to the letter would not only nullify the exceptions in § 10 aforesaid, but would practically nullify the whole Municipal Ownership Act.

The history of the legislation under consideration furnishes the court material aid in determining whether or not the legislature would have passed the act with the exception in § 10 eliminated. It appears from the senate and house journals, as quoted by appellant, that the two acts were introduced and passed as twin measures. They were passed after a legislative inquiry made by a committee appointed under a joint resolution passed in 1911, authorizing an inquiry into public utilities and also municipally owned public utilities. A spirited contest appears to have been waged concerning the Public Utilities Act in reference to the senate's "home rule" amendments, giving to cities the right to regulate public utilities. The house refused to concur in those amendments, and later the senate receded from its amendments and permitted the house bill to become a law, and the house permitted the senate bill to become a law. The governor submitted the house bill to the attorney general for his opinion as to its form and constitutionality. In that opinion the attorney general said: "The bill as originally framed provides for the exercise by each city of power and authority to regulate its own public utilities, but the provisions on that subject were stricken out before the bill was finally adopted. However, the general assembly has passed senate bill No. 538, which, as I have already informed you, is constitutional and valid, and which by its terms authorizes cities to own and operate public utilities within their limits, and § 10 of house bill No. 907 especially exempts municipally owned or operated public utilities from the operation of the act." Reports & Opinions of Attorney General, 1913, p. 46. The efforts of the governor, who signed these measures, to get the home-rule feature incorporated in the house bill, are well known by everybody who is familiar with the contest over these measures during the time they were pending in the legislature. It seems to us that the conclusion must follow that, if the exception contained in § 10 had been stricken by amendment, the Public Utilities Act would never have been passed by that legislature, as the act would then have authorized the public utilities commission to regulate and fix rates for public utilities owned and operated by municipalities, contrary to the provisions of the Municipal Ownership Act. This court would, in our judgment, be virtually making a law by so amending the act, and holding the Public Utilities Act valid as amended. Courts have no power to make laws.

If appellant's contention is correct that the exception in § 10 creates a special or local law and grants special privileges, in violation of our Constitution, this court would have no alternative but to hold it invalid, even though, in doing so, we would be compelled to declare the entire Public Utilities Act unconstitutional.

—effect of saving clause.

Courts—power to make laws.

Constitutional law—special privileges—exemption of municipal corporation from public utility laws.

and operated by municipalities from the provisions of the statute

Definition—corporation.

violates the Constitution. The word "corporation," as used in § 22 of article 4 of our Constitution, does include municipal corporations. People ex rel. Danville v. Fox, 247 Ill. 402, 93 N. E. 302. But municipal corporations may form a separate and distinct class from private corporations. The constitutional provision does not mean that the same rule shall apply to every individual in the state under all circumstances, but only under substantially the same circumstances; and laws may be valid, though operating only upon particular persons or classes, if there is a valid reason for such particular operation. Condon v. Chicago, 249 Ill. 596, 94 N. E. 976; Tarantina v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 254 Ill. 624, 98 N. E. 999, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1058; Dawson Soap Co. v. Chicago, 234 Ill. 314, 84 N. E. 920, 14 Ann. Cas. 1131; Douglas v. People, 225 Ill. 536, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 116 Am. St. Rep. 162, 80 N. E. 341; Casparis Stone Co. v. Industrial Bd. 278 Ill. 77, 115 N. E. 822. Of course, an arbitrary designation of persons is not permissible. The only reason which is recognized as valid is a substantial distinction, which differentiates in important particulars the particular persons to whom it applies from all other persons, having some reasonable and just relation to the purpose of the law. People ex rel. Kewanee v. Kewanee Light & P. Co. 262 Ill. 255, 104 N. E. 680. The basis of the two statutes in question for making two distinct classes of public utilities—those owned and operated by private corporations and those owned and operated by municipalities—is the supposition that there exists some valid reason why both of them cannot or should not be subject to all the provisions of the Public Utilities Act, and be regulated and rates fixed for them in accordance with the provisions of that act. If such a valid reason does exist, the legislature did not violate any constitutional provision in enacting the two separate acts for the regulation and control of the two classes of public utilities. The legislature may classify persons or occupations for the purpose of legislative regulation and control, provided such classification is not an arbitrary one, and is based upon some substantial difference which bears a proper relation to the classification. People v. Schenck, 257 Ill. 384, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 46, 100 N. E. 994, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1129.

Constitutional law—right to classify for legislative purposes.

The purposes of the Public Utilities Act were to prevent exorbitant rates, unjust discrimination, and undue preferences in rates between different consumers, and, at the same time, to protect public utilities from local influences which would compel them to render services at such low rates that efficient services to the public would be thereby impaired. To enable consumers to protect themselves against exorbitant rates and unjust discrimination without compelling them, in the first instance, to resort to their right to a hearing under the act on the question of rates, §§ 33–35 were incorporated in the Public Utilities Act, requiring the filing of schedules of rates and the posting and publishing of the same. No such requirement is necessary for the protection of the consumer when the utility is owned and operated by the municipality. Before the enactment of the Public Utilities Act the records of public utilities owned by private corporations or private persons were free from public inspection. Municipalities speak only by their records, which are always open to inspection. Under § 1 of the Municipal Ownership Act, granting municipalities the power to own and operate public utilities, and fix the rates and charges for the services rendered by them, and to make all needful rules and regulations in relation thereto, municipalities can only act by ordinances and resolutions passed in the manner required by statute. Municipalities, under the Municipal Ownership Act, are limited in rates and charges for the product furnished by their public utilities, and cannot operate them at a profit to the same extent as can private corporations, associations, or persons owning like utilities. They are required, under the act governing them, to keep separate accounts of the moneys received from the operation of their utilities, and such funds cannot be used as revenues except to discharge their obligations and expenses in the operation of the utilities. Their charges for such services are simply to be high enough to produce revenue sufficient to bear all costs of maintenance and operation, to meet interest charges on bonds and certificates issued on account thereof, and to permit the accumulation of a surplus or sinking fund sufficient to meet all outstanding bonds or certificates at maturity, issued on account of such utilities. The statute does not contemplate that the rates shall be higher or lower than for the purposes aforesaid, no matter what effect such rates and charges may have upon other corporations or persons owning or operating public utilities.

The legislature had the right and Public utilities—right of municipal corporation to operate.

power to authorize and empower municipalities to own and operate public utilities. That is not questioned in this case. It is not questioned that the legislature had the power to prescribe the rates and charges or the limits of the same to municipalities, as it has done in the Municipal Ownership Act. The right to fix rates for all public utilities is vested, in the first instance, in the state. The state has the right to prescribe rates

—power of legislature over
rates.

and charges by private corporations and persons for the operation of public utilities that shall produce a reasonable profit or return over and above and on their entire investment and outlay, and, on the other hand, to limit the rates and charges of utilities owned by municipalities so that they will only be sufficient to meet outlays and expenses of every kind by reason of their ownership and operation, as provided by the Municipal Ownership Act. It is contemplated that private corporations and persons shall realize profits. The legislature had the right to assume that the rates and charges of each of these two classes of public utilities would not and could not be the same to consumers. It is clear, therefore, that the legislature acted within its constitutional rights and powers in enacting the two statutes and making different provisions in so far as the same were necessary to accomplish the purposes for which the two acts were enacted. It is equally clear that the legislature had the right and power to delegate to the municipalities the right of regulation and control of such municipally owned plants. Such right is clearly recognized not only in this state, but in other states. It might have given the public utilities commission the right to fix the rates and charges of plants owned by municipalities, in accordance with the provisions of the Municipal Ownership Act, as well as the right to regulate and fix charges for privately owned public utilities under the Public Utilities Act, had it seen fit to do so. The fact that it has designated municipilegislature—delegation of power to municipal corporation.

palities as the proper bodies that shall regulate and fix the rates to be charged by utilities owned by them can furnish no cause for complaint to appellant, as the rates that appellant may charge under the Public Utilities Act are necessarily fixed upon a different basis, and may or may not be the same as the rates and charges that may be fixed under the Municipal Ownership Act, even in the same city.

There is another reason for holding that neither of the two acts aforesaid violates § 22 of article 4 of our Constitution, or the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. A law is not local or special, in a constitutional sense, if it operates in the same manner upon all persons in like circumstances. "A law general in its character may extend only to particular classes and not be obnoxious to the provisions of the Constitution if all persons of the same class are treated alike under similar circumstances and conditions.' . . . A law is general, not because it embraces all the governed, but that it may from its terms, when many are embraced in its provisions, embrace all others when they occupy like positions to those who are embraced. Such a law must be based upon some substantial difference between the situation of a class or classes and another class or classes to which it does not apply." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Doyle, 258 Ill. 624, 102 N. E. 260, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 385. When tested by the foregoing rules, it will readily appear that the Public Utilities Act does not violate the constitutional provision aforesaid by reason of the exception in § 10. The Municipal Ownership Act for the same reason is equally unobjectionable, so far as it is material to the issues in this case.

Constitutional law—what is local or special law.

There is no reason for appellant's contention that any part of the Municipal Ownership Act is repealed by implication by the provisions of the Public Utilities Act, because the latter act was passed after the enactment of the former. Whether or not public utilities owned by municipalities shall be placed upon a different basis from public utilities owned by private corporations, associations, or persons, for regulation and for fixing their rates and charges, is a question solely for the legislature to determine, as is also the question whether or not they shall be regulated and rates fixed for them by different tribunals or by the same tribunal. There was a good and substantial reason for the legislature dividing public utilities into the two classes aforesaid, and making laws specially applicable to each of them, as aforesaid. When we consider the acts in this light, their several provisions are in complete harmony, and are not so antagonistic to each other in the matters complained of by appellant as to leave any reasonable ground for the contention that any provision of the Municipal Ownership Act is repealed by implication by any provision of the other act.

Statute—repeal by implication.

We have no disagreement with the general proposition argued by appellant that a municipal corporation which supplies its inhabitants with light, gas, or water does so in its capacity of a private corporation, and not in the exercise of its powers of local sovereignty. This general principle has been announced in a number of cases in this and other jurisdictions, mostly in cases for personal injuries arising on the question of the liability of cities operating municipally owned public utilities. We may concede that the operation by a municipality of an electric light plant for the furnishing of light or power to private consumers, for gain, cannot in any sense be the performance of a governmental function. Such established principle can furnish no reasonable basis for appellant's argument in this case that such mumunicipalities must be put in the same class with private corporations or persons operating public utilities, for the purpose of regulation and of fixing their rates and charges in operating such public utilities. It might just as well be argued that corporations operating steam railroads should be put in the same class, for all purposes of legislation, with corporations operating street railroads, because they both carry for hire passengers and freights of all kinds. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 173 Ind. 469, 87 N. E. 1030, 90 N. E. 1011.

Municipal corporation—capacity in which it operates public utilities.

Appellant suggests that, if we construe the exception in § 10 of the Public Utilities Act as simply excepting municipal plants that only produce electricity for the use and requirements of the municipalities when acting in their governmental capacity, such a construction would render the whole act valid. It is argued that such a construction is permissible under the well-known rule that words in a statute may be modified, altered, or supplied so as to obviate any repugnance or inconsistency with legislative intention, although in so doing particular provisions of an act may not be read or construed according to their literal reading. State Public Utilities Commission v. Monarch Refrigerating Co. 267 Ill. 528, P.U.R.1915D, 119, 108 N. E. 716, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 528. It is therefore urged that the exception should be read as if it were written, "except, however, such public utilities as are or may hereafter be owned or operated by any municipality for its own use." This contention is fully answered already, we think, by our showing that there is no such repugnance or inconsistency in these statutes to be obviated, and there is, therefore, no necessity for invoking the rule suggested. Besides, it is clear that no such rule could be applied, in any event, without doing violence to the legislative intent. There can be no doubt whatever that the legislature intended that public utilities owned and operated by municipalities should not be under the supervision and regulation of the public utilities commission in any way. There is also no reason for supposing that such municipally owned and operated plants as only produced electricity or other product for the use of the municipalities were intended to be excepted by § 10. Such a utility would not be a public utility any more than would a utility owned and operated by a private individual for his own use exclusively. The term "public utility" implies a public use, carrying with it the duty to serve the public and treat all persons alike; and it precludes the idea of service which is private in its nature and is not to be obtained by the public. State Public Utilities Commission ex rel. Macon County Teleph. Co. v. Bethany Mut. Teleph. Asso. 270 Ill. 183, P.U.R.1916A, 997, 110 N. E. 334, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 495. No such private utility could be considered as being subject to the provision of said act in the absence of any exception, and the legislature cannot be reasonably held to have made such a meaningless exception in this statute.

Statutes—limitation by
construction.

One of the statements made by appellant, and upon which it bases an argument that § 10 aforesaid, with its exceptions aforesaid, is unconstitutional, is that "any legislation which pretends to relieve the city of the same burdens of regulation imposed upon private corporations or individuals engaged in like enterprise is invalid." As we have already shown, municipally owned public utilities are not exempt from regulation by the Municipal Ownership Act as to rates and charges, and they are not exempt from the making of rates and charges that are reasonable and just and uniform for the same amount and character of service. Under the Municipal Ownership Act the consumers are just as completely protected from exorbitant rates

Constitutional law—due process
—power to discriminate in rates.

and unjust discrimination as the consumers are under the Public Utilities Act. If the consumers had to depend entirely upon the municipalities to be kept free from the effects of unjust and exorbitant rates and unjust discrimination, then there might be some reason for appellant's contention. The consumers of the product of utilities of private, corporations and private persons operating under the Public Utilities Act may be just as much subject to be burdened with exorbitant and unjust rates and unjust discrimination under the action of the public utilities commission, if we are to assume that all public officials would be corrupt and unfair or inefficient when acting in such capacity. The public utilities commission may make serious mistakes in rating and in regulating public utilities, and so may officers of municipalities, acting in a similar capacity. We have no reason to assume that either one will intentionally be corrupt or unfair. There is little or no reason why either body might be more unfair or corrupt than the other. But the consumers in either case have the right to appeal to the courts to correct such abuses as may occur. Municipal officers under the Municipal Ownership Act cannot discriminate in rates, or make exorbitant and unjust rates to consumers, if they discharge their duties faithfully, honestly, and efficiently under that act. All their rates and charges fixed by ordinances or resolutions are subject to review by the courts to a like extent as the rates fixed by the public utilities commission for public utilities privately owned, although the matter of review may be had under a different law and by a different remedy. Butler v. Karb, 96 Ohio St. 472, 117 N. E. 953; Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, 98 Ohio St. 320, 3 A.L.R. 705, P.U.R. 1919C, 119, 121 N. E. 688; 2 Abbott, Mun. Corp. 1196.

The question whether or not the appellant or any other public utility or person may be injured or the Public Utilities Act violated by a lessee of appellee is not in this case, as appellee has not leased and is not intending to lease its plant to any private corporation or person whatever, and appellant does not claim that there is to be such a leasing. Upon the same footing is the question whether or not appellee may sell its product to persons residing outside its corporate limits. We must, therefore, regard all such discussions by appellant as serving no useful purpose in this case, and as not proper to be further considered by us in this opinion.

Municipal ownership of public utilities may or may not be a wise policy for the state. It was a matter for the legislature, and not for this court, to determine. The act has been adopted, as aforesaid, and we find no legal reason why it should not be held valid as written, in so far as it is questioned in this case. Appellant's contention, therefore, that public utilities owned and operated by municipalities are subject to the same regulation and rates under the Public Utilities Act as those owned and operated by private corporations, and that it should be granted an injunction on the grounds contended for by it, cannot be sustained.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Dunn, Ch. J., and Cartwright and Farmer, JJ., dissenting:

In operating an electric light plant and selling electricity to individuals the city is not exercising its governmental powers, but its private or proprietary rights, and its duties and liabilities are the same as those imposed by law upon individuals engaged in the same business. It was so held in regard to the furnishing of water and gas in Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 154, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545, where we said: "A municipal corporation which supplies its inhabitants with gas or water does so in its capacity of a private corporation, and not in the exercise of its powers of local sovereignty. If this power is granted to a borough or city, it is a special private franchise, made as well for the private emolument and advantage of the city as for the public good. In separating the two powers,—public and private,—regard must be had to the object of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively, they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character; but if the grant was for purposes of private advantages and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation quoad hoc is to be regarded as a private company. It stands upon the same footing as would any individual or body of persons upon whom the like special franchises had been conferred." Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 23; Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345. In Butler v. Karb, 96 Ohio St. 472, 117 N. E. 953, it is said: "That neither public nor private corporations may discriminate between members of the public with reference to rates and terms of service does not longer admit of controversy. This wholesome rule, long in force, has had frequent application, particularly to common carriers and utilities companies. A municipality operating a utility is not exempt therefrom. Acting in a proprietary capacity, we have seen, it should have the freedom of action of a private utility corporation, but it is also subject to the same restrictions as to practices of discrimination in rates and service." So far as a municipality is engaged in the commercial distribution of electricity, its rights and liabilities, powers, and duties, are measured by the same standard and governed by the same rules as apply to private corporations similarly engaged.

Courts—wisdom of municipal ownerships of public utilities—power over question.

There is no doubt that the exception of municipalities owning or operating public utilities from the operation of the Public Utilities Act, which applies to every other corporation, company, association, or individual, grants to such corporations a special privilege which such other corporations do not enjoy, and is therefore obnoxious to the provision of the state Constitution against special laws unless there exists some reasonable basis, having reference to the object of the legislation, for placing such municipalities in a class by themselves. The constitutional provision does not mean that the same rule shall apply to every individual in the state, under all circumstances, but only under substantially the same circumstances; and laws may be valid though operating only upon particular persons or classes of persons, if there is a valid reason for such particular operation. An arbitrary designation of persons is not permissible. The only reason which is recognized as valid is a substantial distinction which differentiates in important particulars, having some reasonable and just relation to the purpose of the law, the particular persons to whom it applies from all other persons. People ex rel. Kewanee v. Kewanee Light & P. Co. 262 Ill. 255, 104 N. E. 680.

A municipal corporation has no authority either to sell electricity to private consumers or to fix the rate at which it shall be sold within the municipality, in the absence of a statute enabling it to do so. In June, 1913, the general assembly passed and the governor approved a law which went into effect on July 1st, and gave to any city in the state the power to acquire, construct, own, and operate any public utility the product or service of which, or a major portion thereof, is or is to be supplied to the city or its inhabitants, and to contract for, purchase, and sell to private persons or corporations the products or service of such utilities, and to fix the rates and charges for the services rendered by such public utilities. Laws 1913, p. 455. This statute does not confer authority for the regulation of public utilities upon municipalities. At the same session of the legislature another law was enacted which became effective on January 1, 1914, and is known as the Public Utilities Act. Laws 1913, p. 459. This act created a public utilities commission, to which it gave the general supervision of all public utilities, and upon which extensive powers of regulation were conferred. Among many other things, every public utility was prohibited from undertaking to perform any service or furnish any product or commodity unless or until the rates and other charges and classifications, rules, and regulations relating thereto, applicable to such service, product, or commodity, have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of the act. Such rates, charges, or classifications, or any rule, regulation, practice, or contract relating to or affecting any rate or other charge, classification, or service, cannot be changed, unless the commission otherwise orders, except after thirty days' notice to the commission and to the public; no increase in any rate or charge can be made except upon a showing before the commission, and a finding by it that such increase is justified, and no greater or less rate can be charged for any product or service than that specified in the schedule at the time filed and in effect. Section 10 contained the clause which has been referred to, defining the term "public utility," and excepting utilities owned by municipalities from the definition. There is no doubt that the legislature intended that public utilities owned or operated by municipalities should not be under the supervision of the public utilities commission, or subject to its authority. There is no reason to suppose that this exemption was limited only to the operation of the utility in furnishing its product and service for the use of the municipality, and did not extend to the entire operation. On the contrary, there was no occasion to except an electric light plant, for instance, which a city operated only for lighting the streets and public places and property, and which had no private consumers. There was no need of all the detailed requirements of the Public Utilities Act in the case of a municipality which is the only consumer of the product of its plant. The exception applies to utilities owned by municipalities and operated commercially.

The purpose of the Public Utilities Act was the prevention of extortionate charges and unjust discriminations by public utilities. The authority to regulate public utilities is vested in the legislature, which may exercise it directly or through such governmental agencies as it may deem best. It might have given to each city in the state the power to regulate the rates to be charged by public utilities for their services, respectively, within the municipality. It did not do this, but it enacted a law authorizing each city to enter upon the commercial business of operating public utilities, and to fix its own rates, and it is not contended that this was beyond the legislative power. The Public Utilities Act, though passed at the same session, did not go into effect until six months later, and if there is any inconsistency between them, the later act must prevail. This act placed all public utilities under the supervision of the commission, and if the exception of utilities owned or operated by a municipality cannot be given effect, the acts are inconsistent. The one gives the public utilities commission supervision of the business of public utilities and control of rates, while the other gives the municipality the entire supervision and control of the business of any public utility it may own, and the regulation of its rates and charges. The effect of the two statutes is that public utilities engaged in commercial operation are divided into two classes; that is, those owned by a municipality, and all others. The former have the privilege of operation without restriction or supervision by the state; the latter have not, but must operate under the supervision and control of the public utilities commission. Is the difference of ownership a reasonable basis, having reference to the purpose of the legislation, for the difference in privilege? So far as this question is concerned, there is no difference in the character or purpose of the business transacted. No municipal, political, or governmental question is involved. The appellant and the appellee each owns and operates an electric plant and sells electricity for the purpose of profit to all persons who want to buy it. What relation has the ownership of their respective plants to the questions of unjust discrimination, extortionate charges, and unequal or inferior service, which the Public Utilities Act was intended to prevent? The consumers of the appellant's product may be the same persons as the consumers of the appellee's product, or neighbors, side by side. They may be required to pay extortionate rates or different rates for the same service, or, if they pay the same rate, the service may be inferior. The appellant's customer has a remedy. He may apply to the public utilities commission for relief, and, if the facts justify it, he is entitled to relief as a legal right. The appellee's customer has no remedy. He can apply only to appellee—the very authority of whose action complaint is made. In the one case, the controversy is submitted to a third party; in the other, to one of the parties to the controversy. The appellee's claim with reference to this classification is contained in the following extract from its brief: "The legislature has adopted its own classification of public utilities by authorizing the municipalities to regulate and control municipal public utilities, and the state commission to regulate and control privately owned public utilities. This is a reasonable classification, based upon the different conditions arising under municipal and private ownership and operation. In the operation of a municipal public utility, the public officials are conducting the business for the people themselves, who are in a position to obtain such rates and regulation as may be reasonably required. On the other hand, privately owned utilities can only be controlled by an independent body, such as a state commission or other agency."

The persons who use the products or service of public utilities are entitled to the benefit of the Public Utilities Act, and are entitled to its protection against extortion, discrimination, and inferior service, by whomsoever furnished. The furnishing of such service is an ordinary commercial business, by whomsoever undertaken. Whether a public utility is owned by a private corporation or a municipal corporation, its relation to its customers is not different. They are under the same compulsion to use its service—are at its mercy to the same extent. If a customer is oppressed by extortionate charges, or discriminated against by a wrongful rate or inferior service, the wrong is the same whether done by a municipal corporation or a private corporation. The difference in ownership does not change the character of the wrong done, or justify the refusal of a prompt, adequate and complete remedy in one case which is granted in the other. The fact that, by organizing with others, complaining customers may be able, at some future election, to secure a change of administration which will, perhaps, have the ability and sense of justice voluntarily to correct the wrong, does not justify putting municipally owned public utilities in a class separate from other competing public utilities, and relieving them from the supervision of the public utilities commission.

The clause which excepts municipally owned or operated public utilities from the definition of a public utility in § 10 of the Public Utilities Act is unconstitutional. Section 83 of the act provides that "if any section, subdivision, sentence or clause of this act is for any reason held invalid or to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portion of this act." The act can be effectively carried out after eliminating the unconstitutional clause, and it is not necessary to declare the whole act unconstitutional. If some of the provisions of an act of the general assembly are within the legislative power and others are beyond the legislative power, the former provisions may be held valid while the latter must be held invalid. Section 83 is not a mere declaration of a common-law rule, but is a declaration of the legislative intention. It expresses the intention that the legislative purpose to establish a commission, and give it authority for the regulation of public utilities, shall not be defeated by the unconstitutionality of any section, subdivision, sentence, or clause of the act. This general purpose of the act must be carried out, though parts of it may be declared unconstitutional. The inclusion of municipal plants within the authority of the commission does not destroy the general legislative scheme; it merely modifies it in detail. The general assembly might have created the commission without exempting municipal corporations. Though it intended to exempt municipal corporations, it had the power to provide that, if such exemption were invalid, the act should still be valid without the exemption. This is the meaning of the declaration in § 83, and it is not the province of the court to say that the legislature did not mean what the words say, or did not know what they meant.

In our judgment the decree of the Circuit Court should be reversed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 13, 1920.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States November 7, 1921 (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, p. 38) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

ANNOTATION.

Applicability of public utility acts to municipal corporations owning or operating a public utility.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note in 10 A.L.R. 1432. As there stated, the statute involved in the reported case (SPRINGFIELD GAS & E. CO. v. SPRINGFIELD, ante, 929) expressly excluded municipally owned plants, the chief contest in that case being over the validity of the exclusion. That such an exclusion is valid is held in the reported case, and this conclusion is sustained by the United States Supreme Court upon appeal (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, p. 38) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

In accord with the decision in Pasadena v. Railroad Commission (1920) 183 Cal. 526, 10 A.L.R. 1425, 192 Pac. 25, it was held in Los Angeles Gas & E. Corp. v. Public Service Dept. (1921) — Cal. App. —, 197 Pac. 962, that the railroad commission was without jurisdiction over a municipal corporation engaged in supplying electric energy to its inhabitants, and therefore the municipality could not be compelled to apply and obtain, as a condition precedent, a certificate of public convenience and necessity. That a municipality operating an electric light plant is not subject to the railroad commission is held also in Sincerney v. Los Angeles (1921) — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 380. And that a municipality furnishing water to its inhabitants is not subject to the commission is held in Jochimsen v. Los Angeles (1921) — Cal. App. —, 202 Pac. 902.

As appears from the earlier note, the Pennsylvania statute subjected municipalities to the authority of the commission to the extent of requiring them to obtain a certificate of convenience and necessity as a condition precedent to the construction or operation of the public utility. The statute, however, applies, to municipalities only to a limited extent. They are held not subject to the authority of the commission in relation to municipal rate making, in Barnes Laundry Co. v. Pittsburgh (1920) 266 Pa. 24, P.U.R.1920D, 569, 109 Atl. 535. It was held in Gilmore v. United Gas Improv. Co. (1921; Pa.) P.U.R.1921B, 490, that the Public Service Company Law of that state left the commission without power to regulate the rates or service of plants owned by a municipality, and operated either directly by it or by others, under the lease.

The Illinois law specifically exempts such public utilities as are or may hereafter be owned or operated by any municipality. A plant owned by the municipality, but operated by an individual, under lease, was held to be municipally owned within this rule, in Re Louisville Light & Water Co. (1920; Ill.) P.U.R.1921C, 160.

The jurisdiction of the public service commission over the rates charged by a municipality outside its territorial limits was affirmed in Star In- vest. Co. v. Denver (1919; Colo.) P.U.R.1920B, 684.

As shown in the earlier note, the public service commission has jurisdiction over public utilities owned and operated by municipal corporations in Montana. It is held in Re Laurel (1921; Mont.) P.U.R.1921D, 817, that the commission has authority over the extensions of municipal service of a water system to persons beyond its boundaries, although service beyond its boundaries cannot be compelled.

The New Jersey act was held, in Re South River (1920; N. J.) P.U.R.1920E, 408, not to subject municipal plants to the jurisdiction of the public service commission to the extent of requiring the commission's approval of the erection of a modern light and power plant, not in contemplation of the supplying of service beyond the limits of the municipality.

The Pennsylvania commission has jurisdiction to hear an application of a municipality to acquire a water plant, although the rights and financial ability of the municipality to acquire it have not been judicially determined. Re Burgess (1921; Pa.) P.U.R.1921C, 812. W. A. E.

J. G. WILLIS, Rcspt.,

v.

ARIE KRANENDONK, Appt.

Utah Supreme Court — September 16, 1921.

(— Utah, —, 200 Pac. 1025.)

Landlord and tenant — surrender — effect on liability for rent.

1. The surrender of leased premises by the tenant and their acceptance by the landlord during the term releases the tenant from liability for all rents not due and payable at the time of the surrender.

[See note on this question beginning on page 957.]

— rent payable at end of year — apportionment.

2. Where rent for a year is payable in a lump sum at the end of the year, there can be no apportionment if the landlord accepts a surrender during the year, although the tenant has had the use of the premises for several months.

[See 16 R. C. L. 937, 938.]

— effect of evidencing rent by note.

3. The fact that rent payable for a year is evidenced by a note payable at the end of the year does not change the rule that there can be no apportionment if the landlord accepts a surrender during the year.

Pleading — legal conclusion — effect.

4. A tenant whose surrender of the premises is accepted before rent evidenced by a note becomes due does not plead failure of consideration in an action on the note by stating that the surrender was accepted before the rent became due, by reason of which "the consideration of the note failed," since the statement is a mere legal conclusion.

— deprivation of benefit of facts.

5. The mere adding of a conclusion of law to a pleading of facts in a case does not prevent the party from insisting upon the rights arising from the facts pleaded.

Landlord and tenant — acceptance of surrender — what is.

6. An irrevocable acceptance by the landlord is effected if, when the tenant tells him he will move off the property, the landlord acquiesces and accepts the premises and rents them to another.

[See 16 R. C. L. 1155; see note in 3 A.L.R. 1080.]

— what amounts to acceptance of surrender.

7. The entry by a landlord into possession of premises abandoned by the tenant, and treating them as though the tenancy had expired, amounts to a surrender and acceptance.

[See 16 R. C. L. 1153, 1154.]

Evidence — judicial notice — seasons on farm.

8. Judicial notice is taken that in case of farm lands used for agricultural purposes there is a dormant and a growing season in each year.

[See 15 R. C. L. 1103.]

Landlord and tenant — apportionment of rent for farm property.

9. Upon abandonment by a farm tenant who has leased the property from fall to fall of premises in the spring, it is inequitable to apportion the yearly rent as though it was payable monthly, so as to charge him with the proportional part of the yearly rent during the winter months when he retains possession.

Appeal — directing final judgment.

10. When the result of a suit depends entirely upon a legal question, the appellate court should, in reversing the judgment of the trial court, declare the legal conclusion which the trial court should have done, and end the litigation.

[See 2 R. C. L. 281.]

(Gideon, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Weber County (Agee, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note made and delivered by defendant to plaintiff's assignor. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. George Halverson, for appellant:

If the lessor unqualifiedly takes possession of the property delivered to him by his tenant, he thereby releases the tenant.

Baker v. Eilers Music Co. 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056; Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, 27 Pac. 369; Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285.

And where the surrender is between rent days the tenant, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, is discharged from all liability for rent, even* for the period between the surrender and the last rent day, unless it is payable in advance.

24 Cyc. 1163; American Bonding Co. v. Pueblo Invest. Co. 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 557, 80 C. C. A. 97, 150 Fed. 30, 10 Ann. Cas. 357; McKensie v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. 192; Vernam v. Smith, 15 N. Y.

327; Learned v. Ryder, 61 Barb. 552; Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, 27 Pac. 369; McGregor v. Board of Education, 107 N. Y. 511, 14 N. E. 420; Sperry v. Miller, 16 N. Y. 407; 2 Wood, Land. & T. 2d ed. 477, note 3, p. 1096.

But a surrender, re-entry, or eviction between rent days, or at any time before the rent has fully accrued, releases the lessee from liability therefor, and defeats an action for its recovery.

Smith v. Shepard, 15 Pick. 147, 25 Am. Dec. 432; Curtiss v. Miller, 17 Barb. 477; Home L. Ins. Co. v. Sherman, 46 N. Y. 370; Giles v. Comstock, 4 N. Y. 270, 53 Am. Dec. 374; Reed v. Snowhill, 51 N. J. L. 162, 16 Atl. 679; Hall v. Gould, 13 N. Y. 127; Okie v. Person, 23 App. D. C. 170; Alvord v. Banfield, 85 Or. 49, 166 Pac. 549; Meagher v. Eilers Music House, 77 Or. 70, 150 Pac. 266.

Mr. J. G. Willis, for respondent:

In cases of abandonment, a right of recovery is recorded by the law.

24 Cyc. 1165; Higgins v. Street, 19 Okla. 45, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 398, 92 Pac. 153, 14 Ann. Cas. 1086; Merrill v. Willis, 51 Neb. 162, 70 N. W. 914; Brown v. Cairns, 63 Kan. 584, 66 Pac. 639; Schuisler v. Ames, 16 Ala. 73, 50 Am. Dec. 168; Respini v. Porta, 89 Cal. 464, 23 Am. St. Rep. 488, 26 Pac. 967.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, as assignee of one Rufus A. Garner, commenced this action in the district court of Weber county to recover upon a promissory note made and delivered by the defendant to said Garner. The complaint is in the usual form in such actions. The defendant filed an answer, in which, after making certain denials, he, as an affirmative defense, averred: "That on the 14th day of November, 1912, the said Rufus A. Garner, payee in said promissory note, leased, demised, and let to defendant by a certain agreement in writing 92 acres of land in Uintah, Weber county, Utah, for a period of five years, for the sum of $200 down, and the balance of $150 October 31, 1913, to be covered by a note due October 31, 1913, and $350 on the 31st day of October, 1914, and $400 per year, October 31, 1915, October 31, 1916, and October 31, 1917, which said several payments were covered by promissory notes, and that the promissory note set forth in the complaint here was given to cover the payment due October 31, 1917; that on or about March 1, 1917, with the consent of the said Rufus A. Garner, payee in said promissory note, and the holder of said lease, this defendant surrendered the balance of the term thereof to the said lessor, who accepted the surrender thereof and entered into the possession of said property and every part thereof, and that the said Rufus A. Garner should have surrendered said note to this defendant at the time of accepting the surrender of said lease; that after such surrender of said leased premises the said Rufus A. Garner either continued in possession thereof himself, or leased the same for a long period of time to some other party; that the consideration for said note failed by the acceptance of the surrender of said lease."

The defendant further averred that the note was assigned by said Garner to plaintiff long after the same became due, and that the same was so assigned to plaintiff for collection, and that said Garner is the real party in interest.

There is no dispute respecting the facts, which, in substance, are that the note was assigned to plaintiff, after the same was due, for collection merely; that on the 14th day of November, 1912, the defendant leased from said Garner the land referred to in defendant's answer for a period of five years, commencing on the date aforesaid, for which the defendant agreed to pay as rent the several amounts stated in his answer, and to evidence which the notes set forth were given, of which the note in suit is the last one named in the answer. A copy of the lease was produced in evidence, in which it was provided that the rent should be evidenced by the notes aforesaid. It further appeared that the defendant did not occupy the leased premises, for the full five-year period, but that in April, 1917, he left the same with the consent of Garner, and that the latter let the same to another for the remainder of the year 1917.

Upon that subject the defendant testified that, before he "moved off" the premises, he and Mr. Garner had a conversation, in which, in speaking about the rent, the defendant said to Garner, "It is hard for a man to make it this year," to which Mr. Garner replied, "Well, if you can't make it, move off," and the defendant answered, "Thank you." Upon the same subject Garner testified that the defendant had asked him for a reduction of the rent, which he had declined to make, and that the defendant then said, "I'll move off," to which Garner replied, "Very well, it is up to you." Garner added: "That is the sum and substance of the conversation." Garner, however, also testified that within a few days after the defendant had moved off the premises "a Jap moved on the place, whose name he said was Sakuma." After Garner had testified that the defendant had left the premises, and that Sakuma, the Jap, had taken possession (the court found the date on which defendant left the premises to have been April 28, 1917), and that Sakuma had paid rent to Garner for the premises for the remainder of the year, defendant's counsel asked Garner: "How much rent did he pay?" Plaintiff objected to the question, upon the grounds that it was "incompetent and immaterial." The court, in giving his reason for sustaining the objection, said: "It is immaterial what arrangement he made. If the lease was surrendered to him in May [April] and he got $1,000 for it, that is wholly immaterial."

Defendant excepted to the ruling. In view that it is beyond controversy that the defendant left—surrendered—the premises to Garner in the latter part of April, 1917, and that Garner accepted the surrender and placed another tenant in possession, from whom he collected rent for the remainder of the year 1917, it is not necessary to quote further from the evidence. Upon the foregoing facts, the district court proceeded upon the theory that the premises had been surrendered by the defendant to, and accepted by, Mr. Garner for the unexpired term of 1917.

Notwithstanding the undisputed fact that the premises were leased for a term of years, and that the rent was payable in annual instalments as evidenced by the notes, the last of which is the one in suit, and that the rent was not payable until the end of each year, the district court, nevertheless, proceeded to ascertain the amount of the rent due from defendant by dividing the whole year into twelve monthly parts. In doing that the court divided the amount of rent payable for the last year, to wit, $400, by 12, and thus determined the amount for each month during the period defendant remained in possession to be $33.33. The court then found that the defendant occupied the premises from November 14, 1916, to sometime in April, 1917, making a period of a little in excess of five months. The court then multiplied the time the defendant was in the occupation of the premises at the rate of $33.33 per month, which aggregated the sum of $183.33 for which judgment was entered against the defendant on the $400 note. From that judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Defendant has assigned a number of errors, but in his brief he relies upon two legal propositions, which, stating them in his own words, are:

"(1) That the evidence shows a surrender by the defendant, and an acceptance by Garner, and a consequent release of any future rents not yet accrued; and

"(2) That if there was not a surrender the court erred in refusing to permit the defendant to show the amount of rent paid by the Japanese to Garner."

In view that there is no dispute in the evidence, the district court correctly held as a matter of law that there was a surrender of the leased premises by the defendant, the lessee, to Mr. Garner, the lessor, in April, 1917. It is also undisputed, and in view of the record it cannot be disputed, that no part of the rent was due or payable at the time the premises were surrendered by the tenant and accepted by the landlord in April, 1917. Nor, in view of the undisputed facts and the law applicable thereto, does it make any difference whether it is held that the defendant abandoned the premises rather than that he surrendered them. The undisputed fact is that Mr. Garner unconditionally accepted the premises in April, 1917, and that he leased them to another. In the light of the foregoing facts the question arises whether Garner, the landlord, did not release or discharge the defendant from the payment of any rent for the year 1917.

The legal effect of a surrender of leased premises by the tenant to the landlord during the term for which they were leased, and before the rent is due and payable, has frequently been declared by the courts, and, so far as the writer is advised, there is no conflict among the decisions, although they are very numerous and emanate from both English and American courts. It has

Landlord and tenant—surrender—effect on liability for rent.

so frequently been held by the courts aforesaid that in case a tenant surrenders the premises to his landlord before the end of the term, and before any of the rent is due and payable, the tenant is released or discharged from the payment of all rent, and that the landlord is without a remedy, that the rule has practically become elementary. The doctrine is likewise stated by all the text-writers on Landlord & Tenant. In 2 Underhill, on Landlord & Tenant, § 730, the author states the rule in the following language: "The effect of a surrender is to terminate the relation of landlord and tenant, and to put an end to the lease so far as the rights of the parties to it are concerned, and to their reciprocal duties and obligations. For a surrender at once terminates all covenants in the lease in favor of either party, where no cause of action has accrued or matured during the life of the lease. Neither has the landlord, after he has accepted a surrender of the premises, a cause of action for damages against his former tenant by reason of the diminished rent paid thereafter by a tenant whom he has accepted under a new lease in place of his former tenant. But a surrender, or the rescission, of a lease after rent has accrued, does not prevent its subsequent recovery by the landlord. If, however, there is a surrender of the premises before rent is due the rule is otherwise. There is no apportionment of rent up to the date of surrender. The acceptance of a surrender by the landlord prevents him not only from recovering rent accruing in the future, but also, where it takes place during a rental period, it prevents him from recovering for occupation for any period short of the whole period. The rent for the whole of the period, which is not then due, is extinguished, and the landlord can compel the tenant to pay no part thereof."

In 2 McAdam on Landlord & Tenant, 4th ed. § 399, the author says: "It is well settled that, when the term is surrendered before the expiration of a period for which rent accrues, the rent for the whole of such period, not then due, is extinguished, and can neither be distrained for nor collected by action." (Italics ours.)

The author then gives an illustration of what amounts to a surrender, as follows: "Therefore, where A demised to B, . . . rent payable quarterly, and during a current quarter, some dispute arising between the parties, B told A that she would quit immediately; and A answered, she might go when she pleased, and B quitted, and A accepted possession, . . . it was held that A could neither recover the rent which, by virtue of the original contract, would have become due at the expiration of the current quarter, nor rent pro rata for the actual occupation of the premises for any period short of the quarter,"—citing cases from the courts of both England and this country.

To the same effect are 2 Tiffany, Land. & T. § 191, and Taylor, Land. & T. 8th ed. § 518. In 16 R. C. L. pp. 973, 974, §§ 484, 485, it is said: "A surrender of the leasehold interest in the entire premises terminates the lease and all unmatured obligations between the parties dependent upon the continuance of the leasehold estate, and it is therefore well settled that a surrender releases the tenant from all liability for unaccrued rents. This principle as to the effect of surrender is the true foundation of the view taken in those cases which hold that the re-entry upon or reletting of the demised premises in case they are abandoned by the tenant releases the tenant from liability for future accruing rents. The liability of the tenant for unaccrued rents may, however, by the express terms of the surrender, be continued, and the courts will give effect to such provisions. It is well settled that a tenant's liability for rents accrued at the time of the surrender are unaffected thereby. A surrender between rent days discharges the tenant from all liability for the rent of the current period in case the rent is not payable until the end of such period, and the landlord in such case is not entitled to recover a proportionate part of the rent for such period as had expired at the time of the surrender. The theory of this rule is that the rent is not due, and that the contract does not contemplate the payment of rent until the completion of the period preceding the rent day. The continuation of the tenancy during this period is a condition precedent to the payment of the rent, and the landlord, by accepting a surrender before the rent day, waives this condition."

To the same effect is 23 Cyc. 1163.

Ireland v. United States Mortg. & T. Co. 72 App. Div. 95, 76 N. Y. Supp. 177, is a well-considered case. The court, after discussing the evidence (72 App. Div. at page 102), states the rule thus: "Nor could the defendant [the tenant] be charged with the rent that became due on April 1, 1899. It is conceded that defendant surrendered possession of the premises to the plaintiff on the 31st of March, 1899, the day before this rent became due. When there is a surrender before rent due, there is no apportionment of rent up to the day of surrender. The rent for the whole of the period not then due is extinguished." (Italics ours.)

The foregoing decision was affirmed by the New York court of appeals in 175 N. Y. 491, 67 N. E. 1083.

In Reed v. Snowhill, 51 N. J. L. at page 164, 16 Atl. 679, the court, after referring to the doctrine of surrender, says: "With this ending of the estate or interest in the land go also all covenants in the lease which had not matured and become actionable during the continuance of the estate."

In Curtiss v. Miller, 17 Barb. at page 479, it is said: "It is well settled by numerous adjudged cases that, when the term is surrendered before the expiration of a period for which rent accrues, the rent for the whole of such period, not then due, is extinguished, and can neither be distrained for nor collected by action."

In a recent case from California, Baker v. Eilers Music Co. 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056, it is said: "A lessor who takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant, and does so unqualifiedly, thereby releases his tenants. He may accept possession of the property for the benefit of the tenant and relet the same; in the latter case he has no action, except one for damages for the difference between what he was able in good faith to let the property for and the amount provided to be paid under the lease agreement"—citing cases.

To the same effect is Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285.

The following cases are all in point upon the question of surrender and the discharge of the tenant as a consequence of such surrender: Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, 27 Pac. 369; McKenzie v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. 192; Sperry v. Miller, 16 N. Y. 407; Hunter v. Reiley, 43 N. J. L. 480; Giles v. Comstock, 4 N. Y. 270, 53 Am. Dec. 374. It is not necessary to cite more of the numerous cases upon the subject. If the reader desires to pursue the question, he will find a large number of cases cited in support of the texts hereinbefore quoted.

(— Utah, —, 200 Pac. 1085.)

The foregoing cases have been referred to and quoted from rather copiously, for the purpose of showing that the courts are all agreed that, where there is a surrender by a tenant and an acceptance by the landlord, as in the case at bar, no action can be maintained by the landlord after such surrender for any rent not due and payable at or before the time the surrender went into effect; that in case of surrender the landlord can only maintain an action for the rent that was due and payable at or before the time of the surrender; and that in case of surrender before the rent is payable there can be no apportionment of the rent. So far as the writer is advised there are no decisions to the contrary. None have been cited, and the writer, after making diligent search, has not found any. In order, therefore, to uphold the judgment of the district court, we must not only depart from the uniform holdings of the courts, but we must also violate the contract entered into between the defendant as tenant and Mr. Garner as landlord. By the terms of the lease the rent was payable in a lump sum at the end of each year during the five-year period. The district court, however, disregarded the terms of the lease and treated them as though the rent were made payable monthly. If the —rent payable at end of year—apportionment.

rent had been payable monthly, then, under all the decisions, the defendant would be required to pay rent for the months he was in possession during the last year and before the surrender was made. In view, however, that the rent was not payable until long after the premises were surrendered to and accepted by Garner, the defendant, as matter of law, was released from the payment of any rent for the last year of the term, and the district court was without legal authority to apportion the rent as it attempted to do.

Nor does the fact that the rent was evidenced by a note in any way affect defendant's rights in the premises. The doctrine or principle that, as between landlord and tenant, the latter is released or discharged from the payment of rent for the whole period of time for which the rent is payable, —effect of evidencing rent by note.

if the premises are surrendered to and accepted by the landlord before any part of the rent is due and payable, is always available to the tenant as a defense if he insists upon it. The right to make the defense arises out of the relationship of the parties and the nature of the contract or transaction, and not the form of the promise to pay rent. The contention, therefore, that in this case the doctrine does not apply because the rent was evidenced by a note, is wholly without merit.

It is, however, also suggested, and the district court, it seems, seriously considered the fact, that the defendant had interposed a plea of failure of consideration, and that inasmuch as the defendant occupied the premises for a portion of the last year of his term, for that reason, that plea was not established, except in part. In taking that view the district court erred in at least two particulars: (1) In holding that the defendant pleaded failure of consideration as a defense; and (2) in concluding that such a plea could be considered as between landlord and tenant in view of the undisputed facts in this case.

As to the first proposition it is very clear that the defendant did not plead failure of consideration as a defense. What he did plead in the answer was that the leased premises were surrendered to and accepted by the landlord before the end of the term and before any rent for the last year of the term was due and payable. After stating the facts respecting the surrender, the pleader added, that by reason of the surrender of the premises to, and the acceptance thereof by the landlord, "the consideration for said note failed." Pleading—legal conclusion—effect.

That statement was a mere legal conclusion of the pleader, and was of no effect as a pleading of facts. The statement amounted to no more than if the pleader had said: "That by reason of the surrender of the premises to, and the acceptance thereof by, the landlord before the end of the term and before any rent was due and payable under the lease, the defendant was released."

To have so pleaded would merely have been a statement of a legal conclusion, and not a pleading of facts. In view of the undisputed facts in this case the conclusion would, no doubt, have been correct as a matter of law, but it would have performed no function in the pleading. For the same reason the conclusion that the consideration of the note had failed performed no function whatever. That was a mere conclusion, deduced from the facts of surrender and acceptance of the premises. The facts respecting the surrender of the premises to and the acceptance thereof by the landlord, and the circumstances under which they occurred, were the only necessary facts to be pleaded in order to entitle the defendant to the defense that he was released or discharged from the payment of the rent. Those facts were pleaded, and no confusion whatever would have arisen had the pleader stopped after stating the facts. The mere fact, however, that the pleading is not couched in the most approved terms makes no difference.

Moreover, the mere fact that the pleader added his conclusion in no way affects the defendant's right to insist upon the defense of release. In this connection it is also important to keep in mind that the real ^{—deprivation of legal question involved here is one of release or discharge from an obligation by operation of law, and not one of failure of consideration. By reason of the surrender of the premises by the defendant as tenant, and the acceptance thereof by Mr. Garner as landlord, before the rent was due and payable, the defendant was released or discharged from payment of rent by operation of law,} benefit of facts.

and, being so released or discharged, no action for the rent becoming due and payable after such surrender and acceptance can be maintained against the defendant.

The legal proposition is one of having been released or discharged from an obligation by operation of law, and not whether the plaintiff may recover to the extent that the consideration passing between him and the defendant has failed, if it has only partially failed.

Nor is there any merit whatever to the contention made by plaintiff that the premises were abandoned by the defendant. Taking Mr. Garner's own version of the transaction, it is clear and explicit to the effect that, when the defendant told Garner, "I will move off," Mr. Garner said, "Very well, it is up to you." This being followed by defendant's leaving the premises, and by Mr. Garner's accepting them and ^{Landlord and tenant—acceptance of surrender—what is.}

renting them to another, constituted an irrevocable surrender and acceptance. Assuming, however, that there had been merely an abandonment of the premises by the defendant, then the result, in view of the undisputed facts, would still have to be the same. As pointed out in the case cited from California, where a tenant abandons the premises, and the landlord unconditionally goes into possession thereof and treats them as though the tenancy had expired, it amounts to a surrender, and the ^{—what amounts to acceptance of surrender.} landlord cannot thereafter recover any rent, or sue for damages. If he desires to reserve that right, he must recognize the tenant's rights in the premises for the unexpired term, and sue him for damages upon his breach of covenant to pay rent. This, however, is elementary doctrine.

If it were further assumed, however, that the district court's judgment could be maintained upon the theory assumed by it, the judgment, nevertheless, could not be sustained as matter of law. As we have seen, the court apportioned the rent and entered judgment at the monthly rate of $33.33 for the time the defendant occupied the premises during the year 1917. If it were assumed that the court had the power under the law to make such an apportionment, yet the apportionment was merely arbitrary and without any evidence upon which to base it. While it is true that the court insisted that such an apportionment would be more equitable between the parties than a total release would be, yet the assumed equity is based upon nothing but a bare assumption. If the district court's theory could be maintained as matter of law, it, nevertheless, in view of the circumstances, would still be far from equitable in this case. If the defendant is to be deprived of his legal rights, and is to be adjudged according to the equities, then he is still entitled to be adjudged in accordance with the actual facts and circumstances.

(— Utah, —, 200 Pac. 1025.)

In this connection it must be kept in mind that the leased premises consisted of a farm, which was used to produce crops. We take judicial notice of the fact that, with respect to farm lands used for agricultural purposes, there is a dormant and a

Evidence—
judicial notice—
seasons on farm. growing season in each year, and that in this latitude and altitude the principal growing season is between April and October; in some years a little earlier, and in others a little later. Mr. Garner, therefore, had the full benefit of the growing season after the land was surrendered to and accepted by him, and so had any one to whom the lands were leased for that year. If, therefore, the premises in question had been farmed by Garner himself, he might have grown and harvested a full crop; and what is true in his case would be true as to a tenant to whom the premises were released by Garner. If Garner had thus relet the premises, and had received a portion of the crop, as is frequently done, it might well be that he had received all the rent the land was worth. That would also have been true if he had received a cash rent.

Be that as it may, however, if Garner wanted to hold the defendant for the rent for the year 1917, he was required to accept the premises upon that condition, and to so notify the defendant. Not having done that, but having accepted the premises unconditionally, he must abide by the law, the same as all others. In view of the circumstances, therefore, the apportionment of the rent in accordance with the method adopted by the district court was manifestly unjust and inequitable.

Landlord and tenant—apportionment of rent for farm
property.

We have referred to this phase of the case, however, only for the purpose of showing that the theory of apportioning the rent which the district court assumed to be more equitable than the general law governing surrender is fallacious, and, under certain circumstances, might result in gross injustice, unless based strictly upon all the facts and circumstances, which was not done in this case.

In view of the conceded facts, which cannot be disputed, and in view of the well-settled law, there is —there can be—but one conclusion in this case, and that is that the judgment cannot prevail; further that, in view that the result entirely depends upon a legal question, this court should end the litigation between the parties and now declare the legal conclusion that the district court should have declared; namely, that the plaintiff cannot recover, and that judgment be entered in favor of the defendant dismissing the action.

Appeal—directing final judgment.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the District Court be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court of Weber County, with directions to set aside its conclusion of law in favor of the plaintiff and enter a conclusion of law in favor of the defendant, and enter judgment dismissing the action. Defendant to recover costs.

Corfman, Ch. J., and Weber and Thurman, JJ., concur.

Gideon, J., dissenting:

It is apparent from the record that the district court recognized fully the general rule of law stated in the text-books and cases, that in an action upon the covenants of a lease a complete defense is made by pleading and proving a surrender of the leased premises during the term of the lease and prior to any rental becoming due and payable. That, however, in the judgment of the district court, is not the question present in this record. A promissory note was given at the time of the execution of the lease agreement. The consideration for the note was the rental of the premises for a period of one year, admittedly a valid and good consideration. The note was a part of the contract between the parties, just as much as the lease.

"Every negotiable instrument," such as a promissory note, "is deemed prima facie to have been issued for a valuable consideration, and every person whose signature appears thereon to have become a party thereto for value." Utah Comp. Laws 1917, § 4053.

The defense, in its final analysis, is failure of consideration. The answer alleges the relationship of landlord and tenant, and that by surrender of the premises that relationship was terminated; that the termination of that relationship wiped out the consideration of the note. The district court was of the opinion that, while the relationship of landlord and tenant had ceased, the presumption of consideration to support the note still existed. The burden was therefore thrown upon the defendant to support the contention that there had been a failure of consideration. It is without dispute that there had not been a total failure. The consideration for the note was a year's rental. The defendant had occupied the premises for some five months, a part of the year's rental. True it is, the court arbitrarily prorated the annual rental and gave judgment for the months the defendant occupied the land. That ruling of the court, however, is not before this court for review. The defendant's position is, and was at the trial, that there had been a termination of any contractual relationship between the landlord and tenant, and, having established that fact, that the consideration for the note failed in toto. In my judgment, such does not necessarily follow.

It is suggested that to uphold the judgment of the district court is to establish a different legal relationship between a landlord and tenant when a note is given than when one is not given. The legal relationship between the parties is created and controlled by the contract entered into by them. If the lessee executed a promissory note to pay, and the law throws the burden on him to prove a failure of consideration, the court is not creating any different relationship in enforcing that contract. It is simply taking the contract between the parties as it finds it, and enforcing it. The legal relationship between the parties is based upon the contract. A part of the contract in this case was a promissory note, which carries with it the presumption of consideration. A defense against that presumption places the burden upon the defendant, and that is so by reason of the contract and the legal rights and duties growing out of the same. To reverse this judgment and direct a dismissal of the action in effect takes from the assignor of plaintiff something of value and gives it to the defendant without any consideration. Unless the rules of law compel that result, the courts should hesitate before entering a judgment to that effect.

The judgment of the district court, in my opinion, should be affirmed. I, therefore, dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Surrender and acceptance of term as affecting right to recover rent or on obligation given for rent.I. Introductory, 957.*II. Rent due at time of surrender:

- a. Liability of tenant, 957.
- b. Liability of surety or guarantor, 959.

III. Rent accruing after surrender:

- a. Surrender of entire premises:
 1. Liability of tenant, 960.
 2. Liability of surety, 963.
 3. Liability of subtenant, 963.

I. Introductory.

The purpose of this annotation is to review the cases which deal with the effect of the surrender and acceptance of a term in real property, on the landlord's right to recover rent or on an obligation given for rent. It is not concerned with what constitutes a surrender and acceptance, but merely with the effect of a condition which is conceded to constitute a surrender and acceptance. The words "surrender" or "surrender and acceptance" have been and are loosely used in some instances, but cases which involve merely an abandonment are not included unless spoken of by the court as a surrender, and cases involving a dispossession by the lessor as of right have been excluded even though specifically termed a surrender and acceptance by the court. Tenancies at will are not included although tenancies from month to month are considered as being within the scope of the discussor. The liability of sureties has not been considered where the case involved dealt only with general principles of suretyship rather than a question of landlord and tenant. Cases involving merely the right of distress as affected by a surrender and acceptance are not included. This, however, is not to be considered as eliminating those decisions where, as a basis for the distress, the court has dealt with the right to recover rent.

III.—continued.

- b. Surrender of part of premises, 965.

IV. Surrender between rent days:

- a. Rent payable in advance, 967.
- b. Rent not payable in advance:
 1. In absence of special agreement, 968.
 2. Under special agreement, 970.

V. Decisions not showing time of accrual of rent, 971.II. Rent due at time of surrender.*a. Liability of tenant.

It seems to be the universal rule that, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the surrender and acceptance of a term does not relieve the tenant from liability for rent already accrued at that time.

United States. — See Re Sherwoods (1913) 127 C. C. A. 304, 210 Fed. 754, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 940.

California.—Hobson v. Silva (1902) 7 Cal. Unrep. 31, 70 Pac. 619; Voss v. Levi (1917) 33 Cal. 671, 166 Pac. 359.

Massachusetts.—Deane v. Caldwell (1879) 127 Mass. 242.

Missouri. — Nicol v. Young (1897) 68 Mo. App. 448.

New York.—Sperry v. Miller (1853) 8 N. Y. 336; Young v. Peyser (1858) 3 Bosw. 308; Barkley v. McCue (1899) 25 Misc. 738, 55 N. Y. Supp. 608; Manley v. Berman (1908) 60 Misc. 91, 111 N. Y. Supp. 711; Baker v. Donlin (1915) 88 Misc. 586, 151 N. Y. Supp. 433. See also Sperry v. Miller (1857) 16 N. Y. 407; McKensie v. Farrell (1859) 4 Bosw. 192; MacKellar v. Sigler (1874) 47 How. Pr. 20; McGregor v. Board of Education (1887) 107 N. Y. 511, 14 N. E. 420.

Pennsylvania. — Hall v. Bardsley (1878) 5 W. N. C. 553.

Oklahoma. — See Higgins v. Street (1907) 19 Okla. 45, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 398, 92 Pac. 153, 14 Ann. Cas. 1086.

Washington. — See Rockwell v.

Eiler's Music House (1912) 67 Wash. 478, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 894, 122 Pac. 12.

England.—Atty. Gen. v. Cox (1850) 3 H. L. Cas. 240, 10 Eng. Reprint, 93. See also Barnard v. Duthy (1813) 5 Taunt. 27, 128 Eng. Reprint, 595.

Canada.—See Bradfield v. Hopkins (1865) 16 U. C. C. P. 298; Crozier v. Trevarton (1914) 32 Ont. L. Rep. 79, 22 D. L. R. 199, 7 Ont. Week. N. 111.

It was said in Curtiss v. Miller (1854) 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 477, that a surrender of a term "does not operate to extinguish rent then due because that has already become a personal debt."

In Barnard v. Duthy (1813) 5 Taunt. 27, 128 Eng. Reprint, 595, wherein rent was sought to be recovered for seven quarters ending about September 29, 1812, and the defendant pleaded a surrender of the lease on September 28, 1811, there was judgment for the plaintiff, the court holding that the plea did not answer the whole breach but only the last four quarters out of the seven.

In Deane v. Caldwell (1879) 127 Mass. 242, it appeared that the lessee died within less than a year after leasing from the plaintiff certain premises for a period of five years. The defendant, the lessee's administrator, remained in occupation of the property for some months thereafter, and delivered the place to another, who, after an occupation of a month or two, returned the key to the lessor, who subsequently relet the premises at a reduced rent. It having been found that there was a surrender by operation of law, in the acceptance by the lessor of the key, the court held that, the surrender and acceptance having been absolute and unqualified, all liability on the covenants of the lease was terminated thereby, and the case was referred to an assessor to ascertain the amount of rent due up to the time of surrender.

In Nicol v. Young (1897) 68 Mo. App. 448, it appeared that the defendants had entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to rent the latter's house for a certain period, at the end of which the plaintiff agreed to convey the title to him without further payment. After three months' possession of the premises, the defendants refused to pay further rent, but continued to occupy the property for another month, when they abandoned it, whereupon it was conceded the contract was rescinded. The plaintiff sought to recover unpaid rent for the last month of the defendant's occupancy. The court held that the obligation to pay rent due at the time the agreement was rescinded was not discharged.

In Sperry v. Miller (1854) 8 N. Y. 336, it appeared that the lessee had occupied the premises of the lessor under a five-year lease, providing for the payment of $130 yearly rental in semiannual instalments of $65, one of which fell due on April 1. On April 2, the lessee then owing one year's rent, the parties entered into an agreement of surrender providing, inter alia, for the payment of a sum of money to the lessee by the lessor. A couple of months thereafter the lessor brought an action against the lessee to recover a year's rent. It was held that while, as a result of the contract, the remainder of the term was surrendered, the lease on which the rent accrued was not thereby canceled as to the rent then due, the court pointing out that nothing was said in the agreement as to the rent, which had then become a personal debt due from the lessee to the lessor.

In Young v. Peyser (1858) 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 308, the evidence showed that the lessee of the premises, for which rent was sought to be recovered, had assigned the premises to the defendant for the benefit of creditors. The rent was payable quarterly, one instalment falling due on November 1, the defendant having taken possession of the premises some time prior thereto and surrendered them on November 14 to the plaintiff, who accepted them. The court held that, having accepted and enjoyed the premises, the defendant was clearly liable for the rent which was due November 1.

Barkley v. McCue (1899) 25 Misc. 738, 55 N. Y. Supp. 608, was an action brought to recover two months' rent. The rent was due in advance on the first of each month. It was shown that the rent was paid up to the last of June, when the defendant abandoned the property. An acceptance of the surrender of the term on August 15 was held not to affect the landlord's right to recover the rent which had already accrued, consisting of the rent for July and August.

In Hembrock v. Stark (1873) 53 Mo. 588, an action by attachment for rent, the defendant in his answer set up a release by the plaintiff from the payment of the rent by virtue of an agreement that the defendant should be discharged from liability for any rent in arrears and unpaid, if he surrendered the possession of the farm before the expiration of the term. In a discussion of other points involved in the case the court said: "The agreement to discharge the defendant from payment of rent constituted a bar to the plaintiff's right of recovery."

b. Liability of surety or guarantor.

The liability for rent of a surety on a lease is not discharged by the fact that his principal has surrendered and the lessor has accepted the term, where the rent sought to be recovered had accrued prior to the surrender.

Thus, a surety for a lease of hotel property has been held to be liable for the amount of a plumbing and heating bill which was paid by the lessor, the lessee having agreed to install certain plumbing and heating apparatus in lieu of rent, and the liability of the lessee having accrued prior to his surrender of the lease. American Bonding Co. v. Pueblo Invest. Co. (1906) 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557, 80 C. C. A. 97, 150 Fed. 17, 10 Ann. Cas. 357.

In McKensie v. Farrell (1859) 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 192, the court said: "A surrender, where one takes place, does not operate to release the tenant from rent already accrued. And if such a change in the relation of the parties could have any other operation upon the obligation of the sureties for the rent (e. g., as an alteration of the principal contract without the consent of the sureties), there is no foundation here for such a claim, because in this case it is proved without contradiction that the reletting relied upon as a surrender was by the authority and consent of the defendant."

In Bradfield v. Hopkins (1865) 16 U. C. C. P. 298, it appeared that the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant on his bond, conditioned for the payment of rent by the lessee of certain premises. The defendant pleaded on equitable grounds that, sometime after the death of the lessee, his executors, his widow, and one Simpson, by the plaintiff's consent, entered into an agreement whereby Simpson agreed to purchase the remainder of the term under the lease for a sum equal to the amount of rent due and unpaid; that Simpson agreed to give his note for this amount, with the defendant joining him as maker of the note, the tenancy and defendant's liability on the bond to cease; and that the plaintiff agreed to accept the note and surrender in full satisfaction of rent in arrears and the defendant's liability on the bond therefor. It was also alleged that the agreement was carried into execution, and that the plaintiff accepted and received the promissory note and the surrender of the lease in full satisfaction, as stated. The court held that as regards the overdue rents the surrender would not be a good defense at law, nor would the note, nor the two combined, but that there was no reason why they should not be so in equity. The plea setting up a new contract and part performance in substitution of the first one was considered a valid equitable bar.

In Kingsbury v. Westfall (1875) 61 N. Y. 356, it was sought to recover from the defendant as guarantor on a lease of certain premises which ran from October 1, 1855, for a term of five years. The buildings on the premises were destroyed by fire on January 1, 1858, from which time no rent was paid for two years, when by agreement between the lessor and the lessee, the former released all claim for rent subsequently to accrue in consideration of the lessee's release to him of the unexpired term. The defendant guarantor sought to escape responsibility for the accrued rent on the ground that the agreement for the payment of rent guaranteed by him had been changed. The court, while recognizing the general principle that a guarantor is bound only by the precise terms of the contract of his principle, held it to be inapplicable to the case at bar, pointing out that the obligation to pay the accrued rent had not been changed, nor had any right of the defendant in relation thereto been altered or impaired. See to the same effect, Kingsbury v. Williams (1868) 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 142, a case based on the same facts.

In Bothfeld v. Gordon (1906) 190 Mass. 567, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 764, 112 Am. St. Rep. 341, 77 N. E. 639, it appeared that the defendant had guaranteed the prompt payment of rents by the lessee of premises the lessor of which was the plaintiff. The lessee, falling in arrears as to rent, entered into an agreement with the lessor whereby the premises were surrendered to the latter, the lessee being relieved of liability for further rent, but not for that sum which had accrued and was unpaid. An action was then brought against the defendant for three months' rent which remained unpaid by the lessee. The court pointed out that the lease contained a covenant for the monthly payment of rent, and another provision to the effect that, on a failure of the lessee to observe any of the covenants therein, the lessor might re-enter and repossess the premises, and that in this case the agreement of surrender merely relieved the plaintiff from the necessity of such entry; the term being ended substantially in accordance with the provision of the lease. It was said: "The obligation to pay the past rent was not changed by the surrender, and the liability of the defendant to pay it, which, before the surrender had become fixed, continued notwithstanding the termination of the lease."

III. Rent accruing after surrender.

a. Surrender of entire premises.

1. Liability of tenant.

It is the general rule that a lessor cannot recover rent from a lessee, or on an obligation for rent, where he has accepted a surrender of the term prior to the accrual of the rent claimed, as a discharge from all subsequent liability is effected thereby.

United States. — Re Schomacker Piano Forte Mfg. Co. (1908) 163 Fed. 413; Re Sherwoods (1913) 127 C. C. A. 304, 210 Fed. 754, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 940; Re Mullings Clothing Co. (1916) 230 Fed. 681, reversed on the ground that there was no acceptance of the attempted surrender in (1916) L.R.A. 1918A, 539, 161 C. C. A. 134, 238 Fed. 58, which has writ of certiorari denied in (1917) 243 U. S. 635, 61 L. ed. 941, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

Arizona. — Kastner v. Campbell (1898) 6 Ariz. 145, 53 Pac. 586.

California. — Welcome v. Hess (1891) 90 Cal. 507, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, 27 Pac. 369; Hobson v. Silva (1902) 7 Cal. Unrep. 31, 70 Pac. 619; Baker v. Eiler's Music Co. (1915) 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056; Rehkopf v. Wirz (1916) 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285; Voss v. Levi (1917) 33 Cal. App. 671, 166 Pac. 359.

District of Columbia.—Okie v. Person (1904) 23 App. D. C. 170.

Georgia. — Ledsinger v. Burke (1901) 133 Ga. 74, 38 S. E. 313; Gay v. Peake (1909) 5 Ga. App. 583, 63 S. E. 650. See also Johnson v. Watkins (1921) 26 Ga. App. 759, 107 S. E. 341.

Illinois.—Stobie v. Dills (1872) 62 Ill. 432.

Indiana. — Terstegge v. First German Mut. Ben. Soc. (1883) 92 Ind. 82, 47 Am. Rep. 135; Donahoe v. Rich (1891) 2 Ind. App. 540, 28 N. E. 1001; Weil v. Waterhouse (1910) 46 Ind. App. 690, 91 N. E. 746. See also Powell v. Jones (1912) 50 Ind. App. 493, 98 N. E. 646.

Iowa.—Armour Packing Co. v. Des Moines Pork Co. (1902) 116 Iowa, 723, 93 Am. St. Rep. 270, 89 N. W. 196; Kean v. Rogers (1909) 146 Iowa, 559, 123 N. W. 754, reversing (1908) — Iowa, —, 118 N. W. 515.

Maine. — Hesselstine v. Seavey (1839) 16 Me. 212.

Massachusetts.—Amory v. Kannoffsky (1875) 117 Mass. 351, 19 Am. Rep. 416.

Minnesota.—Minneapolis Co-op. Co. v. Williamson (1892) 51 Minn. 53, 88 Am. St. Rep. 473, 52 N. W. 986. See also Lafferty v. Hawes (1895) 63 Minn. 13, 65 N. W. 87.

Mississippi. — Kiernan v. Germain (1884) 61 Miss. 498.

Missouri.—Prior v. Kiso (1883) 81 Mo. 241; Hutcheson v. Jones (1883) 79 Mo. 496; Churchill v. Lammers (1895) 60 Mo. App. 244; McDonald v. May (1902) 96 Mo. App. 236, 69 S. W. 1059. See also Destrehan v. Scudder (1848) 11 Mo. 484.

Nevada. — Washoe County Bank v. Campbell (1917) 41 Nev. 153, 167 Pac. 643.

New Hampshire.—Elliott v. Aiken (1863) 45 N. H. 30; Davis v. George (1892) 67 N. H. 393; 39 Atl. 979.

New Jersey. — Stotesbury v. Vail (1861) 13 N. J. Eq. 390; Meeker v. Spalsbury (1901) 66 N. J. L. 60, 48 Atl. 1026.

New York. — Page v. Ellsworth (1865) 44 Barb. 636; MacKellar v. Sigler (1874) 47 How. Pr. 20; Fobes v. Lewis (1876) 2 N. Y. Week. Dig. 65; Danziger v. Falkenberg (1892) 64 Hun, 635, 46 N. Y. S. R. 331, 18 N. Y. Supp. 927; Herter v. Mullen (1899) 159 N. Y. 28, 44 L.R.A. 703, 70 Am. St. Rep. 517, 53 N. E. 700; Gray v. Kaufman Dairy & Ice Cream Co. (1900) 162 N. Y. 388, 49 L.R.A. 580, 76 Am. St. Rep. 327, 56 N. E. 903; Crane v. Edwards (1903) 80 App. Div. 333, 80 N. Y. Supp. 747, 12 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 436; Daggett v. Champney (1907) 122 App. Div. 254, 106 N. Y. Supp. 892; Upright Co. v. Delson (1919) 178 N. Y. Supp. 389; Creighton v. Winfree (1921) 187 N. Y. Supp. 72. See also Hegeman v. McArthur (1851) 1 E. D. Smith, 147; McKensie v. Farrell (1859) 4 Bosw. 192; Vandekar v. Reeves (1886) 40 Hun, 430; Schork v. Moritz (1889) 24 N. Y. S. R. 898, 6 N. Y. Supp. 554; Tallman v. Earle (1891) 37 N. Y. S. R. 271, 13 N. Y. 18 A.L.R.—61.

Supp. 805; Gaffney v. Paul (1899) 29 Misc. 642, 61 N. Y. Supp. 173; Ayen v. Schmidt (1913) 80 Misc. 670, 141 N. Y. Supp. 938.

North Carolina. — Everett v. Williamson (1890) 107 N. C. 204, 12 S. E. 187.

Pennsylvania. — Murphy v. Losch (1892) 148 Pa. 171, 23 Atl. 1059; Jenkins v. Root (1920) 269 Pa. 229, 112 Atl. 153. See also Pratt v. Richards Jewelry Co. (1871) 69 Pa. 53; Hall v. Bardsley (1878) 5 W. N. C. 553; Rafferty v. Klein (1917) 256 Pa. 481, 100 Atl. 945.

Utah.—See the reported case (WILLIS v. KRANENDONK, ante, 947).

Wisconsin. — Imler v. Baenish (1889) 74 Wis. 567, 43 N. W. 490; Kneeland v. Schmidt (1890) 78 Wis. 345, 11 L.R.A. 498, 47 N. W. 438; West Concord Mill. Co. v. Hosmer (1906) 129 Wis. 8, 107 N. W. 12.

England. — Natchbolt v. Porter (1689) 2 Vern. 113, 23 Eng. Reprint, 682; Barnard v. Duthy (1813) 5 Taunt. 27, 128 Eng. Reprint, 595; Whitehead v. Clifford (1814) 5 Taunt. 518, 128 Eng. Reprint, 791, 15 Revised Rep. 579; Gore v. Wright (1838) 8 Ad. & El. 118, 112 Eng. Reprint, 780, 3 Nev. & P. 243, 1 W. W. & H. 266, 7 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 147, 2 Jur. 840; Dodd v. Acklom (1843) 6 Mann. & G. 672, 134 Eng. Reprint, 1063, 7 Jur. 1017, 13 L. J. C. P. N. S. 11, 7 Scott, N. R. 415; Smith v. Lovell (1850) 10 C. B. 6, 138 Eng. Reprint, 3, 1 Lowndes M. & P. 794, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 37, 15 Jur. 250; Baynton v. Morgan (1888; C. A.) L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 74, 58 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 139, 37 Week. Rep. 148, 53 J. P. 166, affirming (1888) 59 L. T. N. S. 478. See also Nickells v. Atherton (1847) 10 Q. B. 944, 116 Eng. Reprint, 358, 16 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 371, 11 Jur. 778, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 512.

Canada.—Gold v. Ross (1903) 10 B. C. 80; Crozier v. Trevarton (1914) 32 Ont. L. Rep. 79, 22 D. L. R. 199, 7 Ont. Week. N. 111; McKeown v. Lechtzier (1914) 24 Manitoba L. R. 295, 5 West. Week. Rep. 778, 26 W. L. R. 264, 15 D. D. R. 15, affirming (1914) 24 Manitoba L. R. 307, 28 West. L. R. 558, 20 D. L. R. 986. See also Strathey v. Crooks (1848) 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 587;

Bradfield v. Hopkins (1865) 16 U. C. C. P. 298.

In West Concord Mill. Co. v. Hosmer (Wis.) supra, the court, after finding that there was a surrender and acceptance, said: "We must hold that the plaintiff, having accepted such surrender of the leased premises and taken full and exclusive possession thereof, was thereby estopped from collecting rent which otherwise would have accrued under the lease, subsequent to such surrender."

In Johnson v. Watkins (1921) 26 Ga. App. 759, 107 S. E. 341, the court said (obiter): "If, pending a tenancy, . . . the tenant becomes dissatisfied, and offers to surrender possession to the landlord, and the landlord thereafter resumes possession, or exerts a control over the premises inconsistent with the tenant's right of occupation, he thereby discharges the tenant from liability for future rent."

In Washoe County Bank v. Campbell (1917) 41 Nev. 153, 167 Pac. 643, the acts of a lessor were said to be so inconsistent with the relation of landlord and tenant as to convey the idea of a recognition of the surrender of the leasehold, and it was also said that these acts were sufficient to constitute an estoppel sufficient to defeat an action by the lessor against the lessees for the collection of rentals claimed.

In Wood v. Partridge (1814) 11 Mass. 488, the court pointed out that rent payable quarterly gave rise to no debt until the arrival of the time provided for payment, and that the rent might never become due, as the lessee might quit the premises with the consent of the lessor.

In Bain v. Clark (1813) 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 424, it was held that a surrender and acceptance of a term extinguished the estate and the rent, but it was pointed out that in that case the lessee might continue bound for the year's rent to accrue thereafter by virtue of a special agreement between the parties in the deed of surrender.

The court, in the case of Re Schomacker Piano Forte Mfg. Co. (1908) 163 Fed. 413, held that the landlord, having taken over the premises on surrender by the lessee, could not claim the remainder of the rent. It was contended that the landlord accepted the premises only to relet them for the benefit of the lessee, but the court held that there was a general acceptance; it being shown that the landlord's agent asked an increased rental thereafter, and that alterations were made.

In the case of Re Sherwoods (1913) 127 C. C. A. 304, 210 Fed. 754, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 940, it appeared that, after the assignment of a lease by the lessee's receiver in bankruptcy, the lessor, with the acquiescence of the assignee, entered into a new lease with another. The court remarked that the making of the new lease operated as a surrender by operation of law, the effect of which was to relieve the tenant, whose right to possession was terminated, from liability for rent subsequently accruing.

In Welcome v. Hess (1891) 90 Cal. 507, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, 27 Pac. 369, wherein it was shown that the landlord, following the abandonment of the premises by the tenant, had relet them at a lower rental for a period longer than that of the first lease, it was held that the tenants could not thereafter be held for any rent. Said the court, "If the surrender has not been accepted, have they not been evicted?"

In Baker v. Eilers Music Co. (1915) 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056, a suit to recover rent which accrued subsequently to the surrender to and acceptance by the plaintiff-lessor of certain premises, it was said that the contract relationship had been thereby brought to an end; that the relationship of landlord and tenant had ceased.

In Terstegge v. First German Mut. Ben. Soc. (1883) 92 Ind. 82, 47 Am. Rep. 135, wherein it appeared that the tenant, after paying the rent for certain premises on the day it was due, left the keys with the landlord, stating that it was desired to surrender the property, it was said: "It is well settled that if the tenant surrenders the premises and yields up the possession, and the same are accepted by the landlord, the lease and all liability under it for future rent is extinguished."

2. Liability of surety.

The surrender and acceptance of a term in real property discharges the surety of the lessee, as well as the lessee, from liability for rent accruing thereafter. American Bonding Co. v. Pueblo Invest. Co. (1906) 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 557, 80 C. C. A. 97, 150 Fed. 17, 10 Ann. Cas. 357; Carson v. Arvantes (1897) 10 Colo. App. 382, 50 Pac. 1080, affirmed in (1899) 27 Colo. 77, 59 Pac. 737; Prior v. Kiso (1883) 81 Mo. 241; Rafferty v. Klein (1917) 256 Pa. 481, 100 Atl. 945.

In Carson v. Arvantes (1899) 27 Colo. 77, 59 Pac. 737, affirming (1897) 10 Colo. App. 382, 50 Pac. 1080, it appeared that the lessee had made a deposit of a sum of money as security for the payment of rent for premises which passed to the possession of another whom the lessor agreed to accept under certain conditions. The transferee later surrendered the premises, the lessor selling his stock, and, from the proceeds of the sale, keeping the amount of rent due to the time of the sale, handing to the transferee the balance. It was held that the transferee having been relieved of liability by acts which the court considered to be a cancellation of the lease, the security or fund pledged for the performance thereof was likewise discharged.

In Prior v. Kiso (1883) 81 Mo. 241, the court held that the defendants, sureties on a lease, were relieved of liability for unpaid rent, by reason of the fact that, while the lease had more than a year to run, the plaintiff lessor took back the whole premises pursuant to an agreement with the lessees.

In Rafferty v. Klein (Pa.) supra, it was sought to recover from the defendant as surety on a lease. It was alleged that the premises were surrendered to the plaintiff on January 31, the rent for January having been paid, and it was shown that a new tenant was put in possession under a new lease on April 1, following. The court held that the defendant could not be held liable for any rent beyond that due for February and March, and that there should be subtracted from this amount whatever the plaintiff received for the use of the premises as storage during these months.

In Rhineland Real Estate Co. v. Cammeyer (1921) 190 N. Y. Supp. 516, where the lessee, upon surrendering the lease, guaranteed the rentals of certain subtenants, recovery on that guaranty was denied upon the ground of a constructive eviction by the failure of the lessor to furnish live steam to the subtenants in performance of the lessee's covenant with the latter, which the lessor was held to have assumed upon accepting a surrender.

3. Liability of subtenant.

It seems to have been the common-law rule, supported, apparently, in several American jurisdictions, that where a lessee has subleased the premises and thereafter has surrendered his term to his lessor, the sublessee is discharged from liability for rent to either the lessee or the lessor.

Thus, in Thre'r v. Barton (1570) F. Moore, 94, 72 Eng. Reprint, 463, it appeared that one had made a lease for one hundred years, the lessee making an underlease for twenty years, rendering rent with a clause of re-entry. Sometime thereafter the original lessor granted the reversion in fee, the grantee purchasing the reversion of the term. It was held that the grantee might not have either rent or the power of re-entry, since the reversion of the term to which they were incident was extinguished in the reversion in fee.

In Bailey v. Richardson (1885) 66 Cal. 416, 5 Pac. 910, the court said: "A tenant may surrender his estate to his landlord, but if he have, since its commencement, created some minor interest out of it, or have made an underlease, he cannot, by surrendering, destroy the charge or affect the estate of the underlessee. 1 Washb. Real. Prop. 360, and cases cited in note. Although the tenant cannot prejudice the interest of the underlessee, yet he will lose the rent he has reserved upon the underlease, for the rent is incident to the reversion; nor can the surrenderee have it, for, though the reversion to which it was incident has been conveyed to him, yet as soon as it was so conveyed, it merged in the greater reversion; so that the consequence is, that neither the surrenderor nor the surrenderee being entitled to the rent, the underlessee holds without payment of any rent at all, excepting where the contrary has been expressly provided by statute."

The case of Williams v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1903) 133 Mich. 448, 103 Am. St. Rep. 458, 95 N. W. 708, is not, on its facts as construed by the court, directly in point, but it involves a discussion of the effect of the surrender of premises by a lessee on the liability for rent of a sublessee. It was pointed out by the court that even if the holding in Beal v. Boston Car Spring Co. (1878) 125 Mass. 157, 28 Am. Rep. 216 (set out infra) were conceded to be correct, it was inapplicable in the case at bar, there being no reservation from the alleged surrender or any confirmation of the subtenant's lease.

In Krider v. Ramsay (1878) 79 N. C. 354, a case not directly in point, it was remarked that unless otherwise provided by statute, a surrender of a term by a lessee relieves the subtenant from liability for rent thereafter, the lessee being unable to collect it because he has parted with his reversion to the lessor, who is in no better position, since the reversion, to which the rent is incident, on conveyance to him, merges in the greater reversion, of which he is already possessed.

In some jurisdictions the courts, while apparently recognizing the authority of the common-law rule just stated, have attempted to avoid the effects of its application, and have held that where a lessee, after having sublet all or a portion of the premises, surrenders his term to the lessor, the sublessee is not discharged from liability thereby, but remains responsible for the rent by virtue of a special agreement of assignment between the lessor and lessee at the time of the surrender, or by reason of an attornment on the part of the sublessee.

In Beal v. Boston Car Spring Co. (Mass.) supra, it appeared that the plaintiff had leased certain premises to one who sublet a part thereof to the defendant. Later he accepted from the lessee a surrender of his term, without prejudice, however, to the underlease, which was assigned to the plaintiff, who brought an action against the defendant to recover on his covenant to pay rent. It was suggested that the rent due from the defendant sublessee was an incident of reversion in the lessee, which incident was lost when the reversion was extinguished by the surrender of the lease. With this, however, the court did not agree, pointing out that rent was not necessarily always an incident to a reversion. It was said: "As the assignments were simultaneous with the surrender, Heyer Brothers [the lessee] did not in terms reserve the rent to themselves, but the plaintiff accepted the surrender in consideration of the assignment, with the express stipulation that it should not prejudice the underleases assigned to him; that is, should not invalidate the assignment, or affect the rights of the parties holding the leases."

In Appleton v. Ames (1889) 150 Mass. 34, 5 L.R.A. 206, 22 N. E. 69, it appeared that a lessee of certain premises, who had sublet part of them, failed and subsequently surrendered his term to the lessors, who accepted it. The sublessee, after the surrender, paid his rent for the month prior to that in which the surrender took place and asked whether he was to be given a lease covering the term of the lease which he had from the lessee. The sublessee had theretofore, following the failure, inquired whether his lease was affected thereby, and some time thereafter had denied the obligation to pay rent to anyone. The contention of the sublessee was that, by the surrender of the lease by the lessee, he was enabled to hold his sublease without the payment of rent, since the rent, being an incident of the reversion, could not be collected by the lessee after parting with the reversion to the lessors, now was it collectable by the latter, since the reversion, of which it was an incident, on conveyance to them, merged in the greater reversion in fee of which they were possessed. The court, however, refused to take this view on the facts of the case, pointing out that the lessors had entered and repossessed themselves of the estate in accordance with the provisions of the lease, and that the sublessee, by his payment of rent and the seeking of a new lease, had shown that he assented to the entry of the lessors as one lawfully made, and dispossessing him of his estate under the sublease, his subsequent tenancy being, at most, one at the will of the lessors.

In McDonald v. May (1902) 96 Mo. App. 236, 69 S. W. 1059, it appeared that the defendant was a sublessee with an eighteen months' term of certain premises, the lessee of which had surrendered his ninety-nine-year term to the lessor, the remote grantor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant on his lease for unpaid rent for the premises in question. It was pointed out by the court that by a contract between the lessor and the lessee the latter had surrendered his term to the former, but that the former was not thereby enabled to sue the sublessee for the rent, since there was neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between them. An assignment of the reversion by the lessee would give the assignee right to sue on a covenant to pay rent made by a subtenant, but here the surrender of the term did not constitute such an assignment; and the court called attention to the fact that while a surrender of the main term of a leasehold estate will not destroy the rights of the undertenants, the lessor may not sue the subtenant for rent or any other covenant. A surrender of a ninety-nine-year term did not work an assignment of an eighteen months' term. But it appeared that the defendant sublessee, by paying rent to the plaintiff after the surrender of his term by the lessee to the lessor, the plaintiff's remote grantor, had attorned to him, and thus established between them the relation of landlord and tenant, and the court held that in consequence the obligation of the defendant to pay rent was as comprehensive as his right to hold the premises, which latter covered the whole period of the lease, it being remarked that, in the absence of the attornment, it would have been doubtful whether the plaintiff would have had any recourse against the defendant.

In Hessel v. Johnson (1889) 129 Pa. 173, 5 L.R.A. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 716, 18 Atl. 754, it appeared that Rossiter, a lessee, surrendered his term after having sublet a portion of the premises, the surrendered term being leased anew. The court pointed out that in England prior to the Statute of 4 Geo. II. chap. 28, in case of a surrender of a lease by the lessee, following the subletting of a part of the premises, both the lessor and lessee would have lost their right to distrain from rent, the former because of the merger of the reversion of the lessee with the greater reversion. It was decided, however, that the doctrine of merger would not be held to apply against the intention of the parties and the interest of the original lessor, and that Rossiter's surrender might be regarded as in the nature of a transfer of the sublease the effect of which was to attorn the subtenant to the original landlord, to whom he was bound to pay rent under his contract, on the failure of which his goods on the premises were liable to distress according to the terms of the lease from Rossiter.

b. Surrender of part of premises.

It has been held in several instances that a surrender of part of leased premises will not entirely relieve the tenant or his assignee from responsibility for rent accruing thereafter. But as to whether the rent is apportionable so as to relieve the tenant from liability for rent for the portion surrendered, the courts are not in agreement, nor indeed is their position clear.

In Hewitt v. Hornbuckle (1901) 97

Ill. App. 97, it was shown that the lessee had leased of the lessor 188 acres of land at a certain rental, and had thereafter declined to cultivate it all, requesting the lessor to let someone else plant the part uncultivated, the lessor complying with the request as to half of the untilled portion. It was held that the lessee could not surrender part of the farm, retain a part, and refuse to pay rent on the part retained. The court, however, approved an instruction to the effect that where the lessor consented to the surrender of a portion of the premises, he would be estopped from recovering any rent for the property surrendered.

In Smith v. Pendergast (1879) 26 Minn. 318, 3 N. W. 978, it appeared that there had been a surrender by operation of law of a part of the premises, prior to the assignment of the lease to the defendant sublessee, who claimed that the lessor could not recover the entire rent, because he had been deprived of the use of a part of the premises. The court held that the rent should not be reduced, since it was not found that the value of the premises had been impaired; it being admitted that a point of some difficulty might have been presented if the case had been otherwise.

In Baynton v. Morgan (1888; C. A.) L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 74, 58 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 139, 37 Week. Rep. 148, 53 J. P. 166, affirming (1888) 59 L. T. N. S. 478, an action on a covenant for the payment of rent in a lease, it appeared that the plaintiff had leased certain premises to the defendant, who had assigned his term to another, by whom a small portion of the premises was surrendered to the plaintiff, the term in the remainder being later assigned by him to one who became bankrupt. The rent for a certain quarter being due and unpaid, the plaintiff sought to recover it from the original lessee on his personal covenant, deducting, however, a sum declared to represent the rental value for the quarter of the portion surrendered. The defendant contended that he was relieved of liability because of the surrender of a portion of the premises by his assignee, and this on the theory that he was a surety for the payment of rent and was released because of the alteration of the contract without his consent. The court, however, refused to accept this point of view, saying that, since the surrender of a part of the property by the lessee himself would not put an end to the term, neither would that be done when the surrender was by the lessee's assignee. It was also contended that since part of the premises was no longer enjoyed, the whole rent could no longer be payable, and since the covenant could not be apportioned it was gone altogether. It was held to be unnecessary to decide whether there could be an apportionment, but the court said that if there could not the defendant must pay the whole rent, for so he covenanted to do.

In Bless v. Jenkins (1895) 129 Mo. 647, 31 S. W. 938, wherein it appeared that the defendant had abandoned the first and second floors of certain premises, leaving a subtenant in possession of the third and fourth floors thereof, the court pointed out that the defendant would not be exonerated from liability for the rent therefor unless the plaintiffs agreed to accept the subtenant as their own tenant.

In McKenzie v. Lexington (1836) 4 Dana (Ky.) 130, wherein it was alleged that a surrender had been made by a lessee of a part only of the leased premises, the remainder having been sublet, it was said that if a surrender had been made the contract was so far extinguished that an action of covenant would not lie thereon, but that an action of assumpsit for use and occupation of the part not surrendered, or for breach of promise in failing to surrender, would be the proper remedy. But it was remarked, in addition, that the jury might possibly have inferred that the surrender and acceptance of part of the premises was intended to be a discharge of the defendant from all liability for rent for those parcels not surrendered.

In Lenane v. Mayer (1896) 18 Misc. 454, 41 N. Y. Supp. 960, it appeared that the defendant, surety on a lease of six rooms, had induced the landlord to take back three of them and to reduce the rent for the others. The surety thereafter paid the rent at the reduced rate for some time. In a suit for rent subsequently accruing, the surety sought to avoid liability on the ground that the lease was canceled by the giving up of three rooms, and his responsibility as surety discharged. It was held, however, that the lease and suretyship were not abrogated by the action of the parties, and the defendant was held liable.

IV. Surrender between rent days.

a. Rent payable in advance.

Since a surrender and acceptance of a term does not relieve a tenant from liability for rent already accrued at the time of the surrender (see supra, II.), and since rent payable in advance is considered as accruing on the day on which it is due, the surrender of a term between rent days does not release the lessee from the payment of rent for the whole rental period, where it is payable in advance. MacKellar v. Sigler (1874) 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 20; Conklin v. White (1886) 17 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 315; Weston v. Ryley (1896) 15 Misc. 638, 37 N. Y. Supp. 216; Kahn v. Simons (1899) 25 Misc. 737, 55 N. Y. Supp. 619; Barkley v. McCue (1899) 25 Misc. 738, 55 N. Y. Supp. 608; Kahn v. Rosenheim (1901) 34 Misc. 192, 68 N. Y. Supp. 856; Stern v. Murphy (1907) 102 N. Y. Supp. 797; O. M. & D. Realty Co. v. Griffin (1917) 165 N. Y. Supp. 440. See also Okie v. Person (1904) 23 App. D. C. 170. Danziger v. Falkenberg (1892) 64 Hun, 635, 46 N. Y. S. R. 331, 18 N. Y. Supp. 927; Cheesebrough v. Leiber (1896) 18 Misc. 459, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1122; Rockwell v. Eilers Music House (1912) 67 Wash. 478, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 894, 122 Pac. 12. Compare Voss v. Levi (1917) 33 Cal. App. 671, 166 Pac. 359, and Schwartz v. Brucato (1901) 57 App. Div. 202, 68 N. Y. Supp. 289.

In Kahn v. Rosenheim (1901) 34 Misc. 192, 68 N. Y. Supp. 856, the general rule was followed, but it was said that the tenant's remedy was by way of counterclaim or independent action covering the portion of the rental period surrendered.

In MacKellar v. Sigler (N. Y.) supra, an action brought to recover two months' rent, it appeared that the rent was payable in advance, and that while the defendant left the premises on February 1, the acts which the court held constituted the plaintiff's acceptance thereof did not occur until sometime thereafter in the same month. But the court held that since the rent became due on the 1st of that month the surrender constituted no defense to the plaintiff's right to have rent for February.

In Conklin v. White (1886) 17 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 315, wherein it appeared that the rent sought to be recovered was due on the first of November in advance, and that the acceptance of the surrender did not take place until after the rent was due, the defendant having moved out of the premises on the afternoon of November 1, it was held that the rent for the month of November might be recovered.

In Weston v. Ryley (1896) 15 Misc. 638, 37 N. Y. Supp. 216, an action brought to recover rent for the months of August and September under a lease, it appeared that there was a surrender and acceptance of the premises on August 12, the rent being payable in advance on the first of the month. The court held that the plaintiff was clearly entitled to one month's rent.

In Kahn v. Simons (1899) 25 Misc. 737, 55 N. Y. Supp. 619, wherein it appeared that one month's rent due on the first of the month in advance was unpaid and was sought to be recovered, it was held that a surrender and acceptance of the premises would not relieve the lessee of liability for the rent which had already accrued at the time of the surrender, which it was shown had taken place during the month for which it was sought to recover rent.

In Barkley v. McCue (1899) 25 Misc. 738, 55 N. Y. Supp. 608, wherein it appeared that certain premises had been surrendered and accepted on the 15th of the month, it was held that the right to recover the rent for that month, which was payable in advance on the first day of the month, was not affected thereby.

The court, in Kahn v. Rosenheim (N. Y.) supra, upheld the general rule that rent already accrued, although payable in advance, is not discharged by a surrender and acceptance. The rent sued for was due September 1, in advance, and it was said that the plaintiff might recover the entire month's rent, "as no counterclaim was interposed to cover the portion of the month of September alleged to have been surrendered and accepted by the landlord."

In Schwartz v. Brucato (1901) 57 App. Div. 202, 68 N. Y. Supp. 289, it was sought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant for rent for the last three months of a term ending May 1, the rent being payable in advance on the first of the month. It appeared that the defendant left the premises on January 28 and sent the key to the landlord, who declined to accept the surrender, but who did, however, let the premises to another for a term beginning May 1st, allowing him to occupy the premises from April 13 to May 1, rent free. It was held that the plaintiff might have judgment for the rent for February and March and for thirteen days' rent in April; the court pointing out that the plaintiff had the benefit of the possession of the premises thereafter.

b. Rent not payable in advance.

1. In absence of special agreement.

Where the surrender and acceptance of a term occurs between rent days, the rent being payable at the end of specified periods and not in advance, in the absence of special agreement, the lessee is discharged from responsibility for any rent for the period in which the surrender occurs.

District of Columbia.—See Okie v. Person (1904) 23 App. D. C. 170.

New York.—Shepard v. Merrill (1816) 2 Johns. Ch. 276; Curtiss v. Miller (1854) 17 Barb. 477; Young v. Peyser (1858) 3 Bosw. 308; Smith v. Wheeler (1878) 8 Daly, 135; Ireland v. United States Mortg. & T. Co. (1902) 72 App. Div. 95, 76 N. Y. Supp. 177, affirmed in (1903) 175 N. Y. 491, 67

N. E. 1083. See also Bain v. Clark (1813) 10 Johns. 424.

Oregon.—Ladd v. Smith (1876) 6 Or. 316.

Pennsylvania.—Magaw v. Lambert (1846) 3 Pa. St. 444; Greider's Appeal (1846) 5 Pa. 422.

Utah.—See the reported case (WILLIS v. KRANENDONK, ante, 947).

Wisconsin.—See Imler v. Baenish (1889) 74 Wis. 567, 43 N. W. 490.

England.—Whitehead v. Clifford (1814) 5 Taunt. 518, 128 Eng. Reprint, 791, 15 Revised Rep. 579; Grimman v. Legge (1828) 8 Barn. & C. 324, 108 Eng. Reprint, 1063, 6 L. J. K. B. 321, 2 Mann. & R. 438; Smith v. Lovell (1850) 10 C. B. 6, 138 Eng. Reprint, 3, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 37, 1 Lowndes, M. & P. 794, 15 Jur. 250; Furnivall v. Grove (1860) 8 C. B. N. S. 496, 141 Eng. Reprint, 1259, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 3. See also Doe ex dem. Phillip v. Benjamin (1839) 9 Ad. & El. 644, 112 Eng. Reprint, 1356, 1 Perry & D. 440, 2 W. W. & H. 96, 8 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 117.

Canada.—Matthias v. Pace (1882) 15 N. S. 366. Compare Crozier v. Trevarton (1914) 32 Ont. L. Rep. 79, 7 Ont. Week. N. 111, 22 D. L. R. 199.

In Whitehead v. Clifford (Eng.) supra, wherein it was sought to recover for rent accruing after a surrender and acceptance of premises in the middle of a quarter, the court held that the plaintiff could not recover for use and occupation, since he himself had taken possession of the house.

In Davison v. Donadi (1853) 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 121, a case not directly in point, the court said: "Had the premises been surrendered by the tenant in the middle of a month, when no rent was due (the same not being payable in advance), the landlord would have terminated the tenancy by accepting the possession. He could not, according to the authority of Grimman v. Legge (1828) 8 Barn. & C. 324, 108 Eng. Reprint, 1063, 6 L. J. K. B. 321, 2 Mann. & R. 438, have had an action for the previous occupation."

Where rent was payable quarterly, one quarter ending November 1, and the lessee's assignee surrendered the premises on November 14, when they were accepted by the plaintiff lessor, it was held that the tenant was not liable for rent for the fourteen days in the new quarter. Young v. Peyser (1858) 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 308.

In Smith v. Wheeler (1878) 8 Daly (N. Y.) 135, wherein it appeared that a surrender of premises took place on the 26th of the month, it was held that the lessor could not recover for that month the rent, which was not due and payable until the end thereof.

In Ireland v. United States Mortg. & T. Co. (1902) 72 App. Div. 95, 76 N. Y. Supp. 177, affirmed in (1903) 175 N. Y. 491, 67 N. E. 1083, it appeared that the defendant surrendered the premises, the rent of which was sought to be recovered by the plaintiff, on the day before the rent became due. The court said: "When there is a surrender before rent due, there is no apportionment of rent up to the day of surrender. The rent for the whole of the period not then due is extinguished."

In Greider's Appeal (1846) 5 Pa. 422, it appeared that a lessee took possession of certain premises for a term of two years, commencing April 1, 1844, at a yearly rental payable on the first days of April, 1845 and 1846. One Moore later purchased the reversionary estate and received an assignment of that portion of the lessee's term which began April 1, 1845, thus becoming the landlord entitled to receive the second year's rent when due. The lessee, becoming embarrassed on January 8, 1846, entered into an agreement with the landlord whereby he gave up to the latter the premises in question, and on the following day a fieri facias was levied on the lessee's goods on the demised premises, two more fi. fas. being levied on the same goods later in the month. The landlord went into possession of the premises, and later claimed, and was awarded from the proceeds of the sheriff's sale of the lessee's chattels, a portion of the last year's rent up to the time of the levy, to which the execution creditors objected. The court, accepting the fact of the surrender, discussed the effect thereof on the claim of the landlord, and it was declared that, on surrender of a term, the estate of the lessee was extinguished in the estate of the lessor, as a result of which the rent issuing out of the lessee's estate, and not due at the time of the surrender, was also extinguished. It was said: "A demise, such as the present, is an entire contract, and by an acceptance of a surrender pending a current year, the landlord, having destroyed his right to recover the entire rent of that year according to the covenants of the lease, cannot recover any part of it, and is therefore not permitted to claim pro rata."

The reported case (WILLIS v. KRAN-ENDONK, ante, 947) was an action brought to recover on a promissory note which had been given in payment of one year's rent falling due October 31, 1917. It appeared that in April, 1917, the defendant surrendered the premises to the landlord, the payee and assignor of the note, who accepted them. It is held that, since the rent was payable yearly, and the premises had been surrendered and accepted before the rent in question was due and payable, the defendant could not be held liable therefor, nor could the rent be apportioned and the tenant compelled to pay for the portion of the year during which he remained in possession.

In Grimman v. Legge (1828) 8 Barn. & C. 324, 108 Eng. Reprint, 1063, 6 L. J. K. B. 321, 2 Mann. & R. 438, an action of assumpsit for use and occupation, it appeared that the defendant surrendered the premises to the plaintiff, who accepted them, in the first month of the second quarter, the rent for the first quarter having been paid. The court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent pro rata for the time the premises were occupied by the defendant, but that, since the plaintiff had destroyed his right to recover under the contract, it had been destroyed altogether.

In Furnivall v. Grove (1860) 8 C. B. N. S. 496, 141 Eng. Reprint, 1259, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 3, it appeared that the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff whereby he leased certain premises for a term of four years, the rent to be payable quarterly, on condition that the plaintiff would make certain repairs within twenty-eight days. Rent was paid on the following Christmas, 1858, and Lady day, 1859. In April, 1859, the defendant complained of the condition of the building, and the plaintiff received a notice from the authorities to repair the premises, and in the latter part of April the plaintiff told the defendant he was going to pull the premises down, and told the defendant that he would assist him to remove. In May the ground-floor story was removed by the plaintiff, and the defendant vacated the premises on June 23. The plaintiff sought to recover rent for the quarter, Lady day to midsummer day, but the court gave judgment for the defendant. The several judges based their opinion on different grounds, but one of the judges, with the support of another, decided that there was an agreement between the parties that the defendant, giving up possession on June 23, should not be liable for the rent accruing the following day, and based his opinion on the intent to be drawn from the aforementioned facts, together with the failure of the plaintiff to repair as agreed, a letter containing the key sent by the defendant to the plaintiff on June 22, and the latter's silence on its receipt, and the entering and pulling down of the whole premises by the plaintiff a few days thereafter. All these things, it was said, showed that the tenant intended to propose, and the landlord to assent to, the determination of the tenancy, and that no rent was to accrue subsequently.

In Matthias v. Pace (1882) 15 N. S. 366, wherein, on a suit for a quarter's rent, it was found that there had been a surrender of a term, by operation of law, in the middle of a quarterly rent period, it was held that the plaintiff lessor was not entitled to pro rata rent, the court pointing out that rent pro rata was not recoverable in England before the passage of the Apportionment Act (33 & 34 Vict. chap. 35), which statute, it was said, "does not apply to us."

2. Under special agreement.

In two cases, the rent in question not being payable in advance, the right of the lessor to recover rent for the whole rental period, in the midst of which a surrender and acceptance occurred, has been held to be saved by the fact that the parties had made a special agreement to that effect at the time of the surrender.

Bates v. Phinney (1881) 45 Mich. 388, 8 N. W. 88, was an action for rent wherein it appeared that the defendant had leased certain premises for a period of three years from March, 1877, the rent to be paid each year on October 15. On September 2, 1878, the lessor and lessee entered into an agreement whereby the lessee gave up immediate possession of the property to the lessor to enable her to put in fall crops, it being specified that he should pay no rent from that date, but that the agreement was not to affect the rent to become due in October. The question arose whether the lessee should pay the rent for the whole year ending March, 1879, or for the half year ending at about the time of the agreement. There was a provision in the agreement stipulating for the occupancy of the house and premises by the lessee for forty days after the date thereof. The court pointed out that rent is the consideration for occupancy, and that the consideration for payment ceased when the enjoyment terminated; and it was held that the agreement merely meant that the lessee was not excused from the payment for his half year's occupancy because of the surrender and termination of the lease before the arrival of the rent day. The judgment of the lower court, holding the lessee liable for the remaining half year when he was out of possession, was reversed.

In Bain v. Clark (1813) 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 424, it appeared that a lessee, after taking possession of a farm under a lease, at a yearly rental payable at the end of the term, and occupying it for about seven months, quitted the possession thereof and indorsed on the lease a surrender, holding himself liable, however, for the payment of the rent. The court, holding that the lessor had no right of distress for rent, remarked that the effect of the surrender was to extinguish the estate of the lessee, passing it to the lessor, whereby the rent likewise became extinct, although it was pointed out that the lessee might continue bound for the year's rent by virtue of the agreement.

V. Decisions not showing time of accrual of rent.

In a few cases, although it does not appear whether the rent sought to be recovered accrued before or after a surrender, it has nevertheless been held or declared that the lessee is discharged from liability for rent by a surrender and acceptance of the term in the entire premises leased.

In Heine v. Morrison (1883) 13 Mo. App. 577, the court said: "Acts which indicate a purpose on the part of the landlord to accept a surrender of the demised premises will estop him from demanding rent."

In Huling v. Roll (1890) 43 Mo. App. 234, it was shown that the defendants, lessees of the plaintiff's premises, following their failure in business, refused to pay the monthly rental therefor, whereon the plaintiff took possession of the property, and, after making alterations, leased it within a month after the defendant's refusal to pay rent, to a third person for a term extending beyond that of the defendant's. The court, apparently dealing more with what constitutes a surrender than with its effect, did, however, say: "It is said in Thomas v. Cox (1840) 6 Mo. 506, that nothing will discharge a sealed covenant but 'performance or discharge under seal.' This statement is not strictly correct unless the word 'performance' was used in the sense of surrender; for the law is well settled that 'nothing but a surrender or release or an eviction absolves a tenant from the obligation to pay rent.' Dyer v. Wightman (1870) 66 Pa. 425; Fisher v. Milliken (1848) 8 Pa. 111, 49 Am. Dec. 497, 8 Mor. Min. Rep. 395. Unless this word was used in its broader sense, as indicated, the statement of the rule is incorrect. The plea of surrender has always exonerated the tenant from the payment of rent."

In Harft v. Tonnelli (1890) 16 Daly (N. Y.) 115, wherein it does not clearly appear whether the rent sought to be recovered had accrued before or after the alleged surrender and acceptance, it was simply remarked that if the surrender and acceptance were made, the judgment which had been rendered for the lessee should not be disturbed.

In De Morat v. Falkenhagen (1892) 148 Pa. 393, 23 Atl. 1125, the plaintiff's statement of claim in an action of assumpsit for one month's rent was met by an affidavit of defense which averred a surrender by the lessee and an acceptance by the plaintiff's agent. The court held that this was sufficient to take the case to the jury, who might determine any disputes which might arise as to the facts of agency and surrender. See also Auer v. Penn (1882) 99 Pa. 370, 44 Am. Rep. 114.

Compare, however, Thomas v. Cox (Mo.) supra, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff, lessee of certain premises, had subleased them to the defendant, against whom he brought an action for rent. It was pleaded by the defendant that, the rent having been paid to a certain date, the balance of the term was then surrendered to and accepted by the plaintiff. The court, holding the plea bad, said: "The plea nowhere asserts the fact that the lot, etc., was surrendered to and accepted by Cox, in satisfaction of the defendant's obligation to him to pay the $1,000. It is a well-settled rule in law that nothing will discharge a sealed covenant but a performance or discharge under seal. Here no such thing is alleged; the plea says Cox accepted the lease, but for what it does not say; whether in satisfaction of his demand is not said."

In two cases wherein it does not appear whether the rent sought to be recovered had accrued before or after the surrender, the defendant surety has been held to be released from liability for rent by the surrender and acceptance of the terms.

Thus, in White v. Walker (1863) 31 Ill. 422, wherein it was sought to recover from the guarantor of a lease for unpaid rent, it appeared that on the death of the lessee, his widow entered into a new agreement with the plaintiff respecting the premises, a new lease being made to her at less rent. The court said that if these facts constituted a waiver or surrender of the original lease, which was a question for the jury, the defendant was unquestionably discharged of his guaranty. So, in Wistar v. Campbell (1875) 10 Phila. (Pa.) 359, an action on a recognizance on certiorari, the condition of which was to pay costs and rent accrued or to accrue to the final determination of the cause, the surety, Campbell, swore that the principal debtor, before the finding of the sheriff's jury, gave up possession of the premises to the plaintiff, who accepted the same. The court held that such a clear assertion of an acceptance of the surrender would, if proved, defeat the plaintiff's action. It does not appear from the report whether any rent had accrued at the time of the alleged acceptance.

In two cases it has been held that, where a surrender of part of the leased premises has been accepted, the tenant may be held for an apportioned rental, or, what corresponds thereto, for the portion not surrendered, there being nothing in the cases to indicate specifically whether the rent in question accrued before or after the surrender.

Thus, in Ehrman v. Mayer (1882)

57 Md. 612, a case not within the scope of this note, it was held that where one leased land for a term of years and the assignee of the reversion accepted a surrender of a portion of the premises, the rent of the remaining portion was not extinguished, but was to be apportioned.

So, in Van Rensselaer v. Bradley (1846) 3 Denio (N. Y.) 135, 45 Am. Dec. 451, another case not in point, the court, relative to the subject under discussion, remarked as follows: "The rule found in the books, which I take to be sound, is this,—'if a man which hath a rent service purchase parcel of the land out of which the rent is issuing, this shall not extinguish all, but for that parcel. For a rent service in such case may be apportioned according to the value of the land.' 1 Co. Litt. Phil. ed. 1836, p. 539. 'But if one holdeth his land of his lord by the service to render to his lord yearly at such a feast, a horse, a golden spear, or a clove, gilliflower, or the like, and the lord purchase parcel of the land, such service is taken away, because such service cannot be severed or apportioned.' Id. p. 545. The whole tenancy being equally chargeable with them, the lord by his own act shall not discharge part, and throw the whole burden upon the residue for his own private benefit and advantage." R. S.

JOHN W. WHALEN, Admr., etc., of Francis J. Whalen, Deceased,
v.

RICHARD E. SHEEHAN.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—January 7, 1921.

(237 Mass. 112, 129 N. E. 379.)

Automobile — liability for injury done by car in possession of repair man.

The owner of an automobile is not liable for injury done by it while a repair man in whose possession it has been placed for repairs, without any right on the part of the owner to exercise control or direction over the employment and its details, is "tuning" it up after the repairs are finished, and before it is returned to the owner.

[See note on this question beginning on page 974.]

REPORT by the Superior Court for Essex County (Cox, J.) for determination by the Supreme Judicial Court, on direction of a verdict for defendant, of a question arising in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of defendant's automobile. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. William E. Sisk and Richard L. Sisk for plaintiff.

Messrs. Walter I. Badger, Chester M. Pratt, and Louis C. Doyle, for defendant:

Buckley, at the time of the accident, was not the servant or employee of defendant, so as to render defendant liable for his negligence.

Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570, 35 N. E. 101; Corliss v. Keown, 207 Mass. 149, 93 N. E. 143; Brackett v. Lubke, 4 Allen, 138, 81 Am. Dec. 694; Dutton v. Amesbury Nat. Bank, 181 Mass. 154, 63 N. E. 405; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; Centrello's Case, 232 Mass. 456, 122 N. E. 560; Winslow's Case, 232 Mass. 458, 122 N. E. 561; Robichaud's Case, 234 Mass. 60, 124 N. E. 890.

Pierce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort, brought by the administrator to recover for the death of his intestate, a minor child, who was struck and killed on May 1, 1918, by an automobile owned by the defendant and operated by one Joseph H. Buckley, while the intestate was crossing a public highway in the city of Lynn. The defendant was not present at the time of the accident. There was sufficient evidence of the due care of the intestate and of the negligence of Buckley to warrant the submission of the case to the jury on these points. At the close of the evidence the judge ordered a verdict for the defendant, and reported the case to this court upon the following stipulation: "If the case should have been submitted to the jury, then judgment is to be entered for the plaintiff in the sum of thirty-seven hundred and fifty ($3,750) dollars, costs and interest from the date of the writ; otherwise, judgment for the defendant."

The only question raised by this report is whether, upon all the evidence, the case should have been submitted to the jury on the issue of the defendant's responsibility for the negligence of the driver of the automobile.

The defendant and Buckley were the only witnesses called to testify on the issue of the relation of the defendant and Buckley. The evidence warranted the jury in finding the following facts: The defendant and Buckley lived in Lynn. The defendant purchased the automobile two weeks before the accident. He was then unfamiliar with its operation and care. Afterward, the person who sold him the automobile gave him lessons. Four or five days before the accident, desiring to go to Gloucester, he went to the garage where he kept the automobile and asked for a man to drive him there. The keeper of the garage sent Buckley, not being able to send a man from the garage. Buckley had a chauffeur's license; he was not employed by anyone steadily; temporarily he did "jobs, driving or repairing, for persons who asked him;" he lived with his parents, had a workshop, and did not have a garage. The defendant and Buckley drove to Gloucester in the morning and returned to Lynn. In the afternoon they drove to Lawrence, the defendant for a short distance taking the wheel. Buckley gave the defendant instructions on the last trip. While returning from Lawrence they found the car was not in good condition. Buckley told the defendant that his business was repairing automobiles, and that he would be glad to take the car and do what was necessary to repair it. As a result of the conversation, the car, after it was returned to the garage in the evening of the same day, was driven by the son-in-law of the defendant to Central square, Lynn, and there delivered to Buckley, as a repair man, to do what was necessary. Nothing was said about the compensation to be paid, nor was the agreement such that the defendant could not stop the work and give it to some other man if the defendant was not satisfied with the work of Buckley. After Buckley had had the car about two days the defendant called him up and asked if the car was ready. Before the accident, on the day of the accident, he again called him up and asked how soon he could have it. Buckley answered that there was a lot of work that had to be done on it, and that he could not give the car to him before late that afternoon. The defendant had not seen the car after its delivery to Buckley, and had no other conversation with him previous to the accident. As an incident in the repair of the car, to see that the repairs were effective, Buckley, "after he got the car where he thought was right," took it out "to 'tune' it up . . . and was coming back to his home" when the accident occurred.

We are of opinion that the facts, as a matter of law, do not warrant the conclusion that the defendant, during the time the automobile was in the control of Buckley, had the right to exercise control and direction over the employment and all its details; in other words, had a right to say not only what was to be done, but when and how it should be done. Baltimore

Automobile—liability for injury done by car in possession of repair man.

Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Jamar, 93 Md. 404, 86 Am. St. Rep. 428, 49 Atl. 847; Reg. v. Walker (1858) 8 Cox, C. C. 1. On the other hand, Buckley was in possession and had full control of the automobile, and "was in the exercise of a distinct and independent employment, using his own means and methods for accomplishing his work, and not being under the immediate supervision and control of his employer." Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570, 574, 35 N. E. 101; Dutton v. Amesbury Nat. Bank, 181 Mass. 154, 157, 63 N. E. 406. Had the defendant been possessed of a watch or clothing in need of repair, and had he taken it to a repairer for emendation, it would be extraordinary to hold that such an artisan became the servant of the owner during the time the labor and skill of the workman were exercised upon it. Indeed, such a deposit has been long recognized as creating the relation of bailor and bailee, and not that of master and servant. In principle we perceive no distinction between the illustrative case and the case at bar. Segler v. Callister, 167 Cal. 377, 139 Pac. 819, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, note; McColligan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 214 Pa. 229, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 544, 112 Am. St. Rep. 739, 63 Atl. 792, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 471.

It follows that the verdict for the defendant was properly directed, and by the terms of the stipulation judgment is to be entered for the defendant.

So ordered.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of owner for injury by automobile while being operated by repair man.

It appears to be well settled that where the owner of an automobile turns it over to a person not in his general employ, for repairs, and surrenders entire control to the repair man, he is not liable for an injury inflicted by the car while it is being operated by the latter, who is deemed to be an independent contractor. Segler v. Callister (1914) 167 Cal. 377, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, 139 Pac. 819; Chamberlain v. Southern California Edison Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25; Daugherty v. Thomas (1913) 174 Mich. 371, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, 140 N. W. 615, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163;

Woodcock v. Sartle (1914) 84 Misc. 488, 146 N. Y. Supp. 540; Thorn v. Clark (1919) 188 App. Div. 411, 177 N. Y. Supp. 201; McCabe v. Allan (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec 39, C. S. 29. And see the reported case (WHALEN v. SHEEHAN, ante, 972).

Thus, in Segler v. Callister (Cal.) supra, wherein it appeared that an owner had turned his car over to the keeper of a garage, to be put in repair for selling, it was held that the owner was not liable for an injury caused by the repair man while driving the machine on the public street to test it. The court said: "We have, then, the case of a man who has turned his automobile over to a mechanic to put it in order. He exercised no control over the work or over the mechanic in the performance of the work. If, in the due performance of that work, it became proper for the mechanic to take the car out on the street to test it, the owner would be no more responsible for damage which might result from the mechanic's bad management of the car than he would if the mechanic, without any authority at all, had taken the car and so used it. The evidence of plaintiff is not sufficient to raise a conflict upon the question, and it certainly needs no citation of authority to show that the owner, who has surrendered possession and control of his property under the indicated circumstances to an independent contractor, is not legally responsible for the damages which that contractor may occasion in his use of the property." See to the same effect, McCabe v. Allan (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec 39 C. S. 29.

So, in Thorn v. Clark (1919) 188 App. Div. 411, 177 N. Y. Supp. 201, it was decided that an owner who delivered his automobile to a garage keeper to be repaired was not liable for a negligent act of the repair man, causing injury to another while operating the car to test it and also for pleasure, by virtue of the owner's authority to "take the car out." The court said: "The action must fail as to the owner of the automobile. Laravie, in repairing it, represented the will of the owner only as to the result of his work; the means by which he accomplished such work being left to his own discretion. It is a most common occurrence for the owner of an automobile to have it repaired at a garage. The accomplishment of that result and work incidental thereto, such as testing the automobile, are the work of an independent contractor, and not that of a servant. It makes no difference that the work, as in this case, may have been done by a particular employee in the garage, acting independently and for himself."

It is held in the reported case (WHALEN v. SHEEHAN) that the owner of an automobile was not liable for a fatal injury resulting from the negligent operation of the car by a repair man in whose custody the owner had left it to be repaired. It appeared in that case that the owner had no right, while the machine was in the control of the repair man, to exercise any direction over the employment.

In Daugherty v. Thomas (1913) 174 Mich. 371, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, 140 N. W. 615, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163, the court held to be unconstitutional a statute of Michigan providing that "the owner of a motor vehicle shall be liable for any injury occasioned by the negligent operation by any person of such motor vehicle, whether such negligence consists in violations of the provisions of a statute of this state, or in the failure to observe such ordinary care in such operation as the rules of the common law require, but such owner shall not be so liable in case such motor vehicle shall have been stolen." In that case, the owner of an automobile was held not to be liable for its negligent operation by repair men while testing it without the owner's knowledge or permission.

In Woodcock v. Sartle (1914) 84 Misc. 488, 146 N. Y. Supp. 540, it was held that a mechanic engaged by the owner of an automobile to overhaul the latter's car on his premises, and put it in running condition, at a specified wage per week, was an independent contractor, and not a servant, the nature of the repairs and the manner in which they were to be made being left entirely to the judgment of the repair man, so that the owner was not liable for an injury to a third person caused by the negligent operation of the car while the mechanic was testing it. The court said: "Sartle, in fact, reserved no right to control or direct Smith in repairing the car to be overhauled. He neither had the knowledge nor experience necessary to do so. He, in fact, did not assume to direct what should be done, or how it should be done. He was only interested in the result to be accomplished. He relied upon, and trusted entirely to, the mechanical skill and experience of Smith, who undertook the job. The fact that the work was done on Sartle's premises does not change the legal relations between the parties. Had Smith had a shop of his own, and had he taken the automobile there to do the work, his duties would have been precisely the same. Nor does the fact that he was to be paid at an agreed compensation of $20 per week, or at the rate of $20 per week, alter the relations. It is a circumstance to be considered, but cannot control. If the 'auto' had been sent to a factory, the cost of the necessary repairs might have been either for a lump sum, or, if the time and extent of the repairs could not be definitely foreseen, the parties could agree that the cost be ascertained on the basis of the time necessarily expended, plus the cost of the required new parts. This was, in substance, just what the arrangement was between Sartle and Smith; all necessary parts to be charged to Sartle, and the time expended to be paid for at the rate of so much per week."

In Chamberlain v. Southern California Edison Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25, it appeared that an electric lighting and heating company, maintaining a shop for the repair of its own motor vehicles, had sent, by order of its general storekeepers, one of its automobile truck drivers, who was subject to the general orders of the officers of the company, to the residence of another employee of the company to get an automobile belonging to that employee which needed repairs, and that, while towing the automobile, a person was injured through the driver's negligence. It also appeared that the machine was repaired at the company's shop, and the charges, amounting to the actual cost of material and labor, were paid by the owner. It was held that the driver was acting within the scope of his employment as a servant of the company, and was not acting for the owner of the automobile, so as to render the latter liable for the injuries inflicted. L. F. C.

WILLIAM GIERTH, Respt.,

v.

FIDELITY TRUST COMPANY et al., Appts.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals — November 14, 1931.

(— N. J. —, 115 Atl. 397.)

Fraud — contract to reveal bank deposit — compensation.

1. Complainant had a large deposit in a trust company of which he lost all recollection, resulting from a mental condition caused by illness, and an officer or head of a department of the trust company having charge of depositor's accounts, knowing of complainant's abnormal mental condition, and concealing his relation to the trust company, induced complainant to contract to and pay him a large part of the deposit—nearly one half—to reveal its location. When the depositor learned the facts he filed a bill in equity to compel the party to restore the fund. Held, that under the circumstances the defendant had, by superior knowledge and artful silence, obtained an unfair advantage over the complainant, whose mentality was, to the knowledge of the defendant, abnormal, and that defendant's acts were constructively fraudulent; that equity has power to give affirmative relief from such an exorbitant and unconscionable bargain, and compel restitution.

[See note on this question beginning on page 976.]

Pleading — multifariousness.

2. Under recent statutes and rules governing the court of chancery, mul-tifariousness, as an objection to a pleading, has been, substantially, done away with.

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Chancery Court (Walker, Ch.) refusing to dismiss complainant's bill filed to compel restoration of moneys alleged to have been illegally taken and withheld from him by defendants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Lum, Tambllyn, & Colyer and Ralph E. Lum, for appellants:

Complainant has not stated a cause of action against the defendants, Ralph Mortimer Kutz and Edith K. Ryan.

Trapahagen v. Voorhees, 44 N. J. Eq. 21, 12 Atl. 895; Phillips v. Pullen, 45 N. J. Eq. 5, 16 Atl. 9; Campbell v. Watson, 62 N. J. Eq. 396, 50 Atl. 120; Perth Amboy Gaslight Co. v. Middlesex County Bank, 60 N. J. Eq. 84, 45 Atl. 704; Tufts v. People's Bank & T. Co. 59 N. J. L. 380, 35 Atl. 792.

Messrs. William A. Brooks and Pomerehne & Laible for respondent.

Bergen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order made by the chancellor, refusing to dismiss the complainant's bill of complaint, and the only matters argued are that the bill does not disclose sufficient facts to sustain it, and that it is multifarious. The bill avers that complainant had deposited to his credit with a trust company, in 1912, $22,505, which remained in that condition until 1916, when complainant was stricken with an illness which caused a total loss of memory of this deposit; that in 1920 Ralph M. Kutz represented to the complainant that he had knowledge that the latter had over $25,000 on deposit in a certain financial institution, and offered to reveal that knowledge if he would agree to pay him $10,199.53, and that such a bargain was made, whereupon Kutz induced the complainant to draw three checks on the Fidelity Trust Company of Newark, New Jersey, against this deposit for the sum agreed on, and pass them over to Kutz, who collected the money and deposited $8,000 of it to the order of Edith K. Ryan, a relative of his, with a banking or brokerage company doing business as C. I. Hudson & Company; that Kutz concealed from the complainant the fact that he was in the service of the Fidelity Trust Company as chief accountant, in charge of the accounts of depositors; and that when complainant discovered this, within three days after making the contract with Kutz, he went to the Fidelity Trust Company and informed it of what had happened, and thereafter the trust company refused to honor any further checks drawn by complainant, who then filed his bill of complaint making the trust company, C. I. Hudson & Company, Kutz, and Edith K. Ryan, parties, praying that an account be taken of the amount due from each of the defendants to him, and that it be decreed that the moneys which complainant alleges were illegally taken and withheld from him be restored. A motion was made on behalf of Kutz and Edith K. Ryan to dismiss the bill of complaint, which was denied, from which action of the court Kutz and Edith K. Ryan have appealed. In dealing with this motion we must treat it as a demurrer, and, if the facts averred state an equitable case for relief against appellants, the order of the chancellor should be affirmed.

The inferences to be drawn from the facts charged are that, when the complainant made this agreement and paid the money, his mind was in an abnormal condition, which is to be inferred from the fact that he had absolutely, because of his illness, lost all memory of so large a deposit in a financial institution located in the city where he lived, without any reason other than his illness; that Kutz was either an officer or the head of a department in the Fidelity Trust Company, which gave him knowledge of the deposit, and also that he knew of the complainant's illness and loss of memory, otherwise he could not have accomplished his scheme to secure nearly one half of the deposit; that he concealed from the complainant all knowledge of his connection with the financial institution where the money was lodged, and declined to reveal it until the complainant had agreed to pay him nearly one half of the amount on deposit. It is not pretended that the trust company would have had any right to make any such bargain, and the only question remaining is whether one of its officers, who obtained such knowledge because of his confidential relations with the trust company and the account of this depositor, can avail himself of the bargain which he made with the depositor. That such conduct by a bank official holding a semiconfidential position to a depositor is contrary to fair dealing and good morals cannot be doubted.

Fraud—contract to reveal bank deposit—compensation.

If the conduct of Kutz was not an actual fraud, it is certainly what is denominated a constructive fraud.

That learned jurist, Chief Justice Beasley, said, in Erie R. Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 21 N. J. Eq. 283: Equity "will never lend its active aid to a party who, by superior knowledge and artful silence, has gained an unfair advantage over another. Such triumphs are deemed unconscionable, and are opposed to the general principles of the law."

That the defendant Kutz, by superior knowledge and artful silence, gained an unfair advantage over the complainant, cannot be rightfully disputed. Occupying the position he did in relation to the complainant's account with the Fidelity Trust Company, if he had been upright in his dealings with complainant, he would have informed the customer of the situation, and not have taken advantage of his superior knowledge and of the abnormal condition of complainant's mentality, due to his illness, which must have been known to Kutz when he induced the complainant to make this exorbitant and unconscionable bargain. Such conduct justifies the implication of fraud, and authorizes a court of conscience to set it aside. Hyer v. Little, 20 N. J. Eq. 443, 460. Fraud in equity includes all wilful or intentional acts or concealments by which an undue or unconscionable advantage over another is obtained. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 873. Under the facts stated in the bill the conduct of the defendant Kutz was a fraud on the complainant, for, if he told him the facts,—namely, that he was the officer of the trust company in charge of the complainant's account and that he knew as such officer that the complainant had that amount of money to his credit with the trust company, which he had forgotten,—it is not to be supposed that the complainant would have made any such unconscionable agreement. That equity has power to give affirmative relief in a proper case, in order to satisfy its conscience and effectuate justice, cannot be doubted, when necessary to accomplish that result, provided the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter. So far as Edith K. Ryan is concerned, she is a mere trustee for Kutz, and was used by him as a means of secreting the money, or to render it more difficult for the complainant to follow it, and she has no greater rights than he has.

In answer to the objection that the bill is multifarious, it is only necessary to say that the claim set up is against the fund originally in the hands of the trust company, part of which is yet in its hands, and part in the hands of the other defendants; and all of the holders of said fund may be made parties, under the statutory rule of the court of chancery adopted in 1915 (Pamph. Laws 1915, p. 187), which provides: "Any person may be made a defendant who either jointly, severally, or in the alternative is alleged to have or claim an interest in the controversy, or in any part thereof, adverse to the complainant; or whom it is necessary or proper to make a party for the complete determination or settlement of any question involved therein."

This rule applies to the present controversy, and therefore the objection referred to has nothing to rest on. In fact, it is hardly to be doubted that, under the statute and rules now governing the Court of Chancery, the old-time objection of multifariousness has been, substantially, done away with.

Pleading—multifariousness.

The order appealed from is affirmed, with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of agreement to pay an officer or employee of a bank or trust company to disclose the existence of, or to assist one to establish, a deposit.

An extended search has revealed no case upon this question other than the reported case (GIERTH v. FIDELITY TRUST CO. ante, 976). An official or employee of a bank or trust company whose duties are concerned with depositors' accounts would seem to hold, if not a confidential position in the strict sense, at least a semiconfidential position toward a depositor. And if, as in the reported case, he learns of the deposit through his relationship to the bank or trust company, and conceals that relationship from the depositor at the time he makes the agreement with the latter, he comes within the spirit, if not the letter, of the principle as formulated in 12 R. C. L. 311, that "where a relation of trust and confidence exists between the parties, it is the duty of the party in whom the confidence is reposed to make full disclosure of all material facts within his knowledge relating to the transaction in question, and any concealment of material facts by him is a fraud, although the transaction could not have been impeached had no such relation existed." G. H. P.

CRANE TOWNSHIP EX REL. FRANKLIN J. STALTER, Prosecuting Attorney, et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

SECOY et al., Township Trustees, et al.

Ohio Supreme Court—July 12, 1921.

(— Ohio St. —, 132 N. E. 851.)

Office — liability for malfeasance in office — leaving blank warrants in hands of clerk.

1. Township trustees who leave signed warrants blank as to payee and amounts in the hands of the clerk, when the statute requires the warrants to be properly filled up before signature, are guilty of malfeasance in office which will render them liable for losses due to wrongful use of the warrants by the clerk.

[See note on this question beginning on page 982.]

Appeal — misjoinder of parties — waiver.

2. Going to trial without raising the question of misjoinder of parties defendant waives such objection.

[See 2 R. C. L. 85.]

Office — liability for loss beyond term.

3. Members of different boards of township trustees whose malfeasance in office permitted misappropriation of public funds by the clerk are not, in the absence of anything to show collusion between them, individually liable for any misappropriation occurring before or after their respective terms of office.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Wyandot County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiffs in a suit brought to hold defendants liable for losses due to the wrongful use of warrants by the township clerk, alleged to have been carelessly and wrongfully signed by defendants in blank and delivered to him. Reversed.

Statement by the Court:

This suit was brought in the court of common pleas of Wyandot county by the plaintiffs in error to recover from the defendants in error the sum of $2,308.91, based upon a finding of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of the auditor of state.

The report of the bureau shows that the defendants carelessly, wrongfully, and unlawfully signed warrants in blank, and delivered them into the custody of the township clerk, contrary to law, and, further, did not require itemized bills to be presented and allowed for all claims, leaving that matter to the judgment of the township clerk, by reason of which illegal and excessive warrants were drawn upon the funds of the township in the amount aforesaid. The defendants answered jointly.

Upon trial had to a jury a verdict was returned, and judgment rendered thereon against the several defendants for above amount.

Motion for new trial was interposed and overruled. Error was prosecuted to the court of appeals, which court reversed the judgment below on the theory that the evidence showed mere negligence upon the part of the defendants, and that that was not a sufficient legal basis for recovery against them as trustees, under the laws of the state of Ohio.

Error is prosecuted to this court to reverse that judgment.

Messrs. Franklin J. Stalter and A. K. Hall for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. D. C. Parker for defendants in error.

Per Curiam:

It is pretty well settled under the American system of government that a public office is a public trust, and that public property and public money in the hands of, or under the control of, such officer or officers, constitute a trust fund, for which the official as trustee should be held responsible to the same degree as the trustee of a private trust fund. Surely the public rights ought to be as jealously safeguarded as the rights of any individual made the beneficiary of a trust by the private party creating such trusts.

It is, at least, a novel claim to urge that, when one violates the plain, pertinent provisions of his trust, such violation is mere negligence, and that where the law points out the official duty in clear, understandable terms, and the official duty is as clearly ignored, or undone, or disregarded by the public officer, and a loss of money or funds proximately results therefrom, such violation of public duty upon the part of the public trustee constitutes no such wrong as may be made the basis of a suit at law to recover for the public the money so lost or misappropriated by the failure of the public officer to do his plainly prescribed duty under the law.

Of course, if the matter is one of discretion in the performance of duty, that would present quite a different question; but the law does not vest a trustee with discretion as to the issuance of warrants in this respect, but plainly outlines and defines exactly what the trustee shall do touching claims against the public fund.

It is quite proper to say that matters in general that are committed to the pure discretion of a public officer, and loss to the public in funds or character of service, could not be availed of in a suit against the public officer or his bondsmen. But such a case is not presented here.

The evidence unmistakably shows, even in the majority opinion of the court of appeals, that there was a plain failure of the clear duty on the part of the board of trustees. The majority opinion uses this language: "In this case the township clerk misappropriated various sums of money belonging to the township. His misappropriation was accomplished by procuring the signature of the township trustees to orders upon the treasurer, which orders were left in blank both as to amount and as to payee. This method he had pursued over a considerable space of time, and had been able to conceal from the eyes of the state inspectors his wrongs until the last examination."

To say that this is negligence does violence to the simplest forms of English. It is malfeasance in office—undoubted dereliction of a clear public duty; and the fact that it had been going on for years does not make it any less culpable so far as the public interests are concerned.

This court in a comparatively recent case, State ex rel. Smith v. Maharry, 97 Ohio St. 272, 119 N. E. 822, laid down the following proposition of law in the syllabus: "(1) All public property and public moneys, whether in the custody of public officers or otherwise, constitute a public trust fund, and all persons, public or private, are charged by law with the knowledge of that fact. Said trust fund can be disbursed only by clear authority of law."

It is quite evident from the foregoing that the trustees knowingly and openly permitted and aided the township clerk in thus misappropriating public moneys of the township. That they should respond to the public for this disregard of plain public duty there can be no doubt.

But it is claimed that the judgment of the common pleas court should have been reversed upon another ground, and that is a misjoinder of parties defendant. No demurrer was interposed by the defendants as to misjoinder of parties defendant, nor was that issue raised by any answer. They went to trial upon a joint answer, and the ordinary rule would therefore be that they have waived any right to afterwards complain of a joint judgment against them. This court, however, must read into the petition the law of Ohio, which recognizes the fact that but three of them could be acting as a board of trustees at any one time. There is nothing in the record to show that either board was in collusion or conspiracy with the other board—that there was any common or joint purpose between them as to their course of business in the matter complained of.

Appeal—misjoinder of parties—waiver.

The interests of law, as well as justice, therefore, demand that the judgment of the Court of Appeals, finding no liability upon the ground of negligence in the discharge of a plain public duty, should be reversed, and that this cause should be remanded to the Court of Common Pleas, with instructions to hear and determine the amount of liability to be assessed against each trustee, measured by the misappropriation herein involved, in which

Office—liability for malfeasance in office—leaving blank warrants in hands of clerk.

Office—liability for loss beyond term.

he participated during his official term, under the evidence and the law as outlined in this opinion, and for which he is legally liable.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded to the Court of Common Pleas.

Marshall, Ch. J., and Johnson, Hough, Wanamaker, Robinson, Jones, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of township trustees for loss of public funds.

Generally, as to liability of public officer or his bond for the defaults and misfeasances of his clerks, assistants, or deputies, see annotation in 1 A.L.R. 222.

The numerical weight of authority is to the effect that a township trustee is an insurer of public funds received by him in his official capacity, so that he is liable for a loss thereof, no matter what the cause of the loss. The following cases have expressly adopted this strict rule of liability: Morbeck v. State (1867) 28 Ind. 86; Rock v. Stinger (1871) 36 Ind. 346; Inglis v. State (1878) 61 Ind. 212; McClelland v. State (1894) 138 Ind. 321, 37 N. E. 1089.

Thus, in Morbeck v. State (Ind.) supra, applying the rule that a public officer, who is required to give bond for the proper payment of money that may come into his hands as such officer, is not a mere bailee of the money, exonerated by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, but that his liability is fixed by the bond, it was held that the fact that public money has been stolen from a township trustee without his fault does not relieve him from his obligation to pay such money over to his successor in office, he having given a bond to pay all money belonging to the township, and received by him, "out according to law."

And in Rock v. Stinger (1871) 36 Ind. 346, applying the same rule, it was said that a township trustee is liable to account for and pay over whatever amount comes to his hands by virtue of his office, "whether the same has been stolen or burned, without his fault, or loaned out to a litigious borrower, from whom he is unable to collect." In this case the money had been loaned. And again, in Robbins v. Dishon (1862) 19 Ind. 204, where a township trustee converted township funds by unauthorizedly loaning the same, it was held that he thereby made himself responsible therefor on his bond, but that in such a case, if he takes a note for the money loaned, the township cannot sue thereon, even though it was made payable to the trustee, as such. And see Goodwin v. State (1881) 81 Ind. 109, for a statement to the effect that, if a township trustee invests township funds in his private business, he becomes a defaulter liable on his bond in case he fails to turn the same over to his successor at the end of his term, even though he succeeds himself. And rental paid to himself by a township trustee, for the use of his own property, and money paid for services that were never rendered, have been held misappropriated by such trustee, so as to render him liable therefor. Miller v. Jackson Twp. (1912) 178 Ind. 503, 99 N. E. 102. And again, in State ex rel. Cicero Twp. v. Finney (1890) 125 Ind. 427, 25 N. E. 544, a township trustee was declared liable on his official bond for public funds misapplied by him.

And under the rule of absolute liability for public funds not paid out according to law, it has been held that a township trustee is liable for any funds paid out under a contract not legally authorized, as, for instance, pursuant to an invalid appropriation for a public improvement, or in the absence of any appropriation. Miller v. Jackson Twp. (1912) 178 Ind. 503, 99 N. E. 102; State ex rel. Sailor v. Blind (1914) 181 Ind. 689, 105 N. E. 225. And see State ex rel. Thorlton v. Puckett (1919) 70 Ind. App. 591, 123 N. E. 650.

And the rule that a township trustee is not a bailee of township funds, but is absolutely liable for a loss thereof under any circumstances, has been held to apply to funds lost by the failure of a bank in which he had, while such bank was solvent, deposited them in good faith and without fault. Inglis v. State (1878) 61 Ind. 212; McClelland v. State (1894) 133 Ind. 321, 37 N. E. 1089.

In State ex rel. The Township v. Powell (1878) 67 Mo. 395, 29 Am. Rep. 512, where the nature of the bond and of the controlling statute does not appear, a trustee of a school township was held liable for school funds lost through failure of a reputed solvent bank, in which he had placed them on general deposit while exercising due care and prudence, since, when he made the general deposit, "the bank simply became indebted to him in his general capacity, and he took the risk of being able to collect it when he required it."

Applying the general rule that public moneys in the hands of a public officer constitute a trust fund, for which the official, as trustee, should be held responsible to the same degree as a trustee of a private trust fund, it was held in the reported case (CRANE TWP. EX REL. STALTER v. SECOY, ante, 979) that township trustees who leave signed warrants, blank as to payee and amounts, in the hands of the clerk, when the statute requires the warrants to be properly filled up before signature, are guilty of malfeasance in office which will render them liable for losses due to wrongful use of the warrants by the clerk. It will be observed that the court in this case adopted and applied the trust-fund test, rather than the rule of absolute liability, which is adhered to in most of the cases which have passed upon the specific question under consideration in this annotation.

Where public funds have been paid out by a township trustee in proper channels, which payment nevertheless was wrongful so as to render the trustee liable therefor, it has been held that the legislature may relieve the trustee and his bond from liability. See State ex rel. Sailor v. Blind (1914) 181 Ind. 689, 105 N. E. 225, where the payment was unlawful because made without the advice of the advisory board, and without appropriation.

G. J. C.

HENDERSON ELEVATOR COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

CITY OF HENDERSON et al.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—February 24, 1920.

(187 Ky. 453, 219 S. W. 809.)

Highway — title to abandoned street.

1. The title to an abandoned street vests in the abutting owner, not in the original dedicator.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1008.]

—condition as to dedication — right to accept.

2. A city cannot accept a dedication of a street subject to conditions that it shall not extend, widen, or in part close it, since that would be an attempted relinquishment of the power to regulate and control its streets.

—right to object to closing.

3. Abutting owners cannot prevent the closing of a street which has been dedicated to public use, if the closing is necessary for the public good.

[See 13 R. C. L. 68.]

Appeal — right to complain — question raised by appellant.

4. An appellant cannot complain of the determination in a case of a question raised by him, although it was not properly in the case.

— effect of agreement as to use of street.

5. An agreement between a city and persons dedicating land for a highway that the dedicator shall have the continued use of the street cannot prevail over the right of the abutting owner to take title to the street when it is discontinued.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Henderson County in favor of defendants in an action brought to restrain them from enforcing an ordinance providing for the conveyance of all or any portion of a certain street to defendant Waller & Company, which was consolidated with an action by the city, in which the plaintiff elevator company intervened, to close a portion of said street. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. John C. Worsham, for appellants:

The owners in fee of a strip of ground dedicated it to the city of Henderson for a public street, and it was formerly accepted by the municipality. The city could not afterwards abandon the street, or use it for a different purpose.

Home Laundry Co. v. Louisville, 168 Ky. 499, 182 S. W. 645; 13 Cyc. 498; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett, 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85.

Property which has been dedicated to a city for a public purpose cannot be treated as private property of the municipality.

Campbell County Ct. v. Newport, 12 B. Mon. 538; Augusta v. Perkins, 3 B. Mon. 437.

Where an easement in property is granted for street purposes, and the property is afterwards abandoned, the title and possession revert to the grantor and his heirs.

Halley v. Scott County Fiscal Ct. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1471, 78 S. W. 149.

The city of Henderson, having entered into a contract by which, for a certain consideration, it agreed to accept and maintain a passway as a city street, must be held to the obligation devolving upon such municipality at the time the contract was made, and cannot escape fulfilling its contract by reason of a law passed subsequent to the execution of the instrument.

Augusta v. Perkins, supra; Ludlow v. Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co. 116 Ky. 608, 76 S. W. 377.

The appellants and the appellee, A. Waller & Company, and others, were the owners, as tenants in common, of the fee of the passway accepted by the city of Henderson as a city street. If the city were authorized to, and did, abandon or close any part of same, the part so abandoned or closed reverted to the common tenants, and not to any one of them.

Williams v. Johnson, 149 Ky. 409, 149 S. W. 821; Ballard v. Louisville, 3 Ky. Op. 31.

Messrs. B. S. Morris, Dorsey & Dorsey, and Yeaman & Yeaman for appellees.

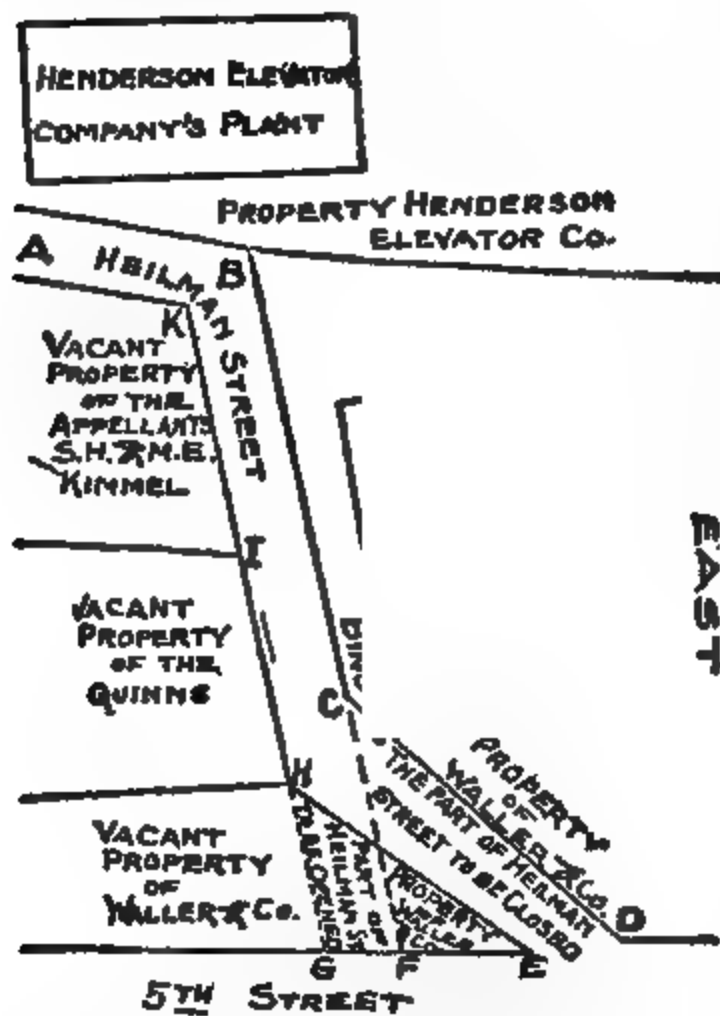

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Henderson is a city of the third class, possessing, under the Constitution and statutes of the state, the privileges and powers, and owing to the public all the governmental duties, that appertain to other municipalities of its class. By virtue of those powers and duties it maintains within its corporate boundaries a system of streets, alleys, and sewers, among the former being Heilman street, a short thoroughfare running from Third to Fifth streets in the vicinity of a depot grounds and numerous railroad tracks known as "Union Station," maintained by the Louisville, Henderson, & St. Louis and Illinois Central Railroad Companies. The greater part of Heilman street, originally limited, however, to a width of 25 feet, seems to have been first established as a street or passway May 1, 1895, by the heirs at law of Joel Lambert, deceased, the then owners of the land over which it in large part ran. This is shown by a deed of partition made between them, whereby each heir was conveyed his or her part of the land, and from which it is apparent that, though the street or passway was established primarily for the convenience of the Lambert heirs, no restrictions were imposed upon its free use by the public. Indeed, such use of it appears to have been enjoyed by the public for quite a number of years before the partition of the Lambert lands. The map here furnished, though without artistic merit, will give a fairly accurate understanding of the location of Heilman street, its topography, and a description of the lands bordering it, as well as the names of the respective owners thereof:

on the map, it turns eastwardly and runs on an oblique course to its intersection with Fifth street at D. It also appears from the map that the land bordering Heilman street on the east from B to C, thence to D, and also on the west side thereof from E to H, is owned by the appellee Waller & Company; that the vacant lot bordering the street on the west from H to I is owned by one Quinn; that the vacant lot on the same side, running from I to K, adjoining the Quinn lot, is owned by the appellants S. H. & M. E. Kimmel; and that the land lying north of and bordering the bend in Heilman street from A to B, thence in an easterly course, and with the northern boundary of the land of Waller & Company to a point not indicated on the map, is owned by the appellant Henderson Elevator Company.

The several owners of the lots, respectively described above, derived title to same, directly or remotely, through deeds of conveyance from the heirs at law of Joel Lambert, each of which seems to have conveyed to the grantee named therein whatever right the grantor had in the passway now included in Heilman street. Both the Henderson Elevator Company and Waller & Company have been duly incorporated under the laws of this state, and are engaged in the business of buying, selling, and storing grain; each owning and operating upon its own premises, elevators, concrete bins, and other equipment necessary to such business. After the property now owned by the appellant Henderson Elevator Company was acquired by its immediate vendor, C. M. Bullett, of Mrs. M. N. Elliott, one of the Lambert heirs, and before its conveyance to that company by Bullett, the latter, by a deed or other writing that passed between him and the other Lambert heirs, or their grantees, then owning the remaining lots on Heilman street, entered into an agreement whereby he and they contributed enough additional ground from their respective lots bordering

As originally established by the heirs at law of Joel Lambert, deceased, so much of the open way, later called Heilman street, as we are required to consider, extends, as indicated on the map, from the letters A to B, thence to C, thence to D, where it connects with Fifth street; but at the letter C, as shown.

the street, to increase its width from 25 to 50 feet, beginning on the map, say, at the letter A, and ending at the letter C, from which point to the letter D it remained, as theretofore, only 25 feet in width. The execution of this agreement and accompanying acts of the parties seem to have been intended as a dedication of Heilman street to the city of Henderson for use as such by the public. But whether or not such was its legal effect is not material, as a dedication of the street was subsequently formally made by the several owners of the lots bordering thereon, or their grantees, by deed duly executed June 24, 1912, whereby they, respectively, conveyed to the city of Henderson whatever title they had to Heilman street, and also so much ground from their respective lots bordering it as would be necessary for the construction of a sewer required for the city's needs, in consideration of which it agreed to accept, keep in repair, and maintain the street for the use of the public, which it admittedly has since done.

In 1917, however, the common council of the city of Henderson, deeming it necessary to widen and straighten that part of Heilman street from a point shown on the map by the letter C to Fifth street, duly passed an ordinance, requiring that this be done by discontinuing and closing so much of the street as turns eastward at C and runs obliquely to Fifth street at D, and in lieu of the part so closed to continue the street from C in a straight line, on new ground 50 feet in width, to Fifth street at F, and from H to Fifth street at G. The ground on each side of that part of Heilman street directed to be closed is owned by the appellee Waller & Company, which is, or was until it was conveyed to the city of Henderson for that purpose, likewise the owner of the ground on which the new part of the street is to be opened.

The ordinance directed that, upon the opening of the new or changed part of Heilman street, the part discontinued to be conveyed by the city of Henderson by proper deed to the appellee Waller & Company, and also directed the city attorney to institute an action in the circuit court to carry into effect so much thereof as directed the discontinuance of that part of Heilman street where it deflects from a straight line to C, and runs on an easterly course obliquely to Fifth street at D; this course of procedure being required by the charter of the city of Henderson. That city being one of the third class, it is given, by Ky. Stat. § 3290, subsec. 7, through its common council, power "to open, alter, abolish, widen, extend, establish, grade, pave or otherwise improve, clean, sprinkle and keep in repair streets, alleys, lanes, avenues and sidewalks, or to have the same done; . . . and to make appropriations for same."

The manner of exercising the above-enumerated powers is defined by § 3449 and other subsequent sections of the statute, all of which were amended and the powers they confer enlarged in numerous particulars by an act of the general assembly of March 7, 1916 (Acts 1916, p. 28), which act, in so far as necessary to be here considered, provides: "That § 3449 of the Kentucky Statutes be, and the same is, hereby amended and re-enacted to be read as follows: The common council, or the board of commissioners in cities which have adopted or may adopt, the commission form of government, shall have and exercise exclusive control and power over the streets, roadways, sidewalks, alleys, landings, wharves, public grounds and highways of the city; to establish, open, alter, widen, extend, close, grade, pave, repave, clean and keep in repair the same; to prevent and remove all encroachments thereon or obstructions thereof; to put drains and sewers in the same, and to regulate and prohibit the building of vaults and areas under sidewalks; to enforce and regulate connection with sewer, gas, and water mains and conduits of all kinds laid in or under the streets and highways of the city for any purpose. Upon the adoption of an ordinance by the common council, or said board of commissioners, authorizing and directing the closing of the whole or any portion of a street or alley or other public highway within the limits or jurisdiction of the city, it shall be the duty of the city attorney to institute an action in the circuit court for the purpose of having the same closed, and to such action all the owners of ground in the squares or lots divided by such street, alley, or highway, or the portion thereof proposed to be closed, shall be made defendants; and if all defendants competent to act for themselves shall fail to object to the closing prayed for, then the court shall render a decree accordingly, but if any of said defendants object, or are under disability other than coverture, the court shall impanel a jury, which shall hear evidence and determine the amount of compensation in the form of damages to be paid to each of such defendants. The court shall thereupon direct that said street, alley, or other highway be closed upon payment to each of such defendants of the amount of damages awarded to him, or, if any defendant refuses to accept such payment, or be for any reason unable to do so, upon payment into court of the amount awarded such defendant or defendants, it shall be the duty of the court to give such proceedings precedence over other cases."

As previously indicated, the city of Henderson, before the passage of the act supra, possessed under § 3290, subsection 7, of its charter, as well as the other sections thereof amended by the act, ample authority to improve, open, widen, extend, or close a street, alley, or other public highway within its corporate limits, and the object of the amendatory act was to broaden and make more specific the powers already possessed by the city over its streets, alleys, and other public highways, and especially to regulate the procedure to be followed by the city authorities in the exercise of its power to close, in whole or in part, a street, alley, or other public highway, as well as to provide a remedy for the protection of persons whose rights as owners of the real estate abutting the public way proposed to be closed might be affected by the closing thereof; hence, its requirement that the street be closed by the institution in the circuit court of an action by the city attorney, to which the property owners to be affected must be made parties. This provision of the act, as is patent from its language, only requires that persons owning the real estate abutting each side of that part of the street proposed to be closed shall be made defendants to the city's action.

While the city attorney was preparing to bring the action as required by the ordinance, but before he had an opportunity to file the petition, the appellants Henderson Elevator Company and S. H. and M. E. Kimmel, on December 22, 1917, instituted an equitable action in the Henderson circuit court against the city of Henderson, its mayor, each of the twelve members of its common council, the city attorney, and A. Waller & Company, in which it was alleged that the city of Henderson, its mayor, and common council were without power to convey, or cause to be conveyed, such part of Heilman street as might be discontinued to A. Waller & Company, and that the latter company was not entitled to take or hold the title thereto. By the prayer of the petition the court was asked to temporarily restrain and permanently enjoin the city, its mayor, common council, and city attorney from attempting to enforce so much of the ordinance as provides for the conveyance of any portion of Heilman street to the defendant A. Waller & Company; and for such other relief as the plaintiffs might be entitled to receive.

By an amended petition additional allegations, challenging the right of the city authorities even to discontinue that part of Heilman street contemplated by the ordinance, were made, and their power to take such action denied, the pleading closing with a prayer that the enforcement of that provision of the ordinance, directing the discontinuance of a part of Heilman street, as well as the part directing the conveyance to A. Waller & Company of the discontinued portion thereof, be enjoined.

The appellees filed a general demurrer to the petition as amended, which was overruled by the court, to which ruling they excepted. They thereupon answered, traversing the averments of the petition as amended.

December 27, 1917, five days after the above action was brought and before the granting of the temporary injunction therein, the city attorney of Henderson, as directed by the ordinance referred to, instituted in its behalf in the Henderson circuit court the action looking to the closing of a part of Heilman street, making the appellee A. Waller & Company, sole owner of the ground bordering each side of that part of the street to be discontinued, a defendant. The appellants filed in the action an intervening petition, and were upon their motion made defendants to same, and the intervening petition taken as their answer. That pleading, after reiterating the averments of the appellants' petition and amended petition in the first action, regarding the alleged absence of power in the city of Henderson to close any part of Heilman street, or to convey to A. Waller & Company that part directed to be closed, set forth in greater detail than was therein stated the grounds upon which these contentions were rested, which, briefly stated, are as follows: First, that as, according to the written instrument by which the ground embraced in Heilman street was dedicated to the city for street purposes, the principal consideration for the latter's agreement to accept the dedication and maintain the street was the right to lay its sewer pipe under it and along the land of the grantors abutting the street, and to go upon the land for the purpose of repairing the sewer, and the city laid its pipe and exercised its right to go upon the land for the purpose of repairing the sewer, it cannot, after receiving the benefits of the contract and now being in the enjoyment of the same, evade its obligation to maintain the ground dedicated as a city street its entire length as then opened to travel. Second, that, as the grantors of the ground now embraced by the street were, as tenants in common, entitled to the common possession and use of the passway at the time of its dedication as a street, if the city of Henderson has the right to change the street, and thereby discontinue or close any part thereof, all the grantors are or will be equally entitled as tenants in common to that part of the street which may be discontinued or closed; hence, the appellee A. Waller & Company cannot be given by the city exclusive possession of that part of the street so discontinued or closed, nor has the city the power to convey it to that company by deed.

After the filing in the second action of such responsive pleadings as were necessary to complete the issues, the two actions were, by agreement of the parties, consolidated and tried together; the evidence, by further agreement, being introduced orally. By the decree rendered it was adjudged by the court: (1) That the city of Henderson had the right to close that part of Heilman street sought to be discontinued, and neither the appellants nor others would be damaged thereby; (2) that the temporary injunction granted at the beginning of the suit be dissolved; (3) that the plaintiffs in the two actions pay their respective costs; (4) that, upon the closing of that part of the street sought to be discontinued, the title to the portion so closed should, by deed from the city of Henderson, be conveyed to and vest in the appellee A. Waller & Company, in fee simple. The appellants complain of the judgment; hence this appeal. Taking up these contentions in the order stated, it may be said of the first that the writing whereby Heilman street was conveyed, or, more properly speaking, dedicated, by the appellants and other abutting property owners to the city of Henderson, imposed no restriction upon its right to extend, straighten, widen, or in part close it, as proposed by its common council; nor could it legally have accepted the dedication of the street under such a limitation upon its legislative discretion, as it would have amounted to an attempted relinquishment of the power to

Highway—
condition as to dedication—
right to accept.

regulate and control its streets and highways, or one of them, which public necessity and convenience demand shall at all times be maintained by its municipal authorities. Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 8 Bush, 415.

It is as much the duty of the city of Henderson to maintain Heilman street for the use of all other inhabitants within its corporate boundaries as for that of the appellants, and so long as it is maintained as a public street, whether in the same condition as when dedicated, or a changed one better adapted to the needs of the public, the appellants' right to its use, being neither greater nor less than that of all others who travel it, is one that may be enjoyed in common with that of the public.

In Henderson v. Lexington, 132 Ky. 390, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 20, 111 S. W. 318, the matter involved was the right of the city of Lexington to close an alley which had been dedicated to and accepted by it under a deed providing that it should always remain free and open as a public street or alley. The closing of the alley was strongly resisted by the owners of the abutting lots. The charter of the city of Lexington contains provisions similar in all respects to those of the city of Henderson set out above in this opinion. One of the important questions passed on in the case, supra, was as to the right of the city authorities to close the alley, where it was made to appear that the closing was necessary for a public purpose. In respect to this question the court said: "On the other hand, when a municipal corporation invested by the legislature with the power to close streets, alleys, and highways, or to acquire property, undertakes to exercise the power, the presumption will be indulged that it is in the interest of and for the benefit of the public, and that the proceeding is not for private or individual use or advantage. And so, if a municipality ordains that an alley or highway shall be closed, or a street opened, it will be presumed that it is done in the interest of the public, and necessary for public purposes, and the burden of showing to the contrary will be put upon the persons who object to the proceeding, and the courts should usually permit the defendants to make the issue and present evidence in support of it."

Another question decided in the case was whether the provision of the deed of dedication, requiring that the alley should always remain free and open as a public highway, prevented that city from closing it. In holding that the provision in question did not prevent the closing of the alley by the city, the court further said: "It is further insisted that, as Ayers alley was conveyed to and accepted by the city under a deed providing that 'it shall always remain free and open as a public street or alley,' the city had no power to close it in violation of the express conditions under which it was accepted. This argument, if sound, would in many instances impose upon municipalities unnecessary and unreasonable burdens. If a street or highway dedicated to a city should cease to be either useful or convenient for the public, and yet the city be obliged to keep it open and maintain it in sufficient repair, it would be imposing upon the public a useless expense; and to so hold would be opposed to both reason and public policy. In our opinion the correct doctrine is that the city has the same control over highways deeded to it, as was Ayers alley, that it does over its other public ways, whether acquired by gift, purchase, or condemnation. In short, all the streets and public ways of a city, however acquired, are subject equally and alike to the control and regulation of the municipal authorities. In accepting the alley under the conveyance, the city did not bind itself irrevocably to keep it open. That is not the fair meaning of the contract. The city assumed the duty of keeping it open as other streets and alleys were kept open, and the right to close it as it might close other streets and alleys."

The soundness of the reasoning supporting the right of the city of Lexington to close the alley, set forth by the opinion in the case

—right to object to closing.

supra, is equally applicable to the facts of the instant case, and therefore conclusive of the right of the appellee city of Henderson to close that part of Heilman street proposed to be discontinued by it. As already remarked, there is nothing in the instrument by which it was dedicated to public use as a street that militates against the right of the city to close it, as attempted; and it is not claimed, or attempted to be proved by appellants, that they have suffered individual loss or will sustain any damage by reason of the closing of that part of the street proposed to be discontinued, but only insisted that it will cause inconvenience to them and the public, and be of no benefit to the city. Our examination of the evidence fails to convince us of the merit of this contention. In our opinion its weight fairly conduces to prove that the public, including the appellants, will be benefited by the extension and straightening of Heilman street as contemplated, and that neither inconvenience nor injury can result to appellants or others from the closing of that part of the street proposed to be discontinued. On the contrary, the change in the street, when established, will straighten it from appellants' lots to where it will intersect Fifth street, put the street on better ground than it formerly occupied, and make the distance from appellants' lots to Fifth street several hundred feet shorter than it was over that part of the street to be closed.

We also find ourselves unable to sustain appellants' second contention. Obviously, the fact that they owned, previously to its dedication to the city as and for a public street, a considerable part of the highway embraced in Heilman street, can give them no right to any part of the street to be closed. They never owned the ground abutting either side of that part of Heilman street. On the contrary, the whole thereof, as well as that to be occupied by the street as changed, is owned by the appellee Waller & Company, which acquired title to all of it, as well as to the ground included in that part of the street to be closed, subject to the public easement while used as such, from a vendee of one of the heirs at law of Joel Lambert, deceased, who received it through the deed of partition from the other heirs; so, in point of fact, the title of the appellee Waller & Company is from the same source as that of appellants. This, however, is not material; it is sufficient that its lot borders each side of that part of the street to be closed, —title to abandoned street.

which of itself, and as a matter of law, makes it the owner of the abandoned or closed part of the street. Therefore, if it be conceded that appellants, under their respective titles from the heirs of Lambert, had the right to use that part of Heilman street to be closed, before its dedication to the city as a street, and while it remained a mere passway, after it was accepted by the city as a street, that right ceased when it became closed by the city.

In Trustees of Hawesville v. Lander, 8 Bush, 679, we held that "the common-law rule, as laid down by Mr. Washburn, is that 'where land is sold bounded on a highway, or upon or along a highway, the thread or center line of the same is presumed to be the limit and boundary of such land, in strict analogy with the case of a stream of water not navigable;' and the same rule applies to a private street, as well in the city as in the county, opened by the grantor, upon which he sells house lots bounding upon it." Tiedeman, Real Prop. 3d ed. § 601; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 636; Schneider v. Jacob, 86 Ky. 106, 5 S. W. 350; Jacob v. Woolfolk, 90 Ky. 429, 9 L.R.A. 551, 14 S. W. 415; Copping v. Manson, 144 Ky. 634, 139 S. W. 860; Williams v. Johnson, 149 Ky. 409, 149 S. W. 821; Blalock v. Atwood, 154 Ky. 395, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 3, 157 S. W. 694.

In Williams v. Johnson, 149 Ky. 409, 149 S. W. 821, the facts are nearly analogous to those of the case at bar. It appears in that case that the city of London, having by proper authority converted a public road within its limits, upon which the appellants' lots fronted, into a macadamized street, and in doing so abandoned the use of part, but at no point more than the whole of the roadbed in front of the lot, the appellee, their grantor, by actions in ejectment against the appellants severally, sought to recover such part of the old roadbed as lay between their lot and the new street, upon the ground that its abandonment as a public highway entitled him to same. We held, however, that, as the deeds by which appellee conveyed the lots described them as fronting and abutting on the old road, and the street was substituted for the old road, its construction and establishment by the city operated to include the abandoned roadbed in appellants' lots, respectively, and extend the boundaries thereof to the edge of the street. In the opinion it is in part said: "It seems to be the universally recognized rule that the conveyance of land bordering upon a public highway conveys title to the center of the highway, subject to its use by the public, whether it is so expressed in the deed or not; and where a conveyance, or a bond to convey, designates the public highway [or street] as one of the boundaries of the tract, it will, in the absence of language showing a contrary intention, be construed as including the highway itself, to the center or middle thereof."

Under the doctrine announced, the appellee Waller & Company is clearly entitled to that part of Heilman street ordered closed; and the agreement of the city of Henderson to convey it to that company by deed, in exchange for the ground the latter deeded it for the change in the street, was unnecessary. However, appellants cannot complain that that question was determined in these cases, as it was raised by them.

Appellants' claim that their right to the continued use of that part of Heilman street adjudged to be closed, notwithstanding the change in the street, arises out of some sort of agreement alleged to have been made to that effect with the city of Henderson when the street was dedicated to the city, cannot prevail. The testimony of C. M. Bullett, president of the appellant Henderson Elevator Company, and that of the witness Higdon, constituting substantially the only evidence offered by appellants on this point, was too vague to show the definite making of any such agreement. On the other hand, such of the city authorities as testified denied the alleged agreement, or said they had no knowledge of it. Moreover, it was not expressed in the writing between appellants and the city of Henderson, and evidently could not have been communicated to appellants' able and painstaking attorney, by whom the writing was prepared, who, upon being interrogated about the matter on the trial, frankly admitted his want of recollection regarding it.

But, if such agreement had been established by the evidence, it could not have interfered with the right of the appellee Waller & Company to claim and take that part of the street ordered closed, which was and is fixed by the law because of its ownership of the abutting lots on either side thereof.

Appeal—right to complain—question raised by appellant.

We find no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed in each of the cases appealed.

NOTE.

The general question of reversion of title upon abandonment or vacation of public street or highway is treated in the annotation following PRALL v. BURCKHARTT, post, 1008. For cases which, like the reported case (HENDERSON ELEVATOR CO. v. HENDERSON, ante, 983), involved the question of reversion to the dedicator or adjoining owner, see subdivision III. of that annotation.

JOHNSON S. PRALL

v.

SAMUEL BURCKHARTT, JR., et al., Appts.Illinois Supreme Court — June 22, 1921.

(299 Ill. 19, 132 N. E. 280.)

Highway — vacation — vesting of title.

1. Under statutes vesting in the municipality the fee of streets shown on plats, and providing that upon vacation of them the lot immediately adjoining them shall extend to the center of the way vacated, the title, upon vacation of the streets, vests in the abutting owner.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1008.]

States — suit against government officials — right to maintain.

2. The immunity from suit of the United States does not extend to officers of the government holding for public purposes the possession of real estate which is claimed as his own by the plaintiff in the action.

[See 26 R. C. L. 1460.]

United States — right to question title to land held by it.

3. The right and title of the United States government to real estate held for public purposes may be determined in a suit by the alleged owner against the agents of the government who have possession of the property.

[See 26 R. C. L. 1460.]

Eminent domain — acquiring title to streets and alleys.

4. No title as against the former owner is acquired of streets and alleys on a plat by condemnation proceedings in which no mention is made of any right of such former owner in the streets, or award made for any interest therein.

Highway — dedication — vesting title in municipality — duration.

5. A statute providing that the execution and recording of a plat of real estate shall vest in the municipality the fee title to the streets and alleys shown on the plat vests such title only so long as they are devoted to public use.

— title — dedication.

6. Merely an easement passed to the municipality by dedication of the highway at common law, the fee remaining in the dedicator and passing by his conveyance of abutting lots.

[See 13 R. C. L. 31, 116, 126.]

Boundaries — effect of bounding on highway.

7. Bounding a grant on a highway carries title to the center.

[See 4 R. C. L. 78; see note in 2 A.L.R. 6.]

Real property — limiting fee upon fee.

8. The legislature may provide for a fee to be limited upon a fee by deed.

—power to change rules of conveyancing.

9. The legislature may alter or annul any of the common-law rules of conveyancing at pleasure, as well as the character and quality of the estates thereby created.

Constitutional law — provision that vacated highway shall vest in abutting owners — rights of dedicator.

10. One dedicating highways to the public by filing plats showing them located thereon is not unconstitutionally deprived of his property by a statutory provision that, upon vacation of the highway, the title shall vest in the abutting owner, where, under the statute, the dedicator parts with all his title by the act of dedication and vests it in the municipality.

Judgment — stare decisis — who can claim benefit of.

11. A dedicator of streets cannot, upon their vacation, claim any protection under the rule of stare decisis to his alleged rights to a reversion of the fee, from decisions rendered after his dedication was made.

Dedication — possibility of reverter — how far an estate.

12. The possibility of reverter in one who has dedicated the fee of highways to the public is not an estate within the protection of any constitutional limitation.

[See 23 R. C. L. 1101.]

Judgment — effect of stare decisis on constitutional question.

13. The rule of stare decisis will not prevent the court from reviewing a constitutional question, where the facts before it are slightly different from those in former decisions.

[See 7 R. C. L. 1002, 1003.]

—when rule not followed.

14. The rule of stare decisis should not be followed if the evils arising from adhering to the former decisions will be greater than would arise from a correct statement of the law.

[See 7 R. C. L. 1009.]

Constitutional law — impairing obligation of contract — change of decision.

15. A change of decision with respect to the constitutionality of a statute vesting in abutting owners the title to dedicated streets when vacated, rather than in the dedicator, does not unconstitutionally impair the obligation of a contract.

[See 6 R. C. L. 332.]

(Stone, Ch. J., and Cartwright and Dunn, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lake County (Edwards, J.) in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Charles F. Clyne, James R. Glass, and Myer Linker, for appellants:

Where the entire record in an action shows that the real party defendant is the United States, though not named as a defendant, the action is against the United States.

Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Kansas v. United States, 204 U. S. 331, 51 L. ed. 510, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 388; Louisiana v. McAdoo, 234 U. S. 627, 58 L. ed. 1506, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 938.

State courts have no jurisdiction in actions against the United States, nor can the United States be sued except by its own consent or by virtue of a United States statute.

United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; 13 A.L.R.—63.

Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 519, 37 L. ed. 263, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Land acquired by the United States under the laws of the states, for forts, arsenals, or other needful buildings, comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress.

Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 530, 29 L. ed. 266, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; Palmer v. Barrett, 162 U. S. 399, 40 L. ed. 1015, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

The statutes of Illinois in force at the time of the dedication by the plaintiff controlled and qualified the dedication.

Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Lynch v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 240 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 1034; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 32 L. ed. 491, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 134; Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U. S. 5, 57 L. ed. 709, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409.

Section 4, chap. 143, of the Illinois statute, did not take away any property from the plaintiff.

Hart v. Lake, 273 Ill. 60, 112 N. E. 286; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; North v. Graham, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189, 85 N. E. 267; Dees v. Chevronts, 240 Ill. 486, 88 N. E. 1011; Berwyn v. Berglund, 255 Ill. 498, 99 N. E. 705; Lyford v. Laconia, 75 N. H. 220, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 139 Am. St. Rep. 680, 72 Atl. 1085.

Where a party has no vested interests or rights in property he has no such rights which the legislature cannot abolish.

Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 137, 23 L. ed. 124; Henson v. Moore, 104 Ill. 403; McNeer v. McNeer, 142 Ill. 388, 19 L.R.A. 256, 32 N. E. 681; Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 283, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51; Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 477, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798.

It was not essential that the streets and alleys set forth in the condemnation petitions be described in the verdict or judgment, because the city of Fort Sheridan held the fee to these lands as trustee for the public.

Re Albers, 113 Mich. 640, 71 N. W. 1110; 1 Nichols, Em. Dom. § 182; Heffner v. Cass & Morgan Counties, 193 Ill. 439, 58 L.R.A. 353, 62 N. E. 201; Nahant v. United States, 69 L.R.A. 723, 70 C. C. A. 641, 136 Fed. 273; Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. 9; Re New York, 196 N. Y. 286, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 281, 89 N. E. 829; Re Rapid Transit R. Comrs. 197 N. Y. 81, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647, 90 N. E. 456, 18 Ann. Cas. 366.

The plaintiff is estopped by the judgment herein, even though the streets and alleys were not mentioned therein, if they were described in the petition for condemnation.

McGillis v. Willis, 39 Ill. App. 311; Bell v. Mattoon Waterworks & Reservoir Co. 163 Ill. App. 618; Godschalck v. Weber, 247 Ill. 269, 93 N. E. 241; Harvey v. Aurora & G. R. Co. 186 Ill. 283, 57 N. E. 857; Leopold v. Chicago, 150 Ill. 568, 37 N. E. 892; People ex rel. Smith v. Locklin, 273 Ill. 106, 112 N. E. 285.

Plaintiff is further estopped by reason of his acceptance of the award in the former condemnation proceeding.

2 Nichols, Em. Dom. § 475; Cape Girardeau & T. Bridge Terminal R. Co. v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. 215 Mo. 286, 114 S. W. 1084; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Kemper, 256 Mo. 279, 166 S. W. 291, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 815; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Second Street Improv. Co. 256 Mo. 386, 166 S. W. 296.

It is a presumption of law that every judgment condemning land will be deemed to include a full and final compensation for all damages incident to the taking.

Allen v. Haley, 169 Ill. 532, 48 N. E. 478; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Springfield & N. W. R. Co. 67 Ill. 142; Doyle v. Baughman, 24 Ill. App. 614; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 111 Ill. 363; Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. Alderman, 113 Ill. App. 29.

Private property in land is the right of user and disposition and dominion to the exclusion of all others.

Drainage Dist. v. Knox, 237 Ill. 148, 86 N. E. 636; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Weeks v. Grace, 194 Mass. 296, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1092, 80 N. E. 220, 10 Ann. Cas. 1077; United States v. Dunnington, 146 U. S. 338, 36 L. ed. 996, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79.

Title acquired by the appropriation of land without judicial proceeding has been held to be a "taking" of land. Such "taking" vests title in the United States, and creates an implied contract to pay just compensation.

United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 47 L. ed. 539, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 484, 50 L. ed. 280, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127; United States v. Cress, 243 U. S. 328, 61 L. ed. 753, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 154, 45 L. ed. 134, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Richards v. Washington Terminal Co. 233 U. S. 546, 58 L. ed. 1088, L.R.A.1915A, 887, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557; Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnp. Co. 234 Ill. 428, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1071, 84 N. E. 1049; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co. 115 Ill. 375, 56 Am. Rep. 173, 4 N. E. 246.

When property is "taken" by the United States government it is not necessary for payment to be made in advance of the "taking."

United States v. O'Neill, 198 Fed. 677; Cherokee Nation v. Southern

(299 Ill. 19, 132 N. E. 280.)

Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. ed. 295, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Williams v. Parker, 188 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 559, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Crozier v. Fried. Krupp Aktiengesellschaft, 224 U. S. 290, 56 L. ed. 771, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; United States v. Cress, 243 U. S. 316, 61 L. ed. 746, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380.

Messrs. Pringle & Terwilliger, for appellee:

A proper construction of chapter 143 in question requires the United States to purchase or condemn the interest of the owners of streets and alleys, as well as the interest of the owners of lots and tracts.

United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 519, 37 L. ed. 263, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; McConnell v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 344.

Where the title of an act is specific the act cannot depart therefrom, even though the matters covered by the act might have been included in a general title.

People ex rel. Stuckart v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 290 Ill. 327, 125 N. E. 310; People ex rel. Graff v. Institution of Protestant Deaconesses, 71 Ill. 229; Rouse v. Thompson, 228 Ill. 522, 81 N. E. 1109; Sutter v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. 284 Ill. 634, 120 N. E. 562; Galpin v. Chicago, 269 Ill. 27, L.R.A. 1917B, 176, 109 N. E. 713.

The legislature cannot, by direct legislative action, transfer the interest of a dedicator of a statutory plat.

Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. 67 Ill. 540; St. John v. Quitzow, 72 Ill. 334; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Helm v. Webster, 85 Ill. 116; Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26; Matthiessen & H. Zinc Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81; People v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 239 Ill. 42, 87 N. E. 946; Hill v. Kimball, 269 Ill. 398, 110 N. E. 18; Corbin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 285 Ill. 439, 120 N. E. 800; People ex rel. Burton v. Corn Products Ref. Co. 286 Ill. 226, 121 N. E. 574; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L.R.A. 184, 63 N. W. 267, 65 N. W. 649, 68 N. W. 458; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Chicago v. Wells, 236 Ill. 132, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 127 Am. St. Rep. 282, 86 N. E. 197; Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 290; Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L.R.A. 304, 26 Am. St. Rep. 464, 28 N. E. 1040; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 579, 18 L.R.A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 450, 15 L. ed. 719; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 Minn. 402, 31 N. W. 365.

The legislature has no power to divert property granted for a specified public use, to any other purpose, either public or private, inconsistent with the particular use.

Presbyterian Soc. v. Auburn & R. R. Co. 3 Hill, 569; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L.R.A. 184, 63 N. W. 267, 65 N. W. 649, 68 N. W. 458; Princeville v. Auten, 77 Ill. 325; Morrison v. Hinkson, 87 Ill. 587, 29 Am. Rep. 77; United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 2 Biss. 174, Fed. Cas. No. 15,437; Davis v. Nichols, 39 Ill. App. 610; Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; South Park Comrs. v. Ward, 248 Ill. 299, 93 N. E. 910, 21 Ann. Cas. 127; People ex rel. Branson v. Walsh, 96 Ill. 232, 36 Am. Rep. 135.

It is a rule of property in Illinois that the legislature cannot transfer a reversionary interest of the dedicator of a statutory plat to the abutting owner upon vacation of the plat. The doctrine of stare decisis requires that this rule should be adhered to.

Koch v. Sheppard, 223 Ill. 175, 79 N. E. 52; Fleming v. Ross, 225 Ill. 149, 80 N. E. 92, 8 Ann. Cas. 314; Braxon v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 493, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 163; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520; Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. 294, 18 L. ed. 38; Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50, 19 L. ed. 594; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Harmon v. Auditor, 123 Ill. 122, 5 Am. St. Rep. 502, 13 N. E. 161.

The government is estopped from claiming that the money deposited for the property described in the judgment was for other property than that described in the judgment.

Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Slee, 123 Ill. 57, 13 N. E. 222.

Were the government claims to be the owner of the land occupied by it and denies the plaintiff's title, there is no implied contract on which the plaintiff can maintain a suit against the government in the Federal courts, or otherwise.

Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 341, 25 L. ed. 1010; Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593, 37 L. ed. 862, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011; United States

v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 464, 47 L. ed. 546, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Johnson S. Prall, brought an ejectment suit in the circuit court of Lake county against the appellants, Samuel Burckhardt, Jr., and F. B. Carrithers, to recover possession of a number of pieces of land which originally comprised streets and alleys of a subdivision platted by the appellee, and, upon a trial by the court without a jury, there was a judgment for the appellee, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

Defendants filed a special appearance, alleging that they were not the owners of the property in question, but were in possession thereof as officers of the United States Army commanding at Ft. Sheridan, and that the land at Ft. Sheridan is occupied as a military post of the United States of America and is public property of the United States, and they thereupon moved to quash the summons. The motion was overruled, and the defendants afterward filed pleas alleging that they were commandant and adjutant, respectively, of the United States Army, occupying the premises as a military post, and that the suit was to all intents and purposes a suit against the United States, and therefore could not be maintained. The plaintiff replied, denying the ownership of the land by the United States, and upon a trial, judgment having been entered for the plaintiff, the defendants took a new trial under the statute, and by leave of court filed a plea of the general issue, and upon the second trial the judgment appealed from here was entered.

Except where Congress has so provided, the United States cannot be sued, but the States—suit against government officials—right to maintain.

exemption does not apply to officers and agents of the United States holding for public purposes the possession of property, when sued by a person claiming to be the owner. In such a case the right and title of the United States to the property may be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction and adjudged accordingly. In an ejectment proceeding involving the title to the Arlington estate, it was held in United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, that ejectment being in its essential character an action of trespass, and the defendant not being sued as an officer, but as an individual, the court was not ousted of jurisdiction because he asserted authority as an officer.

United States—right to question title to land held by it.

Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 519, 37 L. ed. 263, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418, was also an ejectment suit against Army officers, and it was decided that the action could be brought against them as soon as they entered into possession of the ground claimed by the plaintiff, and therefore their plea of the Statute of Limitations (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 83) was a good plea. The same doctrine was laid down by this court in McConnell v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 344, which was an action of ejectment in the circuit court of Cook county to recover possession of land on which old Ft. Dearborn was situated and where the title of the United States was in dispute. The circuit court of Lake county had jurisdiction in this cause.

The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, which was substantially as follows: June 21, 1889, the plaintiff owned in fee a tract of land which he subdivided into lots, blocks, streets, and alleys, and caused a plat of the subdivision to be recorded on June 25, 1889. He sold part of the lots, and he and all the other lot owners joined in a vacation of the plat and made and recorded another plat of the same subdivision later, in 1889. The streets and alleys on the plat were accepted by the city of Ft. Sheridan, in which the subdivision was located. The United States filed its amended petition in the United States district court for the northern district of Illinois on August 3, 1906, describing the several lots in the subdivision and the ownership of the same, and praying for the ascertainment of compensation to be paid for them. Most of the lots had been sold, but the plaintiff still owned some, and he and the other owners were made defendants, as was also the city of Ft. Sheridan, which it was alleged had an interest in the tract of land described in the petition, constituting the public streets and alleys, either as owner in trust for the public or as the owner of public easements in the same. There was no averment that the plaintiff had any right, title, interest, or estate in the streets or alleys, and no attempt to condemn the same or ascertain compensation therefor. There was a judgment fixing and awarding compensation for each one of the lots to the owner, and the compensation was paid, but there was no award of compensation, either to the city of Ft. Sheridan or to the plaintiff, for any right or interest in the streets and alleys. The city of Highwood, which had succeeded the city of Ft. Sheridan, on May 10, 1910, passed an ordinance vacating the streets and alleys constituting the land now in controversy. The defendants, as commandant and adjutant of the Ft. Sheridan military reservation, were in possession of the land when this suit was brought, and claimed title by the condemnation proceedings.

It is conceded by counsel that no right in the streets and alleys on said plat was acquired by virtue of the condemnation proceeding. The petition did not allege that the appellee here had any right, title, or interest, either in reversion or otherwise, in said streets and alleys, and no award of compensation was made to him for any interest.

The question whether or not the judgment of the trial court should be sustained depends very largely upon the validity of § 2 of chapter 145 of the Illinois Revised Statutes, in relation to the vacation of streets. That section provides that, when any street, alley, lane, or highway, or any part thereof, is vacated, the lot or tract of land immediately adjoining on either side shall extend to the center line of such street, alley, lane, or highway, or part thereof, so vacated, etc. Appellee platted the land here in question and filed the plat of the subdivision on December 23, 1889, under the provisions of chapter 109 of the Revised Statutes. The provisions of the Plat Act and the Vacation Act, heretofore referred to, were both then in force and must be construed in pari materia; and it would seem to follow that appellee, in making and recording the plat of 1889, must be held to have done so in contemplation not only of the Plat Act, but also of the Vacation Act. Section 3 of the Plat Act provides, as it did then, that the execution and recording of a plat shall be held to be a conveyance to the municipality, in fee simple, of the streets and alleys shown on the plat. This court, in construing that section, has held that it vested in the municipality not a fee-simple title absolute, but a qualified, base, or determinable fee, which may continue forever, but is determined by the vacation of the plat. The fee vests in the municipality so long, and only so long, as the land is devoted to the public use. Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 50; St. John v. Quitzow, 72 Ill. 334; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Helm v. Webster, 85 Ill. 116; Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26; Matthiessen & H. Zinc. Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81. The crux of the question here involved is whether, when a plat is vacated, the fee in the streets and alleys reverts to the dedicator or to the one who owns the adjoining land at the time of vacation.

At common law the dedication of a street or alley passed to the Highway—

dedication—vesting title in municipality—duration.

Eminent domain
—acquiring title to streets and alleys.

municipality merely an easement. The dedicator still continued to own the fee, subject to the easement. A deed of an abutting lot passed the title to the center of the street,—or included the entire street, as the case might be,—burdened, of course, with the easement. If the street was abandoned or vacated by the municipality, the abutting owner continued to hold his title to the center of the street just as he had held it before, but now freed from the easement. It seems to have been early considered by the legislature of this state that the public interests would be better subserved if a municipality were to have a more complete control over its streets and alleys than was possible where it had only an easement therein. Accordingly, as far back as 1833 (Rev. Laws 1833, p. 600) the legislature passed an act embodying substantially the same provisions as those of § 3 of the Plat Act, providing that the making and recording of a plat should be held to be a conveyance of the streets and alleys in fee to the municipality. Thereafter it was found that a new difficulty arose, that from time to time conditions changed, and that it might be desirable to vacate streets and alleys which had been dedicated by plat. The dedication and acceptance had vested a determinable fee in the streets and alleys in the municipality, and the question arose what was to become of the title to the land included in such streets and alleys when they were vacated. This problem had arisen in construing deeds. Frequently the calls in a deed ran to a road and then "along said road." When later the road was abandoned or vacated the scattered heirs of the grantor would lay claim to the road, and, as was noted in a dissenting opinion in Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484: "A bootless, almost objectionless, litigation shall spring up to vex and harass those who in good faith had supposed themselves secure from such embarrassment." This principle was favorably commented on by this court in Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301, where the court said (page 307): "His conveyance, by operation of law, carries the title to the center of the highway, as a part and parcel of the grant, if there be no words of limitation. The fee is his to grant, and the rule is founded on a presumption that prevails as to the intention of the grantor, as well as the policy of the law. No doubt the rule, in its practical operations, subserves the public good by preventing the existence of strips of land of no great value, formerly a part of the highway, but on the abandonment of which would induce profitless and vexatious litigation. 3 Kent, Com. 433."

To prevent the existence of such strips of land along highways, and to discourage this bootless and annoying litigation, the courts adopted a rule that, when a call in a deed goes to a monument, it shall be construed as going to the center of the monument; that is, a line which runs to a road was held to run to the center of the road, and the words "thence along said road" were held to mean "thence along the center of said road." Mindful, doubtless, of the litigation under such circumstances, the legislature in 1851 (Acts 1851, p. 112) passed an act relating to vacations, and later, in 1865 (Laws 1865, p. 130), passed the present Vacation Act, which, with certain modifications, has since remained in force. The Vacation Act was thus made as much a part of the statutory law relating to the making of plats and the devolution of the title of streets and alleys shown thereon as the Plat Act had been. The two acts were simply two parts of one and the same subject-matter. Both acts were necessary to express the entire legislative will in respect to the devolution of the title to the streets and alleys shown on the plat. The dedication.

—title—

Boundaries—effect of bounding on highway.

intention of the legislature manifested by these two statutes—the Plat Act and the Vacation Act—seems perfectly plain and simple. So long as the strip of ground designated as a street on a statutory plat remained a street, the determinable fee was to be vested in the municipality, but as soon as the street was vacated the title was to devolve in the same manner as it would have done if the plat were a common-law plat. In this way it was manifest that all controversies over abandoned and vacated streets would be eliminated. In Thomas v. Hunt, 134 Mo. 392, 32 L.R.A. 857, 35 S. W. 581, the court, in speaking of a statute with substantially the same provisions, said: "The statute is founded upon the same principle of public policy as the rule which, under other circumstances, vests in the abutting owners, respectively, the title to the center of the street." If both the Plat Act and the Vacation Act be construed in pari materia, all plats thereafter made must be construed under both acts; and the dedicator, by the making and recording of the plat in statutory form, grants to the municipality the title to the streets and alleys shown upon the plat, to have and to hold the same in fee so long as the same shall be used for streets and alleys, but upon condition that, in case any street or alley shall be vacated, then the title thereto shall pass, by way of a conditional limitation, to the then owners of the lots abutting thereon.

Highway—vacation—
vesting of title.

The legislature has the authority to provide by statute that a fee may be limited upon a fee by deed. The methods of conveyancing and the character and quality of the estates thereby created are matters which are entirely within the control of the legislature. This control is not circumscribed by any constitutional limitations, and there is nothing sacred about the rules of conveyancing which obtained at common law. The legislature may alter or annul any of those common-law rules at pleasure; and our legislature, in fact, has many times modified them. Thus at common law a deed to A without words of inheritance conveyed a life estate and left a reversion in the grantor, which, if not otherwise disposed of, descended to his heirs. Jones v. Bramblet, 2 Ill. 270; Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377; Lehndorf v. Cope, 122 Ill. 317, 13 N. E. 505. Section 13 of the Conveyance Act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 30) provides that words of inheritance shall no longer be necessary to convey a fee simple; that a deed without words of inheritance conveys a fee unless a less estate is limited by express words or by construction or operation of law. The constitutionality of this section of the Conveyance Act has never been questioned in the courts of this state, so far as we are advised.

Real property—limiting fee
upon fee.

At common law, also, a deed to two or more persons created a joint tenancy with the right of survivorship. Svenson v. Hanson, 289 Ill. 242, 124 N. E. 645. The Illinois statutes have changed this rule, and provided that such a deed should create a tenancy in common unless it was expressly declared in the deed that it was the intention to create a joint tenancy. Section 6 of the Conveyance Act has also changed the common law with reference to estates tail. The principle involved in these statutes in changing the common-law rule as to conveyances of property or real estate has never been held unconstitutional on the ground that it deprives an interested party of property without due process of law. See to same effect, Kales, Estates & Future Interests, 2d ed. § 293. By the same line of reasoning it would seem to follow that § 2 of the Vacation Act does not deprive the dedicator who made the plat of any constitutional rights in that regard. The principles involved in the construction of § 13 of the Conveyance Act would appear to be on all fours with those involved in the construction of § 2 of the Vacation Act. Both the Plat Act and the Vacation Act are necessary to express the legislative intention in respect to the devolution of the title to the streets and alleys shown on the plat. Under the provisions of these two acts the dedicatior, in making a plat in conformity with such provisions, parts with all of his title to the ways shown on the plat. He grants the title to the streets, alleys, and ways under the provisions of the Plat Act to the municipality, to have and to hold the same so long as the same shall be used for streets, alleys, and ways. Under the provisions of § 2 of the Vacation Act, in case the streets shall be vacated, then the title thereto passes, by way of a conditional limitation, to the then owner of the lots abutting thereon. Just as under § 13 of the Conveyance Act, upon the happening of the future event, the death of A, the reversion was made to pass to A's heirs or assigns, so here, upon the happening of the future event, to wit, the vacation of the streets and alleys, the title is made to pass to the owners of the abutting property. See the reasoning of this court in Roberts v. Dazey, 284 Ill. 241, 119 N. E. 910. In upholding the validity of a similar statute the supreme court of Missouri, in Thomas v. Hunt, supra, said (134 Mo. on page 402): "It is entirely competent for the legislature to prescribe the legal effect of voluntary dedications of streets and to prescribe the quantity of interest in the streets the dedicatior parts with as well as that taken by the public." Similar reasoning is used in discussing the Plat Act and the Vacation Act of this state in Kales on Estates & Future Interests, 2d ed. last paragraph of § 293. After the dedicatior has executed and recorded the plat in conformity with the statute, and there has been an acceptance, he has neither a reversion nor a possibility of reverter in the streets. He has completely disposed of all of his interest. When, then, the street is afterwards vacated, the dedicatior, having no interest of any kind therein, is not deprived of any property without due process of law. The proprietor, by reason of dedicating a part of the premises for streets, enhances the value of the lots to which such streets give access. His grantees pay the enhanced value, and the proprietor thereby receives a consideration not only for the precise amount of the land described in each lot, but also, in effect, for that embraced in the street upon which the lots abut. Having been once paid for the land embraced in a street, he ought not to be permitted, on vacation, to assert title thereto as against one who has paid him the consideration therefor. Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 25 Colo. 177, 53 Pac. 454. The same conclusion seems to have been reached in construing similar statutes in other jurisdictions. See Challiss v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Showalter, 57 Kan. 681, 47 Pac. 831; Day v. Schroeder, 46 Iowa, 546; Scudder v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 77, 75 N. W. 286; Re Public Road, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 771. As a matter of original construction, under a long line of decisions of this state on similar questions, beyond doubt this would be the fair, reasonable, equitable, and constitutional construction of the provisions of the Plat Act and § 2 of the Vacation Act. However, it is strenuously urged by counsel for appellee that this court has held unconstitutional the provisions of § 2 of the Vacation Act in various decisions. It therefore becomes necessary to consider whether those decisions have so held. We will refer to them briefly.

Constitutional law—provision that vacated highway shall vest in abutting owners—rights of dedicatior.

In Illinois & M. Canal v. Haven,

11 Ill. 554, and Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 50, there had been no vacation of the streets therein involved, and therefore no question arose as to the devolution of title to vacated streets. In both of these cases this court held that by the making and recording of the plats the legal title to the streets shown thereon became vested in the municipality. Where the title to the streets would go on vacation, the court in the Haven Case declined to discuss, and in the Hunter Case said, on page 54: "The title may, perhaps, revert to the former owners . . . on the abandonment of the . . . streets." This statement, of course, shows that the opinion did not decide the question involved, and that the statement as to where the title would "perhaps" go on the abandonment of the streets was dictum. Both of these decisions were decided long before the Vacation Act of 1865 was passed and with reference to two plats made in 1825 and 1835, respectively, where there had been no attempt shown to vacate the streets thereon.

In St. John v. Quitzow, 72 Ill. 334, the facts are somewhat obscurely stated in the opinion, but it would seem that, when Mrs. St. John conveyed lot 63 in question, "she expressly reserved the right in the deed to vacate the streets, which is equivalent to a reservation of all her title thereto." The street in question was vacated in 1869, and Quitzow claimed that under the Act of 1865, he as the owner of that part of lot 63 abutting thereon, was entitled to hold to the center of the street. The court held this untenable, apparently because Mrs. St. John in making her deed had expressly reserved the right to vacate the street, and this right was equivalent "to a reservation of all her title thereto," and, of course, a title so expressly reserved by her, the opinion held, "could not be divested by direct legislative action."

In Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301, the court construed the Vacation Act of 1851, which gave the municipality, upon vacation, the power to quitclaim the interest of the city in the vacated street to the abutting property owners, and held that the only authority given the city by the act was to release to the abutting owners the city's interest in the vacated street (an interest which, under the decisions of this court, ceased at the time of the vacation), and that the act did not purport to authorize the city to grant the fee in the street for private purposes. The court was undoubtedly right in so holding, but it is argued that the opinion in that case passed on the vital question in this case, and has been referred to with approval on this last point by this court in other decisions, so that, it is insisted, unless that decision is overruled, the decision of the trial court in this case must be sustained. As the reasoning in that case is considered conclusive on the point here involved, we will later take up and discuss the facts there involved and the reasoning of the court at some length. It may, however, be noted in this connection that it is assumed on page 306 of the opinion in that case that the decisions of this court in Hunter v. Middleton, and St. John v. Quitzow, supra, decided the exact question involved, and were therefore controlling. From what has already been said it is clear that this court never intended to decide this question in the Hunter Case, and that the facts were so different in the St. John Case that that opinion cannot be held conclusive on the question here before us.

In Helm v. Webster, 85 Ill. 116, one Holmes conveyed a strip of ground to the city of Quincy in 1855 to be used for a street, it being provided in the deed that in case the street was vacated the title should revert. Afterwards the legislature passed the Vacation Act of 1865. Subsequently the street was vacated, and this court held that the legislature could not by the subsequent enactment deprive the dedicant of his property. But in that case Holmes had expressly reserved the reversion in his deed of 1855 as a condition of the grant, and the court did not hold or intimate that § 2 of the Vacation Act was void when applied to a street dedicated by a plat made subsequent to 1865 and afterwards vacated. While the court in that case did quote with approval the doctrine laid down in Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra, we shall show hereafter that the reasoning in support of that doctrine as laid down in the Gebhardt Case was in a large measure, if not entirely, unsound.

In Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26, the dedication of a street was made in 1852, before the present Vacation Act was passed, and the street was vacated February 16, 1865. The decision, therefore, could have no bearing upon the construction of the Plat Act or the Vacation Act.

In Mathiessen & H. Zinc Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81, a controversy arose in respect to the rights in streets dedicated by a plat made by the commissioners of the Illinois and Michigan canal under the Acts of 1836 and 1837. This court there decided that the fee of such streets was in the municipality, and that the owners of lots abutting thereon had no right to tunnel under the streets for the purpose of mining coal or other minerals. There had been no vacation of any of the streets involved, and therefore the provisions of § 2 of the Vacation Act had nothing to do with the controversy before the court. This court, however, did say in that case something that was unnecessary for the decision there involved (117 Ill. on page 418): "The title vested in the town by the statutory dedication is absolutely for the purpose of the statutory trust until the street shall be subsequently vacated, when it will revert to the dedicator, or, it may be, in cases like the present, to the adjacent lot owner. Possibly at some time in the future there may be a reverter, but this is no reversion." It is plain from that statement that the court at that time did not consider that the former decisions of the court, including Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra, had positively decided that on the vacation of streets under the Vacation Act of 1865 or the Vacation Act now and then in force the title to the vacated property would necessarily revert to the dedicator.

In Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 124 Ill. 235, 15 N. E. 854, the streets under consideration were offered to be dedicated by a plat made and recorded in 1835, and were vacated by an ordinance passed in 1871. It appeared that the streets and alleys had never been accepted by the municipality, and this court held that the title thereto never became vested in the city, but the conveyance of the abutting lots carried to the grantees the title to the streets and alleys, and that upon vacation such title became perfect in the abutting owners, freed from the easement. The decision has no application to the question of the validity of § 2 as applied to plats made subsequent to 1865: First, because there seems to have been no acceptance of the streets in that case, and the title thereto never became vested in the city, and the plat never became a complete statutory plat; and, second, because the plat was made in 1835 before the passage of the Act of 1865.

In Hill v. Kimball, 269 Ill. 398, 110 N. E. 18, there had been a vacation by Highland Park of a large number of streets and alleys in a subdivision of that city. Hill filed a bill to enjoin the closing of the vacated streets and alleys on the ground that the vacation ordinance was void, and that, even if the vacation was valid, he had a special or private easement in the vacated ways, distinct from the public easement. It was stipulated that the plat was a statutory plat. It appeared that Kimball not only owned practically all of the abutting lots, but that he also had a deed to the vacated streets and alleys from the original subdivider, made subsequent to the vacation. The particular mode by which Kimball became vested with the title to the vacated streets was a matter of slight importance, and the validity of § 2 of the Vacation Act was not a controverted point in the case. The court in that case, without any discussion and without specifically referring to § 2, held that the fee of the vacated street in a statutory plat reverted to the dedicator, his heirs, or assigns, and that neither the legislature nor the city could divest him of such title, citing Gebhardt v. Reeves; Helm v. Webster; and Hyde Park v. Borden, supra. That last question was not involved in that case, and therefore the reference to the former decisions on the question here under consideration was necessarily dicta.

It is not argued by appellants that, if a street is granted to a municipality by deed on condition that if it is vacated the title shall revert to the grantor, or if other rights are reserved in the deed, the title thereto will pass to the abutting property owners notwithstanding such conditions or reservations. The Vacation Act was never intended to apply to such cases.

Appellee is not entitled to claim any protection by reason of any decision of this court rendered since his plat was executed and recorded,

Judgment—
stare decisis—who can claim benefit of.

in 1889. Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. 156 Ky. 628, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 293, 161 S. W. 570, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 565. In People v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 239 Ill. 42, 87 N. E. 946, the legislature in 1853 passed an act authorizing the city of Chicago to vacate certain streets in a subdivision laid out by the canal commissioners, and to convey by deed the interest which said city "may have had" in the streets vacated. The court there held the Act of 1853 valid on the ground that the state might dispose of its property in any way it saw fit.

That decision has no direct application to the facts in this case.

We have now referred to and stated briefly the holdings in the decisions of this court which seem to have a direct bearing on the issue here involved, and under which counsel insist this court is bound in this case, on the doctrine of stare decisis, to uphold the judgment of the lower court. Before passing on that vital question, we desire to refer at some length to the reasoning of this court in Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra.

Reeves's subdivision, which was involved in the Gebhardt Case, was recorded in June, 1856, and certain alleys and streets therein were vacated by an ordinance passed by the city of Chicago in August, 1864. The Vacation Act of 1851, which was in force at the date of this vacation ordinance passed in 1864, provided that upon the vacation of a street the corporate authorities of the city shall have power "to convey, by quitclaim deed, all interest which the city may have had in the street or part of street so vacated, to the owner or owners of lots and lands next to and adjoining the same." Laws of 1851, p. 112. Assuming for the sake of argument that the plat in that case was a statutory plat, upon the recording of the plat and acceptance of the streets and alleys by the city, a base or determinable fee to the streets and alleys became vested in the city. Upon the vacation of the streets and alleys in question in the Gebhardt Case the title of the city thereto, under the Vacation Act of 1851, ceased, and upon that vacation the city was not empowered to convey the fee to the streets and alleys vacated, but was authorized by said act only to convey by quitclaim deed all interest which the city "may have had" in the streets and alleys vacated. By the terms of the act, upon vacation the title of the city to the vacated streets and alleys absolutely determined, and, even if the city made a quitclaim deed conveying the streets and alleys to the abutting lot owners, the determinable quality of the title would follow the title into the hands of the grantees. Lee v. Roberson, 297 Ill. 321, 130 N. E. 774. The court in its opinion in the Gebhardt Case therefore correctly interpreted the Act of 1851 and correctly applied the law and held that the act did not give to the city the right to convey the fee. The court also held that under the provisions of the Plat Act the title to the streets vested in the municipality a base or determinable fee, and the title thus vested may endure forever, or, as said in the opinion (page 306): "Until the municipality shall elect to abandon the use of the streets and alleys, the former owner has no interest whatever in the land embraced within them, —absolutely nothing, within any definition of estate or property, that he could sell and convey. It had all passed to the corporation by the former grant, subject only to the possibility it might revert to him, if the contingency ever happened the municipality should ever abandon the trust." Thereafter, after the execution and recording of a statutory plat and acceptance of the streets and alleys by the municipality, nothing remained in the dedicator but a mere possibility of reverter. This possibility of reverter is not an estate, but is only the possibility to have an estate at a future time. Hart v. Lake, 273 Ill. 60, 112 N. E. 286. It is inalienable, not assignable, not subject to be sold on execution, and not devisable unless made so by statute. North v. Graham, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189, 85 N. E. 267; 21 C. J. 1018. "It is well settled that a mere expectation of property in the future is not a vested right, and may be changed, modified, or abolished by legislative action." McNeer v. McNeer, 142 Ill. 388, 19 L.R.A. 256, 32 N. E. 681. In the McNeer Case the court was considering the estate of tenancy by the curtesy initiated as it had existed under the Married Women's Act of 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 143). The court held that until curtesy became consummate by the death of the wife it was a mere expectancy, and not an estate, and that therefore the Act of 1874 (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1919, chap. 41, § 1), which abolished curtesy, was constitutional when applied to curtesy initiated under the Act of 1861. The same doctrine laid down in the McNeer Case was approved in Butterfield v. Sawyer, 187 Ill. 598, 52 L.R.A. 75, 79 Am. St. Rep. 246, 58 N. E. 602, and is in accord with the reasoning of this court in Henson v. Moore, 104 Ill. 403, where the court held that the inchoate right of dower was a mere expectancy, and therefore not a vested interest.

It seems clear, therefore, that the possibility of reverter in the streets which remains in a dedicator after the making of a statutory plat, even if the reasoning in Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301, should control, is not an estate, and is not protected by any constitutional limitation; that it is perfectly competent for the legislature to abolish this possibility of reverter, or to change the devolution of title upon the happening of the future contingency in any way it may see fit. So it would seem that the reasoning in the Gebhardt Case, that the interest the original dedicator had in the street after the vacation of the plat could not be constitutionally divested and transferred to the adjacent landowners by direct legislative action, was not in harmony with the reasoning of this court as to the interest which the original dedicator had in the land and the right of the legislature to divest it.

The reasoning of the court in Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra, has been also greatly weakened in other respects. The court assumed that the statutory plat in that case was binding even though it had been made only in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.

Dedication—possibility of reverter—how far an estate.

The plat there appears to have been made by a surveyor who was not a certified county surveyor, and the court held that such a plat was a good statutory plat. This part of the decision was later in terms overruled in Auburn v. Goodwin, 128 Ill. 57, 21 N. E. 212, the court basing its conclusion upon First Evangelical Church v. Walsh, 57 Ill. 363, 11 Am. Rep. 21, and Thomas v. Eckard, 88 Ill. 593. The doctrine of the Auburn Case was approved by this court in Russell v. Lincoln, 200 Ill. 511, 65 N. E. 1088, and the doctrine of the Gebhardt Case that when a plat has been executed, certified, acknowledged, and recorded in substantial compliance with the statute, the title to the streets and alleys designated thereon vests in the municipality in trust for the public, has been substantially repudiated in every subsequent case involving the question as to the statutory requirements that must necessarily be followed in order to uphold a statutory plat. See Ryerson v. Chicago, 247 Ill. 185, 93 N. E. 162. Beyond question, under repeated decisions of this court, the holding of the court in the Gebhardt Case that the plat was a valid statutory plat was a mistaken conclusion, and it necessarily follows, therefore, that the court was not required to pass upon the question whether the title to the streets and alleys should go to the original dedicator or to adjacent lot owners. If the court had held that the plat was not a statutory plat, in accordance with the now settled rule of this court, because not having been made by the proper authority, the crucial question would have been disposed of, and all that was said thereafter by the court could be considered dictum and not necessary to the decision of the case, and should now only be followed by the court so far as the reasoning was sound.

The correctness of the holding of this court in Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra, as to the rights of the original dedicator of the streets and alleys in the plat where the streets are vacated either under the Act of 1865 or 1874 has been questioned, and has not always received the approval of law writers on the question. In Kales on Estates & Future Interests, 2d ed. § 293, there is a quotation from the Gebhardt Case as follows (page 308): "The fee plaintiff had in the street and alley could not be divested and transferred to the adjacent lot owners by direct legislative action; nor could authority be given to any agency to do it for private purposes." The author then comments: "The court speaks of this legislation as if it amounted to taking the property of one man and transferring it to another without compensation. Such language was intelligible in St. John v. Quitzow, where the dedication had been made prior to 1851, but in Gebhardt v. Reeves, where the court recognizes that the dedication was made after the law of 1851 went into force, such language is unintelligible. If applied in the slightest degree to other legislation, it would require some curious results. Why, for instance, would it not make a statutory dedication invalid to pass a fee simple to the municipality? At common law the dedication gives the public only an easement over the land. Why, then, does not the statute deprive the dedicator of his property and transfer it to another without compensation? If the legislature may to a limited extent take the fee out of the dedicator upon a statutory dedication, why may it not take it out of him to the whole extent? And in that case of what consequence is it to him what becomes of it? If the legislature has no power to give a certain legal effect to the dedication, how has it any power to give a particular legal effect to what, under the statute donis, would be an estate tail?"

What has heretofore been said with reference to Gebhardt v. Reeves, supra, and the other decisions where the question here under consideration was directly or indirectly referred to, would seem to show quite clearly that the constitutionality of the Vacation Act with reference to a plat made after the acts in question were in force was not decided by the court in any of those decisions, or, if decided, was absolutely unnecessary for the decision of the questions involved. It may be frankly admitted that there are expressions in some of the decisions relied upon that lend support to counsel's position that the court has heretofore intimated that § 2 of the Vacation Act is unconstitutional, but in our judgment this is the first time that the constitutionality of this act has been squarely in the record and necessary for the consideration and decision of this court, and we are confronted with the proposition whether we should follow what is dictum in those cases in construing § 2 of the Vacation Act, and thus follow an erroneous construction of said act. This court has said: "It is highly important that the decisions of the court affecting the right to property should be uniform and stable; but cases will sometimes occur in the decision of the most enlightened judges where the settled rules and reasons of the law have been departed from, and in such cases it becomes the duty of the court, before the error has been sanctioned by repeated decisions, to embrace the first opportunity to pronounce the law as it is." Fraink v. Darst, 14 Ill. 304, 58 Am. Dec. 575. The McNeer Case, supra, is a case particularly in point in support of the reasoning just given. In that case the court overruled the decision of Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362, which had been followed in Rose v. Sanderson, 38 Ill. 247, and Steele v. Gellatly, 41 Ill. 39, notwithstanding the decision in the Russell Case had stood unchallenged for twenty-eight years, and notwithstanding the opinion in that case squarely decided the question involved that inchoate dower, although only an expectancy, was as completely beyond legislative control as an estate. In Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Smith, 62

Ill. 268, 14 Am. Rep. 99, the court discussed at some length the doctrine of stare decisis and authorities in other jurisdictions that bear on that subject where a constitutional question is involved, and from that discussion we think it may be fairly said that the conclusion of the court was that the rule of stare decisis will not prevent the courts from reviewing a constitutional question where the facts in the instant case are slightly different from those in former decisions. In Arnold v. Knoxville, 115 Tenn. 195, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 837, 90 S. W. 469, 5 Ann. Cas. 881, the court considered the same doctrine as to the necessity of recognizing to the fullest extent and adhering to that doctrine in passing upon and construing the provisions of the organic law, but stated that when it is clear that the court has made a mistake it "will not decline to correct it, even though it may have been reasserted and acquiesced in for a long number of years." In Paul v. Davis, 100 Ind. 422, the court said (page 427): "The law is a science of principles, and this cannot be true if a departure from principle can be perpetuated by a persistence in error." In The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 456, 13 L. ed. 1058, 1064, the court said: "It is the decision in the case of Thomas Jefferson which mainly embarrasses the court in the present inquiry. We are sensible of the great weight to which it is entitled. But at the same time we are convinced that, if we follow it we follow an erroneous decision into which the court fell when the great importance of the question as it now presents itself could not be foreseen, and the subject did not, therefore, receive that deliberate consideration which at this time would have been given to it by the eminent men who presided here when the case was decided." See also on this same subject Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809, 14 Am. Neg. Cas. 167,

Judgment—effect of stare decisis on constitutional question.

and Imperial Securities Co. v. Morris, 57 Colo. 194, 141 Pac. 1160.

Counsel for appellee argue in this connection that, if § 2 of the Vacation Act is now held valid, it will cause great confusion in titles. For a long period of years this court has held with consistent rigor that a plat, unless made and recorded in strict conformity with the statute, was not a statutory plat. Ryerson v. Chicago, supra. It is recognized by all those who have had any experience in the matter that usually vacations of plats are made at the instance of abutting property owners, and that before carrying through such vacation proceedings they will ascertain with some care whether or not the original dedicator has any interest in the title, and if there be any question on that point and they cannot secure quitclaim deeds from the dedicator or his heirs, they will establish the title to the property under the streets and alleys, before vacating them, by appropriate court proceedings. It would hardly seem, therefore, that the laying down of the correct rule as to the proper construction of the Plat Act and the Vacation Act would cause any great confusion or much litigation as to the question of titles to the vacated strips. While it may, perhaps, be fairly said that former decisions of this court have cast doubt upon the validity of § 2 of the Vacation Act, it would seem clear from the previous discussion in this opinion that this court has never squarely decided that question where the constitutionality of the act was necessary for decision of the case. Where the error of a previous decision is recognized, the question whether or not the rule of stare decisis shall be followed becomes a simple choice between relative evils. The rule should be adhered to unless it appears that the principle established must be productive of greater mischief to the community than can possibly ensue from not following previous decisions on the subject. 7 R. C. L. 1009. The rule of stare decisis is founded largely on considerations of expediency and sound principles of public policy, it being indispensable to the due administration of justice, especially by a court of last resort, that a question once deliberately examined and decided should be considered as settled and closed to further argument, and the courts are slow to interfere with the principle announced by the decision, and it may be upheld even though they would decide otherwise were the question a new one. 15 C. J. 918. In view of what has already been said, we can reach no other conclusion than that the evils arising from adhering to any former statements in the opinions as to the unconstitutionality of § 2 of the Vacation Act will be greater than would arise hereafter by giving a correct construction to that act.

The suggestion seems also to be made that a change of judicial decision as to the construction or validity of a statute now is an impairment of the obligation of a contract within the meaning of the Federal Constitution. We do not think that question is involved in this case. Moreover, "a judicial decision changing the settled construction of a statute as declared by the highest court of the state is regarded by some authorities as equivalent to a change in the statute itself, and therefore as a law impairing the obligation of contracts made in reliance on the previous construction. This view, however, after a good deal of confusion in the decisions, has been finally repudiated by the United States Supreme Court, and the rule has been established that even a decision of the highest court of a state overruling a previous decision construing a statute and declaring void a contract made in reliance on the previous decision does not constitute a law impairing the obligation of contracts. Cases of the United States Supreme Court in apparent conflict with this view are explained on the theory that they were cases originating in the Federal courts, and, jurisdiction having been acquired on other grounds, the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its co-ordinate jurisdiction to construe the state law, chose to follow the earlier rather than the later decisions of the state courts as the correct exposition of the law." 12 C. J. 990. This question has been decided in accordance with the doctrine thus laid down in Corpus Juris, in National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Braham, 193 U. S. 635, 48 L. ed. 823, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532.

—when rule not followed.

Constitutional law—impairing obligation of contract—change of decision.

In view of our conclusion that § 2 of the Vacation Act is valid and must be construed in pari materia with the Plat Act, under which this plat was made and dedicated by appellee, and that § 2 of the Vacation Act is not unconstitutional, the conclusion follows that the circuit court wrongly entered judgment in this case in favor of appellee.

The judgment of the Circuit Court will therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in harmony with the views herein expressed.

Stone, Ch. J., and Cartwright and Dunn, JJ., dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied October 11, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Reversion of title upon abandonment or vacation of public street or highway.

- I. Scope and introduction, 1008.
- II. Reversion to municipality, 1009.
- III. Reversion as between dedicator and adjoining owner:
 - a. In general, 1010.
 - b. As affected by description in conveyance of adjoining property:

III. b—continued.

- 1. Description by plat:
 - (a) Generally, 1013.
 - (b) Under statutes vesting fee in municipality in trust, 1014.
- 2. Bounding land conveyed by street, etc., 1017.

IV. Express statutory regulation, 1020.

I. Scope and introduction.

The purpose of the present annotation is to cover the general concrete question as to whom, i. e., whether to the original owner, to the abutting owner, or to the municipality, the title to the land in a street or highway reverts upon the discontinuance, abandonment or vacation of the public use therein. Broadly speaking, the reversion is to the owner of the fee, so that, from a practical point of view, the important question is, In whom is the absolute fee to the way at the time of the vacation thereof? The latter question, dealing, as it does, with boundaries, etc., is not, on its facts, one which is distinctive to cases dealing with reversion of land in streets and highways, but upon examination of the case it appears that the courts have in a great measure looked to cases involving the vacation of public ways for support for their conclusions, so that, after all, the cases passing upon the right of reversion of vacated ways form a somewhat distinctive class. In view of this seeming tendency of the courts to rely to some considerable extent, at least, upon decisions which have involved facts similar to those under consideration, and of the fact that the cases themselves are very complex, little more than division of the cases into general groups has been attempted. And as a matter of fact any classification is to a considerable degree unsatisfactory in that it separates in some instances rather closely related cases. In consequence the reader, if he is looking for specific cases which have involved facts similar to those in his own case, is advised to make a more extended examination of the annotation than ordinarily would be necessary.

II. Reversion to municipality.

Under the civil law where the title to all roads and highways remained in the sovereignty, the rule was that upon abandonment the abutting owner could not claim the title to the middle, even as against one who entered the same as vacant public domain. Mitchell v. Bass (1870) 33 Tex. 258.

And the general rule is to the effect that where the absolute and unqualified fee is in the municipality, it divests the original owner of his entire interest, so that upon discontinuance of the way as such the title does not revert to the grantor, but remains in the municipality unaffected by the vacation. Avery v. United States (1900) 44 C. C. A. 161, 104 Fed. 711; Krueger v. Ramsey (1919) 188 Iowa, 861, 175 N. W. 1 (holding that where a city obtained an absolute title to a street by deed, it could, on vacation of the street, deed the land to an abutting owner); Mitchell v. Einstein (1905) 105 App. Div. 413, 94 N. Y. Supp. 210, reversing (1904) 42 Misc. 358, 86 N. Y. Supp. 759 (holding that where the city by deed acquired the fee to a street, the legislature could, upon vacating the same, add it to the abutting lands); Huber v. Gorg (1918) 181 App. Div. 369, 168 N. Y. Supp. 834 (holding that upon vacation of the street the municipality retains title to the fee; but that it should be released to the adjoining owners); Knight v. Thomas (1909) 35 Utah, 470, 101 Pac. 383. And see Burbach v. Schweinler (1882) 56 Wis. 386, 14 N. W. 449; also Jones v. Tuckersmith (1917) 45 Ont. L. Rep. 67, 47 D. L. R. 684, which reversed (1915) 33 Ont. L. Rep. 634, 23 D. L. R. 569.

And where the fee is in the city by virtue of the fact that it was laid out by the government on government lands and subsequently passed to the city under its charter, it has been held that the title does not revert or pass to the abutting owners by the mere vacating of the way. Pooler v. Sammet (1909) 180 App. Div. 650, 115 N. Y. Supp. 579. This case involved the old 18 A.L.R.—64.

Harlem road, which was laid out by the Dutch, and which thereafter passed to the British Crown and subsequently to the city of New York by the Dongan Charter.

And where a city, by condemning and appropriating land for a street, acquires the fee thereto, it has been held that upon vacating the same it could pass the fee to the abutting owners as against the claims of the successors in title of the prior owners of the fee to the street. Mott v. Ene (1905) 181 N. Y. 346, 74 N. E. 229, reversing (1904) 97 App. Div. 580, 90 N. Y. Supp. 608 (holding that the city of New York, by virtue of proceedings under Laws 1847, chap. 203, acquired the fee to certain parts of the Bloomingdale road so that, upon abandonment thereof, it could incorporate the same with the adjoining property).

And under statutes providing that the platting of a town vest the title of all streets in the town, it has been held that vacation of a street leaves the title in the municipality as against the original dedicator or his grantees. Pettingill v. Devin (1872) 35 Iowa, 344; Lake City v. Fulkerson (1904) 122 Iowa, 569, 98 N. W. 376; Harrington v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1905) 126 Iowa, 388, 102 N. W. 139 (holding that the city could dispose of the vacated street for railroad purposes); Tomlin v. Cedar Rapids & I. C. R. & Light Co. (1909) 141 Iowa, 599, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 530, 120 N. W. 93 (holding that the city could convey the vacated lands to the state for university purposes); Kenwood Park v. Leonard (1916) 177 Iowa, 337, 158 N. W. 655 (holding that Iowa Code 1897, §§ 914-932, related only to cities and incorporated towns, and not to unincorporated villages or town sites); Lindsay v. Omaha (1890) 30 Neb. 512, 27 Am. St. Rep. 415, 46 N. W. 627 (applying a statute (Comp. Stat. chap. 14, §§ 104, 105) which provided that the recording of a plat is equivalent to a deed in fee simple of such portions as are set apart for public streets).

This rule, however, is subject to the proviso that the municipality has accepted or shown an intention to accept the dedication, at least, where the statute, as in Iowa, requires an acceptance. Brown v. Taber (1897) 103 Iowa, 1, 72 N. W. 416 (holding that the title remained in the dedicator where the street was vacated before acceptance thereof by the municipality); Kenwood Park v. Leonard (1916) 177 Iowa, 337, 158 N. W. 655.

And in Nebraska it has been held that title to platted streets which have never been accepted by the municipality or used as streets does not pass to the municipality, but reverts to the adjoining owners, where they vacate the same under a statute providing that the proprietors who have filed a plat may vacate the same before the sale of any lots therein, or by having the owners of sold lots join therein, and may inclose the same to the adjoining lots in equal proportion, which vacation "shall divest all public rights in the streets . . . laid out or described in the plat," notwithstanding the statute also provides the original filing of the plat "is equivalent to a deed in fee simple" to the municipality of the streets laid out thereon. Hart v. Ainsworth (1911) 89 Neb. 418, 131 N. W. 816 (holding that there is a distinction between mere "paper" streets and streets which have actually become such by municipal acceptance or actual user); Johnson v. Bushman (1915) 98 Neb. 236, 152 N. W. 403 (decision in preceding case re-examined and approved and held applicable to and decisive of the case under consideration). In Pettingill v. Devin (Iowa) supra, in holding that the title to a street did not, upon vacation, revert to the dedicator, but remained in the municipality, the court said: "The position of appellant [dedicator] is that, whenever this vacation is effected, the land vacated reverts. Such a doctrine would be fraught with very serious consequences. It is impossible to anticipate the extent to which cities might be thereby fettered and impeded, and their material prosperity impaired. If the interests of a city demand, or would be promoted by, an alteration or vacation of a street, and the adjoining proprietors do not object, or are fully compensated, what good reason is there why the vacation or change should not be made? None occurs to us. Why should every attempt at change of the location of a street, no matter how important to the interests of a city, or how beneficial to all the property owners in any way affected, be attended by a forfeiture of all right in or control over the portion vacated by the change? The proper rule here is, as in the case before named, to leave the streets under the control of the city authorities, subject to the right of those interested to be compensated in damages, or to control their action by injunction. And, perhaps, also saving to the dedicator the right to enforce, in a court of equity, the use of the dedication, for the purposes contemplated in the grant."

For cases which hold that the title reverts to either the dedicator or the adjoining owner, notwithstanding the fee title to the street or highway was in the municipality, see the following subdivision of this annotation.

III. Reversion as between dedicator and adjoining owner.

a. In general.

Generally speaking, the absolute title to land comprising a vacated street, which consisted of a mere easement or servitude, reverts to the owner of the fee, whether he be the abutting owner or the adjoining owner. See Steenerson v. Fontaine (1908) 106 Minn. 225, 119 N. W. 400; Blain v. Staab (1901) 10 N. M. 743, 65 Pac. 177; and Jackson v. Hathaway (1818) 15 Johns (N. Y.) 447, 8 Am. Dec. 263.

Consequently, where a mere easement of use as a public highway is taken or granted so that the fee of the soil remains in the original owner, who retains the title to and possession of the adjoining lands, vacation or discontinuance of the highway as such restores exclusive possession thereof to such owner.

United States.—Barclay v. Howell (1832) 6 Pet. 498, 8 L. ed. 477; Harris v. Elliott (1836) 10 Pet. 25, 9 L. ed. 333.

Illinois.—See Waller v. River Forest (1913) 259 Ill. 223, 102 N. E. 290.

Iowa. — Kenwood Park v. Leonard (1916) 177 Iowa, 337, 158 N. W. 655.

Kentucky.—West Covington v. Freking (1871) 8 Bush, 121; Halley v. Scott County Fiscal Ct. (1904) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1471, 78 S. W. 149.

Massachusetts. — See Emmonds v. Smith (1797) 5 Dane, Abr. 567, as set out in 10 Decem. Dig. p. 156.

Minnesota. — White v. Jefferson (1910) 110 Minn. 276, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 778, 124 N. W. 373, 641, 125 N. W. 262.

Nevada.—Shearer v. Reno (1913) 36 Nev. 443, 136 Pac. 705 (at least, as against an intruder who has settled thereon and is claiming title thereto).

And, of course, the original owner may expressly reserve the fee to the street so that it will revert to him upon vacation thereof. Helm v. Webster (1877) 85 Ill. 116; Plumer v. Johnston (1886) 68 Mich. 165, 29 N. W. 687; Brown v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1909) 36 Utah, 257, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 86, 102 Pac. 86. And see Knight v. Thomas (1909) 35 Utah, 470, 101 Pac. 383, and Sowadzki v. Salt Lake County (1909) 36 Utah, 127, 104 Pac. 111.

And it has been held that the reservation by the dedicant in a deed of a lot abutting on a dedicated street, of the right to vacate the street, is equivalent to a reservation of all his title thereto, so that, upon vacation of the street, the title will revert to such original owner instead of to the abutting owner. St. John v. Quitzow (1874) 72 Ill. 334.

As between the original and the abutting owner the decided weight of authority is to the effect that, in the absence of statutory disposition, abandonment or vacation of a public street vests the absolute possession and title in the adjoining owner, and not in the original owner; at least, unless the latter is the abutting owner at the time of the vacation or has expressly reserved the right of reversion upon vacation.

Arkansas. — Beebe v. Little Rock (1900) 68 Ark. 39, 56 S. W. 791; Dickinson v. Arkansas City Improv. Co. (1906) 77 Ark. 570, 113 Am. St. Rep. 170, 92 S. W. 21; Matthews v. Blood- worth (1914) 111 Ark. 545, 165 S. W. 263.

Colorado.—Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1898) 25 Colo. 177, 53 Pac. 454; Overland Mach. Co. v. Alpenfels (1902) 30 Colo. 163, 69 Pac. 574; Bothwell v. Denver Union Stockyards Co. (1907) 39 Colo. 221, 90 Pac. 1127.

Connecticut — Benham v. Potter (1884) 52 Conn. 248.

Florida.—Robbins v. White (1906) 52 Fla. 613, 42 So. 841; Smith v. Horn (1915) 70 Fla. 484, 70 So. 435.

Georgia. — Bayard v. Hargrove (1872) 45 Ga. 342; Cincinnati & G. R. Co. v. Nims (1883) 71 Ga. 240; Harrison v. Augusta Factory (1884) 73 Ga. 447; Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson (1904) 121 Ga. 399, 104 Am. St. Rep. 156, 49 S. E. 312, 2 Ann. Cas. 83; Adair v. Spellman Seminary (1913) 13 Ga. App. 600, 79 S. E. 589.

Illinois. — Thomsen v. McCormick (1891) 136 Ill. 135, 26 N. E. 373; Sullivan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1911) 251 Ill. 108, 95 N. E. 1081 (both of these cases hold that such is the rule where there had been a common-law dedication). And see Lockwood & S. Co. v. Chicago (1917) 279 Ill. 445, 117 N. E. 81; People ex rel. Canal Comrs. v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. (1910) 244 Ill. 166, 91 N. E. 48, error dismissed for want of jurisdiction in (1914) 235 U. S. 689, 59 L. ed. 427, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; and PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992.

Indiana.—Jose v. Hunter (1913) 60 Ind. App. 569, 103 N. E. 392, reversing on other grounds on rehearing (1913) — Ind. App. —, 101 N. E. 665, and rehearing denied in (1914) 60 Ind. 589, 103 N. E. 852; Brackney v. Boyd (1919) — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 238, denying rehearing of (1919) — Ind. App. —, 123 N. E. 695. And see Decker v. Evansville Suburban & N. R. Co. (1893) 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349.

Iowa. — Kitzman v. Greenhalgh (1914) 164 Iowa, 166, 145 N. W. 505.

Kentucky.—West Covington v. Freking (1871) 8 Bush, 121; Bright v. Palmer (1898) 20 Ky. L. Rep. 771, 47 S. W. 590; HENDERSON ELEVATOR Co. v. HENDERSON (reported herewith) ante, 983.

Michigan. — Michigan C. R. Co. v. Miller (1912) 172 Mich. 201, 137 N. W. 555.

Missouri. — See Second Street Improv. Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co. (1914) 255 Mo. 519, 164 S. W. 515.

New York.—Re John Street (1839) 19 Wend. 659; Wallace v. Fee (1872) 50 N. Y. 694; Wheeler v. Clark (1874) 58 N. Y. 267; Haberman v. Baker (1891) 128 N. Y. 253, 13 L.R.A. 611, 28 N. E. 370; Van Amringe v. Barnett (1861) 8 Bosw. 357.

Ohio. — Stephens v. Taylor (1894) 51 Ohio St. 593, decided on the authority of Stevens v. Shannon (1892) 6 Ohio C. C. 142; Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Beatty (1901) 65 Ohio St. 264, 87 Am. St. Rep. 600, 62 N. E. 341; Hamilton, G. & C. Traction Co. v. Parish (1902) 67 Ohio St. 181, 60 L.R.A. 531, 65 N. E. 1011.

Pennsylvania. — Paul v. Carver (1855) 24 Pa. 211, 64 Am. Dec. 649, on subsequent appeal in (1856) 26 Pa. 223, 67 Am. Dec. 413; Cox v. Freedley (1859) 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584; Ball v. Ball (1850) 4 Clark, 424, 1 Phila. 36, 7 Phila. Leg. Int. 26; Barnes v. Philadelphia, N. & N. Y. R. Co. (1905) 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 84. See Black v. Pittsburgh & B. Street R. Co. (1907) 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 416.

Rhode Island. — Healey v. Babbitt (1884) 14 R. I. 533.

Tennessee.—State ex rel. Beckham v. Taylor (1901) 107 Tenn. 455, 64 S. W. 766.

Texas.—Mitchell v. Bass (1862) 26 Tex. 372 (common-law rule); Day v. Chambers (1884) 62 Tex. 190; American v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 182 S. W. 54. And see Houston v. Bammel (1909) 53 Tex. Civ. App. 336, 115 S. W. 661.

Utah.—See Brown v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1909) 36 Utah, 257, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 86, 102 Pac. 86.

Washington. — See Bradley v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. (1914) 79 Wash. 455, L.R.A. 1917C, 225, 140 Pac. 688.

Wisconsin. — Kimball v. Kenosha (1855) 4 Wis. 321; Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1864) 18 Wis. 35, 86 Am. Dec. 743; Burbach v. Schweinler (1882) 56 Wis. 386, 14 N. W. 449.

Canada. — Cormier v. Vaillant (1913) Rap. Jud. Quebec 24 B. R. 161.

In Stevens v. Shannon (1892) 6 Ohio C. C. 142, supra, the court discussed the necessity for the rule as follows: "Vacation of the streets and alleys does not affect the rights of the adjacent proprietor, or rehabilitate the original owner with the title to the lands included therein. If it did it would follow that upon the vacation of a street the original proprietor would have the right to take possession thereof, fence it in, cultivate crops thereon, or make any other use of it which an owner in fee simple may lawfully make of real estate, and the abutting owners would have no remedy except to incur the expense and trouble of procuring the establishment of new streets; and this, notwithstanding they had purchased their lots upon the faith of their right to have the streets kept open for their benefit. Such is certainly not the law. Convenience and necessity, if no other consideration, require that where highways are vacated the title thereto shall vest in the abutters. Vacation is an abandonment of the rights of the public to have and use the streets and alleys as public highways, but not a relinquishment of the rights of abutting owners therein. Section 2654 of the Revised Statutes provides that the order of vacation of a street or alley shall 'operate as a revocation of the acceptance thereof by the council; but the right of way and easement therein of any lot owner shall not be impaired thereby.' This indicates an intention that vacation shall not deprive abutters of rights incident to their ownership."

In Jose v. Hunter (1913) 60 Ind. App. 569, 103 N. E. 392, rehearing denied in (1915) 60 Ind. App. 589, 103 N. E. 852, the court pointed out that an essential to application of the rule that a way reverts upon vacation to the abutting owner is that the street or highway was dedicated or laid off by one who at the time of such dedication owned the abutting land in question. It said: "While some of the authorities contain some general statements to the effect that the abutting lot owners on a street own to the center of such street, we have no doubt that such statements are too broad and general, and were in each case intended to have general application to owners of lots along such street only as had been laid out or dedicated by a person who, at the time of such dedication, owned the abutting land on either side of such street, or where the abutting property owners on each side of the street had donated or dedicated their half of the land over which the street passed."

In Quebec the rule is that upon abandonment of a public highway the land therein returns to the lot from which it was taken, but if not taken from the adjoining land it is added to the lots between which it is located, half going to each. Cormier v. Vailant (1913) Rap. Jud. Quebec 24 B. R. 161.

b. As affected by description in conveyance of adjoining property.

1. Description by plat.

(a) Generally.

An unrestricted conveyance by lot or block number, or according to a plat, has been held to pass the fee to the center of a street on which the conveyed lands abut, so that upon vacation of the street the land therein reverts to the owner of such abutting lands rather than to the original owner.

Arkansas. — Dickinson v. Arkansas City Improv. Co. (1906) 77 Ark. 570, 113 Am. St. Rep. 170, 92 S. W. 21; Matthews v. Bloodworth (1914) 111 Ark. 545, 165 S. W. 263.

Colorado. — Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1898) 25 Colo. 177, 53 Pac. 454; Overland Mach. Co. v. Alpenfels (1902) 30 Colo. 163, 69 Pac. 574; Bothwell v. Denver Union Stockyards Co. (1907) 39 Colo. 221, 90 Pac. 1127.

Florida. — Smith v. Horn (1915) 70 Fla. 484, 70 So. 435.

Georgia. — Bayard v. Hargrove (1872) 45 Ga. 342; Cincinnati & G. R. Co. v. Mims (1883) 71 Ga. 240; Harrison v. Augusta Factory (1884) 73 Ga. 447.

Indiana. — Decker v. Evansville Sub- urban & N. R. Co. (1893) 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349 (provided the abutting owner becomes such subsequent to the dedication); Jose v. Hunter (1913) 60 Ind. App. 569, 103 N. E. 392, reversing on other grounds on rehearing (1913) — Ind. App. —, 101 N. E. 665, and rehearing denied in (1914) 60 Ind. App. 589, 103 N. E. 852 (same proviso); Brackney v. Boyd (1919) — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 238, denying rehearing of (1919) — Ind. App. —, 123 N. E. 695.

Kentucky. — Bright v. Palmer (1898) 20 Ky. L. Rep. 771, 47 S. W. 590; HENDERSON ELEVATOR CO. v. HENDERSON (reported herewith) ante, 983. And see Jacob v. Woolfolk (1890) 90 Ky. 426, 9 L.R.A. 551, 14 S. W. 415.

Michigan. — See Scudder v. Detroit (1898) 117 Mich. 77, 75 N. W. 286.

Ohio. — Stephens v. Taylor (1894) 51 Ohio St. 593, decided on the authority of Stephens v. Shannon (1892) 6 Ohio C. C. 142; Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Beatty (1901) 65 Ohio St. 264, 87 Am. St. Rep. 600, 62 N. E. 341; Hamilton, G. & C. Traction Co. v. Parish (1902) 67 Ohio St. 181, 60 L.R.A. 531, 65 N. E. 1011.

Pennsylvania. — Paul v. Carver (1855) 24 Pa. 211, 64 Am. Dec. 649. See Black v. Pittsburgh & B. Street R. Co. (1907) 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 416.

Tennessee. — State ex rel. Beckham v. Taylor (1901) 107 Tenn. 455, 64 S. W. 766.

Texas. — See American v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 182 S. W. 54.

Washington. — See Bradley v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. (1914) 79 Wash. 455, L.R.A. 1917C, 225, 140 Pac. 688.

Wisconsin. — Kimball v. Kenosha (1855) 4 Wis. 321; Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1864) 18 Wis. 35, 86 Am. Dec. 743; Burbach v. Schweinler (1882) 56 Wis. 386, 14 N. W. 449.

And where the dedication creates merely an easement or right to use the way as such, and the dedicatory subsequently conveys the lands abutting thereon, describing them by block and as subject to the easement for the highway, the title to the way upon vacation has been held to vest in the dedicator's grantee as against one to whom the original dedicator quit-claimed the way subsequent to the conveyance of the tract as a whole. Kitzman v. Greenhalgh (1914) 164 Iowa, 166, 145 N. W. 505.

In some states this rule has been based upon the so-called doctrine of "accretion" by necessity. For instance, in Ohio, the court in Hamilton, G. & C. Traction Co. v. Parish (1902) 67 Ohio St. 181, 60 L.R.A. 531, 65 N. E. 1011, said: "The street being vacated and abandoned, the public no longer owns it, and it must either revert to the original owner, or adhere to the abutting lots as by accretion. As the original owner is presumed to have received full value for the street when he sold the lots, there is no just reason why he should have the street, when vacated, restored to him. And as the lot owners and those in the line of title have paid an increased price for lots by reason of the easement in the street, it is only just that when the street becomes vacated, the easement should be preserved to them by adding the vacated street to the lots, and therefore this doctrine of accretion in such cases has been adopted in this state, and generally elsewhere."

(b) Under statutes vesting fee in municipality in trust.

Where the abutting lots have been sold according to a plat, the fact that by statute the title to premises designated as a street on a tract platted as a town site shall vest in the municipality, in trust, for the uses expressed in the plat, has been held (contra to the Illinois cases set out infra) not to change the rule that streets upon vacation shall revert to the abutting owners rather than to the original dedicator.

In so holding, the court in Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1898) 25 Colo. 177, 53 Pac. 454, said: "The law in force at the time these premises were platted will be found in art. 11, chap. 84, pp. 618 et seq., of the Revised Statutes of 1868. Section 5 of this article provides, in effect, that the title to the premises designated as streets on a tract platted as a town site shall vest in the city, in trust, for the uses expressed in the plat, and, the statute thus specifically directing where the title to the streets shall vest, it is argued by counsel for appellant that the grantee of lots in such plat only takes title to the ground actually included within the boundaries thereof, and no interest in the street abutting, and the title of the latter being held in trust by the city, that upon vacation it reverts to the original proprietor of the town site. When a vendee purchases a lot marked upon a plat, reference being made to such plat for a description of the premises conveyed, the construction of the intention of the grantor making such conveyance is that his vendee is entitled to all the appurtenant advantages and rights which the plat proclaims to exist, so far as the land included in it is owned by the grantor.

. . . The conveyance under which appellee acquired title to the lots abutting upon the premises in dispute refers to the plat, so that under the authorities cited, such plat became a part of these deeds. By this plat, it was apparent that the land so platted as streets was for the benefit of the owners of the lots embraced in such plat, as well as for the use of the public, and there being no reservation in any deed through which title was acquired to the lots abutting upon that part of B street subsequently vacated, whatever title the original dedicator of this street had therein passed to those who acquired title to such lots, the general rule being that where a grantor conveys a parcel of ground, bounded by a street, his grantee takes title to the center of such street, to the extent that the grantor has any interest therein, unless, by the terms of the grant, the boundary of the granted premises is restricted to the line of such street. . . . It is contended, however, by appellant, that this rule is not applicable in this case, for the reason that the fee to the disputed premises was vested in the city, in trust, subject to a reversion to her grantor, if vacated as a street, at the time he parted with his title to the lots abutting thereon. This proposition is based upon the assumption that, the fee of the street being in the city, the proprietor of the town site had no interest in the street to convey, when he granted title to the abutting lots, and therefore granted none in such street. This proposition is defeated by the express words of the statute above cited. The platting of these premises as a town site, in accordance with the provisions of this statute, merely vested in the city the title to the ground therein reserved as streets, in trust, for the purposes expressed in the plat thereof, namely, for the benefit and use of the abutting lot owners and the public, for street purposes, whereby the city only acquired a qualified fee in such streets for these purposes; so that there still remained in the proprietor a reserved right in such streets which was capable of being transferred by deed to the purchaser of abutting lots as rights appurtenant thereto. . . . And under the rule above announced, governing the rights which the vendee of a lot acquires in the street upon which such lot abuts, E. W. Olin, when he conveyed title to the lots abutting the premises in controversy, without any reservation, granted all his interest in the street which now included such premises, subject to the easements created by the statute, . . . and when such street was vacated, the trust of the corporate authorities ceased to exist, and the land embraced therein reverted to the adjoining owner, the one for whose benefit such trust was created. Whatever may be the interest of the proprietor of a town site in the lots designated as streets, whether in esse or in futuro, they having been specially set apart for the benefit of lot owners, it is necessary for their protection that whatever rights such proprietor may have in such streets, in the absence of a reservation to the contrary, must be held to pass to the owners of such lots; and our conclusion is that when the streets designated on a plat of premises platted under the Statute of 1868 are vacated, the title to the center of such streets vests in the owners of the lots abutting that portion of the streets so vacated." And see to the same effect, Bothwell v. Denver Union Stockyards Co. (1907) 39 Colo. 221, 90 Pac. 1127.

And a similar statute has received a like construction in Kansas. Belleville v. Hallowell (1889) 41 Kan. 192, 21 Pac. 105, as explained in Challiss v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. (1891) 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894.

This is also the Wisconsin rule. Kimball v. Kenosha (1855) 4 Wis. 321.

And in Utah, in construing a statute (Laws 1890, p. 77, chap. 50; Act March 13, 1890, § 4) which provided that the filing of a plat vested the "fee" of the streets, etc., marked thereon as such, in the public, it was held that the term "fee" in such a case does not mean the fee in the corpus of the land itself, but only the fee to the surface for public use as a way, so that upon abandonment of the street the fee will revert to the owners of the adjoining lots who hold under deeds describing the lands according to the plat. So-wadzki v. Salt Lake County (1909) 36 Utah, 127, 104 Pac. 111. The court said: "Counsel for respondent, however, seem to lay some stress upon the claim that by virtue of the Act of 1890, under which Wabash avenue was dedicated, the fee to or in the avenue passed to the public. From this counsel no doubt draw the inference that the title to land to which the fee has passed cannot be lost by mere nonuser or abandonment, but, if lost at all, it must be by operation of law or by adverse possession. That the general rule is to this effect is conceded, but we cannot construe § 4 of the Act of 1890 as counsel construe it. While the word 'fee' is used in the section, it is clear from what follows that it was not intended that the fee of the corpus or land itself should pass, but only the fee to the surface, and this only for public use for all purposes of a street or highway. The fee mentioned in the statute was thus what is known as a limited or determinable fee, and was created for a special purpose or purposes only, and hence was subject of abandonment. This was also the construction that the owner of the land placed upon this statute in making the dedication of Wabash avenue as a street. In the dedication he says: 'Do hereby dedicate to the perpetual use of the public,' etc. This is not an absolute grant, but one only for a special purpose; namely, for use as a public street. . . . It is quite true that the original owner may not, after selling lots abutting on a dedicated street or highway, reclaim that portion of the land included within the highway in case it is vacated or abandoned. In parting with his title to the lots the fee passes to the purchaser to the center of the highway, and, if the highway is vacated or abandoned, the land belongs to the abutting lot or land owner, and not to the original owner, unless an express reservation to that effect was made in the dedication or conveyance. This is also the effect of § 1120, Comp. Laws 1907, which expressly provides that by taking or accepting land for a highway the public obtains only the right of way, and that the fee to the center of the highway passes to the purchaser of the adjoining land. The question, therefore, in case a public highway has been vacated or abandoned, and where there is no express reservation of the fee to the land on the highway, is not whether the abutting owner can establish title to the land included within the highway by adverse possession, but it is whether he owns the fee to the center of the vacated or abandoned highway."

And see Wanzer v. Blanchard (1853) 3 Mich. 11.

But there is some authority to the effect that upon abandonment or vacation of a public way which has been dedicated pursuant to a statute vesting the title in the public in trust for highway purposes, the fee reverts to the original owner who dedicated it to the public, and not to the abutting owner who has succeeded to the title to the adjoining lands, although there was neither an express reservation that it should do so, nor a statute providing therefor. Wirt v. McEnery (1884) 21 Fed. 233 (holding such to be the law of Illinois); St. John v.

Quitow (1874) 72 Ill. 334; Gebhardt v. Reeves (1874) 75 Ill. 301; Helm v. Webster (1877) 85 Ill. 116; Hyde Park v. Borden (1879) 94 Ill. 26; Hill v. Kimball (1915) 269 Ill. 398, 110 N. E. 18; Tri-City Artificial Ice Co. v. Day (1920) 292 Ill. 545, 127 N. E. 106; PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992. And see Inyo County v. Given (1920) 183 Cal. 415, 191 Pac. 688.

In the Illinois cases which have adhered to this rule, it appeared that the statute which vested the fee of dedicated streets in the municipality in trust for the public was the determining element in reaching this conclusion. For instance, in St. John v. Quitow (1874) 72 Ill. 334, the court said: "The law, at the date of these transactions, vested the fee of the streets in the municipality. The lot owner took no interest under his deed in the street, other than what he had in common with the public. The limits of his lot were his boundary, beyond which his title did not extend. Hence, if the street was vacated, the fee returned to the original proprietor." And in Gebhardt v. Reeves (1874) 75 Ill. 301, the court said: "Under our statute, by the making, acknowledging, and recording of the plat of a town, addition, or subdivision of lots, the owner of the land voluntarily parts with all his title to the streets and alleys, and transfers it to the corporation. The legal effect is precisely the same as if he had made a direct conveyance to the corporation, in trust for the public. All interest in the estate that was in the owner becomes vested in the corporation. No limitation is fixed to the existence of the trust. It may endure forever. Until the municipality shall elect to abandon the use of the streets and alleys, the former owner has no interest whatever in the land embraced within them,—absolutely nothing, within any definition of estate or property, that he could sell and convey. It had all passed to the corporation by the former grant, subject only to the possibility it might revert to him if the contingency ever happened the municipality should ever abandon the trust. Logically it follows, by the grant of the adjacent lot, the grantee takes no interest under his deed in the street or alley, other than what he acquires in common with the public. An easement may pass, without express mention, as an incident to the grant of the adjacent premises; but there can be no authority found, either in reason or justice, for the proposition, the fee in one piece of land, not mentioned in the deed, passes as appurtenant to another tract granted by an accurate description, giving it a definite and limited boundary."

But even under this rule there must have been more than a statutory dedication and subsequent vacation, since, in the absence of an acceptance by the municipality of the street, no title passed to it, so that by a conveyance after the dedication the grantor's rights would pass to the abutter, in consequence of which, upon vacation of the dedicated street without it ever having been accepted by the municipality as a street, the title would be in the abutting owner instead of reverting to the original owner. Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1888) 124 Ill. 235, 15 N. E. 854. See this case as set out in PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992. And in Sullivan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1911) 251 Ill. 108, 95 N. E. 1081, the court expressly ruled that where the dedication was a common-law one rather than under the statute, a conveyance of an abutting lot conveys to the middle of the highway subject only to the public easement, and that when such easement is abandoned, the title, with all the incidents of ownership, becomes perfect in the adjacent lot owner. And the distinction between a common-law and a statutory dedication was pointed out in Hill v. Kimball (1915) 269 Ill. 398, 110 N. E. 18. And again in Lockwood & S. Co. v. Chicago (1917) 279 Ill. 445, 117 N. E. 81, the court said that where a city lawfully vacates a street or alley, the fee in the same will revert either to the dedicant or to the owner of the adjoining land, dependent upon whether the city received the use of the street by common-law or statutory dedication. In Tri-City Artificial Ice Co. v. Day (1920) 292 Ill. 545, 127 N. E. 106, the court approved the rule that in case of a statutory dedication and subsequent vacation, the title ordinarily reverted to the original dedicant, rather than his grantee. PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992, reviews the earlier Illinois authorities at length, and in effect lays down the law applicable, in the absence of express statutory regulation, as follows: In case of statutory dedication and subsequent vacation, the title reverts to the dedicant; in case of common-law dedication the title passes to the abutting owner.

2. Bounding land conveyed by street, etc.

The rule which permits the abutting owner to hold to the center of a vacated street would seem to be especially applicable where the street consisted of a mere easement and the abutting owner's deed expressly conveyed to the center of the street. West Covington v. Freking (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 121. And see Wheeler v. Clark (1874) 58 N. Y. 267.

And where land is described generally as bounded by a street or highway, the general rule is that the grantee, upon vacation thereof, acquires the reversion therein.

Thus, in Healey v. Babbitt (1884) 14 R. I. 533, where the north line of a highway was M's line, and he sold the land south of the highway describing the north boundary as "on such highway," it was held that upon vacation of the highway the grantee acquired the title to the whole of the highway as against an assignee of the original grantor. The court said: "The plaintiffs claim that upon discontinuance of the highway, Mrs. Healey became entitled to the whole of the land in question, by reason of her ownership of the adjoining lot; namely, No. 89. The defendant Babbitt, on the other hand, claims title to the lot by conveyances from Martin and his assignees, made subsequent to the discontinuance of the highway, and contends that in no event can the plaintiffs recover more than the one half in width of the strip adjoining the land of Mrs. Healey. This presumption, however, that the grantee takes the fee of the soil to the center of the highway, is not absolute and conclusive. It is created, or rather allowed, in the absence of proof, and is based upon the idea that when the street or highway was laid out, the proprietors upon each side contributed their land for the purpose, in equal portions. When it appears that such was not the fact, the presumption does not arise. . . . The same considerations of policy which have led the courts, in the absence of words manifesting a different intention in the parties; and in the absence of proof in relation to the title to a highway, to adopt as a rule of construction that when a deed bounds land on a highway, the grantee takes, as a parcel of the grant, the fee to the middle line of the highway, would seem to be equally applicable to like cases in which the grantor's ownership in the highway appears, to the extent of such ownership, whether it falls short of, extends to, or goes beyond the middle line of the highway, or includes its entire width, unless it should also appear that the grantor owned land on the other side of the highway, bounding upon it, and opposite to the land described in the deed. We apprehend, therefore, that if a deed bounds land upon a highway, and there is nothing in its terms restricting its operation within narrower limits, and the grantor owns no land on the other side of the highway, bounding upon it, opposite to the land described in the deed, the grantee takes the fee in the highway, adjoining the land described, to the extent of his grantor's ownership." Again in Rowe v. James (1912) 71 Wash. 267, 128 Pac. 539, where an owner platted lands bounded by a street beyond which he did not own, it was held that a conveyance of lots bounded by the street carried the fee to the entire street rather than to the middle thereof, and that vacation vested the same in the grantee of such abutting lots.

And in Brown v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1909) 36 Utah, 257, 24 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 86, 102 Pac. 86, it was held that the common-law rule was that where a grant was described as bounded by a street or highway which is expressly referred to in the conveyance as such, the title to the center of the way passes so that upon vacation the land reverts to the abutting owner. To the same effect is Sowadzki v. Salt Lake County (1909) 36 Utah, 127, 104 Pac. 111. And that the same is true where the land is described as bounded by a certain road, see Van Amringe v. Barnett (1861) 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 357, and Mitchell v. Bass (1862) 26 Tex. 372, on subsequent appeal in (1870) 33 Tex. 259; at least, at common law.

And a grantee of land described as "fronting on C street" has been held entitled to take to the center of the street upon vacation of the public easement therein. Wallace v. Fee (1872) 50 N. Y. 694.

And a similar conclusion has been reached where the description read, "along the R road." Haberman v. Baker (1891) 128 N. Y. 253, 13 L.R.A. 611, 28 N. E. 370. And see Halloway v. Southmayd (1893) 139 N. Y. 390, 34 N. E. 1047, 1052.

And in Bayard v. Hargrove (1872) 45 Ga. 342, the court expressed the opinion that upon abandonment of a public street the soil would revert to the abutting owner rather than to the dedicator, even though the conveyance to such abutting owner was by metes and bounds.

And in Pennsylvania the general presumption that a conveyance in which a public street or highway is used as a boundary conveys to the middle thereof has been held to apply, although the description bounds the land by the "side" of the street. Cox v. Freedley (1859) 26 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584 (holding that while the parties might, by explicit description, confine the conveyance to the side of a road, merely bounding the land by the "side" of the road, or running a boundary line to a "stake" by the side of a street, and thence along the side thereof, was not sufficient to control the general rule of law which carries the title to the center of it); Paul v. Carver (1856) 26 Pa. 223, 167 Pac. 413

(holding that bounding a tract of land by the "side" of a street was not sufficient to bar the grantee from claiming to the center upon vacation, although, in addition to the side being a boundary, the measurement of the distance set forth in the conveyance brought the line only to the side of the street). And in Ball v. Ball (1850) 4 Clark (Pa.) 424, 1 Phila. 36, 7 Phila. Leg. Int. 26, where the description carried the land from the intersecting corner of two streets along the "line" of one of such streets, a similar conclusion was reached, the court expressing an opinion that an express declaration, or something equivalent thereto, was required in order to create an inference that the grantor intended to withhold his interest in the street itself after parting with the adjoining land. In Paul v. Carver (Pa.) supra, the court said: "If the streets were to be vacated, of what value would they be to the original grantors, unless for the purposes of annoyance to the lot owners? A long strip of ground 50 or 100 feet wide and perhaps several miles in length, without any access to it except at each end, is a description of property which it is not likely either party ever contemplated as remaining in the grantor of the lots on each side of it. Influenced by these considerations, the law has carried out the real intention of the parties by holding that the title passed to the center of the street, subject to the right of passage. Where a street is called for as a boundary it is regarded as a single line. The thread of the road is the monument or abuttal. . . . Measurements are of small importance where monuments are called for. Monuments control measurements. There is no doubt whatever as to the existence of the general rule; but it is thought by the plaintiff in error that where the deed calls for a particular side of a street the case is taken out of the rule. In our opinion this is a circumstance entirely too insignificant to produce a result so inconvenient and so contrary to the practice of the people. This very question was decided when these parties were here, in another form of action. It is therefore unnecessary to examine in detail either the English or American decisions on the subject. While they all fully recognize the existence of the rule that a conveyance of land bounded by a highway passes to the grantee a title to the center of the way, there is some difference of opinion in the application of it to particular cases. A rule founded upon policy, and tending to guard against inconveniences of the most alarming character, ought not to be frittered away by distinctions founded on differences in phraseology, which might readily escape attention. The paramount intent of the parties, as disclosed from the whole scope of the conveyance, and the nature of the property granted, should be the controlling rule. Although the measurement of the distance set forth in the conveyance brings the line only to the side of the road, that is not sufficient to control the rule of law which carries the title to the center of it."

However, it also has been held that conveyances by metes and bounds do not presumptively carry anything outside thereof, so that where an abutter's line is the side of the street, he is not presumed to take to the center so as to bring him within the general rule that an abutting owner, upon vacation of a street, acquires title to the center thereof.

At least, in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gould (1887) 67 Md. 60, 8 Atl. 754, it was held that the original owner, and not his grantee, the abutter, was entitled to one half the land occupied by a street, where such grantee's deed bounded his land by the "side" of the street adjoining it.

And in Buck v. Squires (1850) 22 Vt. 484, in holding that a conveyance of land described as bounded on the west by a "line" running on the "easterly side" of a highway could not be presumed to carry any interest in the fee of the highway so as to entitle the grantee thereto upon abandonment of the way, the court (Redfield, J., dissenting) said: "Now upon what ground can it be fairly said the parties intended, by the 'easterly side,' the center line of the highway? The language, as commonly used and understood, certainly does not import that; and it seems to us that when the case is viewed in the light of the authorities upon the subject, the great majority of them are against giving this deed such a construction as the defendant claims for it. . . . Where, then, is the starting point in the deed? In the first place it is to be on the northerly side of said branch, and, as we understand the terms used, they must refer to the bank, and not to the center or thread of the stream. The line leading from this point is to follow the easterly side of the highway, which, as already stated, in our opinion, is to be construed to mean the eastern edge or line of the road, and not the center line of the road. We come to the conclusion, therefore, from the language used in this deed, that the true starting point is at the intersection of the northerly bank of the stream and the eastern side, or edge, of the road, and that no land lying south of that point was intended to be conveyed by the deed; and also that no part of the highway was intended to be included in the deed."

And in Van Amringe v. Barnett (1861) 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 357, it was held that describing land by metes and bounds as along the "side" of a certain road precluded the passing of any interest in the road itself which would entitle the grantee to claim the same upon abandonment of the easement of right of way in the road.

Likewise, where the land conveyed was expressly limited to the east "line" of a highway. Pettibone v. Purdy (1832) 7 Vt. 514.

So, in Downes v. Dimock & F. Co. (1902) 75 App. Div. 513, 78 N. Y. Supp. 348, it was held that a conveyance of land "to land marked 'street'" on plat did not convey any rights in the street which could be claimed on vacation or abandonment thereof.

And in Lankin v. Terwilliger (1892) 22 Or. 97, 29 Pac. 268, where land was sold by definite metes and bounds and the description excluded a road by using the side as a monument, it was held that the adjoining owner acquired no rights therein, and that upon abandonment of the public easement the land reverted to the original owner.

And in New York it has been held that a conveyance of land adjoining an ancient road, which describes the same as running to a monument at the "side" of and along such road, does not carry the fee to the center of the street so as to entitle such adjoining owner to title, upon vacation of the road, as against the original owner of the fee held subject to the easement of way. Jackson v. Hathaway (1818) 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 447, 8 Am. Dec. 263.

And see Alden v. Murdock (1816) 13 Mass. 256, wherein it was held that the fact that a lot was bounded by a road in a deed thereof did not, upon abandonment of the road, entitle the grantee of the lot as against his grantor to claim to the middle of the road.

IV. Express statutory regulation.

In a number of jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which expressly provide that upon vacation of a public street the title shall revert to the owners of the adjacent property.

Generally speaking, it may be said that such statutes are valid and that they vest title in the abutting owners as provided. See the following cases:

United States.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shawnee (1910) 105 C. C. A. 377, 183 Fed. 85 (construing Oklahoma Statute 1893, § 584 [Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, § 688]).

Idaho.—Canady v. Coeur D'Alene Lumber Co. (1911) 21 Idaho, 77, 120 Pac. 830 (applying Idaho Rev. Codes, § 2238, subd. 26).

Illinois.—PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992 (upholding and applying Illinois Rev. Stat. chap. 145, § 2); Counselman v. Wisconsin Lime & Cement Co. (1921) 299 Ill. 84, 132 N. E. 289, following the PRALL CASE.

Iowa.—Day v. Schroeder (1877) 46 Iowa, 546 (construing Iowa Laws 1862, chap. 78, § 3, which provided that when any part of a town plat, etc., shall be vacated, "the proprietors of the lots so vacated may inclose the streets . . . adjoining such lots, in equal proportions").

Kansas.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Patch (1882) 28 Kan. 470 (construing Kansas Laws 1881, chap. 37, § 34, which related to cities of the first class); Challiss v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. (1891) 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894 (construing same provision contained in Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, ¶ 582); Showalter v. Southern Kansas R. Co. (1892) 49 Kan. 421, 32 Pac. 42, reaffirmed on subsequent appeal in (1897) 57 Kan. 681, 47 Pac. 831 (holding that the Kansas Act, March 8, 1871, extended the right to title, on vacation of a street, to abutters in cities of the third class, and that similar rights were accorded in cities of the second class by Kansas Act March 13, 1872); Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sharpless (1900) 62 Kan. 841, 62 Pac. 662 (involving the same lands affected by the preceding case); Wallace v. Cable (1912) 87 Kan. 835, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 587, 127 Pac. 5 (reaches the same conclusion, but does not refer to the statute); Hutchinson v. Danley (1913) 88 Kan. 437, 129 Pac. 163 (applying Kansas Laws 1877, chap. 190, § 5); Haseltine v. Nuss (1916) 97 Kan. 228, 155 Pac. 55 (applying Kansas Laws 1877, chap. 190, § 5 [Comp. Laws 1885, § 6545]).

Michigan. — Scudder v. Detroit (1898) 117 Mich. 77, 75 N. W. 286 (construing and applying 1 How. Stat. §§ 1474, 1478).

Missouri.—Thomas v. Hunt (1896) 134 Mo. 392, 32 L.R.A. 857, 35 S. W. 581 (construing and applying Missouri Acts 1866, § 2, p. 201, Acts 1877, p. 186). See this case as set out and quoted in PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992.

Nebraska.—Bellevue v. Bellevue Improv. Co. (1902) 65 Neb. 52, 90 N. W. 1002 (applying Nebraska Comp. Stat. chap. 14, art. 1, § 69); State ex rel. Lincoln v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1913) 93 Neb. 263, 140 N. W. 147, 1136 (applying Comp. Stat. 1893, chap. 13a, art. 1, § 67, subd. IV.).

New York. — Mitchell v. Einstein (1905) 105 App. Div. 413, 94 N. Y. Supp. 210, reversing (1904) 42 Misc.

358, 86 N. Y. Supp. 759 (applying Laws 1867, p. 1749, chap. 697, § 3).

Oklahoma.—Blackwell, E. & S. W. R. Co. v. Gist (1907) 18 Okla. 516, 90 Pac. 889 (construing, upholding, and applying Wilson's Stat. (Okla.) 1903, art. 8, chap. 2, § 48); Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co. v. Bullen (1911) 31 Okla. 36, 119 Pac. 414 (construing and applying Oklahoma Comp. Laws 1909, § 688; Rev. Laws 1910, § 588); Edwards v. Smith (1914) 42 Okla. 544, 142 Pac. 302 (same as next preceding case).

Pennsylvania. — Flick's Estate (1891) 6 Kulp, 329 (applying Pa. Act 1849, Purdon's Dig. 1502, pl. 44); Re Vacation of Public Road (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 771 (same).

Utah.—Sowadzki v. Salt Lake County (1909) 36 Utah, 127, 104 Pac. 111 (construing and applying Utah Comp. Laws 1907, § 1120).

Washington. — Norton v. Gross (1909) 52 Wash. 341, 100 Pac. 734 (applying 2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Stat. § 5521; Pierce's Code, § 1156); Rowe v. James (1912) 71 Wash. 267, 128 Pac. 539 (construing Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 7842, 7843); Hagen v. Bolcom Mills (1913) 74 Wash. 462, 133 Pac. 1000, rehearing denied in (1913) 74 Wash. 475, 134 Pac. 1051 (construing Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7846); Bradley v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. (1914) 79 Wash. 455, L.R.A.1917C, 225, 140 Pac. 688 (applying Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 1269, 1270, 7846).

Wisconsin. — Paine Lumber Co. v. Oshkosh (1895) 89 Wis. 449, 61 N. W. 1108 (construing Wisconsin Rev. Stat. chap. 52, §§ 1294, 1294a, 1296).

Canada.—Re Toronto Plan M. 188 (1913) 28 Ont. L. Rep. 41, 11 D. L. R. 424 (construing Surveys Act, § 44; 1 Geo. V. chap. 42, as amended by 2 Geo. V. chap. 17, § 32, which vests in the abutting owners the land included in any platted streets which "has not been established by by-law of the municipal corporation, or otherwise assumed by it for public use," and is closed).

In PRALL v. BURCKHARTT (reported herewith) ante, 992, it was held that Illinois Rev. Stat. chap. 145, § 2, known as the Vacation Act, which provided that upon vacation of a dedicated street the fee thereto shall vest in the abutting owners, was not unconstitutional as a legislative grant of property of the landowner who had made a statutory dedication of the street; since the possibility of reverter was not an estate protected by the Constitution, but rather amounted to a mere possibility of an estate at a future time. In reaching this conclusion the court, after quoting and discussing the early Illinois case of Gebhardt v. Reeves (1874) 75 Ill. 301, expressly overruled the holding therein to the effect that a statute authorizing a municipality to vacate a street and convey the same to the abutting owners was unconstitutional because violative of the original owner's right of reversion upon vacation. Also criticized is the so-called dicta in Hill v. Kimball (1915) 269 Ill. 398, 110 N. E. 18, supporting the Gebhardt Case. And in another Illinois case, the court seems to have expressed views which cannot be reconciled with the decision in the PRALL CASE. Thus, in Helm v. Webster (1877) 85 Ill. 116, it was said that the Illinois Statute of 1865, which provided that upon vacation of a street "the lot or tract immediately adjoining shall extend to the center line of any such street so vacated, unless otherwise specially provided in the act vacating the same," did not avoid the original grantor's right of reversion upon vacation of a street under the statute. PRALL v. BURCKHARTT was followed in Counselman v. Wisconsin Lime & Cement Co. (1921) 299 Ill. 84, 132 N. E. 289, and the land in a vacated street was held to revert to the then owners of the abutting lands, and not to the dedicator or his heirs.

In Oklahoma it is held that the land embraced in a vacated street attaches itself in the nature of an accretion to the adjoining real estate in proportion to the frontage. Blackwell, E. & S. W. R. Co. v. Gist (1907) 18 Okla. 516, 90 Pac. 889 (holding that the city upon vacation of a street cannot grant the same to a railroad company as a right of way free from the claim of the adjoining owner to damages for the taking); Bullen v. Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co. (1908) 20 Okla. 819, 95 Pac. 476, on subsequent appeal in (1911) 31 Okla. 36, 119 Pac. 414 (following the decision in the Gist Case); Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co. v. Johnson (1911) 31 Okla. 41, 119 Pac. 416 (decided upon the authority of the second appeal in the Bullen Case); Edwards v. Smith (1914) 42 Okla. 544, 142 Pac. 302 (holding that upon vacation by a city of a dedicated street the land reverted to the adjoining owner, and not to the dedicator).

In Scudder v. Detroit (1898) 117 Mich. 77, 75 N. W. 286, it was held that the grantee of a dedicator of lands for street purposes who reserved the reversion in event of vacation of such streets was entitled to such lands upon vacation of a street, under a statute providing that the recording of a plat shall vest the fee of streets in the municipality in trust for street purposes, and that when a street is vacated the same shall be attached to the lots bordering thereon, and the title shall vest in the owners thereof on each side to the middle of the street, the reservation having been to the grantor, his heirs, or assigns; it being argued that in such case the grant of the abutting lot conveyed all that the grantor had reserved by the dedication.

